in the declaration that the representations were "falsely and fraudulently" made. The word "falsely" in some connections implies a purpose to deceive (State v. Smith, 63 Vt. at page 211, 22 Atl. 604); and the term "fraudulently" includes the idea of intentional deception (Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 306, 48 Am. Dec. 598). When in a tort action the terms "falsely and fraudulently" are applied to misrepresentations inducing one to act to his injury, they necessarily imply a deliberate intent to deceive. Sallies v. Johnson, 85 Conn. 77, 81 Atl. 974, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 386; Bank of Montreal v. Thayer, 7 Fed. 622; Eibel v. Von Fell, 64 N. J. Law, 364, 48 Atl. 1117; Hammatt v. Emerson, supra.

[6] There was no error in overruling the motion to set aside the verdict. It was addressed to the discretion of the court, and that discretion was neither withheld nor abused. Lincoln v. C. V. Ry. Co., 82 Vt. 187, 72 Atl. 827, 137 Am. St. Rep. 998; French v. Whelden, 91 Vt. 64, 99 Atl. 232.

Judgment affirmed.

(92 Vt. 338)

MORGAN v. VILLAGE OF STOWE.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. May 16, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §733(4)—MUNICIPAL WATER SUPPLY—INJURIES TO PERSONS—LIABILITY.

In general, a municipality is liable for negligence in construction and maintenance of water systems, etc., for its private advantage and emolument as is a natural person, the liability including negligence of its duly authorized agent.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §745½—MUNICIPAL WATER SUPPLY—INJURIES TO PERSONS—LIABILITY.

A municipality is not liable for injury from negligent performance of governmental duties by authorized agents, though expense of the performance is borne by the municipality.

3. PLEADING §214(1)—ADMISSIONS BY DEMURRER.

On demurrer to declaration, facts stated in the declaration are taken to be true.

4. EVIDENCE §83(2)—MUNICIPAL WATER SUPPLY—CHARTER POWERS—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where city has organized and installed fire protection system the presumption must be that it was done in accordance with its charter powers.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §733(4)—MUNICIPAL WATER SUPPLY—LOCATING HYDRANTS—GOVERNMENTAL ACTS.

A fire protection hydrant connected with a municipal water works system was not a part of the system constructed for the city's benefit or emolument, since it was set apart for the exclusive benefit of the public.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §745½—GOVERNMENTAL ACTS.

To make the act of a city a governmental act, it need be performed only by one legally authorized, and not by any particular officer.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §733(4)—MUNICIPAL WATER SUPPLY—LOCATING HYDRANTS—LIABILITY.

Plaintiff could not recover for injuries caused by alleged negligent location of fire hydrant connected with municipal water system, since the location thereof was a governmental act in its nature judicial.

Exceptions from Lamolle County Court; Zed. S. Stanton, Judge.

Action by J. C. Morgan against the Village of Stowe. On plaintiff's exceptions to order sustaining demurrer to complaint pro forma. Judgment affirmed.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

M. P. Maurice, of Morrisville, R. W. Hulburd, of Hyde Park, and T. O. Cheney, of Morrisville, for plaintiff. F. G. Fleetwood, of Morrisville, and J. W. Redmond, of Newport, for defendant.

MILES, J. This suit is brought to recover against the defendant for the negligent location of one of its hydrants, in consequence of which it is alleged that the plaintiff was injured. The declaration was demurred to and the demurrer was sustained, and the case comes here on exception to that action of the court.

The question here involved is of much importance, as it affects most, if not all, of the incorporated villages and cities in the state; for the hydrant, alleged to have been negligently placed, was located, with reference to the street and sidewalk, as hydrants are usually placed, and was constructed for the purpose for which hydrants are maintained and used in villages and cities.

[1, 2] The general rule as to the liability of municipalities for negligence, in the construction and maintenance of water systems, lighting plants, and the like, which are for the private advantage and emolument of the municipality, is that of a natural person; and for the negligence of its duly authorized agent in relation thereto, by which injury is done to another, without the fault of the injured party, the municipality is liable. This rule is not disputed by either party; nor is there any dispute but that the law in this state is well settled, whatever it may be in other jurisdictions, that a municipality is exempt from liability when injury results from a negligent performance of a governmental duty, by one authorized to perform it, though expense of the performance is borne by the municipality. The dispute in this case arises upon the application of these rules; the plaintiff claiming that the hydrant in question is a part of the water system and not a governmental structure, and the defendant claiming that it is such a structure, exclusively constructed and maintained for a governmental purpose. By the defendant's charter it was created a fire district, and its trustees were given the power of and made subject to the same restrictions as prudential committees in fire districts, with power to make contracts and expenditures for the preservation of property, in the defendant village, from loss or damage by fire, and to provide a supply of pure water for fire, domestic and other like uses, for itself.

[3] The plaintiff in his declaration, alleges, in substance that the defendant is the owner of the waterworks, and has operated the same for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the defendant with water for domestic purposes and for use in the protection of the property of the inhabitants from loss and damage by fire; that in the process of construction the defendant placed the hydrant in question in the margin of one of defendant's streets, very close to the traveled track and inside the sidewalk, and that, in consequence of its being placed so close to the traveled track, it endangered the life and property of the plaintiff, and of all persons having occasion to use the street. The declaration being demurred to, the facts stated above are taken to be true. In brief, the negligence alleged is that the hydrant was negligently placed in the street, and that that was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury. The defendant concedes that, if the facts stated in the declaration show that the defendant was using the hydrant for its own private advantage and emolument, the judgment below should be reversed; but it claims that the declaration shows that the hydrant was placed where it is located and was being maintained at the time of the alleged injury for the sole benefit of the public, and the act in placing it there was a governmental act.

[4] For authorities sustaining its contention, the defendant relies principally upon the case of Welsh v. Rutland, 56 Vt. 223, 48 Am. Rep. 762. Plaintiff argues that that case is unlike the case at bar, because in that case the negligence complained of was the act of a public officer in the discharge of a governmental duty, and that the direct injury was caused by ice in the street, for which municipalities have never been liable. A complete answer to that position is that the declaration does not count upon a defect in the street, and the decision of that case was not based upon that ground, and the discussion of the case in the opinion of the court is with reference to the liability of the village on account of its negligence in repairing one of its hydrants. The negligence counted upon in this and the Welsh Case is with reference to the hydrant, and in this respect they are alike, and the only difference is that in the Welsh Case the negligence alleged consisted in a failure to properly repair the hydrant, while in this case it is for a failure to properly locate the hydrant. The plaintiff further claims that the Welsh Case differs in principle from this case because in that case the facts show that there was a duly installed and duly authorized fire protective system. From the charter of the defendant and the allegations in the declaration in this case, it appears that the defendant has a "duly installed and duly authorized fire protective system." Its charter powers for the installation of a fire system are as broad as those in the Welsh Case, and the declaration shows that its fire system was completely installed and organized; for the plaintiff alleges, as above set forth, facts indicating that the defendant duly organized as a fire district.

All that is alleged to have been done by the defendant in the construction of the fire department and the installation of the hydrant in question could not have been legally done without some kind of an organized system, and the presumption must be that it was done under its charter. The charter of Rutland was more restricted, if anything, than the defendant's charter; for the defendant's charter gave to the trustees of the defendant, as stated above, all the powers of prudential committees of fire districts, and for such powers see P. S. 3653, to and including section 3656. The difference in the facts of the two cases is a difference in fact merely and not in principle. In the Rutland charter the supervision of the fire department was largely committed to engineers and wardens whose duties were defined in the charter. In the case at bar the supervision of that department is given to the trustees as prudential committees in fire districts, whose duties are declared in P. S., sections above referred to.

[5] From a careful examination of the Welsh Case we think the principle involved in that case is not materially different from the principle involved in the case at bar, and if the repair of the hydrant in the Welsh case was a governmental act, the placing of the hydrant in this case was equally a governmental act, and, if that case states the law, the placing of the hydrant in question was a governmental act. Strictly speaking, the hydrant in question was not a part of the water system over which the water commissioners had charge, and for which they were empowered to fix water rates; and, though the hydrant was connected with the water main, it was not a part of the water system constructed for the benefit or emolument of the defendant (Sanborn et al. v. Enosburg Falls, 87 Vt. 479, 89 Atl. 746), and, though attached to that system, it was set apart for the exclusive benefit of the public.

In the Sanborn Case the facts disclosed that defendant put, on the side of one of its streets, a "barrel catch-basin"; that there was a tile running under the sidewalk into this barrel and a six-inch tile from the barrel across the street, underground, connected with the sewer of the village; that the tile was put in to protect the sidewalk and to carry surface water into the sewer; that the tile, sluice, and catch-basin became frozen and were neglected by the defendant in consequence of which the plaintiff's property was injured by overflowing water.

The plaintiff sought to recover on the ground that the negligence was the defendant's failure to keep in repair its sewer system. The court held that the tile and catch-basin were not a part of the sewer system, though connected with it, but were maintained for the protection of the street, and that the defendant was not liable for the injury. In 19 R. C. L. 1116, § 397, it is stated, that it makes no difference that the municipality uses the same reservoirs and pipes for its fire service that it employs for the distribution of a public supply for domestic purposes, from which it derives a profit, since the two functions are clearly distinguishable. So here, the hydrant was maintained for the protection of the public from loss or damage by fire, as stated in the plaintiff's declaration. This case, being in principle substantially like the Welsh Case, deserves the same disposition as should be given to that case. If the decision in that case is sound, the judgment in this case should be affirmed.

The Welsh Case has been cited as authority and with approval in Weller v. Burlington, 60 Vt. 28, 12 Atl. 215, Bates v. Rutland, 62 Vt. 178, 20 Atl. 278, 9 L. R. A. 363, 22 Am. St. Rep. 95, School Dist. v. Bridport, 63 Vt. 383, 22 Atl. 570, Sanborn v. Enosburg Falls, supra, and other Vermont cases, and it may now be treated as having declared the settled law of the state. The plaintiff does not directly attack its soundness, but seeks to avoid its effect by setting up a distinction between that case and the case at bar. He argues that in the Welsh Case the officer whose negligence was the alleged cause of the injury was a public officer, because he was a first assistant engineer of the fire department, and that in this case the hydrant in question was not located by any public officer.

[6] We fail to see the distinction claimed by the plaintiff. In the Welsh Case the alleged negligent act was performed by an officer of the fire department under the direction of the village trustees, and in this case the negligent act was performed by "the defendant by its servants and agents." We do not apprehend it is necessary for an act to be performed by any particular officer, to give to the act the character of a public or governmental act. It is enough if the act is performed by one having legal authority to perform it; and while performing the act he is, by virtue of the performance of that act, a public officer. Bates et ux. v. Rutland, 62 Vt. 178, 20 Atl. 278, 9 L. R. A. 363, 22 Am. St. Rep. 95, was an action for negligence in locating a stone crusher too near the highway, in consequence of which the plaintiff's horse was frightened and the plaintiff thrown out and injured. The crusher was located by direction of the village trustees outside of the limits of the village, with the consent of a majority of the selectmen, and was being operated by authority of the trustees in preparing material with which to repair the village streets. It was held that the action did not lie, the court saying:

"The officers by whom the work was being performed were, for this purpose, public officers, and for their negligent acts an action does not lie against the defendant."

In another place in the opinion the court, recognizing the principle that the character of the employment is determinative of whether the act is governmental or otherwise, say:

"It must be conceded that the defendant corporation is a political subdivision of the state, chartered and organized mainly for governmental purposes. Then, were the trustees and street commissioners, at the time of the accident, engaged in a public service, or in a work that was for the peculiar benefit of the defendant in its local or special interests? The character of the employment is determinative of the defendant's liability for the acts of these officers."

In Fisher v. City of Boston, 104 Mass. 87, 6 Am. Rep. 196, the court says:

"It makes no difference whether the Legislature itself prescribed the duties of the officers charged with the repair and management of fire engines, or delegates to the city or town the definition of those duties by ordinance or by-law. However appointed or elected, such persons are public officers, who perform duties imposed by law for the benefit of all the citizens, the performance of which the city or town has no control over, and derives no benefit from, in its corporate capacity."

In Hafford v. City of New Bedford, 16 Gray (Mass.) 297, the court say:

"The members of the fire department of New Bedford, when acting in discharge of their duties, are not servants or agents in the employment of the city, for whose conduct the city can be held liable; but they act rather as officers of the city, charged with the performance of a certain public duty or service, and no action will lie against the city for their negligence or improper conduct, while acting in the discharge of their official duty."

In the Welsh Case the repair complained of was being done by the first assistant engineer, under the direction of the trustees. Under the Rutland charter the duties of the engineers and wardens were to inquire into the condition of the property of the fire department and to supervise and care for the same, and report its condition to the trustees of the village as often as circumstances rendered it necessary, for the safe-keeping and proper repair of such property. This would seem to indicate that the duties of the engineers and wardens were to look after the property and report to the trustees, who were to direct to be made such repairs as they adjudged were necessary, and that was what was done in the Welsh Case. The trustees directed the engineer to do what he did do. The act was that of the trustees through the engineer, and, from anything appearing in the case, the legal effect of the act would have been the same if performed by the trustees personally, or by some other person, not connected with the fire department, under the direction of the trustees. It is the lawful act performed for the public good that determines its governmental character.

[7] It does not appear in the case at bar who located the hydrant complained of, but we are to assume that it was by some one having legal authority to locate and construct it; and, that being so, and for the public good, and that alone, it falls within that class of cases of which the Welsh Case is one and the Sanborn Case, and the cases therein cited are others. In the Welsh Case it is held as follows:

"The fire department and its service are of no benefit or profit to the village in its corporate capacity. They are not a source of income or profit to the village, but of expense, which is paid, not out of any special receipts or fund, nor defrayed even in part, by assessments upon particular persons or classes benefited, as in case of sewers or waterworks, but from the general fund raised by taxation of all the inhabitants."

In another place, in the opinion of the court, it is said:

"While it may be true that the hydrant is not part of the aqueduct, so far as private uses of the water thereby supplied are concerned, it is certainly the very means by which the public use of the water, namely, its use for the extinguishing of fires and the like, are obtained."

The Welsh Case clearly holds that a hydrant is a public or governmental structure, and it is a matter of common knowledge that it is used exclusively for public purposes, and is so constructed as to be of no value for individual or private uses. This principle is recognized in Tainter v. Worcester, 123 Mass. 811, 25 Am. Rep. 90, in which the court say:

"The protection of all the buildings in a city or town from destruction or injury by fire is for the benefit of all the inhabitants and for their relief from a common danger; and cities and towns are therefore authorized by general laws to provide and maintain fire engines, reservoirs, and hydrants to supply water for the extinguishment of fires."

And it is also recognized in Jewett v. City of New Haven, 38 Conn. 368, 9 Am. Rep. 382, in which the court quoted with approval from Wheeler v. City of Cincinnati, 19 Ohio St. 19, 2 Am. Rep. 368, as follows:

"The laws of this state have conferred upon its municipal corporations powers to establish and organize fire companies, procure engines and other instruments necessary to extinguish fires, and preserve the buildings and property within their limits from conflagration; and to prescribe such by-laws and regulations for the government of such companies as may be deemed expedient. But the powers thus conferred are in their nature legislative and governmental."

In Fisher v. Boston, supra, the court say: "Cities and towns are authorized by law to procure and maintain fire engines and reservoirs of water therefor, and to pay the necessary expense thereof, either by general taxation or out of moneys belonging to the town, because the prevention of damage to buildings by fire is an object which affects the interest of all the inhabitants and relieves them from a common burden and danger, and is therefore within the scope of municipal authority."

And further along in the opinion the court say:

"In the absence of express statute, therefore, municipal corporations are no more liable to actions for injuries occasioned by reason of negligence in using or keeping in repair the fire engines owned by them than in the case of a town house or public way."

To the same effect are Hafford v. New Bedford, supra; Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302; Bigelow v. Randolph, 14 Gray (Mass.) 541; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 8 Am. Rep. 485.

The great weight of authority is to the effect that hydrants and apparatus for the extinguishment of fire in a municipality are in their nature public or governmental property, and that for negligence in their use and maintenance for a public purpose no action will lie.

The plaintiff claims that while it may be true that hydrants and apparatus used for the extinguishment of fires in a village or city may be public or governmental property, yet in this case the defendant is liable, because of a faulty execution of the plan for the installation of the fire department. In support of this he can claim no more than is alleged in the declaration, namely, that the hydrant was improperly located. He fails to distinguish between a faulty execution of a plan and a faulty location of a part of a plan. In the location of a plan the village authorities must necessarily deliberate and adjudge upon the system or plan of location, and such action on the part of the village trustees is in its nature judicial, for which no private action is incurred for errors of judgment or want of forecast. Such is the holding in Winn v. Rutland, 52 Vt. 481, much relied upon by the plaintiff, in which the court say:

"In acting under the chartered power, the village authorities must necessarily deliberate and adjudge upon the system or plan of the work, when to perform it and where to locate it. So far, no liability to private action is incurred for errors of judgment or want of forecast. The inauguration of a plan of sewerage, so long as it remains in mere resolution, cannot, in the nature of things, work actionable injury or harm to individuals. Having devised a plan, it may be carried into execution with due care and skill, without risk of private action."

The same principle is held in Tainter v. Worcester, supra, in which the court say:

"The works to be constructed by the city of Worcester, under the statute of 1864, were, so far as related to safeguards against fire, to be erected and maintained by the city for the benefit of the public and without pecuniary compensation or emolument. The questions whether and where the public hydrants should be erected were within the exclusive control of the municipal authorities, as the public interest might seem to them from time to time to require."

To the same effect is Hill v. City of Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332, in which the court say:

"As to common sewers, built by municipal authorities under power conferred by law, it has been held, upon great consideration, that, as the power of determining where the sewers shall be made involves the exercise of a large and quasi judicial discretion, depending upon considerations affecting the public health and general convenience, therefore no action lies for a defect or want of sufficiency in the plan or system of drainage adopted within the authority so conferred."

We think, and so hold, that the location of the hydrant in question was a public and governmental act performed by the defendant through its agents, who acted in the capacity of governmental officers, and that the Welsh Case is full authority for this holding, and must control and govern this case. Judgment affirmed.

(33 Vt. 376)

NEW YORK CENT. RY. v. CLARK.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Brattleboro.
May 17, 1918.)

1. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON §21 — PLEAS TO SPECIFICATION.

In an action on a book account in the statutory form followed by a specification of items, a plea by defendant going to the specification and not to the declaration is bad, since a specification itself cannot be pleaded to.

2. JURY §14(3)—ACCOUNT—JURY TRIAL.

An answer or plea in bar going to the merits of a claim for an accounting, or which, if true, defends upon the state of the accounting claimed, does not entitle a defendant to a jury trial.

3. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON §21—DEFENSE.

In an action on book account, a plea of nothing due, no dealings and absence of account, does not relieve defendant from liability to account.

4. PLEADING §214(2)—DEMURRER—ADMISSIONS.

A demurrer admits only what is well pleaded.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR §231(2)—RESERVATION OF OBJECTIONS—GROUNDS OF DEMURRER—FUNDAMENTAL ERROR.

Under rule 14, a ground of demurrer may be considered on appeal, although not specified below, where the error is so fundamental as to distort the course of the law.

Exceptions from Windham County Court; M. L. Waterman, Judge.

Action by the New York Central Railway, lessee of the Boston & Albany Railway, against H. G. Clark and trustee. Demurrers to defendant's plea were overruled, and plaintiff excepts. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Argued before WATSON, O. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Stickney, Sargent & Skeels, of Ludlow, for plaintiff. Harvey & Whitney, of Brattleboro, and Hale K. Darling, of Chelsea, for defendant.

HASELTON, J. This is an action of contract. The defendant filed four pleas by way of an answer. To these pleas severally the plaintiff demurred. The trial court overruled the demurrers, adjudged the defendant's pleas sufficient, and, exceptions being taken, passed the cause to this court before final judgment. The plaintiff seeks its remedy by an action of book account, using the brief and simple language of the time-honored form provided by statute, a form which, because of its brevity, and simplicity, and comprehensiveness, conforms both in letter and in spirit to the requirements of the practice act. Blaisdell v. McClary, 90 Vt. 431, 98 Atl. 1001. The plaintiff filed a specification in which it charges the defendant for a claimed balance for the transportation of freight in cars. There are many items in the specification. Nearly all of the charges are on 20,000 pounds of freight "Brattleboro-Brighton," the freight charges being $30. Accompanying each charge referred to above is a credit of $28. Sixteen of the charges are for the same amount of freight each, but the charge in each such instance is $28, and there is in each such case an accompanying credit of $30. One charge is $24 for freight on 16,000 pounds, and the companion credit is $22.40. That is, in some few cases the credits are more than the items of charge to which they respectively correspond, and in all other instances the items of credit are less than the corresponding debit items.

[1] The defendant's answer is by way of four pleas, so-called. Reduced to a brief statement, such as the practice act contemplates, pleas 1 and 2 set out that each of the several items of the plaintiff's specification arose out of contracts by which the plaintiff agreed with the defendant to ship specified amounts of live stock from Brattleboro in this state to Brighton station in Massachusetts; that in each instance the plaintiff falsely and fraudulently represented to the defendant that the rate charged was the proper and legal rate; that the defendant had no knowledge as to the rate or charge for the shipment as fixed by rule, published tariff, or any regulation of law, except as it was disclosed to him by the plaintiff; that, however, the plaintiff knew that by some rule, regulation, or tariff, and by some computation thereunder, an additional rate might be charged the defendant; that, in each instance, as the plaintiff knew, the defendant was shipping a whole or a part of the shipment as agent for others from whom he had collected or was to collect proportionately; that the defendant was persuaded to enter into each such contract of shipment, to make the shipment, and to pay therefor according to the contract by the false and fraudulent concealments of the plaintiff. These two pleas of the defendant's answer are substantially the same. The second, however, sets up, in terms, an estoppel. These pleas we shall refer to again, but we here note that they are bad, in that they go to the plaintiff's specification and not to its complaint or declaration. Currier v. King, 81 Vt. 285, 289, 69 Atl. 873; Aseltine v. Perry, 75 Vt. 208, 210, 54 Atl. 190; Alexander v. School District, 62 Vt. 273, 277, 19 Atl. 995; Lapham v. Briggs, 27 Vt. 26.

A specification may show a defendant how to plead to the complaint, but a specification cannot itself be pleaded to. "Specifications are the creature of the court, and are not a part of the record for the purpose of subsequent pleading." And this is emphatically true in an action of book account in view of the well-established character of the action and the duty of the auditor to bring the credit down to the time of the hearing before him. Porter v. Smith, 20 Vt. 344; Delaware v. Staunton, 8 Vt. 48.

Proceeding in his answer by what he calls pleas 3 and 4, the defendant says that "there is no sum or amount justly due from him to the plaintiff by the plaintiff's original book," and "that there is not and never has been any account or subject of account or book account between the plaintiff and the defendant," that the plaintiff has not and never has had any account or book account with or against the defendant, and that "there has never been between the plaintiff and the defendant any account for transactions, contracts or matters of deals of any sort which were the subject or basis for any account or book account." All these matters set forth by the defendant in his answer by pleas 3 and 4 go to the merits of the plaintiff's claim in his action on book, as do also the matters set out in pleas 1 and 2 which go to the specification. All these matters are for the consideration of an auditor after judgment to account is rendered. Our cases illustrate the kinds of defense that may be made in bar of an accounting. Such a defense is the permanent disability of the plaintiff to maintain such an action. Library Bureau v. Hooker, 84 Vt. 530, 80 Atl. 660. See, also, Metcalf v. Metcalf's Estate, 89 Vt. 63, 94 Atl. 1, where the marital relation between the plaintiff and the deceased Metcalf, during the time when the account was claimed to have accrued, was relied on, though in vain, as a bar to an accounting on book. See, further, Hunneman v. Fire District, 37 Vt. 40, where it is held that if a defendant, sued as a corporation, would deny its corporate existence, such defense should be raised before judgment to account is rendered.

[2] The defendant throughout his brief seems to take the position that because some matters may be pleaded in bar of any accounting, anything in bar may be so pleaded, and a jury trial demanded on the issue so formed. But an answer or plea in bar that goes to the merits of the claim for an accounting, or that, if true, defends upon the state of the accounting claimed, does not entitle a defendant to a jury trial; in fact, a defendant is not entitled to file such an answer to a claim to an accounting on book. The defenses of payment, nothing due, no dealings, settlement, accord and satisfaction, and all defenses which involve a consideration of the merits of the claim made, all such defenses as are here made must go before the auditor, and on consideration of the auditor's report all the rights of the defendant are protected as appears from our statutory provisions and our cases.

[3] That no part of the defendant's answer relieves him from liability to account appears from the following cases: Blaisdell v. McClary, 90 Vt. 431, 98 Atl. 1001; Library Bureau v. Hooker, 84 Vt. 530, 537, 80 Atl. 660; Davis v. Farwell, 80 Vt. 166, 170, 67 Atl. 129; Hogan v. Sullivan, 79 Vt. 36, 64 Atl. 234; Hall v. Armstrong, 65 Vt. 421, 26 Atl. 592, 20 L. R. A. 366; Smith v. Bradley, 89 Vt. 366; Matthews v. Tower, 39 Vt. 433; Sargeant v. Sunderland, 21 Vt. 284; Porter v. Smith, 20 Vt. 344; Hagar v. Stone, 20 Vt. 106. In the action of book account "the right to plead (or answer) in bar is as limited as the right to defend before the auditor is extended." Steele, J., in Smith v. Bradley, 89 Vt. 366, 369. The most thorough discussion of the nature and incidents of the action of book account, to be found in our reports, is the opinion in Hall v. Armstrong, 65 Vt. 421, 26 Atl. 592, 20 L. R. A. 366. Therein Judge Thompson, referring to the rule laid down as above by Judge Steele, says:

"This has ever been the rule in this state. This has in effect absolutely precluded the forming of an issue . . . on the merits of the plaintiff's account."

[5] The defendant says that the plaintiff's demurrers to pleas 1 and 2 are bad because the grounds therefor as specified set up matters of fact; that is, that they are speaking demurrers. If we assume that this is so, the fact remains that, with all such stated grounds struck out or disregarded, there are left demurrers to the pleas in question, and the trial court was bound to notice grounds of demurrer not pointed out that vitally affect the integrity of our judicial system. Rule 14 of this court says that when, as here, a demurrant is the excepting party, he will not, without leave, be heard upon any cause of demurrer not shown by the bill of exceptions to have been specially pointed out on the hearing below. This means that there may be grounds of demurrer so fundamental that this court will consider them, and may hear counsel thereon, although such grounds were not pointed out below; and this rule is not inconsistent with the practice act, for while that provides that a demurrer shall distinctly specify the reason why the pleading demurred to is insufficient, there is nothing in the act to prevent the court from noticing and holding insufficient a plea or answer, wholly irrelevant and calculated to distort the course of the law, merely because the demurrer does not in terms point out the real character of the plea. The trial court and this court have the inherent power to keep unwarranted proceedings from creeping into our practice, and such power it is the duty of each court to exercise. Lee v. Follensby, 88 Vt. 35, 43, 74 Atl. 327, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1061; Powers v. Rutland R. Co., 88 Vt. 415, 76 Atl. 110. Much of the discussion in the briefs of counsel on both sides relates to matters not now before us, and such matters we refrain from here discussing.

Judgment on the pleadings reversed, and cause remanded that judgment to account may be rendered.

Transferred from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Allen, Judge.

Petition by Calvin Page and another, as executors, against the Portsmouth Hospital and another. Case transferred. Case discharged.

Petition for the construction of a will. The question is whether two houses and the land on which they stand are devised by a certain clause of the will.

Calvin Page, of Portsmouth, for plaintiffs. John H. Bartlett, of Portsmouth, for defendants.

PER CURIAM. In the absence of briefs or arguments for the parties, the executors are advised that the two houses mentioned are not included in the description of real estate devised by the clause of the will or codicil referred to.

Case discharged. All concurred.

PARKER v. TOWN OF NEW BOSTON.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Hillsborough. June 29, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 842(6)—EXCEPTION—ADMISSION OF PHOTOGRAPH.

Exception to the admission of a photograph as evidence does not raise a question of law.

2. HIGHWAYS \S 194—ACCIDENT—"EMBANKMENT."

A road with a vertical stone-supported drop at the side of 11 inches may be found to be an embankment, within Laws 1893, c. 59, \S 1, as to liability of towns for injury to traveler from defectively railed embankments.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Embankment.]

3. HIGHWAYS \S 213(2)—DANGEROUS CONDITION—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether a highway, because of 11 inches lateral drop without railing, and obscured by vegetation, presented a dangerous condition, rendering it unsuitable for travel, within Laws 1893, c. 59, \S 1, as to town's liability for injury to traveler, is a question for jury, on testimony and view.

4. TRIAL \S 120(2)—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL— INFERENCE OF LAW.

For counsel to ask the jury to draw an inference from defendant's failure to offer experimental evidence of the capacity of highway at place of accident, for passage of meeting automobiles and teams, is not objectionable, as stating fact not in evidence; whether the inference could be drawn being a question of law.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 1060(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

Statement of counsel in argument, that they criticize us for not having plaintiff's wife here, "when she is at home with three children," if involving testimony as to a fact not in evidence, does not avoid verdict; her nonattendance not being thereby explained, it appearing the children were boys 8 to 13 years old.

Transferred from Superior Court, Hillsborough County; Allen, Judge.

Action by Henry E. Parker against the town of New Boston. Case transferred, after verdict for plaintiff, on defendant's exceptions. Exceptions overruled.

Case for injuries from a defective highway. Verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant excepted to the admission of a photograph of the plaintiff's vehicle, to the denial of its motions for a nonsuit and a verdict, and to statements of plaintiff's counsel in argument. The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Robert W. Upton and John M. Stark, both of Concord, for plaintiff. James P. Tuttle, of Manchester, for defendant.

PARSONS, C. J. [1] The exception to the admission of the photograph as evidence does not raise a question of law. Pritchard v. Austin, 69 N. H. 367, 46 Atl. 188.

[2, 3] The plaintiff met an automobile upon the highway and turned out to pass. In so doing the wheels of his wagon went over the edge of the road, where it had been built up with stones to hold the shoulder. The vertical drop was 10.8 inches, and the edge of the wall was about one foot from the traveled path. The plaintiff was thrown from his wagon and struck on a stone wall beside the road. At the time the space between the traveled part of the way and the wall was filled with vegetation and apparently safe for travel. The defendant's motions for a nonsuit and a verdict were upon the ground that the evidence did not disclose as the cause of the injury a dangerous embankment defectively railed within the meaning of the statute. Laws 1893, c. 59, § 1. The road supported by the vertical wall of stones substantially 11 inches high could be found to be an embankment. Wilder v. Concord, 72 N. H. 259, 264, 56 Atl. 193. There was no railing. Whether the construction presented a dangerous condition, which, obscured by vegetation, was so likely to cause injury in the use of the way that a railing should have been erected was a question of fact for the jury. The opinion of the road builders, called by the defendant, if competent, was not conclusive. The jury had a view, and it was for them to say, upon the testimony and their examination of the road, whether the highway was unsuitable for the travel upon it because of the lack of a railing. Seeton v. Dunbarton, 72 N. H. 269, 271, 56 Atl. 197. It cannot be said that, as in Wilder v. Concord, supra, a railing would obstruct the highway.

[4] The exceptions to argument are not well founded. Whether the inference which counsel asked the jury to draw from the defendant's failure to offer experimental evidence of the capacity of the highway at the place of accident for the passage of meeting automobiles and teams could be drawn, was a question of law. Counsel stated no fact not in evidence.

[5] The statement, "They criticized us for not having Mrs. Parker in here when she is at home with three children," was, counsel making it claim, so far as it involves an assertion as to Mrs. Parker's location, an inference from the evidence that plaintiff lived with his wife and had three children at home. But, if it be assumed the assertion was testimony as to a fact not in evidence, the error does not require the destruction of the verdict. The three children were boys between 8 and 13 years of age. There was nothing in the case tending to show, and counsel did not claim, there was anything in the mother's care of children of this maturity which would necessarily prevent her attendance at the trial. The statement that Mrs. Parker was at home under such circumstances had no tendency to explain her nonattendance. It was entirely immaterial upon the issue upon which counsel offered it, and had no tendency to confuse or prejudice the jury, and was in effect an admission that she could have been produced, as the defendant appears to have claimed she should have been. A verdict will not be set aside for the admission of immaterial evidence, unless it is clear it must have influenced the jury. Cook v. Brown, 34 N. H. 460, 470; Rowell v. Hollis, 62 N. H. 129. The statement of unproved facts in argument which avoids a verdict is the statement of facts material upon some issue in the case, or if wholly irrelevant such as are calculated to prejudice the jury. Story v. Railroad, 70 N. H. 364, 376, 387, 48 Atl. 288.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

WOOLDRIDGE v. LAVOIE.

LAVOIE v. WOOLDRIDGE.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Belknap. June 4, 1918.)

1. INFANTS \S 58(2) — CONTRACTS — RESCISSION.

A minor, who purchased an automobile, could rescind the contract at any time before he became of age, or within a reasonable time thereafter, for any reason, or no reason, and recover the money paid, on returning the car and accounting for benefits received, or damage caused to the car.

2. INFANTS ¶58(1)—CONTRACTS—RESCISSI—
—RESTITUTION.

Where a minor purchased an automobile, but rescinded the contract, he was chargeable with the value of the benefits received, including the pleasure derived from the use of the car, if the manner in which he used it was the reasonable thing for a boy in his station of life to do.

3. INFANTS ¶59—CONTRACTS—RESCISSI—

A minor, who purchased an automobile and rescinded the contract, while liable to account for any damages to the car caused by his tortious acts, cannot be compelled to account for damages caused by his ignorance or unskillfulness.

4. INFANTS ¶58(1) — CONTRACTS — RESCIS——SION.

The court may, during trial of an action of assumpsit against a minor for the price of an automobile purchased by him, permit the minor to rescind, if that is the reasonable thing for him to do.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1043(3)—HARMLESS ERROR.

In action for price of automobile sold to minor, coupled with attachment, when the minor brought action to recover the portion of the price already paid, also attaching the automobile, the seller was not prejudiced by the fact that the car was under attachment in both suits, since ordering judgment on the verdict for defendant in the first suit discharged the attachment therein, and payment of judgment for plaintiff in the second suit would discharge that attachment.

Transferred from Superior Court, Belknap County; Kivel, Judge.

Actions, one by Wilbur W. Wooldridge against Arthur Lavoie, and one by Arthur Lavoie, by his father, Peter Lavoie, against Wilbur W. Wooldridge. Causes transferred. Exceptions overruled.

Assumpsit. The first action is to recover the balance due on the purchase price of an automobile; the second, to recover back the part of the purchase price already paid. Trial by the court. Verdict for the defendant in the first action, and for the plaintiff in the second for $210. The court found that Wooldridge sold Lavoie the car for $275, and that it was fairly worth that sum at that time. Lavoie paid him $200 at the time of the sale, and has since paid $10. The court, while the trial was in progress, permitted Lavoie, who is a minor, to rescind the contract he made with Wooldridge and to return the car to Wooldridge. The value of the car at that time was $50. The depreciation in the value of the car was due in part to natural causes and in part to Lavoie's improper use of it. Transferred on Wooldridge's exception to the verdicts and to the court's permitting Lavoie to rescind the contract.

Frank P. Tilton, of Laconia, for exceptant. Oscar L. Young, of Laconia, opposed.

YOUNG, J. [1] Since Lavoie was a minor, he could rescind the contract he made with Wooldridge at any time before he became 21, or within a reasonable time thereafter, for any reason, or for no reason, and recover back the money he had paid toward the purchase price, by returning the car and accounting for (1) any benefit he had received from its use, and (2) paying any damage to the car that was caused by his tortious acts. Hall v. Butterfield, 59 N. H. 354, 358, 47 Am. Rep. 209; Bartlett v. Bailey, 59 N. H. 408; Young v. Currier, 63 N. H. 419.

[2] While it is true, as Wooldridge contends, that the pleasure to be derived from the use of a car may be a benefit to a minor within the meaning of this rule, whether Lavoie was benefited by using this car in the way he did depends on whether using it in that way was the reasonable thing for a boy in his station in life to do; and as the facts are understood the court has found that using the car in the way Lavoie did was not the reasonable thing for him to do.

[3] Although Lavoie should account for any damages to the car that were caused by his tortious acts, he cannot be compelled to account for damages that were caused by his ignorance or unskillfulness in operating the car (Stack v. Cavanaugh, 67 N. H. 149, 153, 30 Atl. 350); and while the court has found that a part of the depreciation in the value of the car was due to Lavoie's "improper use of it," it has not found that he either willfully or negligently damaged the car, and one of these things must appear before he can be compelled to account for any part of the depreciation, for the test to determine that question is the same that would be applied to determine the plaintiff's right to recover, if Lavoie had hired the car and this was a suit to recover damages caused by the way Lavoie used it.

[4, 5] There is no merit in Wooldridge's contention that the court erred in permitting Lavoie to rescind the contract during the trial. No reason has been suggested, and none is apparent, for holding that the court cannot permit a minor to rescind his contract at any time before judgment, if it finds that that is the reasonable thing to do. Neither is there any merit in his contention that he is prejudiced by the fact the car is under attachment in both of these suits, for ordering judgment on the verdict in the first suit in and of itself discharges the attachment in that suit, and paying the judgment in the second suit will have that effect in so far as the attachment in that suit is concerned.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

DESSUREAULT v. MASELLY.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut. July 23, 1918.)

1. DEATH ¶108(3) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTION.

In action for death of 11 year old boy of low mentality, crushed by a heavy truck, question of contributory negligence of deceased held, under the evidence, to be for the jury.

2. NEGLIGENCE §186(29) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—ELEVEN YEAR OLD BOY.

An 11 year old boy of subnormal mentality cannot be said, as a matter of law, to have failed to exercise due care for a boy of his years and mental capacity in his failure to avoid a truck that backed up diagonally toward him, where he had reason to believe truck would back up straight.

3. NEGLIGENCE §184(4) — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action for death of 11 year old boy crushed by heavy truck through alleged negligence of truck driver, evidence held to support verdict for plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; William L. Bennett, Judge.

Action by Nelson Dessureault, administrator, against Frank M. Maselly, to recover damages for negligently causing the death of the plaintiff's intestate, brought to the superior court in New Haven county. Plaintiff was nonsuited in a trial to the jury before Bennett, J., and from the refusal of the trial court to set aside said judgment, plaintiff appeals. Error, judgment set aside, and new trial ordered.

PER CURIAM. The evidence offered by the plaintiff tended to prove the following facts: The plaintiff's intestate was a minor child about 11 years of age, and his mentality was below that of the average child of his years. The defendant owned and operated a heavy motor truck, which was used in the transportation of freight. This ran into the child. The accident in question happened on November 3, 1918, about 6 o'clock in the afternoon at a freightyard in the city of Waterbury. When the accident occurred there were only three persons present, the defendant's servant, Angelo Colantonio, the driver of the car, a brother of the plaintiff's intestate by the name of Nelson, and the boy William who was killed. The testimony as to the direct acts of negligence was limited to that of Nelson, the brother of the deceased. From his testimony it appears that on the afternoon of the day when the accident happened the two boys went to the freight station in Waterbury upon the invitation of Colantonio, the defendant's servant. When they reached the freightyard it was about dusk. The defendant's servant told the boys to get off the truck and see if he was backing up straight to the freight car door. The boys then got off the truck. Nelson jumped into the box car, and William remained upon the ground about four feet at the right of the freight car door, in which his brother was standing. At this time the rear of the motor truck was about seven feet distant from the freight car. While the boys were occupying these positions the truck was stationary and not directed straight toward the freight car door. Nelson, who was standing in the door, shouted to the operator of the truck to go ahead. Instead of going ahead as directed by the boy, Colantonio backed the truck up swiftly in a diagonal direction, so that the rear of the truck caught William between the truck and the freight car, crushing his head and skull which resulted in his death. From the uncontradicted testimony of the brother Nelson, it is a little difficult to understand why the deceased boy failed to exercise ordinary care. The record discloses that the trial court found that the defendant's agent was negligent, but granted a motion to nonsuit on the ground that the evidence did not show that the deceased boy was free from contributory negligence. In the latter there is error.

[1-3] The question of contributory negligence as the evidence appeared was one for the jury, and, furthermore, it could not be said as a matter of law that the plaintiff's intestate was not in the exercise of due care for one of his years and mental capacity. The jury might have found that the defendant's servant knew, or should have known, that the deceased was mentally abnormal; that the injured boy was about four feet to the right of his brother, who was standing in the car door; and that the boy who was killed had reason to think that the rear of the truck would not come back diagonally, but would be guided straight toward the open freight car door, where his brother was standing. It is fair to assume that he heard the direction of the brother to go ahead, and that he acted accordingly. Instead of going ahead the driver of the truck caused it to go backward swiftly in a diagonal direction toward the deceased, which gave no reasonable chance for the boy to escape the injury which caused his death. This evidence was uncontradicted, and would have supported a verdict, and the judgment of nonsuit should not have been granted.

There is error, the judgment of nonsuit is set aside, and a new trial is ordered. The other Judges concurred.

HALL v. J. LA COURCIERE CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut. July 23, 1918.)

MASTER AND SERVANT §380 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—"ARISING OUT OF AND IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT"—FAILURE TO CARE FOR WOUND.

Where, when injured workman reported to representative of employer, neither he nor representative thought wound required medical attention, but later condition became worse, so that medical treatment was necessary, injury arose "out of and in course of employment," within Workmen's Compensation Act, and not from his own willful or negligent failure to care for his wound.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; William S. Case, Judge.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act (Laws 1913, c. 138), by John W. Hall, opposed by the J. La Courciere Company, the employer, and others. Compensation was awarded, and the employer appeals. No error.

Seymour O. Loomis, of New Haven, for appellant. Oswin H. D. Fowler, of Wallingford, for appellee.

SHUMWAY, J. The compensation commissioner, in a memorandum filed with the award, correctly says that the only question in the case as to which any doubt can be entertained is whether the claimant so far neglected his injury as to affect his claim for compensation. He has found these facts:

At the time the claimant received his injury he reported it to the representative of the employer respondent, and the representative concurred in the view that it did not call for medical attention. The claimant was injured on the 4th of June, 1917, and he continued to work until the afternoon of June 8th, when he quit work on account of the injury. On the latter day he had a talk with the respondent's representative, and he advised the claimant to go to any physician he desired to consult, as the respondent was insured. The claimant did not think it was necessary to consult a physician, and so stated at the time, but thereafter he had home treatment by a practical nurse. The claimant's injury was caused by a blow upon the leg, which broke the skin and was followed by infection as a result. At the time of the last conversation with respondent's representative, the leg was swollen and inflamed. The condition of the leg improved, and he returned to his work, and remained working from June 19th to June 23d. On June 25th he tried to work, but could not, and on that day he went in company with his employer to the office of a physician. It did not appear that his condition or his injury was in any way affected by the delay in seeking medical attention, nor that any prejudice resulted from the delay.

Upon these facts the commissioner properly held that the claimant's injury arose out of and in the course of his employment. It appeared to the employer and claimant that the injury did not require medical aid or attention. Certainly there does not appear to be anything in the conduct of the claimant to indicate that he willfully or negligently failed to care for his wound, and to give it such attention and treatment as it seemed to require. After the event it may seem that it would have been more prudent to have sought a physician's aid sooner; but that does not deprive the claimant of his right to compensation, as his disability was the direct result of the injury, and was not in any way heightened or aggravated by willful misconduct. At the most, under the finding, the claimant erred in judgment in not properly appreciating the danger of infection in an open wound.

There is no error. The other Judges concurred.

SCHRAYER v. BISHOP & LYNES.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §332(2)—TORTS OF SERVANT—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Where the servant, returning in an automobile from delivering goods, intending to stop on his way to the place of business at his home for lunch, struck and killed a pedestrian, it could not be said, as a matter of law, that a deviation of a few blocks from the direct route to the place of business was a departure from the master's service, relieving the master from liability for the tort.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §706(8) — STREET ACCIDENTS—CARE REQUIRED OF MINOR.

In action for death of minor, struck by automobile on the street, it was proper to instruct that the boy could not be careless, and was bound to use his faculties, and to do what he could reasonably do to avoid the injury.

3. DEATH §78 — MEASURE OF DAMAGES — WRONGFUL DEATH.

Deceased's estate is entitled to some compensation for wrongful death alone, without considering his expectation of life or probable accumulation.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR §1064(1)—HARMLESS ERROR.

In action for wrongful death of minor pedestrian, defendant could not complain of instruction authorizing recovery of the lump sum, which would fairly give compensation for the loss of the net earnings of the space of time which the boy could be fairly expected to live after reaching 21; such instruction being harmless to defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fairfield County; William M. Maltbie, Judge.

Action by Ella F. Schraye, administratrix of George Kavano, deceased, against Bishop & Lynes. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. No error.

Carl Foster, of Bridgeport, for appellants. Nehemiah Candee and John T. Dwyer, both of South Norwalk, for appellee.

SHUMWAY, J. The material facts which present the question of law the defendants raised by the appeal are these: The plaintiff's intestate, George Kavano, a boy about 15 years old, was killed on April 19, 1917. He was struck by an automobile truck on Main street, in the city of Norwalk. He was riding a bicycle, and George Ayrault was driving the truck. Ayrault was employed by the defendant as a truck driver at the time. He was returning from a trip made to deliver merchandise for the defendants. It was half past 12 o'clock p. m., and it was his intention to go home for his dinner. Ayault had been accustomed to use the truck to go to his house for dinner from two to four times a week, for a period of from two to four years, with the knowledge and consent of the employer's manager. There is no question made on the appeal that the injury to the plaintiff's intestate was not caused, in part at least, by Ayrault's negligence.

The defendants claim that the court erred in submitting to the jury as a question of fact whether Ayrault at the time was acting within the scope of his employment; second, that the court erred in charging the jury upon the question of Kavano's duty as a boy of 15 years to exercise reasonable care; third, that the court erred in charging the jury on the measure of damages.

[1] The first question above stated has been before this court in a number of cases, beginning with Stone v. Hills, 45 Conn. 44, 29 Am. Rep. 635, to Carrier v. Donavon, 88 Conn. 37, 89 Atl. 894. But the rule in this state is laid down in Ritchie v. Waller, 63 Conn. 155, 28 Atl. 29, 27 L. R. A. 161, 38 Am. St. Rep. 361, and is the one uniformly applied. In the last case the court uses this language:

"In cases where the deviation is slight, and not unusual, the court may, and often will, as matter of law, determine that the servant was still executing his master's business. So, too, where the deviation is very marked and unusual, the court in like manner may determine that the servant was not on the master's business at all, but on his own. Cases falling between these extremes will be regarded as involving merely a question of fact, to be left to the jury."

The court, in leaving to the jury as a question of fact whether this act of the defendant's servant in intending to go home to his dinner under the circumstances was a departure from his master's service, was as favorable to the defendant as the facts in the case permitted. Ayrault was on his return trip; the outward trip was confessedly in the line of his employment, and it cannot be said that a simple intention on his part to go home with the truck for his dinner, with the consent of his employer, was a departure from his master's business. The deviation, if any, may have been so slight that the court might have properly instructed the jury as a matter of law that the servant was acting within the scope of his employment. It does not appear how far from the most direct route to defendant's yard, where presumably the truck was placed when not in use, Ayrault had departed at the time of the accident; but it does appear that the direct route from the point where he came upon Main street after delivering his load of merchandise was in a southerly direction, while he turned to go northerly. It would not be contended that, if Ayrault's house had been on the direct route to the yard, his purpose to stop for his dinner on the way would be a departure from his master's business; and neither can it be said as a matter of law that taking a more indirect way constituted such departure, because, so far as appears, the deviation may have been so small as to be no deviation at all, even if it is assumed that it was his intention to depart wholly from the master's service.

[2] Upon the question of due care on the part of the boy Kavano the court said:

"The same rule applies to the boy with reference to what he should do as applies to the man. Each must use reasonable care, but there is this distinction: You do not ordinarily ask of a boy the same care which you ask of a man, and the law don't. The law says that what a boy must do is to use that degree of care which a boy of the same degree of intelligence, of the same age, of the same experience, might reasonably be expected to exercise. It is not now the care of an ordinarily prudent man; it is the care of an ordinarily prudent boy, similar to the boy in question, in these various respects. So that the burden which rests upon the plaintiff in regard to the care which this boy should exercise is this: Did he act as a boy of that age and experience and intelligence and general surroundings might be expected to act."

This extract may be open to objection, if stated in connection with Ayrault's duty, under the circumstances, because it would not be his duty to use the same precautions to avoid injury to this boy as he would a child just beginning to walk. He is only bound to regulate his conduct by that which by due attention he could see. He could not see the boy's intelligence and experience in life. The court also said:

"The boy cannot be heedless or careless. He is bound to use his faculties. He is bound to do what he can reasonably to avoid injury to see and hear, and use generally his faculties; and if he finds himself in a position where danger is imminent, he is bound to do what he can reasonably to avoid it."

This correctly defines the plaintiff's intestate's duty.

[3, 4] The court charged the jury in regard to the damages in substantially the language of this court in Broughel v. S. N. E. T. Co., 73 Conn. 614, 48 Atl. 751, 84 Am. St. Rep. 176, as follows:

"Just so far as you can, you are to base it on the loss which would come to his estate by reason of his untimely death."

But the trial court said further:

"So that the rule, as I say, is the lump sum which will fairly give compensation for the loss of the net earnings for the space of time which you may fairly expect this boy to live after he gets to be 21."

The rule thus stated does not contain all the elements of damage named in the case above cited. Broughel v. S. N. E. T. Co. However, as stated, it did the defendants no harm. Quoting from that case:

"Under the statutes, the right to recover a limited compensation for death alone, as one of the results or consequences of a wrong inflicted upon a man in his lifetime, survives to or is vested in his executors or administrators for the benefit of certain designated beneficiaries, and is thus in a certain sense made a part of his estate, regarded as that aggregate of rights and possessions which a man leaves at his death."

So the law is that a man's estate is entitled to some compensation for death alone, without wandering into the somewhat hazy realm of an individual's expectation of life or his probable accumulations, though these latter are in some cases proper subjects of consideration on the question of damages. The evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict for the damages awarded in this case.

There is no error. The other Judges concurred.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS \Leftrightarrow 510 (8)—ACCOUNTING—REVIEW.

The Supreme Judicial Court is not called upon to pass upon all the items of a disallowed account, on report of an appeal from the decree of a judge of probate.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS \Leftrightarrow 464—DEATH OF EXECUTOR—ACCOUNTING.

Where estate was devised to widow, with power of appointment as to part of the estate, any residue remaining to go to certain legatees, debts paid her executors cannot be included in their account of the decedent's administration of her husband's estate, as their payment devolved on the administrator of the husband's estate; but the latter could not pay for expenses of administration and litigation concerning the widow's own property, under Rev. St. 1916, c. 63, §§ 25, 27.

Appeal from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, at Law.

In the matter of the accounting of Leon L. Libby and Alice M. Cornforth, executors of the will of Samantha O. Jerrard, deceased, who was executrix of the will of Simon G. Jerrard. From a decree of the judge of probate, disallowing the account, the executors appeal. On report from the Supreme Court of Probate. Appeal sustained, and proceeding remanded.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, BIRD, HANSON, and PHILBROOK, JJ.

Manson & Coolidge, of Pittsfield, for appellants. Matthew Laughlin, of Bangor, pro se. A. J. Merrill, of Bangor, for appellee Home for Aged Women.

BIRD, J. Simon G. Jerrard, of Levant, in the county of Penobscot, died testate on the 28th day of January, 1909, at the age of 80 years, leaving a widow, Samantha O. Jerrard, and no issue. By his will, which bears the date of January 1, 1898, he appoints his widow executrix, provides for a monument on his burial lot, bequeaths certain personal property to relatives, to be delivered at the decease of his wife or during her lifetime, at her election, certain personal property to be delivered the legatee in the usual course of administration, and two money legacies payable on the decease of his wife. The remaining items of the will are as follows:

"Ninth. All the rest, residue and remainder of the property of whatever name or kind of which I may die possessed, together with the use and proceeds during her lifetime of all property embraced in the foregoing bequests, I hereby give, devise and bequeath to my beloved wife, Samantha O. Jerrard for her sole and separate use for and during her natural life, with full power to use, dispose of, sell and convey any or all of it as she may desire, the same as I might do if living, and to dispose of by will, at her discretion, as a memorial fund in her own name and mine to be devoted to some charitable, benevolent or educational use, a sum not exceeding three-fourths part of what may remain of my estate at her decease. And I earnestly desire that my said wife during her lifetime shall dispose of by gift to such of my relatives as are not specially named in this instrument all my household goods, pictures, silver, glass and crockery ware and all other articles which go to make up the furnishings of our home, so that none of said furnishings shall ever be disposed of by sale.

"Tenth. Whatever may remain of my estate at the decease of my said wife, not disposed of by or under the foregoing provisions of this will, after paying all her just debts, funeral expenses and the costs of administration, I give devise and bequeath as follows: To my sister Mrs. Jane L. Bennett, to my brother John F. Jerrard, to my brother Anson C. Jerrard, to my sister Mrs. Helen N. Jenkins and to my sister Mrs. Angella J. Brackett each one seventh part. To my sister Mrs. Sarah G. Crosby the income of one-seventh part during her natural life and at her decease said part to be divided equally between her son Ellery C. Crosby and her daughter Mrs. Ada M. Wing, and the remaining seventh part to be divided equally between Sanford O. Jerrard and Eva M. Jerrard son and daughter of my brother George W. P. Jerrard. * * *

This will was duly admitted to probate in the probate court of Penobscot county.

After the decease of her husband, his widow, Samantha, continued to reside upon and operated the farm hereinafter referred to for about a year and a half. She then took up her residence with her niece, and the niece also of her deceased husband, Alice M. Cornforth, with whom she lived until her decease. Under date of August 16, 1911, Samantha O. Jerrard, of Pittsfield, in the county of Somerset, as the widow of Simon G. Jerrard, and avowedly for the purpose of executing the power of appointment given her by the ninth item of the will of her deceased husband, made a will by the first item of which she appointed Leon L. Libby, one of the appellants, executor. The second and remaining item follows:

"Second. I hereby give and bequeath the sum of four thousand dollars to the Home for Aged Women at Bangor, Maine, said amount to be invested in long time securities, more with a view to the safety of the principal than to the income, and said amount as invested to constitute a permanent memorial fund to be known as 'The Col. Simon G. and Samantha C. Jerrard Fund.' The annual income and no more of this fund shall be used for the general purposes of maintaining said home and carrying out the purposes thereof.

"This legacy is to be paid from the property described in said ninth paragraph of the will of Simon G. Jerrard and is disposed of by authority of said paragraph."

On the 25th day of October, 1911, she made a second will, which confirms that of August 18, 1911, makes sundry bequests of personal property and gives all the remainder of her personal estate to Alice M. Cornforth, whom she appoints executrix.

The widow, Samantha C. Jerrard, died, aged 80 years, on the 4th day of December, 1911, without rendering any account as executrix of her husband's estate or filing any inventory thereof.

Both her wills were duly proved and allowed in the probate court of Somerset county, as one will, and letters testamentary issued to Leon L. Libby and Alice M. Cornforth, named as executor and executrix in the respective wills.

Subsequently, apparently on January 30, 1912, Matthew Laughlin, Esq., of Bangor, was appointed administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of Simon G. Jerrard.

The inventory of the estate of Samantha C. Jerrard, which was filed July 14, 1913, shows real estate, $1,000; goods and chattels, $118.50; and rights and credits, $6,698.46—totaling $7,814.96.

Without filing any inventory of the estate of Simon G. Jerrard, as of the date of his decease, which perhaps was neither possible nor possibly needful, the executors of the will of Samantha C. Jerrard filed in the probate court of Penobscot county what purports to be the first and final account of Samantha C. Jerrard, as executrix of the last will and testament of Simon G. Jerrard. It bears date of the fourth Tuesday of July, 1913. In Schedule A they charge the deceased executrix with:

"Property which was in the hands of Samantha C. Jerrard at the time of her decease and had been the property or proceeds of property of the late Simon G. Jerrard."

As such appear sundry choses in action, aggregating $1,080, and further choses in action, all substantially deposits in banks in the name of Samantha C. Jerrard, and notes to her order, aggregating $2,698.81, making the total amount of Schedule A $3,728.81.

In Schedule B the first item of credit is:

"Delivered to Matthew Laughlin, administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of Simon G. Jerrard, the following assets listed in Schedule A, standing in the name of Simon G. Jerrard," in the aggregate amount of $1,080.

The second item or credit is:

"Retained by Alice M. Cornforth and Leon L. Libby, as executors of the estate of Samantha C. Jerrard, the remaining assets listed in Schedule A towards payment of the following:

To pay the balance due on the promissory note dated Levant, January 18, 1888, signed by Simon G. Jerrard, for value received promising to pay to the order of Mrs. Samantha C. Jerrard the sum of $3,667.80 on demand, with interest, on the back of which is indorsement of payment of $3,200 on April 28, 1891; there being due on said note, after computing the interest and deducting said payment, on January 23, 1909, the date of the death of said Simon G. Jerrard, the sum of $2,454.31...$2,454.81

To pay as provided for in the last will and testament of said Simon G. Jerrard:

Debt of Samantha C. Jerrard, due James H. Crosby, for store bill of $189.56, tax bill of 1910 for $34, and interest $20.84, less credit of $60 for stock and farming tools	$188.90	2,698.81
Costs of administration of the estate of Samantha C. Jerrard, the commission due the executors of her will on her personal property, appraised at $6,814.96, at 5 per cent.	$340.74
Services and expenses of Manson & Coolidge as attorneys for said executors	500.00	840.74

Balance due from the estate of Simon G. Jerrard to the estate of Samantha C. Jerrard.....$780.14."

In July, 1916, the accountants moved to amend their account by substituting in Schedule B, for the sums of $340.74 and $500 ($840.74), the sum of $2,474.30, according to the statement attached to their motion. With few exceptions, the items in the statement are charges of administration of the estate of Samantha C. Jerrard and incurred since the decease of their testatrix.

The judge of probate refused the allowance of the amendment and disallowed the account. From the decree of the judge of probate, the executors appealed, alleging the following reasons of appeal:

"Because it is their right and their duty to file and have allowed this account of the administration by Samantha C. Jerrard of the goods and estate of Simon G. Jerrard; because each of the items in said account were proper, and should by said decree have been allowed; because the petition for the amendment of said account should have been allowed by said decree, and the items contained in said amendment were proper, and should have been allowed by said decree."

The case is before this court upon report from the Supreme Court of Probate.

The first item of Schedule B, in the amount of $1,080, should be allowed. The delivery of the specific rights and credits is alleged, and the administrator de bonis non acknowledges that he received them.

The second item of Schedule B, in amount of $2,454.31, is claimed as a lawful credit by right of retainer of assets to meet the balance due upon the note of the testator, Simon G. Jerrard, to the order of the testatrix, Samantha O. Jerrard, of the accounting executors. It appears that this note, dated January 18, 1888, was given for the sum of $3,667.30. April 28, 1891, the testator conveyed to his wife, the payee, his homestead farm and two other parcels of real estate for the recited consideration of $3,200, and on the same day the payee indorsed upon the note the payment of $3,200. From the date of the note to the day of the death of maker more than 21 years had elapsed, from the date of the indorsement to his death nearly 18 years, and to the claim of the right to retain, which was first made manifest to the administrator de bonis non by the filing of the account in July, 1913, more than 25 years.

As to the actual consideration for the note, there is no evidence. Whether Mrs. Jerrard was at its date possessed of any property is open to great doubt. Her niece, Mrs. Cornforth, one of the executors, testifies that she once inherited three hundred and some odd dollars, and does not know that she ever acquired any other means.

It seems that, at the time the note of January 18, 1888, was made, Simon G. Jerrard was liable upon a note of large amount, and was holding the office of sheriff of Penobscot, wherein he was liable at any time to be involved in litigation.

The indorsement upon the note of the expressed consideration for the conveyance of the farm by her husband to Samantha O. Jerrard was, as already noted, in her own hand, and there is no evidence tending to show that the husband was at any time aware of it.

There is no evidence tending to show that Mrs. Jerrard in her lifetime intended to exercise the right of retainer, but there is evidence that her executors claimed to exercise the right.

Under these circumstances, it is at least doubtful if Mrs. Jerrard considered the note an existing liability against the estate of her husband, or intended ever to enforce it.

[1] But on the 16th day of August, 1911, less than 4 months before she died, she made a will in exercise of the power of appointment given by the will of her husband, whereby she gave the sum of $4,000 to the Home for Aged Women of Bangor. This will she confirmed 2 months later. By his will the sum so given was not to exceed "three-fourths part of what may remain of my estate at her decease." If the account of her administration rendered by her executors is correct, and she regarded the note enforceable, her husband's estate remaining was but little more than $1,000, and her will becomes a reproach to her husband's memory. On the other hand, if there be deducted from the rights and credits ($6,696.46) shown by the inventory of her estate the notes and interest thereon received by Mrs. Jerrard upon the sale of her farm ($3,455.75) and the bank deposit claimed to be her own ($157.65), there remains the sum of $3,083.06. If to this sum be added the assets ($1,080) turned over to the administrator d. b. n. c. t. a., we have the sum of $4,113.06. If to this be added $500, given the husband of Mrs. Cornforth previously to the making of her second will, and the principal of a note for $500 given Mrs. Cornforth on the day the will was executed (Crosby v. Cornforth, 112 Me. 113, 90 Atl. 982, which it is agreed may be considered), we have the sum of $5,113.06, not far from $5,833, the sum to which the husband's estate should have amounted to warrant the exercise of the power of appointment in the sum of $4,000. She could, however, have reached these figures only upon the basis of considering the balance of the note of $3,667.30 as not to be enforced. We conclude that her wills clearly indicate that she did not consider the note an existing claim against her husband's estate and did not intend to enforce it as such. Barstow v. Tetlow, 115 Me. 96, 106, 97 Atl. 829.

The administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of Simon G. Jerrard claims that he is entitled to receive from the executors of the will of Samantha O. Jerrard the balance of the assets of the estate of the former, as shown by their account, less the amount of $1,080 already paid him.

In Hall v. Otis, 71 Me. 326, 330, the will under which the controversy arose was not dissimilar to that of Simon G. Jerrard. The wife was given the residue of the estate for life, with power of disposal, with remainder over upon her decease of what then remained to be divided among his surviving brothers and sisters. She was named executrix. Proceedings in equity were commenced by the administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. against the executor of the deceased widow. After a construction of the will, to the effect that the brothers and sisters surviving are entitled to what remained, the court says:

"We think * * * that his administrator is entitled to all that portion of Daniel E. Hall's [the testator's] estate (including the proceeds of property sold by his widow) which had not been expended at the time of her decease."

In Hatch v. Caine, 86 Me. 282, 284, 29 Atl. 1076, 1077, a bill in equity for the recovery of a sum of money in a savings bank, which plaintiff claimed was a part of the estate of Joseph Storer, deceased testator, whose administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. brings the bill against the executrix of the widow of testator, the will was substantially like those in the foregoing case, and in the case under consideration, with remainder over to a charitable institution. The court concludes its opinion as follows:

"It is settled law in this state that, under wills similar to the one now before us, the widow takes only a life estate, and that whatever remains of the estate at her decease goes to the beneficiaries named in the will, and that a bill in equity may be maintained by the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo, to obtain possession of the remainder."

The case of Small v. Thompson arose under a will of very like character, in which provision is made for the payment from the property remaining at the decease of the life tenant, the widow of the testator, of her debts and funeral expenses. The appellant in the Supreme Court of Probate was the administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. of the testator, and the appellee the executor of the will of the deceased life tenant. The case was before this court upon the exception of the appellee. The Supreme Court of Probate found that a portion of the estate of the testator remained in the hands of the life tenant and executrix at the time of her decease, and decreed that the appellee be charged with the personal property in question, which may be subjected to the charges of administration not actually paid by the executrix in her lifetime, and then paid or delivered to the administrator of the testator de bonis non "by him to be applied to the payment of the debts of [the life tenant] and her funeral expenses, the charges of administration, and then distributed among the heirs at law of [the testator], as provided in his will." 92 Me. 539, 543, 545, 43 Atl. 509, 510.

[2] The right and duty of an administrator of a deceased administrator to account in the probate court, for the benefit of his intestate, were early recognized by this court. Nowell v. Nowell, 2 Me. (2 Greenl.) 75, 81. The same case indicates by fair inference that the accounting is limited to acts done by the deceased representative in his lifetime, and that the administrator of the latter can proceed no further in the administration of the estate of the first intestate. In harmony with the case last cited is Small v. Thompson, 92 Me. 539, 545, 43 Atl. 509.

[3] By statute it is provided that:

"The executor of an executor has no authority, as such, to administer the estate of the first testator; but on the death of the sole or surviving executor of any last will, administration of said estate not already administered may be granted with the will annexed, to such person as the judge thinks fit." R. S. 1916, c. 68, § 27; Laws Mass. 1783, c. 24, § 10; Pub. Laws of Maine 1821, c. 51, § 19.

See Prescott v. Morse, 64 Me. 422.

And by R. S. c. 68, § 25, the power and duty of administrators d. b. n. are extended to effects not distributed, and are no longer restricted to those unadministered. Walker v. Savings Bank, 113 Me. 353, 357, 93 Atl. 1025, L. R. A. 1915E, 840, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 1.

It may be that the conclusions already reached practically dispose of the appeal; but, as the case is reported for the decision of all questions of law and fact involved, it may be incumbent upon the court to reach further conclusions and to make further suggestions, which will guide the probate court in passing upon the account, to which we must refer the allowance or disallowance of the particular items, as well by reason of lack of evidence to determine as to many of the items, as because we do not think that by reporting an appeal from the decree of the judge of probate this court can be called upon, among other things, to pass upon all the items of a disallowed account. It has none of the powers to employ the instrumentalities which other courts may invoke in such cases. See Crocker v. Crocker, 43 Me. 561, 562; Fessenden, Appellant, 77 Me. 98, 99.

[4] These conclusions or suggestions involve a construction of the final or tenth item of the will of Simon G. Jerrard, see Small v. Thompson, 92 Me. 537, 544, 43 Atl. 509, which provides that:

"Whatever may remain of my estate at the decease of my wife, not disposed of by or under the foregoing provisions of this will, after paying all her just debts, funeral expenses and the costs of administration, I give, devise and bequeath as follows."

Then follow the names of the legatees and the proportions in which they are to take.

We conclude, upon the whole will and its evident purpose, that the testator intended by the tenth item to give to the legatees named whatever of his estate remained in the hands of his wife at her decease, not used and disposed of by his wife, after the payment of the legacies made payable upon her decease and the bequest to the Home for Aged Women, less the amount required to pay her just debts, funeral expenses, and the costs of administration. Her debts paid by the executors of her will cannot be included in the account of these executors in their account of her administration of her husband's will. This necessarily follows from the conclusion, already reached, that their payment devolved on his administrator de bonis non. In the account no charge of funeral expenses is made.

Numerous charges purporting to be the expenses of the administration of her estate contracted by her executors appear in their account. To what extent they are a charge upon the estate of Simon G. Jerrard depends upon the meaning of the words used in the tenth item of his will, "the costs of administration." Considering, as before, the whole will and the evident purpose of the testator and the circumstances revealed by the evidence, we think the expression quoted refers to the expense of administering his own estate by his administrator de bonis non, any unpaid expense of administration incurred by his executrix in her lifetime (and there appears to be no charge for such expenses), and the cost of the probate and allowance of such will or wills of his widow as were made in execution of the power of appointment given her by the ninth item of his will and that expenses of the administration under her wills arising from litigation or otherwise concerning her own property and estate were not intended to be included. It is significant that the expenses of the litigation in Crosby v. Cornforth, 112 Me. 109, 115, 90 Atl. 961, were ordered paid from her estate. The court in that case must have acted with full knowledge and advisedly, as it had before it all the wills both that of Simon G. Jerrard and those of his wife. The controversy in that case concerned only her own estate. Be that as it may, we think it clear that whatever expenses of administration arise from the probate and allowance of her wills are not to be allowed, except the nominal fees and expenses attending the allowance of her first will, nor should they appear in the account of the executrix of Simon G. Jerrard's will rendered by her executors. They are to be paid by, and credited in the account of, the administrator de bonis non.

For the same reasons this court does not pass upon the motion to amend. It comprises many items. The facts should be determined in the Supreme Court of Probate, and the various items sought by amendment to be added to the account, be allowed or disallowed in accordance with the law declared in this opinion.

The allusion, necessarily made in the discussion of this case, to the right of retainer, is not to be regarded as a recognition of its existence in this jurisdiction. Whether or not, in view of our statutory provisions regarding the allowance of the private claims of executors and administrators, they may still exercise the common law right of retainer is not decided.

Appeal sustained, with costs.

Remanded to Supreme Court of Probate for further action in accordance with this opinion.

CHRISTOPHER v. SISK. (No. 8.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 19, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE §—43(1) — JUDICIAL NOTICE — COURT RECORDS.

The Court of Appeals takes judicial notice of all papers properly filed in such court.

2. JUDGMENT §—570(1) — CONCLUSIVENESS — TITLE TO LAND.

A judgment dismissing a bill of complaint for specific performance of alleged land contract precludes the court, in action between same parties for restitution of possession of land involved in former action, from granting motion to quash proceedings, where matters set up in motion are a repetition of allegations of dismissed bill.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Caroline County; W. H. Adkins and Philemon B. Hopper, Judges.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Albert W. Sisk against Gootee Christopher. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOOK-BRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

T. Alan Goldsborough, of Denton, for appellant. Henry R. Lewis, of Denton (Charles B. Harrison, of Preston, and Lewis & Knotts, of Denton, on the brief), for appellee.

CONSTABLE, J. The appellee in this case instituted proceedings before a justice of the peace, under authority of article 53 of the Code, for restitution of the possession of real estate. The appellant, at the hearing before the justice of the peace, attempted to raise the question of the jurisdiction of the justice to hear the case, for the reason that title to land was involved. Judgment of restitution of the premises to the appellee was entered, and an appeal therefrom was taken to the circuit court. On appeal before that court, the appellant again raised the same question of jurisdiction by filing a motion to quash the proceedings. The motion was overruled, and the judgment affirmed. From that judgment this appeal was prosecuted.

The testimony introduced in this case on the motion to quash was that offered at a former trial between the same parties and about the same subject-matter, and was certified by the lower court as follows:

"We, judges of the circuit court for Caroline county, hereby certify that all questions involved in this case were by us decided in favor of the appellee. We further certify that the appellant (who claimed that the title of land was involved, depriving the justice of the peace of jurisdiction, that being the only jurisdictional question raised) agreed that, if the justice of the peace had jurisdiction, his judgment should be affirmed. We further certify that the foregoing testimony is that offered at the trial of the motion to quash in this case. It is a transcript of testimony taken in No. 1711 Chancery, in the circuit court for Caroline county, and it was agreed between counsel that the said testimony should be the testimony in the case at bar; it being understood that the testimony was objected to, the court's rulings excepted to, and the testimony admitted subject to exception, just as appears in the testimony taken in the chancery case, and further understood that the appellant's exceptions were finally overruled, just as they were in the chancery case. We do not indorse the interpretation put upon the court's opinion in the chancery case by the appellant in his affidavit filed with the justice of the peace.

"As witness our hands and seals this 14th day of January, 1918.

"W. H. Adkins, [Seal]

"Philemon B. Hopper, [Seal]

"Associate Judges of the Circuit Court for Caroline County."

[1] It appears that the decree in No. 1711 Chancery, in the circuit court for Caroline county, mentioned in the above certificate, was appealed from, and the record transmitted to this court was No. 20 on the April term, 1916, docket, but, before argument, was dismissed by order of the appellant. The record in that appeal is now on file among the papers of this court and is now before us. We will briefly refer to it, as, of course, we take judicial notice of all papers properly filed in our own court. It is disclosed by it that the appellant herein filed his bill of complaint for the specific performance of an alleged contract of sale entered into by and between the appellant and appellee herein for precisely the same tract of land as is in controversy in this case. After a full hearing, the court passed an unrestricted decree dismissing the bill. It is apparent, from a consideration of the two records, that the matters set up in the motion to quash are but a repetition of the allegations relied upon by the appellant in furtherance of his bill for specific performance, and upon which the circuit court decreed adversely to him.

[2] It is our opinion that this case presents for application the doctrine of res judicata or estoppel by judgment. The principle is stated in 15 R. C. L. § 429, as follows:

"Briefly stated, this doctrine is that an existing, final judgment or decree rendered upon the merits, and without fraud or collusion, by a court of competent jurisdiction, upon matters within its jurisdiction, is conclusive of the rights of the parties or their privies, in all other actions or suits in the same or any other judicial tribunal of concurrent jurisdiction, on the points and matters in issue in the first suit."

In 23 Cyc. 1116, it is said:

"The principle of estoppel by judgment is in no way dependent on the form as the object of the litigation in which the adjudication was made; it is only essential that there should have been a judicial determination of rights in controversy with a final decision thereon."

These abstracts are in full accord with the Maryland decisions. Harryman v. Roberts, 52 Md. 64; Thomas v. Malster, 14 Md. 382; C. & O. Canal v. Gittings, 36 Md. 276; Trayhern v. Colburn, 66 Md. 277, 7 Atl. 459; Barrick v. Haines, 78 Md. 253, 27 Atl. 1111, 44 Am. St. Rep. 283; Tifel v. Jenkins, 95 Md. 665, 53 Atl. 429; Whitehurst v. Rogers, 38 Md. 503; Martin v. Evans, 85 Md. 8, 36 Atl. 253, 36 L. R. A. 213, 60 Am. St. Rep. 292.

In an endeavor to oust the justice of the peace of jurisdiction, the appellant made and filed an affidavit. The Code, by article 53, § 5, provides the method by which this may be accomplished; but this way was not availed of by the appellant, nor under the facts could have been. We are of the opinion that both the justice of the peace and the circuit court had jurisdiction, and will therefore dismiss the appeal.

This case came first to this court upon an appeal by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company from a judgment entered against it in the circuit court for Allegany county in favor of David Branson. The court, on May 17, 1916, affirmed the judgment. B. & O. R. Co. v. Branson, 128 Md. 673, 98 Atl. 225. The case was then taken by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company upon writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court reversed the judgment and remanded the cause to this court for further proceedings. The Supreme Court filed no opinion, but contented itself by entering upon its records the following notation, viz.:

The mandate from that court was received and filed in this court on March 22, 1917.

The plaintiff below (David Branson) filed an application in this court, asking that the case be remanded to the circuit court for Allegany county for retrial upon an amended declaration. This application was overruled by this court by an order dated May 9, 1917.

[1] The object of this memorandum is to state briefly the reason for denying the motion. The suit was brought under the federal Employers' Liability Act, approved April 22, 1906, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657-8665). That act created a new cause of action, and in all cases falling within its provisions it furnishes an exclusive remedy and supersedes the state laws. Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44; St. Louis, San Francisco & Texas Ry. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 33 Sup. Ct. 651, 57 L. Ed. 1129, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156; Taylor v. Taylor, 232 U. S. 368, 34 Sup. Ct. 350, 53 L. Ed. 638.

Supreme Court, it may be supposed that the judgment was reversed solely upon the ground that Branson was not employed in interstate commerce at the time he suffered the injury sued for. In cases not covered by the act, the common-law liability of the common carrier by rail continues, and an action based upon common principles may be maintained against it upon proof of actionable negligence. The plaintiff did not incorporate in his declaration a count charging a common-law liability, but elected to rely for recovery upon the act. It is now definitely determined that he has no case under the act, and the court was asked to remand the case in order that by amendment the cause of action upon which the case was tried, and finally determined adversely to the plaintiff, might be changed into a common-law action to enforce a common-law liability. This would be by an amendment of the pleadings, the introduction of a new or different cause of action. The injury complained of was suffered by the plaintiff about four years ago.

It appears, so far as we are advised by the record in this case, that the plaintiff could not, by amendment, state a cause of action which would not be in effect the commencement of a new suit, which would be barred by limitations. Spencer v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 126 Md. 194, 94 Atl. 660; Hogarty v. Phila. & R. Ry., 255 Pa. 236, 99 Atl. 741; Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Renn, 241 U. S. 290, 36 Sup. Ct. 567, 60 L. Ed. 1006.

In such a situation, we followed the usual practice, and denied the motion to remand the case. This, however, does not prevent the bringing of a new suit, if the plaintiff desires to do so.

BALTIMORE CAR WHEEL CO. v. CLARK.
(No. 39.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. Dec. 12, 1917.)

1. TRIAL §272—INSTRUCTIONS—EXCEPTIONS—WAIVER.

Where defendant proceeded to examine witnesses on its own behalf after rejection of its prayer, at conclusion of plaintiff's case, to withdraw case from the jury, it lost the benefit of its exception to the ruling.

2. BROKERS §51—COMMISSIONS.

Mere fact that agent introduced purchaser to seller or disclosed names by which they came together would not entitle agent to commission.

3. BROKERS §51—COMMISSIONS.

If introduction by agent of purchaser and seller or disclosure of names by which they came together was the foundation on which negotiations were begun and conducted and sale made, agent is entitled to his compensation.

4. BROKERS §58—COMMISSIONS.

To entitle agent to commission sale must have been result of his efforts or negotiations.

5. BROKERS §86(1) — COMMISSIONS — EVIDENCE.

To entitle plaintiff to recover compensation for sale of defendant's land, plaintiff must establish his right by preponderance of evidence.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR §997(2) — REVIEW — DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

In determining whether plaintiff's prayer for submission of issues was properly granted, court on appeal will decide merely whether evidence in record, viewed in light most favorable to plaintiff, is legally sufficient to warrant a jury finding upon issues submitted.

7. BROKERS §88(3) — ACTION FOR COMMISSION—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for commissions, whether plaintiff was procuring cause of sale of defendant's land held, under evidence, a jury question.

8. EVIDENCE §814(1) — FACTS NOT WITHIN WITNESS' OWN KNOWLEDGE.

In action by plaintiff for commission on sale of defendant's land, where witness under examination had nothing to do with purchase, and could not possibly have testified of his own knowledge whether purchaser's general manager knew of plaintiff's letter in regard to purchase or to what extent board of directors of purchaser were influenced by it, it was not error to sustain objections to questions.

9. BROKERS §88(3) — PROCURING CAUSE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Proximate or procuring cause is ordinarily a question for jury, and court will not, except in clear case, decide it.

Appeal from Baltimore City Court; Chas. W. Heulsler, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Suit by Linwood L. Clark against the Baltimore Car Wheel Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The following are defendant's prayers:

Defendant's First Prayer.

The defendant prays the court to instruct the jury that the mere fact of the agent having introduced the purchaser to the seller, or disclosed the names by which they came together to treat, will not entitle him to compensation, but, if it appears that such introduction or disclosure was the foundation on which the negotiations were begun and conducted and the sale made, the agent is entitled to his compensation. (Granted.)

Defendant's Second Prayer.

The defendant prays the court to instruct the jury that to entitle the plaintiff to recover a commission for the sale of the property mentioned in the evidence must not only show his efforts or negotiations to accomplish the sale, but he must show that the sale was the result of such efforts or negotiations. (Granted.)

Defendant's Third Prayer.

The defendant prays the court to instruct the jury that, if they find from the evidence that the plaintiff is entitled to recover compensation for making the sale mentioned in the evidence, the recovery shall be limited to a commission only on so much of the purchase price as represents the price paid for the property, which the evidence shows belonged to the defendant at the time he met the plaintiff, and the plaintiff shall not be entitled to any commission on the sum paid by the purchaser for the property bought by the defendant from Hubner and Hunting for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the Pennsylvania Railroad, if they shall so find. (Granted.)

Defendant's Fourth Prayer.

The defendant prays the court to instruct the jury that, to entitle the plaintiff to recover in this case, he must establish that right by a preponderance of evidence.
(Granted.)

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, BURKE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNMEH, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Rignal W. Baldwin, of Baltimore (Duvall & Baldwin, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellant. Edward L. Ward, of Baltimore, for appellee.

BURKE, J. This is an appeal by the Baltimore Car Wheel Company, a corporation, from a judgment for $1,112.55 entered against it in the Baltimore city court wherein Linwood L. Clark was the plaintiff. The suit was brought by Mr. Clark to recover commissions at the rate of 2½ per cent. on the sale of certain property of the appellant to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. $44,502 was the amount paid by the purchaser for the property. The action was in assumpsit, and the declaration contained the common counts only. During the course of the trial the defendant reserved five exceptions. Two relate to rulings on evidence, and three to the action of the court on the prayers and special exceptions. The exact date when the sale was made does not appear, but it may be said to have been concluded prior to May 12, 1916, as the deed was recorded on that day. The sale was made directly by the defendant to the railroad company.

The legal principles which must control the case are so well settled that we need only refer to a few, among many in this court, in which they have been announced and applied.

In Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63, 56 Am. Dec. 706, the court said:

"We do not agree with the counsel for the appellees that they would have earned their reward by merely disclosing the names of the persons who ultimately purchased the property, as a secret of their business as property agents, if a sale had not been affected. We understand the rule to be this (in the absence of proof of usage): That the mere fact of the agent having introduced the purchaser to the seller, or disclosed names by which they came together to treat, will not entitle him to compensation; but, if it appears that such introduction or disclosure was the foundation on which the negotiation was begun and conducted, and the sale made, the parties cannot afterwards, by agreement between themselves, withdraw the matter from the agent's hands, so as to deprive him of his commission."

See, also, Blake v. Stump, 73 Md. 160, 20 Atl. 788, 10 L. R. A. 108.

In Martien v. Baltimore City, 109 Md. 260, 71 Atl. 966, which followed Keener v. Harrod, supra, and Walker v. Baldwin, 106 Md. 634, 68 Atl. 25, Judge Thomas said that:

"To entitle a broker to recover commissions for the sale or purchase of property, he must not only show his efforts or negotiations to accomplish the sale or purchase, but he must show that the sale or purchase was accomplished as the result of such efforts or negotiations."

This principle was again announced in the recent case of Way v. Turner, 127 Md. 327, 96 Atl. 676.

[1] At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case the defendant submitted a prayer to withdraw the case from the jury upon the ground that no legally sufficient evidence had been offered to entitle the plaintiff to recover. This prayer was refused, and this ruling constitutes the first exception. As the defendant proceeded to examine witnesses on its own behalf after the rejection of this prayer, it lost the benefit of this exception. Pennsylvania Railroad Co. v. Cecil, 111 Md. 238, 73 Atl. 820; Knecht v. Mooney, 118 Md. 533, 85 Atl. 775; Bernstein v. Merkel, 126 Md. 454, 95 Atl. 55.

After the testimony of both parties had been concluded, the court granted the following prayer submitted by the plaintiff:

"The court instructs the jury that, if they shall find from the evidence that the plaintiff was employed by the defendant to make sale of its property referred to and located in Baltimore city, and that the plaintiff submitted said property to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and that thereby the said railroad and the defendant were put into communication about it, and that a portion of said property was thereafter sold to said railroad by the defendant, the plaintiff is entitled to recover such commissions as may have been agreed upon between the plaintiff and the defendant, if the jury shall find that any agreement was made as to the amount of commissions, or such commissions as the jury may believe to be reasonable for the services, if the jury find there was no agreement as to their amount, provided the jury shall further find that the disclosure to the said railroad by the plaintiff caused the communication by the railroad with the defendant and was the foundation upon which the negotiation was conducted, and the sale made."

The defendant filed special exceptions to the granting of this prayer: First, because there was no evidence from which the jury could find that the railroad and the defendant were put into communication about the property mentioned in the case by anything done by the plaintiff; and, secondly, that the disclosure to the railroad by the plaintiff caused the communication by the railroad with the defendant and was the foundation upon which the negotiation was conducted and the sale made. The exceptions were overruled.

[2-5] The defendant submitted four prayers, all of which the court granted. These prayers, which the reporter will set out in the report of the case, embodied correct principles, and submitted the case of the defendant clearly and fairly to the jury.

The plaintiff's granted prayer was correct in form, and announced principles under which he was entitled to recover, as those principles are declared in the cases cited, and, unless the court committed injurious error in its rulings on evidence embraced in the second and third bills of exceptions and in overruling the special exceptions and granting the plaintiff's prayer, the judgment must be affirmed. As the action of the court in overruling the special exceptions to the prayer presents the most important question in the case, that will be first considered.

[6] In passing upon the action of the court, it is not our duty or province to decide the question of fact as to whether the railroad company and the defendant were put into communication about the property by anything done by the plaintiff, or the fact that the disclosure to the company caused the communication by the company with the defendant and was the foundation upon which the negotiation was conducted and the sale made. Our duty is limited to a decision as to whether there is found in the record evidence legally sufficient to prove these facts, or, stated in another way, our duty is merely to decide whether there is found in the record any legally sufficient evidence from which the jury could properly find those facts. We must assume the truth of the evidence offered by the plaintiff, and we must give him the benefit of all legitimate and fair inferences deducible in his favor from all the facts and circumstances of the case.

[7] There is evidence in the record tending to establish the following facts which relate to the question we are now considering. The property of the appellant which it sold to the railroad company is located in the west or northwest section of Baltimore city, and lies directly between the railroad lines of the Western Maryland and the Pennsylvania Railroads. The Pennsylvania Railroad had purchased from the appellant two small pieces of land, one in 1911, and the other in 1912, being portions of about 16 acres of land in that locality. The property of the appellant was offered to the railroad in 1914, and it declined to buy, owing, as stated in a letter dated November 7, 1914, from S. C. Long, general manager, "to the unsettled conditions about Baltimore in connection with the tunnels," etc. The appellant was anxious to sell the property, and it was again offered to the railroad by Caughy, Hearn & Carter on February 17, 1915. This offer was submitted to Mr. Long, the general manager, who replied that he saw no reason for changing the recommendation of November 7, 1914, as, "under the present status of affairs, we do not recommend the purchase of this property."

Linwood L. Clark, the plaintiff, is an attorney at law, and has been engaged in real estate business in Baltimore city for 12 or 13 years. In August, 1915, he learned that the property of the appellant was for sale, and in company with a Mr. Kennedy he visited the property, and was shown over it by Mr. J. Paul Baker, the secretary of the defendant company. Mr. Baker gave him a booklet containing a description of the property, and Mr. Clark testified that Mr. Baker authorized him to sell the property, and promised to pay him a commission of 2½ per cent. on the sale. He prepared a prospectus of the property setting forth its advantageous location and suitability for manufacturing and other purposes. He inclosed this prospectus in a letter, dated August 9, 1915, which he sent to T. W. Hulme, the real estate agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia. It was stated in the prospectus that:

"This property was for years the plant used to manufacture the famous Lord Baltimore electric trucks. The machine shops and equipment on this place are such that could be used in the manufacture of machinery, and particularly war materials, such as gun carriages, gun mounts, motors, and anything in the line of vehicle construction. Besides being equipped with lathes, drills, cranes, etc., the plant has two cupolas, one of which is capable of handling 100 tons a day, and the other having an output of 40 tons. The machine shop is located in a substantial frame, two-story building, reinforced with iron girders, measuring 100 feet by 66 feet. The storage and smelting department is of similar construction, and measures 70 feet by 661 feet.

"Three streets are laid out by the city running through the undeveloped portion of this property, and could be advantageously sold off for building purposes if not desired for extensions to the factory buildings. Adjoining the factory buildings is a large stone office building, splendidly designed for its purpose.

"The Car Wheel Company is well located for a manufacturing site of any description, and particularly any enterprise which deals in the output of any iron commodity. The adjacent property to the Car Company has been rapidly developed in the past two years, and sites in this locality are now scarce."

Mr. Hulme replied to this letter on August 16, 1915, stating that he saw "no necessity for the acquisition of the property of the Baltimore Car Wheel Company comprising about sixteen acres of land." On August 19, 1915, three days after the letter of Mr. Hulme to the plaintiff referred to above, S. C. Long, the general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, wrote to Mr. Hulme as follows:

"Dear Sir: Referring to your letter of October 29, 1914, to General Superintendent Lee, and our reply thereto of November 7th, in regard to offer of Baltimore Car Wheel Company to sell our company property at Fulton Junction, which at that time we did not care to acquire, recently we find it desirable to make use of this property for the construction of a Y connection between our tracks and those of the Western Maryland Railroad, and we are writing to ask if you will ascertain whether it will be possible for us to lease what property we need from the Car Wheel Company during the time we are constructing the B. & P. tunnels, and if so, what the rental would be.

"Will you kindly ascertain this information, and advise us at your early convenience, and oblige, Yours truly, [Signed] S. C. Long, General Manager."

On August 24, 1915, Mr. Hulme wrote to Paul C. Welsh, the local agent of the railroad company at Baltimore, in reference to obtaining a lease upon the property of the appellant. In this letter he stated that:

erty to us, and we advised him under date of August 16th that the railroad company was not interested in the property."

The appellant declined to lease the property, and thereupon the sale of the property conveyed by the deed of May 12, 1916, was concluded between Mr. Welsh, representing the railroad company, and J. Paul Baker, representing the appellant; the negotiations extending over a period of two months. Under the rules of the railroad company, if the question of the sale or purchase of property arises, it is the duty of the real estate agent to ask the general manager whether or not such sale or purchase would be necessary or desirable, and in this particular case the purchase was made upon the authority of the board of directors upon the recommendation of Mr. Long, the general manager. The evidence is clear that Mr. Hulme received the letter of August 9, 1915, written by Mr. Clark, and also the prospectus inclosed, and in view of the relation existing between the real estate and the general manager departments it is reasonable to conclude that before this property was purchased the general manager, Mr. Long, was fully advised by Mr. Hulme as to Mr. Clark's connection with the property and what he had said about it in the prospectus. The matter of the Clark offer Mr. Welsh testified "was cut and dried at headquarters."

The defendant caused to be issued a commission to take the testimony of Mr. Long and Mr. Hulme at the office of Mr. Hulme, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, but the evidence of neither was taken. They could have testified as to what knowledge they had of Mr. Clark's efforts to sell the property, and whether or not they were influenced by the advantages, etc., set forth in the prospectus. But neither was called; the defendant contenting itself with taking the deposition of Mr. Study, a clerk in Mr. Long's office, and of Mr. Gauff, the right of way agent. The evidence of either of these witnesses does not tend to show that the sale effected cannot be referred to the instrumentality of Mr. Clark. The facts and circumstances stated and the fair conclusions to be drawn from them were sufficient to have justified the court in overruling the special exceptions and granting the plaintiff's prayer.

[8] There remains to be considered the ruling of the court upon the questions embraced in the second and third exceptions. These questions were:

(1) "When Mr. Long wrote the letter of August 19, 1915, was he acquainted from this office in any way with the fact that Mr. Clark had submitted this property to the railroad company?"

(2) "What influence, if any, did the letter from Mr. Clark, dated August 9, 1915, have upon the purchase of this property by the railroad company from the Baltimore Car Wheel Company?"

The facts sought to be proved were very important. If Mr. Long did not know that the property had been submitted by Mr. Clark, or if he did know that the purchase of the property was not influenced by the statements contained in that letter, these facts could have been readily proved by him and probably by Mr. Hulme. But the witness under examination, Mr. John P. Gauff, had nothing to do with the purchase, and could not possibly have testified of his own knowledge whether Mr. Long was acquainted with the Clark offer, or to what extent he or the board of directors were influenced by it. He did, however, answer the first question, so far as he was qualified to answer, by saying that he did not acquaint Mr. Long with the Clark offer.

In Way v. Turner, 127 Md. 327, 96 Atl. 676, relied on by the appellant, this court did decide, as matter of law, that the services of Mr. Turner were not the procuring cause of the sale therein under consideration, but in that case Mr. Hazard, the purchaser of the property, positively testified that he was not influenced in the purchase by the communication mentioned in the testimony.

[9] Proximate or procuring cause is ordinarily a question for the jury, and the court will not, except in a clear case, decide it. That question was, under the facts and circumstances of this case, one for the consideration of the jury, and was submitted to them by appropriate instructions.

Finding no error in the rulings of the court, the judgment will be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

MAYOR AND CITY COUNCIL OF BALTIMORE v. POE et al.

POE et al. v. MAYOR AND CITY COUNCIL OF BALTIMORE.

(Nos. 8, 9.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. May 3, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS \S 358(3)—CONTRACTS FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—STIPULATIONS TO DETERMINE DISPUTES.

A contract for construction of a sewage pumping station, expressly leaving to the determination of the city engineer and architect the questions of quantity, quality, acceptability, and value of the work and material, and the number of working days consumed, makes their decision final and conclusive on the parties if within the scope of the submission, and is not subject to review in the absence of fraud or bad faith.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS \S 358(1)—CONTRACT FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—WAIVER OF PROVISIONS.

A provision in a contract for the construction of public improvements, making the engineer's certificate a condition precedent to payment for extra work, may be waived by the city.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ↔374(6)—CONTRACT FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — QUESTIONS FOR JURY—WAIVER OF PROVISIONS IN CONTRACT.

Notwithstanding a provision in a contract for the construction of a sewage pumping station that certificates of the engineer and architect were a condition precedent to payment for extra work, the waiver of such provision was for the jury where it had been continuously and repeatedly ignored by the parties.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ↔374(6)—CONTRACT FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In an action for a balance due upon a municipal contract to construct a sewage pumping station, items referred by the engineer without deciding them, to a committee of the sewerage commission which did not act upon them, should have been presented to the jury.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ↔374(5)—CONTRACTS FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — ITEMS RECOVERABLE.

In an action for a balance due on a municipal contract for the construction of a sewage pumping station, increased expense to the contractor in disposing of excavated material because his dumping pier was moved by order of the city was not recoverable.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ↔374(6)—CONTRACT FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Where a municipal contract for the construction of a sewage pumping station provided that the city engineer should give all necessary lines and grades, levels, etc., for the contractor's guidance, and the contractor claimed that the engineer gave wrong lines, and the work had to be done over again, the question was one for the jury.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ↔374(1)—CONTRACTS FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ACTIONS—RIGHTS OF SUBCONTRACTORS.

In an action by the receivers of the contractor to recover a balance due under municipal contracts for the construction of a sewage pumping station, the receivers, acting for all the creditors, might recover damages suffered by subcontractors recognized by the city as the contractor's representatives.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ↔374(4)—CONTRACTS FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action by the contractor's receivers under a contract for the construction of a sewage pumping station, time sheets relating to the value of extra work performed by a subcontractor were erroneously excluded; the city being liable for the subcontractor's claim.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ↔374(4)—CONTRACT FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover a balance due under a contract for the construction of a sewage pumping station, it was not error to exclude evidence as to what labor was employed in removing a dumping pier for excavated material under orders by the city; the contract providing that the contractor himself was to dispose of such material.

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ↔374(4) — CONTRACTS FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action by the receivers of a contractor to recover a balance due for the construction of a municipal sewage pumping station, extracts from the minutes of the sewerage commission were inadmissible.

Appeals from Superior Court of Baltimore City; John J. Dobler, Judge.

Action by Edgar Allan Poe and others, receivers of the Noel Construction Company of Baltimore City, a body corporate, against the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, a municipal corporation. From a judgment for plaintiffs, both parties appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Robert F. Leach, Jr., Asst. City Sol., and S. S. Field, City Sol., both of Baltimore, for Mayor and City Council of Baltimore. J. Kemp Bartlett and Charles F. Harley, both of Baltimore (Robert D. Bartlett, of Baltimore, on the brief), for receivers of Noel Const. Co.

CONSTABLE, J. There are cross-appeals in this case; each party appealing from the judgment rendered in favor of the receivers of the Noel Construction Company.

The case arose out of the contracts awarded to the Noel Construction Company by the city of Baltimore through the board of awards for the construction of the sewage pumping station near East Falls, in Baltimore city. It was proposed by the city to erect the station building by two separate contracts, one for the substructure or foundation, called contract No. 3, and the other for the erection of the superstructure, called contract No. 4, and invited bids for that work. The specifications for contract No. 3 provided that, if that contract was awarded to one bidder, and the contract for the superstructure was awarded to another bidder, the number of working days from the date of the commencement of the work to its completion would be limited to 200 days, but that, if the contracts for both the substructure and the superstructure were awarded to the same bidder, the number of working days from the date of commencement to completion would be limited to 420 days. The same provision as to limit of time for completing the substructure and the superstructure was made in the specifications for contract No. 4; 220 working days if different bidders, and 420 days if the same bidder was awarded both contracts. The Noel Construction Company, being the lowest bidder for each of the two contracts, was awarded both. Provision is made for computing what shall be working days under the terms of the contracts as follows:

"Every day except Sundays and also except legal holidays on which no work is done shall be considered a working day, provided that it is not unfitted either by wind, rain, snow or temperature for working out of doors.

"The length of time (expressed in days and parts of days) during which the work has been delayed by any act or omission of the sewerage commission shall be allowed to the contractor and excluded from such computation."

Calvin W. Hendrick, chief engineer of the city, was in charge of contract No. 3, or the substructure contract, and Henry Brauns, an architect, was in charge of contract No. 4, or the superstructure contract. Contract No. 8 contained this provision:

"The engineer shall determine the number of working days that the contractor is in default in completing the work to be done under this contract, and shall certify the same to the commission in writing. * * * His determination and certificate shall be final and conclusive."

Contract No. 4 contains the same provision, except the architect is substituted for the engineer. Provision is also made in the contracts that for each and every working day that the engineer or architect shall certify that the contractor is in default in completing the work to be done under the specifications, the contractor shall pay to the city the sum of $35, and that for each day the work may be completed before the time fixed in the contracts for such completion the contractor shall be allowed a premium of $35; also the following provision:

"(53) The contractor shall do such extra work as may be ordered in writing by the architect or engineer with the authorization of the commission. No claims for extra work will be considered or allowed unless said work has been so ordered by the architect or engineer, nor unless the commission shall approve such claim for extra work and certify in writing that in its opinion such extra work was necessary for the public interest, stating in the certificate its reasons."

And the further provision:

"(14) To prevent disputes and litigations, the architect or engineer shall in all cases determine the amount or quantity, quality, acceptability and value of the work and materials which are to be paid for under this contract, shall decide all disputes, questions, and doubts relating to the work and the performance thereof, and shall in all cases decide every question which may arise relative to the contract or to the obligations of the contractor thereunder. His determination and decision shall be final and conclusive upon the contractor and all whom he may employ to execute the various branches of the work, whether as subcontractors or otherwise, and upon all parties from whom materials may be purchased, either by the contractor or by any subcontractor. In case any question shall arise between the contractor and the city touching the contract, the estimate or certificate and decision of the architect or engineer shall be a condition precedent to the right of the contractor to receive any moneys under the contract."

Provision was also made that the contractor would be required to comply strictly with all the requirements of the building regulations and other ordinances of the city of Baltimore, and also the following provision was contained in both contracts:

"(48) The commission reserves the right to suspend the whole or any part of the work to be done hereunder, if it shall deem it for the interest of the city of Baltimore to do so, without compensation to the contractor for such suspension, other than extending the time for completing the work as much as it may have been delayed by such suspension."

The purpose of this building was to receive by gravity all the sewage from South and West Baltimore, and after treating it there to force it by means of gigantic pumps to the disposal plant some miles away. It was necessary for carrying out this purpose to have the foundations unusually strong, and to insure that the following provision was made in contract No. 3.

"(68) It is expected that satisfactory material for the foundations will be found at El. 23, but the contractor shall carry the excavation to a greater depth wherever, in the opinion of the engineer, such greater depth is necessary to secure a suitable foundation. If, on the other hand, a satisfactory foundation is found at a less depth than El. 23, the excavation shall be discontinued at that depth, if directed by the engineer."

The contracts and specifications are contained in printed books covering over 180 pages, and as it would be impossible to reproduce them in full, we have confined ourselves to quoting those which we consider most applicable to this controversy.

The work on the substructure was begun on June 29, 1908, and the whole building completed August 24, 1911, and under date of August 25 and September 11, 1911, the architect and the engineer respectively certified to the commission that the number of days the contractor was in default under the contracts was 144¼ working days, at $35 per day, and therefore subject to damages of $5,083.75. The amount of money certified to be due under the contracts, less $5,083.75, was paid over to the contractor.

Receivers were appointed for the Noel Construction Company, and this action was commenced by them on the 6th day of January, 1916, for the recovery of the amount retained as damages for failure to complete the work within the specified 420 working days, for extra work performed, damages incurred by the company through interference with the work and for the recovery of $853.20 charged against the contractor for insuring the building after it had been accepted by the commission. The last item is conceded by the city to have been charged in error against the contractor and should be allowed to the plaintiff.

The trial court held that neither the certificate of the chief engineer nor the certificate of the architect was "technically a conclusive determination of the number of working days in which the Noel Construction Company was in default in completing the work to be done under the respective contracts in evidence," and under a prayer of its own left to the jury to determine whether the Noel Construction Company finished the contracts under or beyond the number of days limited by the contract. But also held that they were not entitled to recover for other claims other than the insurance, which was conceded.

From the ruling of the court, upon the prayers, in holding that the certificates of the engineer and architect as to the number of days in default were not binding and conclusive upon the contractor, the city excepted, and that question constitutes its appeal.

mination of questions such as were left in these contracts to the determination of the engineer and the architect. The rulings of this state and the courts of all other states in the Union, with the exception of Indiana, are uniform as to the effect of such a provision as in these contracts; that the decision of such person shall be final and conclusive upon parties to the contract, provided the decision concerns matters within the scope of the submission, and is not subject to review by the courts, if made by the third party in the absence of fraud or bad faith. Mayor, etc., v. Ault, 126 Md. 423, 94 Atl. 1044; Mayor, etc., v. Talbott, 120 Md. 363, 87 Atl. 941; Hughes v. Model Stoker Co., 124 Md. 289, 92 Atl. 845; Pope v. King, 106 Md. 37, 69 Atl. 417, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489, 15 Ann. Cas. 970; Lynn v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 60 Md. 414, 45 Am. Rep. 741; 6 Cyc. 40.

Indeed, the soundness of this principle of law is not questioned by either of the parties, but the plaintiffs contend that the determination of these questions bearing upon the number of actual working days consumed in the work was not made by those authorized to make the decision, but was the result of influence of others. There is, however, no claim made that fraud or bad faith was exercised either by the engineer or the architect. The work on the substructure started on June 29, 1908, and was finished on March 21, 1910, covering a period of 632 days. The engineer certified that of that number of days 188 were charged against the contractor as actual working days. From June 29 to November 2, 1908, the work progressed satisfactorily, and 97½ days of the 188 were charged against the contractor during that period. At that time serious difficulty arose, growing out of interference, justly so made, by the building inspector of Baltimore city, who claimed that the excavation should go lower than it was planned to go. The controversy between the engineer and the building inspector was referred by the sewerage commission to an arbitration board. Many tests were made on behalf of the arbitration board and on behalf of the building inspector by driving piles, etc.

Of course, during all of this period great delay was caused the Noel Construction Company in carrying out the contract, and on April 27, 1909, the company wrote the engineer requesting an extension of time between November 6th and April 23d in which he claimed of the 143 days included between those dates he should be allowed an extension of 101 days, or, in other words, that he should only be charged with 42 actual working days. The engineer decided that from November 2, 1908, to April 22, 1909, the contractor should only be charged with 40 working days. It was decided to carry the excavation a considerable distance below elevation 23, in fact, to carry it to elevation 31 in some instances; and because of this necessary extra work during the months of June, July, August, September, and October the engineer charged them with only 1½ actual working days. During the delay the engineer was called upon to decide many questions. Some of these questions he himself decided; others he referred to committees or to the sewerage commission. On questions of time extensions, however, he decided all himself, with the exception that once, in his absence, when the Noel Construction Company asked for a 3-day extension in August, 1908, because of a storm, the acting engineer referred the determination to the sewerage commission, which granted the extension.

The engineer, as of June 12, 1911, wrote to a special committee of the sewerage commission explaining how he arrived at the 188 working days which he charged to the contract for the substructure as follows:

"The foundations were completed and turned over to the architect for work on the superstructure on March 21, 1910, making a total of 632 days. Of this total period there would be deducted 102 days for Sundays and holidays, and 41 days lost on account of bad weather, making a total of 143 days to be deducted from the total time, leaving the possible number of working days 489. On account of delay due to the action of the building inspector and the removing of certain undesirable material encountered below 23, called for in paragraph 68 of the specifications, there was to be a further deduction of 301 days, leaving 188 working days chargeable to the contractor of the substructure. The contractor therefore is entitled to an extension of 301 days due to the reasons set forth, and I would recommend that this extension be granted. The superstructure being entirely under the jurisdiction of the architect, I have nothing to do with that matter."

As to the certificate of the architect the plaintiffs claim that it was invalid as to its binding effect because it was made up at the dictation of the city solicitor and others. We find from the record, however, that while it is true he had a conference with the city solicitor and members of the sewerage commission on October 26, 1911, and that a certificate was prepared for his signature to be antedated as of August 25, 1911, and that the architect practically rewrote and forwarded that as his certificate to the chairman of the sewerage commission, yet nevertheless the examination of the architect shows that he had no doubt as to the number of working days the contractor consumed on the superstructure, but that the doubt in his mind was caused by whether or not he could certify as to the number of days consumed on the substructure with which he had nothing to do. As supplementing his testimony on this point that he had no doubt as to the number of days consumed there was introduced a letter from him under date of July 1, 1911, long before he had filed any certificate, to the chairman of the sewerage commission as follows:

"Dear Sir: Replying to your inquiry of June 29, 1911, I beg to state that I have charged up against the Noel Construction Company on account of their contract for the superstructure of the sewage pumping station on Eastern avenue from March 22, 1910, to June 30, 1911 (inclusive) three hundred and thirty-one and a quarter days."

The number of days appearing in this letter is exactly the number of days he certified to in his final certificate, and really the important thing in his certificate. The fact that there were two contracts and the engineer was in charge of one, and the architect was in charge of the other, and the two contracts were being executed by the same contractor, and the fact that the contract provided that the work on both contracts should be completed within 420 days, rendered it unnecessary that the engineer should know of his own knowledge the number of working days consumed in the erection of the superstructure, or that the architect should know of his own knowledge the number of working days consumed in the construction of the substructure, but the important thing was that each should know and be able to certify to the actual number of working days consumed in the work he had in charge and under his personal supervision. The number of days for which the contractor was subject to damages or entitled to premiums resolved itself into a mere calculation of addition and subtraction. We are of opinion, therefore, that these certificates should have been given the binding force to which they are entitled under the law, and that there was error in refusing the fourth prayer of the city and in granting the court's independent instruction.

Having disposed of the question involved in the city's appeal, we will now direct our attention to those arising in the receivers' appeal.

The trial began on the 2d day of April, 1917, and the verdict in favor of the receivers was returned on the 8th day of May, 1917. Naturally a great mass of testimony was taken with the result that the record in this case is a very large one; so, in order to keep this opinion within reasonable limits, we will confine ourselves to stating our conclusions as reached from a careful reading of the record rather than setting out at length the testimony.

The plaintiff offered two prayers, one of which only was granted. The defendant offered 45 prayers, 34 of which the court granted, refusing the other 11. The defendant also filed two motions, both of which were granted by the court. The eleventh to the forty-fourth (inclusive) prayers of the defendant dealt separately with each claim of the plaintiff, other than the claim for the money retained by the city as liquidated damages for delays, seeking to withdraw those claims from the consideration of the jury. All of these prayers were granted by the court, thus eliminating from the jury practically all of the claims of the plaintiff, other than the liquidated damages. From the number of these prayers it is readily seen that the plaintiff made many claims. Many of these claims are for extra work performed and for which the contractor had no certificate as provided in section 53, as follows:

"The contractor shall do such extra work as may be ordered in writing by the engineer with the authorization of the commission. No claim for extra work will be considered or allowed unless said work has been so ordered by the engineer, nor unless the commission shall approve such claim for extra work and certify in writing that in its opinion such extra work was necessary for the public interest, stating in the certificate its reasons therefor."

The city's contention is that none of these claims can be allowed in the absence of a certificate from the commission approving such claims and stating its reasons for such approval.

The plaintiff contends that under section 14, where it is provided that in case of disputes between the city and the contractor the engineer's decision shall be final and conclusive upon the contractor, his reference of these questions to the sewerage commission for a decision made the conclusiveness of any such question inoperative. This proposition is not open to attack, as is shown in the cases we have cited above in reference to the city's appeal on the question of whether the certificates of the architect and engineer on the question of delays was admissible. But, although it is certain that these disputes about extra work were submitted by the engineer to the sewerage commission, it was his plain duty under section 53 to do so, for the claims could not be allowed without the commission should approve them, etc. Therefore to such a dispute as this we are of opinion that section 14 has no applicability.

[2] While, no doubt, the provision contained in section 53 was for the purpose of making the production of the certificate a condition precedent to the validity of any claim for extra work, yet in this case we do not think that it should be so held; for it is a well-recognized rule of law in this state and elsewhere that a provision of this character may be waived. Filston Farm Co. v. Henderson, 106 Md. 235, 67 Atl. 228; Well Case, 129 Md. 487, 99 Atl. 661, L. R. A. 1917C, 929; Lynn v. B. & O. R. R., 60 Md. 404, 45 Am. Rep. 741; Pope v. King, 108 Md. 37, 69 Atl. 417, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489, 15 Ann. Cas. 970; McEvoy v. Harn, 129 Md. 97, 98 Atl. 522; Reid v. Weissner, 88 Md. 237, 40 Atl. 877; 9 Corpus Juris, 760; 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) at page 576, notes under the heading "What Constitutes Waiver."

There is an abundance of evidence in the record tending to show that the course of dealing between the parties was on many occasions to ignore the provisions of section 53 about getting extra work orders before the commencement of the extra work. For instance, we will refer to testimony as to pumping, which was necessary because of the dispute between the engineer and the building inspector:

"The pumping had to be done; and it was said to go ahead and do it and there would be extra pay for it, and not to wait for the order. We would often do that with extra work, and they would say that the order would come down and sometimes the order would come down and sometimes it would not. In this particular case I don't know whether they sent an order or paid for it or not."

[3] We are of opinion that, where the evidence tends to show that extra work was performed on the order of the engineer, or any of his subordinates, with the understanding that certificates would later be issued for such work, as we have said above was their course of dealing, there was a waiver of the provisions of section 53, and the issue should have been presented to the jury.

As we have pointed out above, it was necessary to carry the excavations much below that at first expected, and the engineer wrote to the Noel Construction Company on May 5, 1909:

"Gentlemen: It will be satisfactory to us for you to proceed with the excavation below 23 feet, according to the specifications at cost plus 10 per cent. The absolute cost of the value of the pumping machinery employed in pumping below 23 feet, to be paid for at the cost, plus 10 per cent. The cost of pumping and excavation above 23 feet, to be paid for at the cost plus 10 per cent. The cost of pumping and excavation above 23 feet to be segregated from all pumping and excavation below 23 feet.

"I will request the city to have electric light placed over the work so that you can proceed with your night work, which I wish you would do as promptly as possible."

[4] After the completion of that part of the work the inspector for the city omitted to include certain elements of actual cost. The contractor presented to the engineer itemized bills for these claims, but he referred them, without making any decision, to a committee of the sewerage commission, which never acted upon them. These items should have been presented to the jury.

[5] For the purpose of removing the excavated material the contractor had made arrangements with the harbor board for the use of Jones Falls, and had purchased from the city an old bridge which he removed to the edge of Jones Falls and placed in position there for the purpose of using it as a dumping pier of the material into scows. He used this method for some time, when he was notified by the harbor board that the position of the dumping pier interfered with the prosecution of another contract the city had, to wit, the erection of a sea wall along Jones Falls at the point, and was directed to cease that method of getting rid of the earth and mud. He immediately suspended this method and tried various other methods of disposing of the said material, but at increased cost. It is to recover this excess cost which constitutes one of his claims. We have been unable to discover any theory upon which this claim should be allowed. We find nothing in the record anywhere which even suggests that the city would provide or maintain ways and means for assisting the contractor in disposing of this material. It was solely a matter for the contractor himself to decide upon at his own risk.

[6] Section 27 provides:

"The engineer will give all necessary lines, grades, elevations, etc., for the general guidance of the contractor, who shall conform his work thereto. He shall provide the engineer with such materials and assistance (except engineering assistance), as may be required to properly perform the services mentioned, and shall carefully preserve and maintain in proper position all marks given. Any work done without lines, levels, etc., having been given by the engineer, may be ordered removed and replaced at the contractor's sole cost and expense."

The plaintiff offered evidence tending to show that the engineer or one of his assistants in giving lines to the contractor for excavation for the foundation gave wrong lines, and claimed that all of that work had to be done over. We think under the above section that should have been submitted to the jury, providing the engineer refused to give an independent decision as to that claim.

The plaintiff's second prayer was properly refused for the reason that it sought to instruct the jury that, if they found that the engineer referred the decision as to the validity of any of the plaintiffs' claims for allowance for extra work, etc., to the sewerage commission for decision, then the plaintiffs are not precluded from recovery. This instruction would have been erroneous under what we have said above as to the necessity of the engineer getting the approval of the commission.

The eighth prayer of the defendant was granted, and we think incorrectly, for it is at least misleading.

[7] The two motions made by the defendant and referred to above were for the purpose of striking out all evidence tending to prove damages suffered by two of the subcontractors of the Noel Construction Company and were improperly granted. The contractor had every right to sublet any part or all of his contract with the city. In every contract of this magnitude the general custom is to sublet portions of it. These subcontractors were recognized by the city as the representatives of the contractor. They were the agencies by whom most, if not all, of the extra work was performed, and the compensation for which work is now claimed by the receivers. They have filed their claims with the receivers, and they have been approved.

There was no privity of contract between the subcontractors and the city, so, of course, they could not entertain separate suits against the city, but we can see no reason why the receivers, who act for all the creditors, should not include the claims of their agencies, for whose compensation they were responsible, in a suit brought upon the original contract.

[8] The first exception arises over the refusal of the court to admit in evidence time sheets relating to the value of extra work performed by one of the subcontractors. We think, following our ruling as to the liability of the city for the claims of the subcontractors, if it is shown that the extra work orders were on the promise that certificates would be issued, this evidence was admissible, and its rejection constitutes error. This is upon the assumption that the work for which the time sheets were offered were not in connection with the changed method of removing the earth. We say "assumption" because it is not very clear from the record exactly what character of work was shown by these time sheets.

[9] The second exception relates to the refusal of the court to permit a witness to state what labor was employed in removing the dumping pier. This, of course, was a proper ruling.

The third exception had to deal with the subject which we have heretofore discussed, that of depriving the contractor of the use of the dumping pier at the edge of Jones Falls. What we have already said upon that subject disposes of this exception, and we therefore hold that the exception should be overruled. The fourth exception should be overruled.

[10] The fifth exception relates to the introduction in evidence of extracts from the minutes of the sewerage commission. We do not see upon what theory their admission could stand.

The sixth and seventh exceptions relate to the motions made by the defendants to strike out all testimony showing damages suffered by the subcontractors and have already been discussed above.

We have not referred specifically to each of the prayers granted on behalf of the defendant for the reason that, since the case will have to be retried, the court in passing upon similar prayers will be governed by the principles which we have indicated control them.

Judgment reversed, case remanded for a new trial, each party to pay one-half the costs in this court, the costs in the court below to abide the final result.

Note Filed July 10, 1918.

A motion having been made for a modification of certain of the language contained in the foregoing opinion, it is deemed proper to add this note: The foregoing opinion does not, and was not intended to, hold that it lay in the power of every subordinate to vary the terms of a contract and bind the principal by such act; what the opinion does declare is, and is only, that where by a continued course of dealing the parties to a contract have ignored a provision of that contract not once, but repeatedly, the question of waiver is one proper to be submitted to a jury.

NEWBOLD v. NEWBOLD. (No. 80.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 20, 1918.
Motion for Reargument Overruled
July 30, 1918.)

1. EQUITY §378—SETTING CASE FOR HEARING—ADMISSION.

Where case was set down by petitioner to be heard on bill and answer, he admitted truth of all matters stated in answer which were susceptible of proof by legitimate evidence, and it thereby became the evidence of the case.

2. DIVORCE §245(2)—AWARD NOT OF "ALIMONY"—MODIFICATION.

Where court, in wife's divorce suit, pursuant to agreement of parties ordered husband to pay wife weekly allowance of $80 during her life, award was not of "alimony," as recognized in Maryland, and will not be modified on husband's petition because wife has remarried.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Alimony.]

Briscoe and Stockbridge, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Baltimore County; Allan McLane, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Suit for divorce by Eugene S. Newbold against Adelaide Passano Newbold, wherein respondent filed a cross-bill, resulting in decree for respondent on her cross-bill; petitioner later seeking relief from all obligation to pay alimony on the ground of respondent's remarriage. From decree dismissing his petition, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

George Whitelock, of Baltimore (Whitelock, Deming & Kemp and Wm. Ewin Bonn, all of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellant. Frank G. Turner, of Baltimore, for appellee.

CONSTABLE, J. The appellant herein, in March, 1915, filed a bill for an absolute divorce on the ground of abandonment against the appellee herein. On June 21, 1915, the appellee filed her answer thereto, denying the allegations of abandonment, and on the same day filed a cross-bill for absolute divorce on the ground of adultery. The appellant did not prosecute his bill, and it was dismissed under date of July 19, 1915; neither did the appellant answer the cross-bill of his wife, but it was prosecuted by the appellee, and decree entered on the 14th day of August, 1915, divorcing her from the appellant a vinculo matrimonii, and awarding her the guardianship and custody of their minor child.

"And it is further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the said complainant, Adelaide Passano Newbold, is entitled to receive by way of alimony, out of the said Eugene S. Newbold's estate, and the said Eugene S. Newbold is hereby ordered to pay unto Adelaide Passano Newbold, the complainant in the cross-bill, a weekly allowance of eighty dollars ($80.00), to be computed from this 14th day of August, 1915, and payable thereafter on each and every Saturday, during the lifetime of the said Adelaide Passano Newbold."

On October 16, 1917, the appellant filed a petition, alleging that the appellee had remarried and become the wife of a certain John B. McCormick, and alleging that the said John B. McCormick had become liable for the support and maintenance of the said Adelaide Passano McCormick, and that the petitioner should be relieved from all obligation to maintain or support her, or to make any further payments of alimony for her support and maintenance, and further prayed by amendment that the court fix a proper allowance for the support and maintenance of the infant child of the parties. The appellee filed a demurrer to the petition, but the court overruled the demurrer and rescinded the decree as to alimony. Later the order of December 3, 1917, was rescinded, and an order overruling the demurrer with leave was filed.

[1] The case was then set down by the appellant to be heard on petition and answer. By doing this the appellant admitted the truth of all matters stated in the answer which were susceptible of proof by legitimate evidence. It therefore became the evidence of the case. Miller's Equity, §§ 255 and 256. The answer was quite a long one, and exceptions were filed to six of its paragraphs, five of which were stricken out by the court and exceptions to the six overruled. The paragraph left in dealt with the financial standing of the appellant. We will here reproduce some of the paragraphs that remained in the answer after the ruling on exceptions:

"Seventh. That in accordance with an agreement between counsel for the respective parties, made and concluded before the taking of testimony, evidence was not taken as to the proper amount or allowance to this respondent of the estate of the said Eugene S. Newbold, or the amount he should pay as alimony to this respondent, nor the amount properly payable by the said Eugene S. Newbold for the support, maintenance, and education of the child of this respondent and Eugene S. Newbold, as it was agreed that the allowance of eighty dollars ($80.00) per week, to be computed from this 14th day of August, 1915, and payable thereafter, on each and every Saturday during the lifetime of the said Adelaide Passano Newbold, was a proper and reasonable allowance out of the estate and earnings of the said Eugene S. Newbold, as compensation to his wife, and as maintenance for her and their son, John Passano Newbold; it then being agreed that when the said John Passano Newbold should reach the age that he should be sent to school or college, that the said Eugene S. Newbold would then provide and pay to this respondent any additional sum which would be reasonably appropriate for such schooling or education.

"That when, in accordance with the rules of court, it was appropriate to submit this cause for decree, the solicitors for Eugene S. Newbold, pursuant to agreement and appointment with this respondent's solicitor, submitted the cause to the Honorable Frank I. Duncan for decree, on the 14th day of August, 1915, at which time the decree, prepared in so far as the amount of alimony and the payment thereof in accordance with the agreement between the parties, was presented.

"That at the submission for decree the said Eugene S. Newbold was represented by his brother, David M. Newbold, Jr., Esq., solicitor, who then confirmed the agreement as to alimony by stating to the court that the provision as to alimony was satisfactory to the said Eugene S. Newbold and his solicitors.

"Tenth. This respondent, further answering the petition of Eugene S. Newbold, says that, while she was granted the guardianship and custody of John Passano Newbold, there was no provision in the decree of divorce directing payment by the said Eugene S. Newbold for the support of his son, as it was agreed between the parties before the taking of testimony that the payment of the agreed sum of eighty dollars ($80.00) per week as alimony 'during the lifetime of the said Adelaide Passano Newbold' should cover and include the maintenance of the son of the said Eugene S. Newbold until he arrived at the age when he should be sent to school or college, at which time the said Eugene S. Newbold was to make greater payments to cover such natural added expenses.

"Twelfth. This respondent, now further answering the said petition of the said Eugene S. Newbold, says that the stipulation of eighty dollars ($80.00) per week alimony to be paid 'during the lifetime of the said Adelaide Passano Newbold,' so inserted in decree of divorce, was so inserted pursuant to an agreement, made by and on behalf of this respondent and the said Eugene S. Newbold, and that the said payment of eighty dollars ($80.00) per week was to continue during the lifetime of this respondent, out of which said payments this respondent was to support and maintain the said John Passano Newbold till he should reach the age when he should be sent to school or college, at which time the payments by the said Eugene S. Newbold were to be increased to meet such added expenses.

"Thirteenth. That the said Eugene S. Newbold is a person of large means and large income, derived from his salary as president, etc., of the City Illuminating Company of Philadelphia, as president, etc., of the American Street Lighting Company, as vice president of the Welsbach Company of Philadelphia, from property owned by him, and from various patented devices and appliances; this respondent being informed and believing, and therefore charging, that the annual income of the said Eugene S. Newbold is greatly in excess of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000.00), and that the income of the said Eugene S. Newbold has been for years equal to said stated amount, and that his income and receipts will so continue."

The court asked a decree dismissing the petition, and the petitioner appealed.

[2] Having set out verbatim certain paragraphs of the answer, not much comment is necessary to demonstrate that this case falls directly within the ruling of this court. In the recent case of Emerson v. Emerson, 120 Md. 584, 87 Atl. 1083, it will be recalled the former husband tried to be relieved from the payment of alimony to his former wife upon her remarriage. In deciding that case the opinion filed dealt thoroughly with the law relating to alimony in this state, also the authority of the courts to award alimony, also the power to modify provisions as to alimony in decrees, and also the power to incorporate in a decree the provisions of an agreement of the parties as to alimony approved by the court. In that case, as in this, the parties were in agreement as to the provisions for alimony the court should incorporate in the decree. In that case there was a written agreement, while in this the allegations of the answer are to the same effect. We held in the Emerson Case, as we must in this, that what the court decreed was not alimony as recognized in this state, and, quoting from that case, we said as follows:

"Although the bill prayed for alimony, and the beginning of the agreement stated that on the question of alimony no testimony need be taken, but that the agreement should be followed, nevertheless, although they called it alimony, it was not alimony as understood and followed under the Maryland law. It was not alimony, as the court, in the absence of the agreement, would have decreed. A mere recital of the provisions shows that under our statutes and decisions no such decree could have been passed, if this appellant had not been in agreement upon it. It was a plain attempt upon his part to have allowed to his wife something more than, under the law, could have been allowed as alimony, and as the learned judge below said, we 'should blind ourselves to the fact if we should treat that arrangement as one of alimony.' If for alimony, why did he bind himself to pay these annual sums up and until the death of the wife, irrespective of whether or not she survived him? Was not that providing more than he could have been compelled to provide under the terms of alimony? It is settled in this state that alimony ceases upon the death of either of the parties. Wallingsford v. Wallingsford, 6 H. & J. 485. Why did he agree to surrender 600 shares of valuable stock to trustees, to enforce the payment of the sums during the life of the wife, and, in terms, only provided for their return to him at the death of the wife? Why the absolute transfer of all the furniture and the use of the Italian Gardens to the wife? None of these could have been decreed without his consent, and the conclusion is clear that he intended under this agreement to assure to his wife these provisions during the balance of her life, irrespective of any contingencies. The court having embodied his agreement in the decree, we are of the opinion that a court of equity should not disturb it."

What we said there applies with equal force to the present case, and we will therefore affirm the decree of the lower court.

GAYTON v. GAYTON.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. July 14, 1918.)

TRIAL ¶143—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Where plaintiff and two defendants flatly contradicted each other and there was nothing inherently improbable in plaintiff's testimony, the value of the testimony was a question for the jury, and not for the law court, and the jury's verdict for plaintiff must prevail.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Androscoggin County, at Law.

Action by Isaac E. Gayton against Dora Maud Gayton. On defendant's motion after verdict for plaintiff. Motion overruled.

McGillcuddy & Mosey, of Lewiston, for plaintiff. Newell & Woodside, of Lewiston, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This was an action on a promissory note. The verdict was for $105.32, being full amount of the note and interest. The execution and delivery of the note were not denied. The only question was whether the plaintiff, to whom the note was delivered, surrendered it to the defendants. Upon this issue there was an irreconcilable conflict of testimony, the plaintiff declaring that he did not surrender the note, and the two defendants testifying that he did. There are no circumstances or probabilities in the case which rendered the testimony of the plaintiff inherently false. The jury evidently believed the plaintiff. The value of the testimony was a question for the jury and not for the law court. The jury having passed upon it their decision must prevail.

Motion overruled.

COFFIN v. JOHNSON.

NEW TRIAL ¶76(1)—EXCESSIVE RECOVERY.

On motion for new trial, although the court would have found less if the issues had been submitted to it in the first instance, yet where case was of character peculiarly within knowledge and experience of jury, it cannot be held that verdict was necessarily so excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Androscoggin County, at Law.

Assumpsit by Benjamin H. Coffin against Ella M. Johnson. Verdict for plaintiff. On motion. Overruled.

Argued before OORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

McGillcuddy & Mosey, of Lewiston, for plaintiff. J. M. Rousseau, of Brunswick, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This is an action of assumpsit to recover for services rendered during a period of 5½ years. That services were rendered is not controverted. Their amount and value were the contested issues. The verdict was in the sum of $1,772. Had these issues been submitted to the court in the first instance our finding would have been somewhat less. But we are unable to say that the conclusion of the jury in this case, which was of a character peculiarly within their knowledge and experience, was so grossly excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice on their part or a failure to appreciate the force of the evidence. The entry must therefore be:

Motion overruled.

SMITH v. MURRAY BROS. CO.

NEW TRIAL ¶70 — VERDICT CONTRARY TO EVIDENCE.

Where the court is of the opinion that the evidence and inferences properly to be drawn therefrom are sufficient to warrant the jury in arriving at their verdict, a new trial on ground of verdict contrary to evidence must be denied.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Piscataquis County, at Law.

Action by Harry L. Smith, as Trustee in Bankruptcy of the estate of Charles W. Mitchell, against the Murray Brothers Company, to recover an alleged preference. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant moves for a new trial. Motion overruled.

Argued before SPEAR, BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

H. L. Smith, of Dover, and J. S. Williams, of Guilford, for plaintiff. Phillips B. Gardner, of Bangor, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This is an action on the case brought by plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of one Charles W. Mitchell, adjudged a voluntary bankrupt, May 20, 1916, to recover for the benefit of the estate, the amount of an alleged preference made by bankrupt to the defendant on the 5th day of May, 1916. The trial of the case below resulted in a verdict for plaintiff, and defendant files a motion for new trial upon the usual grounds.

Upon a careful examination of the evidence the court is of opinion that the evidence and the inferences properly to be drawn from it are sufficient to warrant the jury in arriving at their verdict. Certainly it is not manifest that the jury acted from improper motives. See Batchelder v. Bank, 218 Mass. 420, 423, 105 N. E. 1052; Donohue v. Dykstra (D. C.) 247 Fed. 593, 594.

Motion overruled.

DEVINE v. DEVINE. (No. 44/121.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 8, 1918.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE §279(1) — AGREEMENT FOR SEPARATION—ACTION FOR MONIES DUE—EQUITABLE DEFENSES.

In the wife's action for the balance due under a separation agreement, the equitable defense of the wife's subsequent adultery is available to the husband.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE §278(1) — SEPARATION AGREEMENT—VALIDITY.

It being the mutual right of husband and wife to live separate and apart from each other, a separation agreement, coupled with the husband's agreement to support the wife, is valid, but only so long as both acquiesce in the living apart.

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE §279(1) — SEPARATION AGREEMENT—RIGHT TO RECOVER—EFFECT OF ADULTERY.

Where the husband and wife made a separation agreement binding the husband to support the wife, and the wife committed adultery, the husband was not liable for the balance due under the terms of the agreement, since the agreement contained the implied condition that the wife should remain chaste.

Suit by Agnes Devine against Thomas A. Devine to recover balance due on separation agreement. Judgment for defendant.

This is a suit brought by a wife against her husband to recover money claimed as due by the terms of a written agreement, wherein the parties agreed to live separate and apart from each other and the husband agreed to pay to the wife $15 per week. The following is a copy of the agreement:

"This agreement made by and between Mr. Thomas A. Devine, plumber, known as the party of the first part, and Mrs. Thomas A. Devine, wife, known as the party of the second part.

"It is mutually agreed that the said Thomas A. Devine, husband, party of the first part, will pay to his wife, Mrs. Thomas A. Devine, the party of the second part, the sum of $15.00, fifteen dollars per week.

"Also the party of the first part must pay to the landlord the sum of $15.00, fifteen dollars, for the rent of house No. 20 S. Georgia Ave., due on September 10, '15. It is also agreed that this shall be the last payment of rent by the party of the first part.

"It is also mutually agreed that the party of the first part will begin the payments of the $15.00 weekly on September 18, '15, and the weekly payment shall continue to be paid on every Saturday following.

"It is further understood that the party of the second part shall remain away from the party of the first part's place of business; also shall not by any means annoy or otherwise interfere with the party of the first part.

"If this agreement is violated by the party of the second part the weekly payments shall cease.

Thomas A. Devine, Husband.

"Mrs. Thomas A. Devine, Wife.

"Harry H. Freed, Witness."

At the hearing it was conclusively established by way of defense that the wife committed adultery in August, 1916. The primary inquiry herein is whether the wife's adultery was operative to defeat her recovery of the stipulated weekly payments falling due by the terms of the agreement subsequent to her adultery.

John F. X. Ries and Elwood O. Weeks, both of Atlantic City, for complainant. Bolte, Sooy & Gill and H. Walter Gill, all of Atlantic City, for defendant.

LEAMING, V. C. (after stating the facts as above). [1] It is urged in behalf of complainant that an equitable defense cannot be entertained in a suit of this nature; that the suit being solely for the recovery of money due under a contract, and being brought in this court because the law courts cannot entertain an action by a wife against her husband, this court is restricted to the same defenses that a law court could entertain, had there been a trustee to prosecute the action in a court of law in behalf of the wife. This view is suggested in Buttler v. Buttler, 57 N. J. Eq. 645, at page 654, 42 Atl. 755, 73 Am. St. Rep. 648, but is not made the basis of decision in that case. In a subsequent suit between the same parties (Buttler v. Buttler, 71 N. J. Eq. 671, 65 Atl. 485) the same question arose and was necessary to the decision of the case. It was there pointed out that it is not the incapacity of one spouse to sue the other at law which denies jurisdiction to a law court, but their incapacity at law to make a contract; that at law agreements between husband and wife are void, but in equity they will be recognized and enforced, if fair and fairly obtained. Accordingly it was there held that equitable defenses must be entertained in this court in suits of this nature. The same view was adopted in Halstead v. Halstead, 74 N. J. Eq. 596, 598, 70 Atl. 928. It seems impossible to doubt the soundness of the view that, where a spouse comes into a court of equity to invoke its established equitable powers to give recognition to a contract which is classed as void at law, such appeal for equitable relief necessarily calls into activity every recognized equitable consideration entering into the controversy that may aid a just determination of the rights of the parties. It is this enforcement of the rights of the parties in accordance with the inherent justice of the case which courts of equity are constantly striving to attain through the enforcement of the established rules of equity jurisprudence. But I think a solution of the present controversy may be reached without the aid of any rules which are classed as obtaining in courts of equity exclusively.

What effect upon the legal rights of complainant arising from this agreement is to be given to her adultery committed after the execution of the agreement?

In England the adjudications from an early date have been to the effect that the adultery of the wife, committed after the execution of a separation agreement, will not deny to her the right of recovery of the stipulated periodical payments for her support falling due after her adultery, unless the agreement expressly provides that the payments shall continue to be made only so long as she remains chaste; that in the absence of such dum casta clause in the agreement no such clause will be implied.

Those adjudications cannot be appropriately disregarded, unless conditions are found to exist in this jurisdiction which deny to them the force they would otherwise possess. In that view a consideration of the English cases seems necessary.

The English authorities touching the question here propounded are the following: Sidney v. Sidney, 3 P. W. 269; Winter v. Blount, note to 3 P. W. 277; Field v. Serres, 4 B. & P. (1 B. & P. N. R.) 121; Seagrave v. Seagrave, 13 Ves. Jr. 439; Scholey v. Goodman, 1 Bing. 349; Jee v. Thurlow, 2 B. & C. 547; Baynon v. Batley, 8 Bing. 256; Evans v. Carrington, 2 De G., F. & J. 481; Gandy v. Gandy, L. R. 7 Pro. Div. 168; Bradley v. Bradley, 7 Pro. Div. 237; Fearon v. The Earl of Aylesford, L. R. 14 Q. B. Div. 792; Sweet v. Sweet, L. R. 1895, 1 Q. B. 12.

21 Cyc. 1597, 9 Ruling Case Law, 532, and 12 English Ruling Cases, 814, note, are to the same effect, but are wholly based upon some of the cases above cited.

An examination of these cases will disclose that one of the controlling circumstances on which the learned judges have based their conclusions is the fact, repeatedly stated, that in England the preparation of separation agreements has long been in the hands of skilled solicitors, who have thought it expedient to embody dum casta clauses in such agreements; from that circumstance the inference is drawn that, in the absence of that clause in a separation agreement so prepared, an implied condition that the wife shall remain chaste will not be inferred. The inference is not drawn that the parties intended that the wife should be privileged to commit adultery, for a provision in the agreement to that effect, or even an ascertained purpose of the parties to that effect, was held to render the whole agreement void (Evans v. Carrington, 2 De G., F. & J. 481, 492), but by reason of the customary use of the dum casta clause by skilled draftsmen its absence was deemed measurably operative to repel an implied condition which might otherwise have been thought necessarily present in agreements of that nature. The agreement here under consideration clearly dispels all force that has been given to considerations of the nature stated, for this agreement obviously has been drawn by the parties or by some person wholly unskilled in drafting agreements of any kind. So far as the English cases can be said to rest upon the inferences to be drawn from the custom of skilled draftsmen of separation agreements, it seems clear that their force is lost in the present controversy.

[2] But an important radical difference is to be found between the English law and that of this jurisdiction, which appears to invade the very foundation of the decisions above cited, and further renders them inapplicable to our conditions. In England the contract of a husband and wife to live apart is not restricted by law to the period of their mutual assent, and the contract can be specifically enforced; either spouse, if without wrong, may by force of the contract maintain a bill to restrain the other from an action for the restitution of conjugal rights. See Besant v. Wood, L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 605, and cases there cited. In New Jersey separation agreements have no such force. Here married persons may agree to live separate and apart from each other, because it is their privilege to live in that manner so long as they mutually desire to do so, and the husband's agreement to support his wife during that period of time is in harmony with his lawful duty; but an agreement of separation cannot confer on either party the right to live away from the other against the will of the other. Aspinwall v. Aspinwall, 49 N. J. Eq. 302, 24 Atl. 926; Mockridge v. Mockridge, 62 N. J. Eq. 570, 50 Atl. 182. By policy of the law the period for which they thus contract touching their separation is limited to the period of their future mutual assent to live apart. Accordingly, in the absence of wrongdoing on the husband's part, he may require his wife's return to his bed and board, and her refusal will not only constitute her an obstinate deserter, but will deny to her any right to support from him, notwithstanding the existence of an agreement wherein they have mutually stipulated to live apart. Moores v. Moores, 16 N. J. Eq. 275; Power v. Power, 65 N. J. Eq. 93, 55 Atl. 111; Power v. Power, 66 N. J. Eq. 320, 58 Atl. 192, 105 Am. St. Rep. 653.

[3] The wife's act of adultery while living separate from her husband pursuant to the terms of a separation agreement is thus operative to deny to her husband the right to require her return to him—a right preserved to him by our law—unless he condones an act which he is under no legal or moral obligation to condone. And the legal obligation of a husband to support his wife exists only so long as she shall remain chaste (Bradbury v. Bradbury, 74 Atl. 150), unless it shall be held that the burden of the agreement for support contained in a separation agreement survives that period.

It thus appears that in this jurisdiction, unlike England, the period of operation of the stipulation to live apart, however broadly expressed, cannot lawfully be extended or contemplated as intended to extend beyond the time when either party shall withdraw assent; that the husband's withdrawal of assent to the separation brings into existence the duty of the wife's return; that her failure to return denies to her the right to further support, so far as the stipulations of the agreement touching her right to live away from her husband are concerned; that her adultery in like manner denies to her the right to further support, so far as the stipulations of the agreement touching her right to live apart from her husband are concerned. Accordingly the absence of a limitation as to time or event in the provisions of the agreement touching support, if held to entitle the wife to support notwithstanding her unlawful refusal to return, or notwithstanding her adultery which denies to her the right to return, must be deemed to relate to and include circumstances and conditions which the law does not permit the parties to contemplate in their stipulations touching their right to live apart. As the agreement to live apart necessarily reserved to both parties the right to withdraw from that engagement at any time without such right being expressed in the agreement, it would seem that the stipulation touching support, contained in the same agreement (which stipulation in such circumstances clearly contemplates separate domiciles which render the stipulated periodical payments for support necessary), must be understood as operative only within the legitimate field of operation of the primary stipulations of the agreement touching separation. So closely related are the engagements for living apart and for support that any appropriate recognition of established rules of construction appears to require that in a single instrument they should be read together and understood as dependent and coextensive in their operation and force; the termination of the contractual force of the engagement for separate domiciles should thus terminate the obligation contemplating and based upon the existence of that condition. The absence in the English law of this limitation upon the rights of the spouses to contract touching the period of their separation appears to impel the conclusion that the decisions of that jurisdiction are inapplicable to conditions here present. Moreover, any assumed contemplation of the parties that a virtuous wife may fall from virtue attributes to a virtuous woman an almost impossible and wholly unreasonable conception, and attributes to the husband a contemplation so unnatural and so at variance with the field of privilege which the law extends that the implied condition of chastity seems necessarily present in such agreements.

In this country Babcock v. Smith, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 61, and Galusha v. Galusha, 116 N. Y. 635, 22 N. E. 1114, 6 L. R. A. 487, 15 Am. St. Rep. 453, may be cited as indirectly bearing upon the question here involved. The former was a bill in equity for relief against the provisions of a marriage settlement because of the adultery of the husband. The view is there adopted that the conventional disposition of property in a deed of marriage settlement will not be disturbed. In the latter case it was held that the annual allowance for the wife's support as fixed in a separation agreement would limit and control the amount of alimony which the court could award the wife in her divorce decree against her husband. See dissenting opinion of the Chief Justice in this case, reported at end of Clark v. Fosdick, 118 N. Y. 18, 22 N. E. 1111, 6 L. R. A. 132, 16 Am. St. Rep. 733.

In this state, in Dixon v. Dixon, 23 N. J. Eq. 316, a bill was filed by the husband to set aside a conveyance which had been made by the husband to his wife's trustee in settlement of her suit for maintenance. The ground for relief was the wife's adultery. On the motion for a preliminary injunction the wife's adultery subsequent to the conveyance was treated as admitted. It was there held by Chancellor Zabriskie that a deed of settlement of that kind, if good at its execution and delivery, would not be set aside for adultery or any misconduct of the wife afterwards. Some of the English cases above cited are there referred to in support of that view. The same view was adopted by Vice Chancellor Dodge, to whom the case was referred for final hearing. Dixon v. Dixon, 24 N. J. Eq. 133. In Lister v. Lister, 35 N. J. Eq. 49, the bill, filed by a husband, sought to set aside conveyances which he had made, or caused to be made, to his wife; the ground of relief in part being the wife's subsequent adultery. No separation agreement was there involved. The court found the conveyances to have been gifts to the wife, and held that her subsequent adultery afforded no ground for setting aside the conveyances. The same authorities cited in Dixon v. Dixon, supra, are there partially reviewed. In these New Jersey cases the effect of the subsequent adultery of the wife on executory stipulations for the wife's support contained in a separation agreement was in no way involved or considered. The conveyance which was sought to be set aside in Dixon v. Dixon was made long before the adultery was committed; there was clearly no total failure of consideration, and no basis for relief against the deed pro tanto.

I am convinced that the engagements of defendant for weekly payments to his wife for her support can only be understood in this jurisdiction as relating to such period of time as the parties should reside separate and apart from each other pursuant to and by reason of their mutual agreement for that purpose; that the engagements of defendant for weekly payments for his wife's support while so living apart from him must also be understood as accompanied by an implied condition that she remain chaste during that period of time.

MARSH v. MARSH. (No. 44/229.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. May 6, 1918.)

COVENANTS—108(2)—BUILDINGS—"FRONT FOUNDATION WALL."

While restrictive covenant against building on lot unless "front foundation wall" be at least 75 feet from street was not violated by porch within the 75-foot distance, it was violated by alteration of porch to erect second story thereon, forming substantially an addition to main building, although piers supporting the double-decked structure were not technically a foundation wall, since term "front foundation wall" does not necessarily imply solid wall, but includes anything which serves purpose of foundation wall.

Suit by Helen E. Marsh against Joseph A. Marsh. Decree for complainant.

Edwin B. and Philip Goodell, of Montclair, for complainant. Charles Jones, of Newark, for defendant.

LANE, V. C. The bill is filed to enforce the provisions of a restrictive covenant. Both complainant and defendant derive title from a common grantor, the executors of Erwin J. Crane. Crane owned a considerable tract of land along a street in Montclair known as Sunset Park North. There is no doubt but that there was a plan of development adopted by which it was contemplated that no house should be built upon any of the property, the main structure of which should be within 75 feet of Sunset Park North. In the deeds which were made, including that to defendant, there was this restrictive covenant:

"That no building shall be erected on said lot unless the front foundation wall of the said building is at least 75 feet from the front of the above premises on Sunset Parkway North."

The house of defendant is on the corner of Norwood avenue and Sunset Park North and faces Norwood avenue. The front foundation wall is parallel to Norwood avenue. Prior to the purchase by defendant of the premises in question, and prior to October, 1910, a dwelling house had been erected. There was attached to it a porch, resting upon piers, facing Sunset Park North, extending for a distance of approximately 14 feet, within the 75-foot distance referred to. No objection was made to this structure, nor do I think there could have been an objection made to it. Some time in 1917 defendant proceeded to make alterations which are now complained of. He filed plans with the Building Department of Montclair. These plans indicated that a foundation wall was to be placed under, and that a second story was to be erected over, the porch. After objection by the complainant, the plans were altered so that the foundation wall was omitted. Substantially, however, so far as outward appearances are concerned, the structure is to be as the plans originally contemplated.

There are three questions to be decided:

(1) What is the meaning of the restrictive covenant? (2) Does the proposed structure come within its inhibition? (3) Is the complainant estopped or guilty of laches?

First. I have no difficulty in construing the covenant. It reads:

"That no building shall be erected on said lot unless the front foundation wall of said building is at least 75 feet from front of above premises on Sunset Parkway North."

Construing it strictly, it seems to me that, if any part of the front foundation wall is within 75 feet of Sunset Park North, there is a violation of the covenant. If the defendant choose to build his building so that his front foundation wall fronts Norwood avenue rather than Sunset Park North, he must build it so that no part of it is nearer to Sunset Park North than 75 feet.

It seems to me that the reasoning of the Court of Errors and Appeals in the case of Howland v. Andrus, 81 N. J. Eq. (11 Buch.) 175, 86 Atl. 391, does not apply. In that case, while it is true that the physical location of the properties was similar to the location of the properties under consideration in this case, the covenant was substantially different. The deed under which the complainant obtained title to the property fronting on Wildwood avenue contained a restriction that any building should be "so located that the front line thereof shall not be nearer than sixty feet to the street line measured at right angles thereto." It contained a further provision that no other lots should be sold, except by deed containing the same restriction. The deed to the defendants of a corner lot on the corner of Wildwood avenue and Park street contained this restriction:

"The said houses to face on Park street on lots having a frontage of not less than one hundred feet, the front foundation wall of said dwelling to be at least fifty feet from the westerly side of Park street."

A map filed prior to the making of the deeds showed the corner lots facing Park street. Of this map the complainant at the time of his purchase had knowledge. Upon the defendants proceeding to erect a building fronting Park street, the side line of which, facing Wildwood avenue, would be within 60 feet of the street line, complainant filed a bill for injunction. The Court of Chancery granted the injunction, holding:

"For the purpose of the covenant the line of the dwelling 'fronting' toward the street from which the measurements are to be taken is to be considered as the 'front line' intended by the covenant, although this line might be in fact the side line of the dwelling."

The Court of Errors and Appeals, reversing, intimated that this construction did violence to the language used. It based its determination, however, upon the fact that at most the complainant's right to relief was doubtful, and that, being so, equity ought not to intervene. The covenant now under discussion is substantially different. It forbids the erection of any building unless the front foundation of such building is at least 75 feet from front of said premises on Sunset Parkway North. In the Andrus Case the street from which the measurements were to be made is not indicated by name, but the covenants clearly refer to the street upon which the building fronts. In the case at bar the street from which the measurements are to be taken is named, to wit, Sunset Park North. Although the Court of Errors and Appeals said in the Andrus Case that, while the word "side" might be used in a generic sense to include "front," the word "front" as applied to a house is always specific, yet it seems to me that it may appear from the context that the user of the word may not have used it in the specific sense indicated by the Court of Appeals. Again referring to the covenant, the grantor says that the front foundation wall of the building must be at least 75 feet "from front of said premises on Sunset Parkway North." The grantor here clearly indicates that he is referring by the word "front" to that portion of the lot adjacent to Sunset Park North.

The clear purpose of the grantor as expressed in the covenant was to prevent the erection of a structure with foundation walls nearer to Sunset Park North than 75 feet.

Second. Does the proposed structure violate the restrictive covenant? I think it does. It may be that from a technical architectural standpoint, what is being erected is an upper porch. It is a fact that there are no "foundation walls," in the technical sense, under the lower porch. I have examined photographs of the structure in question, and it appears that defendant has in reality, so far as outward appearance is concerned, added two wings to his house. It is not contended that if the structure which is built on the other side of the house had been built on the side fronting Sunset Park North there would not be a violation of the covenant. So far as outward appearance there is no distinction between that portion of the structure which faces Sunset Park North and that portion of the structure built on the other side of the house. Yet defendant insists that, because he has induced the Building Department of Montclair to permit the erection of the structure facing Sunset Park North without a foundation wall, speaking technically, although it looks the same as the other, it is not within the terms of the restrictive covenant. I think that the language "front foundation wall" does not necessarily imply a solid wall (Cornell v. Bickley, 85 Iowa, 219, 52 N. W. 192), but includes anything which takes the place and serves the purpose of a foundation wall, and I think that the piers which support the double-decked structure are, within the meaning of the restrictive covenant, a part of the front foundation wall of the building, and, being within a distance of 75 feet from Sunset Park North, there is a violation of the restrictive covenant.

I have considered the cases of Walker v. Renner, 60 N. J. Eq. 493, 46 Atl. 626; Atlantic City v. Young Amusement Company, 63 N. J. Eq. 831, 53 Atl. 168; Fortesque v. Carroll, 76 N. J. Eq. 583, 75 Atl. 923, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 79. The rules to be applied in the determination of cases such as this, as gathered from these cases, seem to be clear. The language of the covenant is to be strictly construed. If it has a plain meaning, it is to be enforced in that sense. If it has no meaning, it cannot be enforced. If it may mean either one of two things, it will be construed to mean that which is most favorable to the owner of the property. If complainant's right to relief be doubtful, equity ought not to intervene. But none of the rules laid down deprive the court of the power to construe the language used in the light of all of the circumstances. This very thing was done in Walker v. Renner, supra. Nor is the court obliged, in a case where to attribute a strict technical meaning to each word used would result in defeating the perfectly clear intent of the user of the language, to apply such strict technical meaning. The test is whether the construction put upon the language by the court is so clear as that by the acceptance of the deed containing the restriction the acceptor may reasonably be deemed to have understood and acceded to the terms of the restriction as so construed. Fortesque v. Carroll, supra.

The clear purpose of a restrictive covenant such as now under consideration is to prevent the erection of something which can be sensed by one of the senses. When the grantor used the language "foundation wall," he had primarily in mind, not the masonry forming the foundation, but the structure superimposed, or a structure ordinarily superimposed upon a foundation wall which would appeal to the sense of sight of a neighbor. To hold that a person under the terms of such a covenant may erect a main structure, which would ordinarily rest upon a foundation wall and be within the terms of the covenant, without a foundation wall technically speaking, and be without the terms of the covenant, would render the language of the restrictive covenant meaningless.

Third. Defendant insists that, because of the acquiescence of complainant and her predecessors in title in the existence of the lower porch so called, she is charged with laches, or is estopped from questioning the building of the proposed structure. There can be no claim that there was any laches after complainant ascertained that defendant intended to build the structure now being erected. The answer to the contention of defendant is that prior to the proposed changes the structure existing was in fact but a porch. The change proposes, not only the erection of a second story, but an alteration of the lower porch. As I have before pointed out, as originally proposed there were to be foundation walls under the first porch. These walls were abandoned upon objection being made by complainant, and with the consent of the Montclair building authorities. While it is true that the roof of the structure as proposed is not a continuation of the roof of the main structure, yet it is so connected with the roof of the main structure, and the nature of the construction of the second story addition is such, as that to the eye the entire structure appears to be one main building. I do not think the complainant could have objected to the existence of the porch as it was prior to the alteration. I think the alteration has changed its nature so that the complainant may now object.

Settle decree on five days' notice.

Throughout these conclusions the words "Sunset Park North" and "Sunset Parkway North" have been used to designate the same street. The reason is that in the documents dealing with the title the words have been used interchangeably.

HILTON v. HILTON. (No. 19.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES §78 (1)—PROPERTY RIGHTS IN NAME.

The right of a man to use his own name in his own business is part of the natural and inalienable rights guaranteed by our Constitution, without which the right to acquire, possess, and protect property would be of little worth. Even in a case of unfair competition, the courts go no further than to restrain the use of a name, except when so marked as to distinguish it from a competitor, and this exception amounts to allowing the wrongdoer to continue the use of his own name, when it is so marked.

2. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES §79— UNFAIR COMPETITION—NATURE OF REMEDY.

The remedy by injunction in a case of unfair competition is a protective remedy, intended to protect the complainant in his property rights, not punitive to punish wrongdoing.

3. PARTNERSHIP §262 — DISSOLUTION—EFFECT OF—AGREEMENT.

When partners dissolve and put their agreement in writing, that writing measures their rights and obligations.

4. PARTNERSHIP §310 — DISSOLUTION — RIGHTS OF RETIRING PARTNER.

In an agreement of dissolution between partners, there was a sale of the good will of the business, but no agreement by the retiring partner not to engage in business. Held, that the retiring partner might carry on a rival business wherever he chose, and might push his business as any stranger or outsider might, even though this interfere with the business he has sold. Newark Coal Co. v. Spangler, 54 N. J. Eq. 254, 34 Atl. 932, approved.

5. GOOD WILL §6(2)—SALE.

The vendor of the good will of a business who has not covenanted or agreed not to compete, may seek for trade by any honest method, including public advertisement, or private advertisement among those who were not customers of the old business, but may not specially solicit the trade of those who were customers of the old business, and he may serve all who come of their own motion.

Appeal from Court of Chancery.

Suit by Philip Hilton against Joseph Hilton. From a decree advised by the Vice Chancellor (102 Atl. 16), defendant appeals. Remanded, with directions to modify.

Robert H. McCarter, of Newark (Selick J. Mindes, of Newark, on the brief), for appellant. John R. Hardin, of Newark, for appellee.

SWAYZE, J. The bill prays that the defendant be "restrained from using the name 'Hilton's' or 'Hilton' alone or in such manner as to lead or induce the public to believe that the goods manufactured or sold by him are manufactured or sold by complainant, and that the business conducted by defendant is the same as or a part of the business conducted by complainant, from using any emblem or device resembling the trade emblem of complainant in any way in his business, and from conducting his business so as to deceive the public and induce it to believe that the goods manufactured or sold by defendant were manufactured or sold by complainant, and that the business conducted by defendant is the same as or a part of the business conducted by complainant." The evidence entitled the complainant to the relief prayed for. The learned Vice Chancellor, however, went further, and enjoined the defendant from "using the name 'Hilton,' either alone or in association with other word or words, for any purpose whatsoever, in any clothing business operated or conducted directly or indirectly by the defendant competitive with the clothing business operated or conducted by the complainant trading under the name and style of the 'Hilton Company,' and particularly from using the word 'Hilton's' or 'Hilton,' either alone or in association with other word or words, to describe or designate any retail clothing store or stores or the clothing therein sold or the business therein operated or conducted, now or hereafter operated or conducted, directly or indirectly, by the defendant in any city or cities in which the complainant, trading under the name and style of the 'Hilton Company,' now operates or conducts a retail clothing business."

The effect of this injunction is to preclude the defendant from using his own name in the clothing business in any city where the complainant conducts a retail clothing business. That this was meant to be its scope is shown by the respondent's defense of the decree, both orally and in his brief.

[1] The right of a man to use his own name in his own business is part of the natural and inalienable rights guaranteed by the very first clause of our Constitution, without which the right to acquire, possess, and protect property would be of little worth. Although the right is not safeguarded in England by any constitutional guaranty, it has found careful protection in the courts of justice. Of the numerous cases of unfair competition and fraud to be found in the reports, we doubt if a single case can be found where as broad an injunction as the present has been granted in a case of unfair or fraudulent trade, where, as here, there has been no contract or covenant restraining a man's business activities. Even in the Rogers Case, 71 N. J. Eq. 560, 63 Atl. 977, the injunction only went so far as to restrain the defendant from using his own name unless he stamped upon the goods the words, "not the original Rogers," or "not connected with the original Rogers." This exception, of course, amounted to allowing the defendant in that case, notwithstanding his previous fraudulent conduct, to continue the use of his own name if he would brand the goods as stated.

[2, 3] At least three reasons have moved the courts to this limitation of the restraint upon a man's use of his own name: First, the constitutional rights already stated; second, the public interest in having all citizens free to labor in the vocation to which they have been trained, with which they are familiar, or to which they are adapted—a consideration which has led the courts so often to declare even contracts void as in restraint of trade; third, the fact that the remedy by injunction is a protective remedy, intended to protect the complainant in his property rights, not a punitive remedy, intended to punish the defendant for his wrongdoing. In this present case there is a fourth reason. The parties, when they dissolved partnership, put their agreement in writing, and that writing measures their rights and obligations. At that time, under such an agreement as they made, the defendant had the right, as had been recently decided by this court in Snyder Pasteurized Milk Co. v. Burton, 80 N. J. Eq. 185, 83 Atl. 907, to engage in a competing business. The complainant must be assumed to know the law and to have known that such was the effect of the agreement. He was, moreover, advised by competent counsel. In this situation we cannot do otherwise than hold that the parties contemplated that the defendant might use his own name in the clothing business. He must, of course, refrain from representing his business to be that of the complainant, and from palming off his goods as the goods of the complainant. The present injunction in its full scope cannot be sustained because of defendant's unfair trading. Apparently an injunction exactly in accord with the prayer of this bill would suffice for the complainant's protection.

[4] There we might leave the case but for the fact that in the dissolution of the partnership the defendant transferred to the complainant, along with the other assets, "all the name and good will of said business." The only name mentioned in the transfer is the Hilton Company, and the transfer of this name could not enlarge the complainant's right to the name "Hilton" or "Hilton's." If the name only had been transferred the argument would be irresistible that the names "Hilton" and "Hilton's" were omitted advisedly. The name, however, is not all that is transferred; the "good will" is included. We must therefore determine whether the complainant's rights are thereby enlarged. The fact that the bill does not contain any prayer for the protection of the good will, or prayer for general relief, does not shut us off from the inquiry. The bill was filed in 1917. By the new chancery rules (P. L. 1915, p. 194, Rule 47) relief other than that prayed for may be given without a prayer for general relief. The bill sets up the transfer, and the answer admits it so far as material to the present question. What rights then has the complainant by virtue of the transfer to him of the good will of the business? This depends on how good will is defined, and how much the words connote. Probably no one at this day would adopt the narrow definition of Lord Eldon. Business methods change with changing years, and with the expansion of business the meaning of business terms expands. The definition of Vice Chancellor Wood, afterward Lord Hatherley, in Churton v. Douglas, 28 L. J. Ch. 841, is broad enough for our present purpose, and has, in effect, been adopted in later cases, which have been approved and followed by us. Snyder Pasteurized Milk Co. v. Burton, 80 N. J. Eq. 185, 83 Atl. 907. "Good will must mean every advantage—affirmative advantage if I may so express it, as contrasted with the negative advantage of the vendor not carrying on the business himself—that has been acquired by the old firm by carrying on its business, everything connected with the premises, or the name of the firm, and everything connected with or carrying with it the benefit of the business." The distinction drawn by the Vice Chancellor between affirmative and negative advantage, as he calls it, is important. It was then, and apparently always has been, recognized that the sale of good will without more did not prevent the vendor from engaging in business in competition with the vendee. If the vendee desired to avoid that, he must require a contract not to engage in competition. This rule was so plain that it was taken for granted in this court, Richardson v. Peacock, 33 N. J. Eq. 597, and stated by Vice Chancellor Emery with his well-known care and accuracy in Newark Coal Company v. Spangler, 54 N. J. Eq. 354, 34 Atl. 932, as follows:

"The vendor of a 'good will' who has not expressly restricted himself against carrying on the business, being permitted by law to carry on a rival business wherever he chooses, may push his business as any stranger or outsider might, even though this does interfere with the business he has sold, and the real question, therefore, is narrowed down to this: In thus pushing his rival business, what acts, if any, must the vendor be restrained from?"

[5] It was always conceded that the vendor in conducting the rival business might make his business known by the usual general appeals by public advertisement to the public generally. Johnson v. Helleley, 2 De G. J. & S. 446, 34 L. J. Ch. 179; Hall v. Barrows, 33 L. J. Ch. 204; Labouchere v. Dawson, 41 L. J. Ch. 427. It was at one time contended that the vendor might go farther, and solicit personally or by mail, by traveling men, or any other way. It was finally settled that such special solicitation would be restrained. The English cases are set forth by Vice Chancellor Emery in Newark Coal Co. v. Spangler, above cited, and the matter has been put at rest by the decision of this court in Snyder Pasteurized Milk Co. v. Burton, 80 N. J. Eq. 185, 83 Atl. 907. We there said:

"The defendant, having made no express covenant, may engage in a competing business."

We there restrained the defendant from soliciting customers of the former business, the good will of which he had sold. It is gratifying to know that the English rule adopted by us has the support not only of reason but of the weight of authority in other jurisdictions. The more recent cases are collected in a note to Von Bremen v. MacMonnies, 200 N. Y. 41, 93 N. E. 186, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 293, in 21 Ann. Cas. 423. The New York Court of Appeals holds to our rule. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts takes a different view. Cases are collected in a note to Foss v. Roby, 195 Mass. 292, 81 N. E. 199, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1200, in 11 Ann. Cas. 571, but the cases cited in that note show that the great weight of authority is with our rule. On the one hand, then, the vendor, having the right to conduct a rival business, may, from the necessity of the case, seek for trade by any honest method, including public advertisement or private advertisement among those who were not customers of the old business, but he may not specially solicit the trade of those who were customers of the old business. The question still remains whether he may deal with the old customers, who may perhaps be attracted by their knowledge, from advertisement or otherwise, that he is in business. This question was left in doubt by what Justice Dixon said in Richardson v. Peacock. Sir George Jessel, in Ginesl v. Cooper, L. R. 14, Ch. Div. 596, 49 L. J. Ch. 601, enjoined a vendor who had sold his good will from dealing with the old customers, and vindicated his action in his usual vigorous style. Afterward, in Leggett v. Barrett, L. R. 15 Ch. Div. 306, 51 L. J. Ch. 90, an injunction granted by him in accordance with Ginesl v. Cooper came before the Court of Appeals, and his order was reversed. Brett, L. J., said:

"The truth is, that to enjoin a man, or to prevent him by means of damages when he does it, against dealing with people whom he has not solicited is not only to enjoin him, but to enjoin them, for it prevents them from having the liberty which everybody in the country might have of dealing with whom they like. If they are induced by his solicitations, that is a different thing; but it seems to me that it would be quite wrong to imply any contracts that he will not deal with people who come of their own accord to deal, even though they were former customers."

The judges agreed that there was no authority for the extension of the relief attempted by the Master of the Rolls. The argument is unanswerable. It cannot be that every customer of a great department store, for instance, must be restricted in his choice of a place in which to trade merely because partners dissolve and one sells the good will to the other. The necessary corollary of the right to do business is the right to serve all who come of their own motion. Moreover, the rules of law must be practical, and it would be quite impossible for the proprietor even of a small business to be personally present in all parts of his establishment, prepared to turn away all the old customers, and of course no clerk can be supposed to know them, even if the proprietor can be.

The right to make known that one is in business by advertising addressed to the public generally is a necessary concomitant of the right to do business, without which that right would be hardly more than nominal. The reason for making a difference between such advertising and special solicitation is that the former is public and open to all; the latter is private and secret in a sense, and the vendor of good will has the advantage of knowing the customers, and, if permitted, could by reason of that knowledge, detract from the value of the good will he had sold.

No relief is open to the complainant, by reason of his purchase of good will, except an injunction against soliciting customers of the old business. No such solicitation was proved; no issue was made of it. In the present state of the case at any rate, no relief can be granted on that score.

The decree must be modified, and to that end the record remitted, in order that a decree may be entered according to the prayer of the bill. No costs will be allowed in this court. The respondent is entitled to costs in the Court of Chancery, since he gets the relief he prayed for.

(89 N. J. Eq. 319)

INTERNATIONAL SIGNAL CO. v. MARCONI WIRELESS TELEGRAPH CO. OF AMERICA. (No. 44/500.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. July 8, 1918.)

1. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT ¶12—INFRINGEMENT SUITS—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—"SELL."

The word "sell," in a contract settling infringement suits between two companies involving validity of patents for wireless telegraph or telephone inventions, whereby each party was to pay the other a percentage of the selling price of apparatus which it might sell, held to include a contract to sell.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Sell.]

2. CONTRACTS ¶147(1)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF PARTIES.

In construing a contract, the cardinal rule is to ascertain the intention of the parties.

3. EVIDENCE ¶448—CONSTRUCTION OF LANGUAGE—SURROUNDING CIRCUMSTANCES.

If more than one construction of language is possible, surrounding circumstances may be considered.

4. CONTRACTS ¶154—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION DOUBTFUL OR OBSCURE.

If the intention is doubtful or obscure, the most fair and reasonable construction, imputing the least hardship on either of the contracting parties, should be adopted.

5. PATENTS ¶216—CONTRACT TO PAY ROYALTIES—FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

Where possible invalidity of patents is a recognized factor leading to a contract for payment of royalties, there is no failure of consideration because the patents are afterwards held invalid.

6. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT ¶6(1)—INFRINGEMENT SUIT—CONTRACT TO PAY ROYALTIES—FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

A contract settling litigation over patents, and whereby a party acquired the right to use over 100 patents, and was bound to pay a flat royalty on each set of apparatus sold, without any apportionment of such royalties, is not so separable as to permit a finding of failure of consideration as to 2 patents afterwards held invalid.

7. PATENTS ¶327—RES JUDICATA—VALIDITY OF PATENTS—"PROCEEDING IN REM."

A suit for infringement, wherein a patent was declared invalid, was not a "proceeding in rem," and does not prevent the same or a different plaintiff suing another defendant and establishing the validity of the patent on the same or different evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, In Rem.]

9. PATENTS ¶327—RES JUDICATA—VALIDITY OF PATENTS.

In a suit for royalties, the patents cannot be held invalid because of a judgment against their validity in another suit between different parties.

Suit by the International Signal Company against the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of America for an accounting under an agreement to pay royalties. Decree advised for complainant.

Lindabury, Depue & Faulks, J. Edward Ashmend, and Luther V. Stryker, all of Newark, for complainant. Griggs & Harding, John W. Griggs, and John W. Harding, all of Paterson, for defendant.

LANE, V. C. [1-4] The first question to be determined is whether the word "sell," used in the eighth paragraph of the agreement under consideration, is used in its strict legal sense, so that a transaction, to come within it, must have been accompanied with delivery or passing of title, or whether it is used in a sense which would include a contract to sell. That it may be used in either sense is settled. The cardinal rule to be applied in construing a contract is to ascertain the intention of the parties. If more than one construction of the language used is possible, the circumstances surrounding the transaction may be considered, as well as the written document. If the intention is doubtful or obscure, a construction should be adopted which is most fair and reasonable, and which will impose the least hardship upon either of the contracting parties. Citation of authority would be superfluous.

At the time of the execution of the contract on October 15, 1914, complainant and the defendant's predecessor claimed each to be the owners of numerous valid patents of apparatuses and processes employed in wireless telegraphy. Each claimed that certain of the patents of one infringed those of the other; that certain of the patents were invalid. There had been considerable litigation with respect to the contentions of the respective parties. The public were injured; the licensees of one were subjected to infringement suits by the other. The chaotic condition in which the situation stood is illustrated by the fact that the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit had declared valid in an infringement suit 2 of complainant's patents (National Electric Signaling Co. v. Marconi Telefunken Wireless Tel. Co., 208 Fed. 679, 125 C. C. A. 647) and that the same 2 patents in another suit since the making of the contract have been declared invalid by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (Klinter v. Atlantic Communication Co., 240 Fed. 716, 153 C. C. A. 514). On October 15, 1914, a contract was entered into in which there is a recital of the then pending litigations and the following statements:

"Whereas, it is desired, in the interests of the public, that said conflicting claims of each of the parties hereto against the other should be adjusted, and the right of each party to manufacture, sell, use, and lease to others to be used, the patented apparatus, so that users of wireless telegraph and wireless telephone apparatus may obtain the most efficient apparatus and will not be subjected to claims under the patents of one party by reason of the purchase, lease, or use of such apparatus from the other party; and whereas, the parties to this agreement are mutually desirous of settling and adjusting the controversy regarding the aforesaid patent rights which they respectively own, and of compromising the claims of the parties hereto against each other for past damages or profits arising out of any infringement of said letters patent of one party by the other, and of acquiring a license to transact its business under one or all of said patents owned by the other, as well as of protecting their said respective patent rights or the monopoly thereof."

The right is given to each party to make, sell or cause to be sold, lease or cause to be leased, use or cause to be used, wireless telegraph and wireless telephone apparatus embodying the inventions of each and all of the patents enumerated and set forth in schedules annexed to the agreement. By the eighth paragraph there is to be paid by each party to the other 20 per cent. of the gross selling price of each set of wireless telegraph or wireless telephone apparatus which it may under the terms of the contract sell, including sales to the United States government. By the fourteenth paragraph it is provided that settlements should be made at certain stated times, and that the license fees and royalties should be paid on such sets as the parties had sold, leased, or otherwise disposed of under the agreement during the preceding three months, and for which it had received payment from its lessees, vendees, or licensees. By the nineteenth paragraph it is provided that the term of the agreement should extend until the 18th day of April, 1926, unless previously canceled or terminated in accordance with the provisions thereof, that either party might terminate or cancel the agreement at any time after the 15th day of October, 1918, by written notice, which cancellation or termination should become effective one year after the giving of the notice. The Marconi Company might at any time after October 15, 1915, and prior to October 15, 1918, terminate or cancel the contract by giving written notice, which cancellation or termination should become effective 90 days after giving of notice.

On March 1, 1917, pursuant to paragraph 19, the Marconi Company gave notice of cancellation or termination. The question is whether it must account for sets contracted to be sold, but not delivered, within the 90 days succeeding March 1, 1917, and the determination of that question, as I have indicated, depends upon the meaning of the word "sell" used in the eighth paragraph. If the construction sought to be put upon the word by the defendant be adopted, it follows that had the agreement run its natural course until April 13, 1926, the parties would not be obliged to account for any sets contracted to be sold prior to April 13th, but not delivered until afterwards. If the construction insisted upon by the defendant be put upon the language used in the contract, the defendant and all users of any sets of apparatus contracted to be sold during the term of the contract, but not delivered until after its termination, would be exposed to suits for infringement. If the complainant had, during the term of the agreement, entered into a contract of sale for an apparatus which would infringe the patents of the defendant, were it not for the agreement, and for some reason or other delivery was not to be made for 4 months, and within 10 days after the contract was made the defendant gave a notice of cancellation, the complainant or its customer would be subject to suit for infringement. I cannot conceive that such a result was contemplated by the parties.

In view of the avowed purpose of the agreement to terminate litigation and to protect the public, I think that such a construction ought not to be adopted, unless it clearly appears from the instrument that the parties used the word "sell" in its narrow legal sense. That it was so used defendant insists is indicated by the fact that in the sixteenth paragraph, in providing for releases by the respective parties from claims for damages for alleged past infringements, the draftsman provided that the parties might continue the use of the apparatus which had at the date of the agreement "been delivered or contracted to be delivered to such vendees, lessees, or customers." It is said that the distinction recognized between delivery and contract of delivery indicates that the draftsman must have had in mind the distinction between a sale and a contract of sale. In the sixteenth paragraph, however, the parties were dealing with an entirely different subject-matter. They had in mind the physical situation of the apparatus. Having used the word "deliver," it immediately occurred that, to cover articles sold and not yet delivered, it was necessary to include the phrase "contracted to be delivered." They could not use the word "sell," which might have included either, for they were dealing with lessees; and they had in mind, also, that apparatus may have been parted with other than by sale or lease, for they included, not only "vendees and lessees," but also "customers." I can find no assistance from the sixteenth clause in construing the eighth.

By the twenty-eighth paragraph a special provision is made for the continuance of the payment of royalties or license fees upon apparatus leased prior to cancellation and termination, and it is argued that, because it was assumed necessary to include this specific clause, in order to continue liability as to leases made prior to the cancellation, it must be considered that the absence of such a clause with respect to apparatus contracted to be sold indicates that the parties did not intend a continuance of liability as to that. But here again the parties were dealing with a different subject-matter, and I can find nothing in this paragraph which assists me in defining what the parties meant by the word "sell." By the fourteenth paragraph payment is to be made at certain intervals for apparatus for which the parties had received payments from its lessees, vendees, or licensees, and it is intimated that the effect of this paragraph is that no royalty is to be paid except upon apparatus not only sold and delivered, but also paid for during the term of the agreement. Such a construction ought not to be put upon the contract unless no other construction is possible. I think that the purpose of the thirteenth paragraph was merely to arrange a convenient method of settlement. Singer Sewing Machine Co. v. Brewer, 78 Ark. 202, 93 S. W. 755.

I find nothing in the written contract which requires me to hold that the word "sell" was used in the eighth paragraph in its technical sense. In common usage the word "sell" does not convey the idea that delivery has been made or title passed. It is used indiscriminately to convey the idea of a technical sale and a contract to sell. In business usage an article is said to be sold when an agreement has been made that it should be taken; and this, notwithstanding the fact that it may not at the time have been manufactured, and that when offered for delivery it may be rejected for noncompliance with specifications. To hold that the word "sell" was used by the parties in its ordinary sense would, I think, lead to a result by which the manifest intentions of the parties would be accomplished, and which would be most fair and reasonable. Not only would the parties, but the public as well, be most adequately protected. It is conceded that at best the meaning of the contract is doubtful. Purchasers of apparatus during the period of ninety days would be uncertain, whether they could be sued for infringement or not. Those who had been advised that they might purchase without being subject to suits would find, if the construction sought by the defendant to be put upon the contract be adopted, themselves open to attack. After the expiration of the ninety days, or the termination of the contract, whoever dealt with the parties would do so with their eyes open.

[6] It is next insisted for the defendant that, because the two patents of the complainant, the only ones which the defendant says it is using, have been held invalid by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, there has been a complete failure of consideration, and they base their insistence upon a line of cases which hold that, where a contract is entered into for the payment of royalties based upon the assumed validity of a patent and the patent is afterwards declared invalid, there is no further liability under the contract. But in the case at bar that the patents might be invalid was a recognized factor which led to the making of the contract. The case is somewhat analogous to Strong v. Carver Cotton Gln Co. (Supreme Court of Massachusetts) 197 Mass. 53, 83 N. E. 328, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 274, 14 Ann. Cas. 1182.

[8] Nor do I think that the contract is so separable as to permit a finding that there was a total failure of consideration so far as these two patents were concerned. The defendant acquired the right to use over a hundred patents. No attempt was made to apportion the royalties. Defendant was obliged to pay a flat royalty upon each set of apparatus sold. The consideration of the contract was not merely the right to use patents, but the settlement of disputes which had led to vexatious litigation.

[7] No evidence of the invalidity of the patent was offered, other than the record of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Kintner v. Atlantic Communication Co., 240 Fed. 716, 158 C. C. A. 514. But that proceeding was not a proceeding in rem, and it does not prevent the same or a different plaintiff from prosecuting a suit against another defendant and establishing the validity of the patent upon the same or different evidence. The fact that the complainant here was a party to the New York litigation is without significance.

[8] I have examined the cases cited by defendant, and find none which lead me to conclude that this court would be justified in holding that for the purposes of this suit the two patents were invalid merely because of the judgment in the Kintner Case. See Pope Mfg. Co. v. Owsley (C. C.) 27 Fed. 100; Consolidated Roller Mill Co. v. Geo. T. Smith Middlings Purifying Co. (C. C.) 40 Fed. 305.

I will advise a decree that the defendant is bound to account for apparatus sold, although not delivered, within the 90-day period.

(39 N. J. Eq. 562)

SMITH v. JONES et al.

(Prerogative Court of New Jersey. July 19, 1918.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §91 — LIABILITY OF ADMINISTRATOR—DUTIES.

The law exacts of an administrator only the utmost good faith, ordinary care and prudence, and reasonable diligence, and he is not liable for mere lack of judgment.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §86(1) — CLAIM IN FAVOR OF ESTATE—ENFORCEMENT.

An administrator is not bound to enforce a doubtful or controverted claim, merely because the heirs think it is well founded, unless the heirs are willing to give indemnity for costs.

3. WITNESSES §188 — TRANSACTION WITH DECEASED PERSON.

On exception to account of administrator to hold him liable for amounts disposed of by intestate, persons to whom money was given should have been allowed to testify that money was a gift, under Comp. St. 1910, p. 2218; only parties to the action being disqualified by such statute.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Warren County.

In the matter of the accounting of Clarence C. Smith, administrator of the estate of Mary P. Jones, deceased. From an order of the orphans' court, sustaining exceptions of J. Corbett Jones and another to the account, the administrator appeals. Exceptants file a cross-appeal. Appeal reversed, and the cross-bill affirmed.

George M. Shipman and Nicholas Harris, both of Belvidere, for appellant. William H. Morrow, of Belvidere, for respondents.

BACKES, Vice Ordinary. This appeal is from an order of the orphans' court surcharging the final account of the administrator with $3,000. Mary P. Jones died in July, 1916, intestate, leaving a son, daughter, and two grandsons, children of a deceased son. After a contest between them for administration, the court appointed a stranger, Clarence C. Smith, who administered, and submitted his account for confirmation. The two grandsons filed an exception, setting up that the administrator had failed to charge himself with $3,000, money of the defendant alleged to have been unlawfully obtained from her by her two surviving children shortly before her death. The exception was sustained, and this appeal was taken.

The proofs show that in December, 1915, the deceased received from the executor of her brother's estate, in part payment of her distributive share, a check, payable to her order, for $3,000, for which she executed a release. Her son, James P. Jones, carried the check to her and returned the release. On January 18th he presented the check, bearing the indorsement of his mother, to the cashier of the Belvidere National Bank, and directed him to credit one-half of the amount to his account and the other to that of his sister, Margaret Warne, which was done. The deceased left a note, in her handwriting, found in the box containing her securities, stating that she had given the $3,000 to her son and daughter. The administrator was the executor, who drew the check, and he was also cashier of the bank. The deceased was 86 years of age, and, although physically impaired, was, to use the language of one of her grandsons, "an exceptionally bright woman, of a splendid disposition and of fine intelligence." She lived alone with a maid, and conducted her household affairs well, and her financial transactions wisely, to the day of her death. The day before her death she went automobile riding with one of her grandsons, and was in good spirits. She had a "bad spell" in December, and her daughter, Mrs. Warne, came on from the West to attend her. In May following she had another. The illness affected her mind and memory for the time being, but when the spells had passed she became normal.

The two grandsons evidently had some intimation of the payment of the $3,000, shortly after it was made, and they wrote to the executor, who confirmed their suspicion. They communicated with their Uncle James asking what had become of the money, and, his reply being unsatisfactory, one of them asked his grandmother point-blank whether she had given any of it to his uncle and aunt, to which she answered evasively that she thought she had given them some money, but she was not quite sure, and added, "I want you boys to have your share of that, too." In this conversation she called his attention to the fact that she held a note or two of his father, amounting to about $1,000, and suggested that "maybe it would be just as well to let it apply upon that," and that she would straighten it out the next time he came up. After the funeral, the grandsons persisted in their efforts to discover the $3,000, but without success; their uncle and aunt refusing to inform them, stating that they had made a solemn promise not to tell. After the litigation over the right to administer, the administrator tried to restore peace and avert further litigation, and at the instance of Mr. Jones and Mrs. Warne offered to pay them $1,000 in the closing of the estate, as their share of the $3,000; but they refused to be reconciled. They requested the administrator to commence suit, which he failed to do, and, upon his failure to charge himself with the amount, they took exception.

There is no ulterior significance attached to the circumstances that the administrator drew the check as executor of another estate, and as cashier of the bank divided the proceeds. They were mere coincidents. Nor does it appear other than that, throughout the affairs, the administrator acted impartially and in good faith. He was selected by the court as administrator for his known probity. The orphans' court tried the exception upon the theory that the sole issue was whether there was a gift to the son and daughter, and that they were the real parties to the action. It rejected their testimony of the transaction with their mother, tending to show a gift, as incompetent under the statute, and ruled that, by reason of the enfeebled condition of the deceased and the confidential relation existing between her and her children, a presumption against the validity of the gift arose, which had not been overcome by proof that the gift was knowingly made and without undue influence on the part of the donees, following Haydock v. Haydock, 84 N. J. Eq. 570, 88 Am. Rep. 385.

[1] The court erred in adjudging the administrator liable, based upon its finding that there had been no gift, and also in excluding the testimony offered to show that a valid gift had been made. Whether the $3,000 were assets of the estate, undisposed of, was a proper matter for investigation; but the conclusion reached by the court, upon the evidence before it, that the gift was invalid, and that the amount was collectible by the administrator, establishes but one factor towards his accountability. Before he could be condemned in damages, it was necessary to further find upon the proofs that it had been lost to the estate through his neglect. The law exacts of an administrator or trustee in the performance of his duty only the utmost good faith, ordinary care and prudence, and reasonable diligence. When these are fairly exercised, he is not responsible, even though loss ensues. The good faith of the administrator was not challenged, and lack of care and diligence formed no part of the considerations in the court below; and if the court had considered this phase of the case, it seems to me, it would not have been warranted in finding the administrator derelict in the discharge of his duty. The judgment of the court that the gift was invalid, and that the amount was an asset of the estate, to which the administrator was entitled, founded as it was on a rule of evidence based upon a wholesome policy, does not predicate lack of care or prudence in the administrator. His failure to determine the rights of the parties with legal nicety was not carelessness. He judged the matter as the average man would. Actual imposition or fraud upon the mother, by son and daughter, was not charged. Their character and standing forbid even an insinuation of this. It is to be assumed that in passing judgment the administrator had before him the circumstances that have been heretofore related, and also the additional facts testified to by the donees, which the court below excluded, but which I admitted over objection. By their testimony it appears that, when the son James gave his mother the check in December, she put it in her purse, and that when he called to pay her a visit on the 17th or 18th of January she gave it to him, stating that she desired it to be divided between himself and his sister. Both affirm, and believably, that the gift was voluntary and without the slightest suggestion on their part. With this explanation, supported by the note the old lady left, and her statement to her grandson, indicating that the gift to her two surviving children was to equalize the advancement to, or debt of, her deceased son, and the fact that the gift in itself was a perfectly natural one, was it unreasonable for him to conclude that the gift was perfect and the amount not recoverable by suit? I confess that I have grave doubt as to a successful prosecution. The question is not, "Did he err?" but, "Did the estate suffer harm through his unmindfulness of duty?" "So long as an executor acts in good faith, and with ordinary discretion, and within the scope of his powers, his acts cannot be successfully assailed. No man is infallible; the wisest make mistakes; but the law holds no man responsible for the consequences of his mistakes, which are the result of the imperfection of human judgment, and do not proceed from fraud, gross carelessness, or indifference to duty. * * * Indeed, he may do anything within the scope of his powers, without the least risk of personal liability for the consequences of his acts, provided he exercise the care and judgment of a man of ordinary prudence and sagacity. That is the test which the courts are required to apply in all cases." Helsler v. Sharp, 44 N. J. Eq. 167, 14 Atl. 624.

claim. If a court of competent jurisdiction should declare the gift valid, a most embarrassing situation would be presented. The estate has not as yet suffered loss. The right of action is not barred, and the donees are responsible; in fact, sufficient remains in the hands of the administrator to insure payment in the event of a recovery. The decree below in respect of the exception, will be reversed, with directions that the grandsons be permitted to sue in the name of the administrator to recover the amount of the gift, upon filing a stipulation pledging their distributive portion of the estate to indemnify the administrator against costs. An administrator is not bound to enforce a doubtful or controverted claim merely because the heirs think it is well founded, unless they are willing to give indemnity for costs. Sandborn v. Goodhue, 28 N. H. 48, 59 Am. Dec. 398; Harris v. Orr, 46 W. Va. 261, 33 S. E. 257, 76 Am. St. Rep. 815. The grandsons should conduct the suit, so as to remove further criticism of the administrator. In the case of Thomas Lommason's Will, Chief Justice Beasley, sitting in the Warren orphans' court, directed the exceptants to prosecute a claim held by the estate, upon giving indemnity, because the executor might be embarrassed in bringing the suit. The opinion has been lost, but the reason is recited in the order made January 16, 1865.

A cross-appeal was taken (rule 62, 100 Atl. xii) from so much of the decree as overruled an exception to a credit of $57 paid to Mary Jones for services. The proofs sustain the claim, and the decree in this respect is affirmed. The appellant is entitled to costs.

[3] A few words as to the evidence of the donees, of conversations with their mother, concerning the gift, which was rejected as incompetent. It should have been received. The fourth section of the Evidence Act (C. S. p. 2218) provides:

"In all civil actions any party thereto may be sworn and examined as a witness, notwithstanding any party thereto may sue or be sued in a representative capacity: Provided, this section shall not extend to permit testimony to be given by any party to the action as to any transaction with or statement by any testator or intestate represented in said action, unless the representative offers himself as a witness on his own behalf, and testifies to any transaction with or statement by his testator or intestate, in which event the other party may be a witness on his own behalf as to all transactions with or statements by such testator or intestate, which are pertinent to the issue."

It disqualifies only the parties to the action from giving testimony of conversations with the deceased, and does not extend to those who may be ultimately benefited by the result of the suit. The donees were not parties to the litigation, nor were they interested one way or the other in the outcome. The matter to be determined was whether the administrator should be charged with the amount of the check because of his failure of duty. To this the question of gift or no gift, as between the estate and the donees; was merely incidental, and the right of the estate to recovery against them remained untouched and unforfeited by the judgment. The situation is not like that in Smith v. Burnet, 34 N. J. Eq. 219, affirmed 35 N. J. Eq. 314, the doctrine of which the orphans' court applied. In that case the executor failed to charge himself with certain insurance company stock and the dividends thereon, standing in the name of the deceased, which he claimed had been given to him by the testator. At the trial of the exceptions, the executor offered himself as a witness to establish the gift, and his testimony as to conversations with the testator in respect of it was excluded as incompetent, within the prohibition of the statute. Van Wagenen v. Bonnot, 74 N. J. Eq. 847, 70 Atl. 143, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400, was an interpleader suit, filed by the stakeholder against the administrator of the donor and the donee, to determine the ownership of certain bank accounts. The testimony of the donee concerning transactions with the deceased relating to the gift, was held to be incompetent. In both these cases the testimony rejected was that of the parties to the proceedings who claimed the gift. In the case in hand, the thing in action was not the gift, but the damage arising from the loss of it. The parties to the action were the administrator, on the one hand and exceptants representing the estate, on the other, and if the administrator had offered to testify of conversations with his intestate, for the purpose of exonerating himself, he would have been barred upon the authority of the cases cited. The case of Rairdon v. Sampson, 67 N. J. Law, 346, 51 Atl. 696, is more nearly in point. There the administrator of Rairdon sued to recover wages of his intestate, and called the widow as a witness, who testified to conversations and transactions between the intestate and the defendant. She was vitally interested in the outcome of the suit, as sole distributee of her husband's estate; but the court declared that her testimony did not open the door to the defendant to give counter testimony of conversations and transactions with the deceased, because she was not a party to the action.

BOURGEOIS et al. v. MILLER et al.
(No. 42/163.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. July 15, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. COVENANTS §51(2) — RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS — "LIVERY STABLE" — "SALES STABLE" — "GARAGE."

A restrictive covenant in a deed against a livery or sales stable does not include a public garage.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Garage; First and Second Series, Livery Stable.]

2. NUISANCE §3(11) — PUBLIC GARAGES — "NUISANCE PER SE."

A public garage is not a nuisance per se. Whether it is a nuisance in fact depends upon the manner in which it is kept and the business conducted.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Nuisance Per Se.]

Suit by Annie Estell Bourgeois and another against Lewis Miller and others to restrain the construction of a public garage. Bill dismissed.

Bourgeois & Coulomb, of Atlantic City, for complainants. Babcock & Champion and Clarence L. Cole, all of Atlantic City, and Robert H. McCarter, of Newark, for defendants.

BACKES, V. C. This bill is to restrain the use of a building, in the course of construction, for a public garage. The defendants own a lot at the corner of Ocean avenue and Ninth street, in a residential and closely built up section of Ocean City, and upon it they intend building a one-story public garage, capable of housing from 70 to 100 automobiles. It is to be of brick construction, with a slag roof, supported by wooden trusses, rafters, and sheathing, cement floor, and framework windows and doors. Two 500-gallon gasoline tanks are to be sunk under the pavement of Ocean avenue, from which gasoline is to be supplied to automobiles by a pump on the outside of the building. It is to be lighted with electricity, and, as it is to be operated during the warm seasons only, no heating appliances are to be installed. The complainant Bourgeois owns the Normandie, a six-story frame hotel, opposite and across Ninth street, 68 feet away, and the complainant Frey owns the Traymore Hotel, a five-story structure in the rear of the proposed garage and 20 feet distant. Both are summer hotels, and open for trade from the late spring to the early fall only.

Upon the filing of the bill, and after a hearing, the defendants were restrained pendente lite from keeping within the building then erected on the lot, and of which the proposed garage is to be an extension, "any gasoline stored therein in barrels, automobile tanks, cans, or otherwise," and thereupon further building operations ceased. At that time there was an element in the case, which perhaps had some influence upon the court, that has since been eliminated. An ordinance of the municipality prohibited the erection of a public garage in the district in which the complainant's land is located, which was recently repealed by a vote of the people on a referendum under the Walsh Act (Act April 25, 1911; P. L. p. 462).

[1] One of the grounds upon which the complainants rest their claim to a permanent injunction is that the use of the building for a public garage will violate a general restriction contained in all of the deeds of the Ocean

City Association, the promoter of the town and the common grantor of all the lands within its boundaries, which provides:

"No building or any part thereof erected upon said lot or lots shall be used or occupied as a livery or sales stable, dye house, bone boiling or skin dressing establishment, soap, candle, glue, starch, lamp black, poudrette or fish guano manufactory, slaughter house, piggery or tannery nor shall any building be used or occupied as a drug store without the written consent of the said party of the first part hereto."

The argument is that the term "livery or sales stable" is the equivalent of, and comprehends, a public garage. It has been observed that a public garage is a modern substitute for the ancient livery stable (Smith v. O'Brien, 46 Misc. Rep. 325, 94 N. Y. Supp. 673), and that garages occupy with relation to automobiles the same place that stables do with relation to horses (Diocese of Trenton v. Toman, 74 N. J. Eq. 702, 70 Atl. 606); and the lexicographer says that "a garage is a stable for the storage of automobiles or other horseless vehicles" (Century Dictionary, 1906-8), but the definition manifestly does not meet that of a livery stable, "A stable where horses are kept for hire and where stabling is provided" (Webster). The restriction relates solely to the nature of the business, and not to the type of the building. An unsightly livery stable may be erected with impunity, and any lawful business, other than those proscribed, may be carried on without danger of infraction. It might even be permissible to put up a stable and rent stalls and storage for horses and wagons. The covenant aimed at the assembling of multitudes of horses, and was intended to rid the neighborhood of the annoyances of noise, odors, and flies usually centered about a livery stable, but the restriction is only upon the business calculated to bring about that result. Now, it may be that garages are more objectionable in a residential quarter than livery stables, and so are many other enterprises, as, for instance, a planingmill, machinery or boiler shop, streetcar barn, or railroad station (Bridgewater v. Ocean City, 62 N. J. Eq. 276, 49 Atl. 801), that are not under the ban. Public garages are not specifically interdicted. The inclusion in the covenant of specified objectionable trades excludes all other forms of lawful business. The livery or sales stable may have been the commercial predecessor of the public garage, but the covenant against the one is not therefore to be extended by implication to the other. A public garage is neither within the spirit nor the letter of the covenant. When the covenant was formulated, nearly 40 years ago, such a thing as a public garage was unknown; and it would require terrific stretching of the definition of a livery or sales stable to embrace "a place for housing automobiles."

It is not, however, required to go to this length in disposing of this phase of the bill, and relief must be denied if it appears that the complainant's right thereto is not clear.

That it is, at least, highly questionable whether the forbidden livery or sales stable includes a public garage, cannot be denied. Courts of equity do not aid one man to restrict another in the uses to which he may lawfully put his property, unless the right to such aid is clear. Fortesque v. Carroll, 76 N. J. Eq. 583, 75 Atl. 923, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 79. In that case Mr. Justice Garrison, speaking for the Court of Appeals, said that:

"It is well settled that, in cases where the right of a complainant to relief by the enforcement of a restrictive covenant is doubtful, 'to doubt is to deny.'"

The reasons for the rule, as pointed out in the opinion, are—first, because restrictions of the lawful uses of property are against common right; and, second, because restrictions, in the framing of which a subsequent purchaser has had no voice, ought to be so clear that by the acceptance of the deed that declares them he may reasonably be deemed to have understood and acceded to them. Howland v. Andrus, 81 N. J. Eq. 175, 86 Atl. 391.

The other grounds of complaint are that the noises and odors of a public garage will be a nuisance; that asphyxiating fumes from partially burnt gasoline will be dangerous to life, and that gasoline in large quantities, in the supply tanks and in the automobiles to be stored in the garage, will be an ever-present menace to life and property. These are all purely questions of fact. The burden of proof is upon the complainants, and is all the more difficult to sustain because the dangers are merely apprehended. The proofs must establish, clearly and satisfactorily, that the business of a public garage in the immediate vicinity of the complainants' property is of such a character as to necessarily produce the mischief which the court is called upon to prevent.

[2] The nuisance feature, of noises and odors, was not pressed in the argument. The danger to life from asphyxiating gases is negligible. In starting machines there sometimes occurs a backfire, due to gross neglect in cleaning, or to an excess of gas, in common parlance called too rich a mixture, which emits a fume, said to be poisonous, causing asphyxiation if inhaled in sufficient quantity. That a fatality may happen under favorable circumstances is possible, but it seldom occurs, and then only in closed quarters, where the gas is generated and discharged. Automobiles do not, of course, normally back-fire at starting, nor do all start out of a public garage at the same time; but suppose that in the usual course of daily trade the average mishaps, in this respect, take place, is it at all likely that the fumes would set up the grave danger the complainants apprehend? Experience does not confirm it, nor is it established by the proofs. Employees and others in and about garages suffer no serious inconveniences from the gas, although they come directly in contact with it, and far less is there possibility of harm to those in adjacent properties. Noisome fumes that escape from the building are taken up by the air, neutralized, and dissipated, so that there is little ground for alarm or fear that they will penetrate contiguous homes in such volume as to threaten health or life. The distance from the proposed garage to the complainants' hotels, 20 feet from the one and 68 feet from the other, gives ample clearing space and reasonable assurance against the danger causing the anxiety.

It remains to be considered whether the business is to be enjoined because of the danger from explosions. A public garage is not a nuisance per se, and the complainants do not contend that it is; they rest their right to relief expressly on the ground that the storing of large quantities of gasoline in tanks and in automobiles in the garage, in close proximity to their hotels, will subject them, their property, and their guests to an extraordinary hazard, to which they ought not to be obliged to submit. The principles upon which a court of equity acts in such a situation are informally discussed by Vice Chancellor Garrison in O'Hara v. Nelson, 71 N. J. Eq. 161, 629, 63 Atl. 836, and, were the circumstances the same, I would feel bound, authoritatively, by that case. There, upon a bill filed to enjoin a public garage, the keeper was restrained from filling automobiles inside the garage and from storing therein automobiles containing gasoline, on the ground of danger from explosions, in surroundings where the destruction of person and property would not nearly have approximated the damage that would ensue from a similar occurrence here. Whether a catastrophe would involve one or more persons or property of small or great value is, of course, beside the issue. An individual is as much entitled to protection as are communities. The question is whether, with reasonable care, a public garage can be conducted without danger of such a calamity. The learned Vice Chancellor, upon the facts before him, rules that it could not; but the evolution in the automobile field impels me to a different view. The inflammable and explosive properties of gasoline and its vapors, as described and compared with other explosives in the case cited, is borne out by the evidence before me, and need not be dwelt upon further; but an entirely different state of affairs exists to-day in the handling of gasoline as a garage commodity, and in its use as motive power of automobiles, than prevailed in 1906 when the O'Hara Case was decided. Such vast improvements have been made in both directions that the dangers at that time apprehended have been reduced to a minimum and the causes for alarm practically removed. The methods then employed are archaic now. Although only 12 years ago, the automobile was still in the formative and experimental stages, and as much an object of curiosity as the aeroplane is to-day. Then there were but 13,000 in this state; now there are 137,000, and over 7,000,000 in the United States. Then, in a day's trip of 50 miles, the operator often spent more time on his back than he did at the wheel; "chauffeur" was a word of uncertain pronunciation; kerosene was used in the lamps; the self-starter, demountable rims, electric lights, the racer and the truck, the luxurious limousine and the practical Ford, were either not conceived or in the birthing; and with all of these the development of the motor mechanism has kept stride, until it has about reached the point of perfection. Leakage of gasoline is the result of inexcusable carelessness, or the purest accident. The accumulation of grease and dirt is due to the sheerest neglect. In these deplorable circumstances, fire may occur from a short circuit of the electric appliance; but only when the insulation is worn off. Gasoline contained in the ordinarily well-constructed and well-kept automobile is comparatively as free from danger of explosion as steam in a boiler. The lurking danger in the one is external; in the other, internal. Both can be guarded against by proper attention and reasonable care. To require automobile tanks to be discharged before storing is impracticable and would close down the business. But if, perchance, an automobile should take fire in a garage, followed by an explosion of the tank, the danger would be local, confined to the machine or the immediate surroundings.

There is no evidence before me throwing light upon the force of an explosion of a 20-gallon tank, but my investigation satisfies me that it would not be so great as to do harm beyond the garage itself; and if this be so, and I have learned nothing to the contrary, the complainants are without footing. It is said of gasoline that as an explosive the danger is 10 times greater than gunpowder. Standard Oil Co. v. Tierney, 92 Ky. 367, 17 S. W. 1025, 14 L. R. A. 677, 36 Am. St. Rep. 595. Yes, in the abstract; but not in the automobile. We recline unconcernedly in touring cars over a tank of gasoline; but it would indeed be a reckless spirit who would ride over a can of gunpowder, smoking. Instances of explosions of automobile tanks while in garages are extremely rare and isolated. The infrequent explosions generally follow violent collisions. Destructive fires from that source are at least as uncommon as formerly were fires in livery stables, and they were not regarded as common-law nuisances on that score. The housing of from 75 to 100 machines in a public garage would, admittedly, multiply the risk; but that would call for increased attention and care, which is not to be assumed would not be forthcoming.

Now, as to the danger from the supply tanks: The prevailing practice of former days of filling automobiles was by decanting from open vessels, the danger from which, more than anything else, influenced the Vice Chancellor to grant the injunction in the O'Hara Case. This method has been abandoned. The tanks, sunk in the earth, either under the pavement or immediately inside of the door, are charged direct from the supply wagon, and automobiles are filled on the outside of the garage by an automatic measuring pump, through a hose. There is little or no escape of gas during either operation, and the chance of fire coming in contact with the supply tank is remote. This standard method, universally adopted as an economic as well as a safety measure, has long stood the test of reasonable assurance against explosion, and its capacity in that respect is no longer open to speculation. Granting that gasoline, unconfined, is inherently dangerous, so that the "greatest care is but the slightest assurance of safety," and that its explosive properties by far exceed those of gunpowder, it is not a permissible corollary that public garages are in the category of dangerous agencies to which powder magazines and nitroglycerine and T. N. T. plants belong.

In confirmation of the views I entertain that a public garage is not, of and in itself, a menace to contiguous life and property, and that whether it is a nuisance in fact depends upon the manner in which it is kept and the business conducted, I need only point to the myriad in operation throughout the land, erected in densely populated communities, amid and alongside hotels and hospitals, theaters and public buildings, and without casualty more than usual in ordinary trade and enterprise. Like in other towns, they are numerous in Ocean City, some in the business portion and others in the residential section of the complainants, surrounded by frame structures, private and quasi public, and with due care they have been managed for years without hurtful result to the adjacency. So free from danger is the automobile regarded that it is not uncommon practice to build a garage in the basement of dwellings. The residence adjoining the proposed garage is a sample. It may properly be said of public garages, as new institutions in our social and commercial life, as was once upon a time said concerning steam agencies:

"They are absolutely necessary to the progress of the community, and each member must suffer the incidental damage and liability to danger which arises from their nonnegligent use. They are not nuisances, if properly maintained and operated."

There was some evidence to support the complaint that a public garage would increase the complainants' fire insurance premiums and would also depreciate the value of their property. Mere diminution of the value of the property of the party complaining, by the nuisance, without irreparable mischief, will not furnish any foundation for equitable relief. Zabriskie v. Jersey City & Bergen Railroad Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 314; Morris & Essex Railroad Co. v. Prudden, 20 N. J. Eq. 530.

The bill will be dismissed, with costs.

TRIBUNE ASS'N v. SIMONDS et al. (No. 44/731.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. May 2, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §59—TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT—GROUNDS.

That news association syndicates the writings of one of its editors independent of the contract of employment does not justify the editor in resigning where he has acquiesced therein.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §7—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—TERMINATION.

A new verbal contract between a news association and one of its editors for war articles in the Sunday edition and for syndicating purposes held not to supersede a previous contract for editorial writing; it being independent, although of a kindred nature.

3. INJUNCTION §128—TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT—EVIDENCE.

In a suit by a news association to restrain one of its editorial writers from breaching his contract and working for another, evidence held to show that defendant was not justified in quitting his employment.

4. INJUNCTION §108 — PREREQUISITE TO SUIT—BREACH OF EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT.

Where an employé has left his employment without cause, his employer is not required, before suing, to enjoin him from working for another, to invite him to return, at least in the absence of showing by the employé that re-employment would be refused.

5. INJUNCTION §60—CONTRACT FOR SERVICES.

Where an editorial writer on war topics occupied a unique position because of great ability and knowledge, a news association with which he had a contract, and which had spent some $35,000 in exploiting him, could obtain injunction to prevent his breaking his contract by writing for others.

6. INJUNCTION §23 — GROUNDS — BALANCING OF INCONVENIENCES.

An injunction to restrain an employé from leaving his employment and working for another will not be refused because of the balancing of the inconveniences; such doctrine applying only to motions pendente lite.

7. INJUNCTION §24 — GROUNDS — PUBLIC POLICY.

An injunction to restrain an employé of a news association from breaching his contract and writing editorials for another association will not be denied because his articles inculcating patriotism will not be disseminated throughout the country; complainant's circulation being equally large.

Suit by the Tribune Association against Frank H. Simonds and the New York Herald Company for an injunction to restrain breach of contract. Injunction granted as to defendant Simonds, and denied as to defendant New York Herald.

Theodore Strong, of New Brunswick, and Sackett, Chapman & Stevens, of New York City, for complainant. Andrew Foulds, Jr., of Passaic, and Lemuel Quigg, of New York

City, for defendant Simonds. Andrew Foulds, Jr., of Passaic, and R. W. Candler, of New York City, for defendant New York Herald.

BACKES, V. O. I have very little trouble in reaching a conclusion as to the court's duty upon this application to restrain the defendants. The facts are not in dispute, and the principles of law applicable are not obscure. The motion is before me on bill and affidavits and proofs taken in open court, and presents this situation:

The defendant Frank H. Simonds entered into a written contract with the complainant, the Tribune Association, in January, 1915, to serve it for a period of four years as an editorial writer, and as such to have charge of the editorial page of the New York Tribune, and authority over the hours of labor and terms of employment of other editorial writers, subject only to the direction of the editor in chief and the assistant editor of the paper. As a part of his undertaking, Mr. Simonds covenanted that he "will not write for or contribute to any other publication or periodical during the term of this agreement, except that he shall have the right to contribute to monthly magazines or to weekly magazines, which are not to be published in connection with or as part of any newspaper." This covenant is sought to be enforced, or rather the effort is to restrain its breach.

After Mr. Simonds entered upon his employment, in August following, he made an additional agreement with the complainant to write war articles for the Sunday edition of the Tribune, which were to be syndicated, and for this he was to receive, as he says, $50 a week and a half of the profits of the syndication. Later the agreement was modified as to the compensation, whereby he was to receive $85 per article. He remained in the employ of the Tribune until January, 15, 1918, when he severed his connection as editorial writer, by a formal letter of resignation. In February he bargained with the McClure Syndicate to write war articles for a year, at the rate of $500 a week and a share of the profits of syndicating the articles when the profits reached the sum of $13,000. The McClure Syndicate has been syndicating Mr. Simonds' articles since February, gradually increasing its subscribers, until they now number 73 newspapers, distributed throughout the United States, of which the defendant The New York Herald is one. Mr. Simonds is manifestly violating his covenant, unless it is made to appear that his contract of employment is at an end, by a mutual rescission, which, of course, is not pretended, or that he is absolved from a further performance because of such violation of the contract by the Tribune Association, as evinced an intention not to be further bound by its terms, or, because of such misconduct of the association, inimical to the relation of master and servant, as to make further performance on the part of Mr. Simonds reasonably impossible. That there were such violations and misconduct and that Mr. Simonds was justified in not continuing under the circumstances is the substantial defense put forward and upon which I think the case must turn.

Before disposing of this question, I want to first make mention of two preliminary matters: One suggested, rather than urged, as a violation of the contract on the part of the complainant; the other, which has been pressed with considerable force, that the contract of employment is no longer in existence, having been superseded by a later one which has come to an end according to its terms.

[1] The first is that shortly after Mr. Simonds contracted with the Tribune, in April, 1915, the Tribune Association began syndicating his editorial writings, and continued to do so throughout the term of his service. While this may not have been a part of the arrangement, it does appear that he at all times acquiesced, and I fail to see how it can now be seized upon as having violated his rights; and I may add that it is not assigned by him, nor by his counsel, as having prompted him to quit his contract in January of this year. It had nothing at all to do with it.

[2] The other relates to the verbal contract of 1915, for contributions of war articles to the Sunday edition of the paper and for syndicating purposes. It is claimed that this was a new and superseding contract. It was a new contract, but as such it was distinct and independent of the existing one and in no respect took its place. The written contract involved the services of Mr. Simonds as an associate editor of the Tribune, while the verbal bargain was for another, though kindred, service, for which he was paid additional compensation. The written agreement was for a fixed term, while the oral agreement was indeterminate, being terminable on a two weeks' notice, and in fact it survived Mr. Simonds' resignation. He at no time treated it as altering or taking the place of the editorship contract, for, even after he resigned as editor, he continued to furnish copy for the Sunday syndicate articles, and he stopped writing them only after giving the stipulated notice. Now, the performance of the two contracts is entirely another matter. The subject of the two, it is true, was of the same general character—Mr. Simonds' observations on current war conditions—and the work on the Sunday syndicate contract, it was agreed, was to be permitted to take as much of Mr. Simonds' time from his editorial duties as was necessary; in other words, it was to be done in connection with it as an adjunct to it but this it cannot be said affected the two contracts as independent undertakings. Now, to return to the argument: The insistence is that, the written contract having been superseded by the verbal contract, and that inasmuch as the latter provided for a termination upon two weeks' notice, which has been given, Mr. Simonds is free. But, as the argument is built upon a faulty premise, it must fall of its own weight.

I will then take up the causes that led to the break. Mr. Simonds was with the Tribune for three years, and as we read his complaint, there were two specific matters, and two only, that caused him to abandon his employer, and upon which he rests his refusal to further live up to his contract. Without particularizing in his answering affidavit, he speaks of disagreements from time to time, but he specifically adverts to but two matters. One was a difference of views as to the treatment, editorially, of last winter's coal situation, in connection with the shutting down of breweries and moving picture houses; and the other was over the preferential placement of an editorial upon the Colgate soap litigation to that of an editorial tribute to the late Congressman Gardner. These two brought on the acute situation that led to Mr. Simonds' resignation, so far as his affidavit discloses details. But we are supplied with particulars of other instances, which perhaps Mr. Simonds had in mind as having caused friction, by the testimony of Mr. Rogers, the vice president of the association, and one of its managers. Mr. Rogers speaks of an occasion early in the war when Mr. Simonds thought it wise policy that the Tribune advocate an embargo upon shipments to the Allies. There was some discussion and disagreement of views, but the matter was settled amicably. There were other differences. Mr. Simonds questioned the advisability of publishing reports concerning the conduct of our soldiers abroad, and criticized the publication of a Milan dispatch relating to war conditions, which may have been unfounded in fact, and there may have been some more, but they were all of matters upon which honest minds differed and which reasonable men adjust. In the course of the argument counsel said that Mr. Simonds was constantly irritated; that Mr. Garret, one of the associate editors, constantly, so to speak, stuck pins into Mr. Simonds; but it seems to me that another metaphor would have been more appropriate, that Mr. Simonds was the magnet that drew the pins towards him. There is not a scintilla of evidence in the case that warranted the statement; on the contrary, the truth is that the entire managerial and editorial staff, including Mr. Ogden Reid, the editor in chief, and, as I understand, proprietor, or a member of the family that owns the paper, treated him with the utmost courtesy and consideration. They deferred to him, they humored him, and, as aptly said by counsel, they "nursed him." There is nothing in the affidavits disclosing that his judgment did not prevail whenever he asserted himself, subject to the direction of the editor in chief and the assistant editor. There were, of course, disagreements between Mr. Simonds and some of the other members of the large staff of this influential newspaper, but they all arose from an honest expression of views, which, it would seem, Mr. Simonds could not always tolerate without irritation. Mr. Simonds is highly temperamental, an attribute of genius, and much, if not all, of the trouble arose from his temperamental indulgences. But this condition furnishes no valid excuse for his rash act, for, when the Tribune engaged him, it hired him for his editorial qualities minus his temperamental tendencies, which he should have repressed. However, the staff, generally appreciated his ability as a war observer and writer, and from time to time smoothed matters over, so that it may be said that past differences had very slight, or no, bearing upon the causes that provoked him to quit. This brings us to what I have called the acute-stage.

It seems an editorial had been prepared in which the coal situation was discussed in connection with the closing of breweries and moving picture houses. This was submitted to Mr. Simonds, who suggested that the subjects should not be combined, and that the importance of the coal situation demanded a separate discussion, and that it should not be subordinate to the less important subject of closing breweries and moving picture houses, and he asked Mr. Garret to write another in its place. There was no attempt made whatever to control Mr. Simonds' judgment. It was deferred to, and the article was not published. The next day Mr. Rogers and Mr. Garret stepped into Mr. Simonds' room to further discuss the matter with him. Mr. Simonds requested Mr. Garret to leave, and reproached Mr. Rogers for treating him as a servant and humiliating him in the presence of Mr. Garret, and announced that he was through and that he was going to quit. His grievance was purely fancied, and his resolution was unjust. Mr. Rogers considerably asked him to reserve final action until they could talk it over later, which he promised to do. Then quickly followed the second incident, which Mr. Simonds now says determined him in leaving. During the day an editorial had been written commenting on the Colgate soap litigation, which was to be the leader in the next day's issue. In the course of the afternoon word came of the death of Congressman Gardner, and one was written paying him tribute, which Mr. Simonds directed should be the leading editorial. In the next morning's issue the Colgate editorial had first place. The written resignation immediately followed. Now, it is clearly proved that there was no intention upon the part of any one to disobey Mr. Simonds' directions. In fact, the effort was to comply with his orders. The transposition of the editorials was clearly due to a misunderstanding of orders, but Mr. Simonds did not stop to inquire, and without more he sent in his resignation. No sensible man would say that these trivial circumstances, as they have been disclosed by the affidavits, justified Mr. Simonds in severing his connection. He was oversensitive, and he possibly fancied that he was being overridden by some one else, but a sensible man would have inquired and investigated and put the blame where it belonged; he would not have thought himself injured to the point of resigning. Had he inquired, he would readily have discovered that the transposition of the editorials was the result of a misunderstanding, and not of disobedience of his orders.

[3] I find that the rupture was not brought about by the employer, and that the servant was not justified in quitting his service.

Now, as to the remedy: Counsel has advanced several reasons why this court should not interfere.

[4] The first is that the complainant has not offered to reinstate Mr. Simonds, and that without this, and to restrain him in the language of the covenant, would be against public policy. To be more precise, to restrain him would be to deprive him of making a living and the public at large of the benefits and advantages of his talents, to the injury of the public. It may be that this rule of public policy would prevail if it affirmatively appeared that the Tribune refused to restore Mr. Simonds to his position. I doubt very much that equity would extend its aid if in doing so the result would be that Mr. Simonds would be prevented from following his vocation, and I say here that, if an injunction goes against him, and he offers in good faith to return, and the Tribune declines to receive him, the injunction will be forthwith dissolved. But I know of no rule of law that called upon the complainant to invite Mr. Simonds to return to his labors before seeking the aid of the court to restrain him from breaching his contract, nor of any rule of pleading that requires an assertion of such an offer before equity will intervene. The maxim that "He who seeks equity must do equity" is not applicable as a matter of pleading. In circumstances like the present, where the servant left his employment without cause, it is his duty to return without invitation, and the presumption is that upon an application of this kind the complainant intends to fulfill its part of the contract. However this may be, when the point was raised in the course of the argument, leave was given to amend the bill by inserting a formal invitation to Mr. Simonds to return to his employment, and thereupon, when asked of counsel whether he would avail himself of it, there came an equivocal answer. So that point is out of the case.

[5] A second reason argued for withholding relief is that the complainant has suffered no irreparable injury. When the Tribune engaged Mr. Simonds in 1915, he had already an enviable reputation as an editorial writer, and especially upon topics concerning the present world war. To more intimately familiarize himself with conditions and to enable him to write with a keener knowledge of affairs, the Tribune sent him to the seat of war, at an expense of $6,000, and in all has spent some $35,000 in exploiting him, so that to-day he occupies a unique position among war observers, and is one of the foremost and interesting writers upon that subject. His great capacity lies in his simplicity of description. He paints his word pictures so plainly that the ordinary reader may visualize the movements of the armies, and the entire local situation, and his broad and intimate knowledge of the subject insures confidence. In these respects his position among writers is unique. It seems to me it cannot be denied that by the loss of his talents, which were developed by the Tribune, and by the loss to it of his reputation, which that paper advanced at great outlay of money, serious damage has resulted. The Tribune has retained another famous war observer of international reputation, a Mr. Beloc, to fill the position Mr. Simonds occupied, but this is no answer to the charge that it has suffered irreparable injury by the loss of Mr. Simonds' services. Nor is the demonstration that the Tribune's circulation did not decrease, nor the Herald's circulation increase, after he changed his operations from the one to the other, proof that the complainant has not suffered loss. That is not at all a fair test. The test is: How much greater would the Tribune's income have been had Mr. Simonds remained with it? Upon the conclusion that I have reached that Mr. Simonds breached his covenant, the complainant could undoubtedly recover a judgment at law for a money damage, but what would that money damage be? How could it be established? How could it be ascertained, with any fair degree of certainty? For such an injury the legal machinery furnishes no adequate means of measuring the damage, and in such an event equity steps in to prevent the damage from becoming irreparable. This case presents a situation entirely different from the ordinary breach of a contract, where the injured party may go into the open market and supply his wants, and where the difference in cost measures the damage. Here the services engaged were of a peculiar character, and for the loss of which the damages are unmeasurable at law, and hence the preventive remedy.

[6] I am asked further not to grant an injunction, because of what is called the balancing of the inconveniences on a motion pendente lite. I may say it is only upon a motion of this kind that that doctrine is applied. Upon final hearing equity courts enjoin according to the right of the parties regardless of the inconveniences. Now, as we have seen, the Tribune is entitled under its contract to the services of Mr. Simonds and the profits it would have enjoyed had he remained in its service. In the protection of these rights the Tribune is entitled to the aid of this court in so far as this court can afford protection. It, of course, cannot compel Mr. Simonds to labor for his employer, but it can restrain him from giving the benefit and advantage of his services, and the resulting profits, to another. Then, if the equities are with the complainant, why should this protection be withheld to the advantage of the transgressors? Because to enjoin Mr. Simonds would deprive him of greater income than he received from the Tribune, or because to do so would prevent the McClure Syndicate from reaping large profits from the labors of Mr. Simonds, which otherwise would belong to the Tribune? Certainly not. Mr. Simonds' circumstance is due to his ill-advised course, and the McClure Syndicate is not an innocent victim of the situation in which it now finds itself. It is true that since February, when Mr. Simonds agreed to write for the Syndicate, it has gradually increased its circulation, until its income now is at the rate of $50,000 a year, but this apparently affluent condition was attained at the expense of the Tribune, and doubtless with full knowledge of the rights of the complainant; for it appears in the contract entered into between Mr. Simonds and the Syndicate it was stipulated:

"It is mutually agreed that in the event that any court of competent jurisdiction shall at any time during the period of the contract herein lawfully restrain the writer from writing, or the Syndicate from publishing the writings that are the subject of this contract, then and in that event, and during the period of the lawful obedience of either or both parties hereto to the said court's lawful orders, no action shall lie by either of the parties hereto against the other, and no claim of duty or damage be made by either party against the other by reason of either due and lawful observance of the said court's orders."

By that stipulation it would seem that Mr. Simonds and the McClure Syndicate knew or suspected the insecure footing of Mr. Simonds and contemplated or anticipated the present litigation. Now, as I have said, the only loss that Mr. Simonds can sustain is the increased compensation, and that of the McClure Syndicate its profits, and all derived through Mr. Simonds' illegal conduct and at the expense of the complainant. It does not appear that the Syndicate bound itself to furnish to its subscribers, for any fixed time, Mr. Simonds' articles, and that an injunction would entail further damage for breach of such contracts. But, even if this were so, I do not see how the injury to Mr. Simonds and the Syndicate, which they brought upon themselves, could equitably countervail the damages sustained by the complainant, or which will result to it, if relief be denied. In fact, I cannot see how the interest of the Syndicate can at all be, or should be, considered upon this motion. At any rate, the inconveniences do not counterbalance those of the complainant, and a restraint cannot be denied on this score.

[7] Lastly, the court is called upon to exercise its discretion in the interest of patriotism, because, as counsel said:

"The loss to the world of Mr. Simonds' articles would be equal to that of the Huns entering Paris."

This is rather extravagant, but I accept it as an expression of counsel's appraisal of Mr. Simonds' ability. If there were no other means of disseminating the views of Mr. Simonds among the people of the United States concerning the present war situation than the McClure Syndicate, and a restraint upon its distribution would affect the interest of the American propaganda, there would be much force in the argument. If the McClure Syndicate were the only one in this country that could reach the 5,000,000 to 15,000,000 readers, as counsel states it does, the court would long hesitate before acting; for the court fully recognizes its duty and the obligation of the individual, in a crisis like the present, to submit to the public good; but the medium of the New York Tribune is just as efficient in disseminating such news. It had subscribers to its syndicated articles to the number of 200, and it stands ready to distribute as broadcast as any other syndicate the contributions of Mr. Simonds to the welfare of the people, and to aid the United States in the winning of the war.

If I should deny an injunction, the medium of dissemination would be the McClure Syndicate; if I grant it, I simply change the medium; and if the world loses the talents of Mr. Simonds and his genius and his efforts, the sin of omission will be upon his shoulders, and not upon those of the complainant.

I will grant an injunction in the language of the covenant, "that the said Frank H. Simonds be and he is hereby restrained from writing for or contributing to any other publication other than the New York Tribune," etc.

The motion to restrain the New York Herald will be denied.

O'NEIL et al. v. MANUFACTURERS' NAT. BANK.

1. BANKS AND BANKING—§183—DISCOUNTED NOTES—PAYMENT—FORGED RENEWAL NOTES.

Where bank discounted note for payee, and upon each partial payment by payee upon the indebtedness a forged renewal note for balance was given bank, the forged notes, being mere pieces of paper, in no wise affected liability of original maker as evidenced by original note, which liability continued until indebtedness so evidenced was paid or discharged.

2. BANKS AND BANKING ¶183—DISCOUNTED NOTE—LIABILITY OF MAKER TO HOLDER.

Where note was discounted by bank for payee, the maker became primarily liable to the bank.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1071(6)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—COURT'S MARKING OF PARAGRAPHS IN FINDING.

Court's inadvertence in marking a paragraph of defendant's draft finding as "Not proven" did not affect the substantial merits of the case, although in irreconcilable conflict with counter finding and finding as made marked "Proven," where the paragraph involved the existence of an indebtedness over which there was no conflict.

4. BILLS AND NOTES ¶434—PAYMENT UNDER MISTAKE—FORGED RENEWAL NOTE.

Where note is discounted by bank for payee, who makes partial payments to bank upon the indebtedness, and upon each payment gives bank a forged renewal note for balance, the maker, after paying balance due, as evidenced by a forged renewal note, cannot recover from bank the amount paid, upon discovering renewal note was forged; the maker being liable to bank on original note for such amount.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶230—WAIVER—DELAY IN OBJECTING.

Where defendant failed to present in its request for a finding any question of law which it desired to have reviewed, plaintiff, by failing to refer to omission when court made its findings, and permitting case to reach the argument upon appeal without objecting thereto, waived the objection.

Prentice, O. J., and Beach, J., dissenting.

Appeal from District Court of Waterbury; Walter D. Makepeace, Judge.

Action by William O'Neil and another against the Manufacturers' National Bank. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment for defendant.

James J. O'Keefe discounted at defendant bank a note for $400, dated June 14, 1906, and payable two months after date, made by William O'Neil to him as payee, and indorsed by him and Dan O'Neil. Partial payments were made by O'Keefe upon this indebtedness, and with each payment the bank took from O'Keefe a note for the amount of the unpaid balance upon the preceding note, which in each case purported to be made by William O'Neil and indorsed by said Dan O'Neil and himself. On February 28, 1907, this indebtedness had been reduced to $150, and a note for this sum purported to be made by William O'Neil to James O'Keefe as payee, and, indorsed by said O'Keefe and Dan O'Neil, discounted by the defendant bank. The bank received each of said notes from O'Keefe as payments for the preceding note without presentment or notification to William O'Neil or Dan O'Neil, and either canceled or surrendered to O'Keefe each said preceding note. The names of said William O'Neil and Dan O'Neil, on each of these notes except the original note of $400, were a forgery and each of these notes, except the original note of $400, was executed by O'Keefe without the knowledge of either William or Dan O'Neil. On April 30, 1917, William O'Neil received notice that the note for $150 was due, and he paid the same to the defendant bank. The signature of William O'Neil upon said note bears no resemblance to his real signature. The defendant bank negligently accepted each of the notes with forged names thereon in partial satisfaction of the preceding note. On the same day he paid this note William O'Neil discovered that his name on this note was forged, and demanded from defendant repayment, but this defendant refused.

WHEELER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The defendant bank was a holder of the original note in due course. From time to time a payment was made the bank upon its indebtedness, and a new note given the bank for what then remained due upon the original debt. The notes given subsequent to the original notes were forgeries as to the names of the maker, William O'Neil, and the indorser, Dan O'Neil. These forged notes cannot be held to have ever paid in full or in part the original indebtedness. They were mere pieces of paper, in no wise affecting the liability of the original maker to the bank. His liability to the bank was evidenced by the original note, and until the indebtedness so evidenced was paid or discharged it continued.

[2] As we read the finding, it is that $150 of this original indebtedness was represented by the last forged note, and was due and unpaid at the time of trial. It must follow that the maker of the original note is still liable for this indebtedness, unless the defendant bank has discharged him from liability directly or by its course of conduct. The finding shows that there has been no direct discharge. The claim is made that the defendant bank, by negligently accepting this forged paper, has prejudiced the rights of the maker by preventing his successful action over against O'Keefe, the payee. The facts found do not support this claim. The maker was primarily liable to the bank, and, so far as we know, he has no action over against the payee, O'Keefe.

[3] The appellee presses upon us his contention that there is a serious and irreconcilable conflict between the paragraphs of the draft and counter finding, as marked "Proven" and "Not proven," and the finding as made. It is quite true that there is some conflict, arising, we presume, through inadvertence of the trial court, in the marking of these paragraphs. But we do not think this conflict affects the substantial merits of the case. The appellee correctly interprets the situation; the defendant's case does depend upon the finding of the existence of an obligation arising at the time of the making of the original note for $400, but on the immediate point of the existence of the obligation there is no conflict. The trial court marked "Not proven" the paragraphs specifying the existence of an obligation on the part of the plaintiffs, who were not only the maker, but O'Keefe, the payee and indorser, as well. In all probability the trial court had in mind the fact that the liability of O'Keefe as indorser upon the original note no longer existed, since he received no notice of protest of this note while the liability of the maker, William O'Neill, continued. He was under no obligation to pay the forged note for $150, and it is clear that he paid it under a mistake. It does not follow that he is entitled to recover the sum paid. At this time he in fact owed the bank the sum which this note purported to represent.

[4] A condition precedent to the recovery of money paid by mistake is a finding that the receiver ought not in good conscience to retain it. The circumstances surrounding this payment do not make such a finding permissible. Mansfield v. Lynch, 59 Conn. 327, 22 Atl. 313, 12 L. R. A. 285. Since this amount is due on the indebtedness evidenced by the original note the bank may at any time recover it. The folly of compelling the bank in this action to repay the maker the $150 paid on the forged note, and immediately pay back to the bank the same sum, is apparent. The injustice of penalizing the bank with a bill of costs and the vexation and cost of maintaining another action indicate the injustice of compelling it to now return the sum received upon the forged note. The plaintiff William O'Neill has not suffered through the acceptance of this forged note by the bank, nor by his payment of the face of the note, since his payment liquidated his indebtedness due the bank, created at the time of the making of the original note.

[5] The appellee claims that the appeal should be dismissed, because the defendant failed to present in his request for a finding any questions of law which it desired to have reviewed. The trial court has made its finding without reference to this omission by the appellee, and he has permitted the case to reach the argument upon the merits of the appeal before raising the point. It is a sufficient answer to the claim to point out that it is too late to make it.

There is error. The cause is remanded, with direction to enter judgment for costs in favor of the defendant. The other judges concurred, except PRENTICE, C. J., and BEACH, J., who dissented.

NEW HAVEN BANK NAT. BANKING ASS'N v. JORDAN CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.
July 23, 1918.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES ~~§~~360—RENEWALS OF NOTES.

A renewal note is a new and independent contract, and the holder thereof is prima facie a holder in due course; the relation of the parties being in no way changed.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ~~§~~379—ACCOMMODATION INDORSERS—LIABILITY.

Accommodation indorsers on notes are liable to the holder, even if the holder knows that they are accommodation indorsers.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ~~§~~379—RENEWALS—LIABILITY OF INDORSERS.

Knowledge of the holder of a renewal note that the several indorsers expected other accommodating parties, who indorsed the initial note, to indorse, did not release the actual indorsers.

4. BILLS AND NOTES ~~§~~360—INDORSERS—LIABILITY.

The liability of indorsers to the holder of a note is not affected by any agreement between the indorsers not appearing upon the note.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; Donald T. Warner, Judge.

Action by the New Haven Bank National Banking Association against the Jordan Company and others. Demurrer to the answer was sustained, and defendants appeal. No error.

In an action against the defendants as maker and indorsers of a promissory note, the defendants other than the maker of the note filed answers admitting the execution of the instrument and due notice of nonpayment, and set up in substance the following: That the note in suit was a renewal note, the first being dated the 10th of May, 1916, the next the 10th of July, 1916, the third the 11th of October, 1916, and the note in suit the 11th of January, 1917. That the note of the 10th of May, 1916, was also indorsed by one B. M. Hibbard. That Hibbard died solvent between May 10 and July 10, 1916, and that administration was granted on his estate before July 10, 1916, and that plaintiff knew it before that date. That each of the notes of July 10th, October 11th, and January 11th, and others for the same obligation which antedated them, was negotiated by the maker with and discounted by the plaintiff, for the maker's use, and that the defendants, understanding that said notes were renewals, indorsed each of them in the reasonable belief and expectation that the estate of Hibbard would, with defendants, indorse the same before the plaintiff would discount them for the maker. That the defendant knew, or should have known, that the several notes took place of the old notes, and that plaintiff took the note of July 10, 1916, without the indorsement of Hibbard's estate, and without informing the defendants, and that the plaintiff, without informing defendants, delivered the note of May 10th to some unknown person, who delivered the same to the Hibbard estate, and that the plaintiff took no steps to hold the Hibbard estate liable for the indorsement of Hibbard on the note of May 10th, and that the Hibbard estate now has possession of said note of May 10th, and claims to be free from all liability because of the same. The plaintiff demurred to the answer, and the superior court sustained the demurrer.

SHUMWAY, J. (after stating the facts as above). The holder of the note is on the pleadings prima facie a holder in due course, and the indorsers, contesting their liability, in order to prevail, must allege and have the burden of proving at least one of the following facts: That the note was not complete and regular on its face. That the plaintiff did not become the holder of the note before it was overdue. That the plaintiff did not take the note in good faith and for value. That the plaintiff, at the time the note was negotiated to it, had notice of some infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it. Negotiable Instruments Act (Laws 1897, c. 74).

[1-3] The defendants' answer will be searched in vain to find any such allegation or its equivalent. The averment that the note in question was a renewal of a note for like amount does not change the relation or liability of the parties in any particular. Indeed, the law knows no "renewed negotiable note," though that term is often used to denote a transaction wherein a note is used to pay and discharge a prior note of like tenor, without the payment it may be of any money. But, however, the holder of such a note is the holder in due course. The contract is a new and independent one, and does not differ from the one implied in law upon the initial note. The defendants have alleged that the plaintiff surrendered a note bearing date May 10, 1916, made by the Jordan Company, and indorsed by these other defendants, with one B. M. Hibbard, and that Hibbard's indorsement was prior to that of the defendants O'Brien and Stone, and the defendants indorsed the note in suit in the expectation that the Hibbard estate would also become an indorser. The expectation on the part of the other indorsers that some representative of the Hibbard estate would indorse it is not a sufficient defense to this action. That fact does not constitute any infirmity in the note, or defect in the title of the one negotiating it. A note in the form of this one is negotiated when it is indorsed and delivered by any holder to the transferee, and it makes no difference that the indorser is an accommodating party, so far as affecting the liability of such indorsers to the holder in due course. Even if such holder knows that one or all of the indorsers are accommodating indorsers, that does not change the indorser's liability. So, also, mere knowledge or reasonable belief on the part of the holder of the note that the several indorsers expected other accommodating parties to indorse it, even if the expectation is not realized cannot relieve the other indorsers of their obligation.

[4] The liability of the indorsers to the holder of the note is not affected by any agreement among the indorsers not appearing upon the note; therefore the right of co-sureties to a contribution or the effect of the release of one surety upon the obligations of the others has no application in the case now before the court, whatever may be the rights and liabilities of the indorsers as between themselves.

There is no error. The other Judges concurred.

SACHS v. NUSSENBAUM et al.

July 28, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 77(1)—ORDERS APPEALABLE—"INDEPENDENT PROCEEDING"—"FINAL JUDGMENT."

An application under Gen. St. 1902, \S 857, to secure the reduction or dissolution of an attachment of real estate is an "independent proceeding," and the disposition of the application is a "final judgment" within Gen. St. 1902, \S 807, allowing appeals therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Final Decree or Judgment.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 842(1)—ORDERS APPEALABLE—QUESTION OF LAW.

Proceedings under Gen. St. 1902, \S 857, 858, for relief where attachments are alleged to be excessive, rarely present appealable questions because usually involving question of fact only, but an order may be based upon a decision in a matter of law as, for example, the question whether the judge has exceeded his authority.

3. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY \S 155—ACTIONS ON BOND—PLEADING.

A complaint in an action on a bond is insufficient as against the surety unless it shows that a condition precedent to liability has been satisfied.

4. ATTACHMENT \S 250—PROCEEDINGS TO REDUCE AMOUNT.

On application under Gen. St. 1902, \S 857, to secure the reduction of an attachment, the judge cannot examine the complaint to test its sufficiency to state a cause of action as against any defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fairfield County; William M. Maltbie, Judge.

Application under Gen. St. \S 857, by the defendants in an action by Barnith Sachs against Jennie Nussenbaum and another to secure the reduction or dissolution of an attachment of real estate. From a judgment dissolving the attachment as to the real estate of one of the defendants, plaintiff appeals. Error, and order of dissolution set aside.

Jennie Nussenbaum and Fanny Silverman are, respectively, principal and surety upon a bond given to the appellant December 20, 1917, pursuant to a judicial order and in substitution for a mechanic's lien for $8,300 filed by him against the property of the principal obligor which was thereupon dissolved. The condition of the bond, after reciting the nature, existence, and amount of the lien, proceeds as follows:

"Now, therefore, if the said Nussenbaum shall pay or cause to be paid to Barnith Sachs or his assigns any judgment that may be rendered against her by any court of competent jurisdiction not exceeding the amount of $8,300, the amount claimed under the lien with interest and costs, on demand, then this bond shall be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect."

On December 31, 1917, Sachs instituted an action against the obligors on the bond, both principal and surety. The complaint set out the existence of the lien, its dissolution, and the substitution therefor of the bond in suit pursuant to an order of Judge Curtis. Judgment was asked (1) upon the bond in such an amount as the court might adjudge to have been secured by the lien with interest and costs and (2) for $10,000 damages. In this action real estate of both defendants was attached. They thereupon brought an application under section 857 of the General Statutes to Judge Maltbie, and pursuant to that application the plaintiff was summoned to appear before him as prescribed in the statute and for the purposes therein specified. He appeared and after a hearing Judge Maltbie ordered that the attachment, in so far as it concerned the property of Jennie Nussenbaum, stand as made and that the attachment made of the property of the defendant Silverman be dissolved for the reason, in substance, that no apparent claim against her was stated in the complaint since she could not be made liable until a court had determined the amount secured by the lien and there had been a failure to pay it. The plaintiff, desiring to appeal from the order in so far as it directed the dissolution of the Silverman attachment, requested Judge Maltbie to make a finding of facts. The appellees thereupon filed their objections to compliance with such request claiming that no appeal would lie from the order. The objections were overruled, a finding made, and thereafter this appeal taken.

PRENTICE, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] On the threshold of this case we are met with the question of this court's jurisdiction raised by the appellee's objections to the allowance of an appeal from the order of dissolution. They then insisted, and now insist, that our statute authorizes no appeal from such orders. The statute governing the situation presented is section 807 of the General Statutes. It is there provided that:

"When the jurisdiction of any matter or proceeding is or shall be vested in a judge of the superior court * * * any party to such matter or proceeding who feels aggrieved by any of the decisions or rulings of such judge upon any questions of law arising therein, may appeal from the final judgment of said judge in such matter or proceeding, in the manner hereinbefore provided for an appeal from the judgments of said courts respectively, to the Supreme Court of Errors," etc.

Two conditions are thus fixed as conditions precedent to the right of appeal, to wit: First, that final judgment in such matter or proceeding has been rendered; and, second, that the judge has made a ruling or decision involving a question of law.

The proceeding before Judge Maltbie was one seeking relief from a claimed excessive attachment made in an action brought to the superior court. As such, jurisdiction over it was confined to a judge of that court. Rev. Gen. Stat. § 857. The court in which the action in connection with which the attachment was made was without power to act in the matter, and under the statute could not be given such power. The proceedings before Judge Maltbie were therefore not only in fact and form but also of necessity entirely independent of that action and not incidental to it. It began with the bringing of the application and ended with the order of dissolution. When that order was made, the matter was at an end, and the proceeding and parties were, save for the possibility of appeal, out of court. The order could not be regarded as in any sense an interlocutory one made in progress of the pending suit. That progress was not concerned with or in any way affected by it. The order made final disposition of a judicial or quasi judicial proceeding authorized by statute, and therefore was a "final judgment" within the meaning of our statutes regulating appeals. Barber v. International Co., 74 Conn. 652, 657, 51 Atl. 857, 92 Am. St. Rep. 246; Bunnell v. Iron Bridge Co., 66 Conn. 26, 37, 33 Atl. 533; Fayerweather v. Monson, 61 Conn. 431, 440, 23 Atl. 878.

[2] It is evident from a reading of section 857 and the following section that proceedings for relief in cases where attachments have been made which are alleged to be excessive will rarely present an appealable question. From the limited nature of the issue they present, the order made in them must in the great majority of cases involve the determination of questions of fact only and be conclusive. By possibility, however, the order may be based upon or involve a decision in a matter of law; as, for example, one as to the extent of the authority conferred upon the judge and as to whether that authority has not been exceeded. That is the situation in the present case as the appellant presents it.

[3] While the reasons of appeal call in question the judge's power to do what he did, they do not in terms state the appellant's real grievance. Upon the face of their statement they appear to rest upon the proposition that the judge erred in concluding upon an examination of the complaint that the action, in so far as it concerned the defendant Silverman, was prematurely brought and that no judgment thereon under the facts disclosed could be obtained against her. Had it been open to the judge to pass upon the sufficiency of the complaint, we could not agree that his action was erroneous, as claimed by the appellant. The surety's obligation to the plaintiff was one solely on the bond which he signed. The extent of it was fixed by its terms and cannot be enlarged. Those terms create a condition precedent to her liability. The complaint fails to show that that condition had been satisfied. It was therefore insufficient to support a judgment against her.

[4] But that by no means ends the matter nor exhausts the question of power to which the plaintiff has appealed although not aptly. His real grievance, if he has one, arises from the fact that the judge in the exercise of the power conferred upon him by the statute did not limit himself to an inquiry as to whether or not the attachment made was excessive, in that the value of the property attached exceeded the plaintiff's apparent claim, but went further and subjected the complaint to an examination as upon demurrer to discover whether or not it stated a good cause of action against the applicants and whether or not in his opinion a judgment could be rendered against them in the action brought, and made his order upon his conclusion reached after such examination. This possible grievance underlies those set out in terms in the reasons of appeal and may fairly be said to be involved in them.

The statute, which prescribes the duty and power of the judge to whom applications for relief from excessive attachments are made, defines the conditions under which such relief may be given by him thereon. Those conditions are that the value of the property attached so far exceeds the plaintiff's apparent claim as to be excessive. When it is remembered that the application for relief is not to be made to the court having jurisdiction of the action to which the attachment is incidental or for that matter to any court, but to a judge sitting in chambers and powerless to adjudicate in the cause which is not before him, and when the long-accepted liberal policy of this state in the matter of attachments is borne in mind, there can be no doubt as to the meaning and intent of the language which the statute employs and as to the scope of the authority thereby conferred.

ing the basis of his action, is limited to a comparison between the value of the property attached and the plaintiff's apparent claim. In arriving at the amount of this apparent claim, the judge is authorized to summon the plaintiff before him and call upon him to state under oath what its amount is, that he believes it to be justly due, and to furnish a bill of particulars or circumstantial statement of it. Doubtless he is also vested with authority to so far take cognizance of the complaint in the action as to inform himself not only of the demand for damages therein but also of the extent of the recovery which the plaintiff seeks and claims. In these ways he may seek to gain a true measure of the plaintiff's claim as it really is. But that is a very different thing from making a judicial examination of the complaint to test its sufficiency as a statement of a cause of action. That is for the court before which the action is pending to do in proper course, if so required. The office of the judge before whom the application is pending is to discover the amount of the plaintiff's apparent claim, and not to pass upon its legal validity or to weigh the chances of recovery upon it. Our statutes of long standing permit one who, however mistakenly, claims that he has a right of action against another, to institute an action against him and as ancillary to that action to make an attachment to secure his recovery. The validity of the claim made is left for the determination of the court. Until that determination is made the attachment may not be attacked upon the ground that the plaintiff has failed to state a claim which will stand the test which, in the course of the progress of the action, will be applied to it.

The language of section 858 furnishes a striking indication that the dissolution of an attachment for the weakness of the plaintiff's claim upon which he is seeking recovery was not within the legislative contemplation. It assumes that the plaintiff has an apparent claim, and the redress provided for is such release of attached property as will prevent the value of the property attached being so much in excess of that claim as to render it excessive. There is no suggestion of a discharge by the judge of an attachment in its entirety which would be the only logical relief if it was intended to afford relief in cases where the legal insufficiency or invalidity of the plaintiff's claim was disclosed upon the pleadings. Dissolution is provided for only in the event that the attaching creditor fails to appear in response to the citation to him. Under all other conditions it is the reduction of the attachment or release of a portion of the attached property which is spoken of.

A cogent reason in support of the limited provisions of the statute is to be found in the harsh consequences which might readily follow if attachments might be dissolved for no other cause than that the plaintiff's attorney had failed to draft a good complaint, or one which the judge mistakenly considered insumcient. These consequences are too apparent to justify specific enumeration.

In the present proceeding, Judge Maltbie did not dissolve the attachment against the surety's property, for the reason that he found it excessive as being for an amount unreasonably large to secure the judgment against her which the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to or which might properly be rendered against her if the facts set out in the complaint would under the law sanction a recovery, but on the sole ground that an examination of the allegations of the complaint convinced him that the plaintiff could not have judgment for any amount against the defendant Silverman. In so doing he acted in excess of his powers.

There is error in so much of the order as dissolves the attachment made of the property of the applicant Silverman, and the same is set aside. The other Judges concurred.

MERLINO v. CONNECTICUT QUARRIES CO.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §371—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—INJURIES "ARISING OUT OF EMPLOYMENT."

Where a quarry employé stopping at a commissary maintained with the employer's consent was struck by a stone thrown from a blast and killed, the injury arose out of the employment, being within the danger zone created by the employer's business.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §375(2) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION — SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

A quarry employé, killed by a stone thrown by a blast after working hours while stopping at the commissary to converse with a fellow workman, was killed within the scope of his employment, where the commissary was maintained by the employer for the purpose of supplying the wants of the workman, and there was an implied invitation for workmen to stop there on their way home.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §380—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—WILLFUL MISCONDUCT.

Where a workman stopping at the commissary on his way home was struck by a stone thrown from a blast because of his failure to obey a rule to seek shelter when warned by a whistle, the failure to obey the rule, although perhaps negligence was not willful misconduct constituting a defense under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; William S. Case, Judge.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Ernesto Merlino for compensation for the death of her husband opposed by the Connecticut Quarries Company, employer. Compensation was awarded. On appeal to the superior court the judgment was vacated, and the claim dismissed, and claimant appeals. Error, and cause remanded.

This is a proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act (Pub. Acts 1913, c. 138) by Ernesto Merlino, widow and dependent of Eugenio Merlino, against the Connecticut Quarries Company. Merlino was employed in a quarry conducted by the employer respondent, and quit work at 5:30 p. m. when the quitting whistle blew. He went down a pathway to a commissary, situated upon premises controlled by the employer, carrying with him four empty boxes for firewood. At the commissary Merlino talked for a minute or two with another workman, declined an invitation to drink a glass of beer, and picked up his child, who had come to meet him. He then proceeded along a road leading to his dwelling. The commissary was conducted by an individual to whom the respondent gave the use of the land for that purpose, in order that his employes might obtain supplies at a point convenient to their work. It was the custom of the employer respondent to fire blasts about 10 minutes after work ended for the day, a warning being given by blowing a whistle five times, when it was expected that employes within the danger zone would seek shelter. On the afternoon in question the warning whistle was blown about 4 minutes after the quitting whistle blew, and the blasts were fired several minutes later. Merlino had then reached, on his way home, a point from 15 to 60 feet from the commissary, where he was killed by a stone thrown by the blast. Nearly 10 minutes elapsed between the quitting whistle and the blast, and Merlino might easily have been out of danger, if he had not stopped at the commissary, and had not incumbered himself with the boxes and child. The neighborhood of the commissary was more or less dangerous while blasting was going on. The commissioner awarded compensation, and the superior court, on appeal, vacated the award and dismissed the claim.

Peter Trenchi and J. Frank Sullivan, both of New Haven, for appellant. Harrison Hewitt and Charles E. Clark, both of New Haven, for appellee.

BEACH, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] The injury arose out of the employment, at a place within the danger zone created by the business of the employer. That being so, the only question remaining is whether it was fairly consistent with the performance of the contract of employment that Merlino should be at or about the place at or about that time. In Mann v. Glastonbury Knitting Co., 90 Conn. 116, 96 Atl. 368, L. R. A. 1916D, 86, we pointed out that, where an injury arising from a risk of the business is suffered while the employé, though not doing the work for which he was employed, is still doing something which the employer has expressly or tacitly consented that his employes might do, incidentally to their employment, at that time and place, the injured employé is within the scope of his employment. That rule is applicable to this case, and it leads to the inquiry whether the respondent had consented that his employes, on quitting work, might stop at the commissary, and so remain within the danger zone created by the business, for the space of 10 minutes after the quitting whistle blew.

While there is no explicit finding on this precise point, it is a necessary inference from the findings that the employer had so consented. Thus it is found that the advantage which the employer derived from the commissary was that it supplied the wants of its employes at a point convenient to their work and their homes, and that the commissary and the cellar under the commissary and the west side of the commissary afforded shelter from flying rock. It is also found that at the sound of the warning whistle it was the duty of employes who were not out of range to seek shelter, and general instructions had been issued to that effect. There is no finding which indicates that the commissary was not customarily open for business at quitting time. The necessary inference from this state of the record is that employes were expected to patronize the commissary in going from their work, and that the resultant probability of their presence near the commissary while blasting was going on was recognized, and to some extent provided for, by the rule about taking shelter.

[3] Merlino's failure to obey this rule was a careless and perhaps a negligent omission; but it was not such serious and willful misconduct as amounts to a defense under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The superior court based its judgment, vacating the award upon the proposition that, because the employer had given the men ample time to leave the danger zone after stopping work, he was absolved from liability for injury to one who—unhindered by any agency beyond his own control—remained on the premises beyond the time allowed him to depart. This is another way of stating the fundamental rule that the employer's liability under the act is coextensive with and limited by the contract of employment; but, as applied to this case, it fails to take sufficient note of the fact, pointed out in Mann v. Glastonbury Knitting Co., supra, that the contract of employment includes all incidental terms which may have become annexed to it by the consent of the employer.

In this case the employer co-operated in the maintenance of a commissary, kept open at quitting time within the danger zone created by its business, and in effect it invited its employes to stop there on their way home. Under these circumstances, it cannot fairly be denied that one who met his death, because he was thus induced to linger a few minutes within the danger zone, was fairly within an agreed incidental term of his contract of employment.

There is error, and the cause is remanded, with direction to set aside the judgment vacating the award, and to enter judgment affirming the award of the commissioner. The other Judges concurred.

MARTIN v. SOUTHERN PENNSYLVANIA TRACTION CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 8, 1918.)

1. STREET RAILROADS §117(22)—DEATH OF PEDESTRIAN—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against a street railway for death of plaintiff's husband in attempting to cross a highway, evidence held not to warrant court in disposing of the case as a matter of law on the issue of contributory negligence.

2. DEATH §103(3)—ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DEATH—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for death of plaintiff's husband, where from one part of her testimony it appeared that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, but from another part that he was not, and there were no other witnesses, the case was for the jury.

3. NEGLIGENCE §122(2) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In action for personal injuries, plaintiff is not required to disprove contributory negligence, but only to make out a case clear of it.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Emma O. Martin against the Southern Pennsylvania Traction Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

J. B. Hannum, of Chester, for appellant. Henry J. Scott, of Philadelphia, and Albert Dutton MacDade, of Chester, for appellee.

STEWART, J. On the evening of January 14, 1915, the plaintiff's husband, accompanied by herself, was walking to his home from Darby, using the sidewalk along the highway upon which the defendant's line of electric railway is operated. In attempting to cross over the highway, upon a crossing in common use, he was struck by an approaching car on defendant's line, and so seriously injured that within a short period thereafter he died in consequence. The action was by the widow to recover damages from the traction company, and the negligence charged consisted "in running the car at a high and unlawful rate of speed, failing to give proper signals of warning of the approach, and in failing to have the car under such control that it could be brought to a stop within a reasonable distance." The case was submitted to the jury, and a verdict for plaintiff returned in the sum of $8,500. A motion for a new trial and for judgment non obstante followed. The court directed that a remittitur be filed as to all of the verdict in excess of $5,500, otherwise making absolute the motion for a new trial. The remittitur was filed, and defendant then appealed.

[1] The specifications of error are confined to the refusal by the court of defendant's second point, which asked for binding instructions, and the refusal of its motion for judgment non obstante. Together these raise but a single question: Does the evidence submitted by the plaintiff show a sufficient cause of action clear of contributory negligence? If it does, binding instructions were impossible, and the case was necessarily for the jury.

[2] First, as to the negligence of the defendant. The plaintiff herself was the only witness to the occurrence. Waiving for the present the contradictions in her testimony as to the immediate circumstances—afterwards to be referred to—she testified that the accident occurred at about quarter of 6 in the evening, and that it was dark; that she saw her husband as he approached the track in his attempt to cross over; that before making the attempt he stopped where he had a view of the track so far as the darkness of the evening would permit; that he looked both up and down the track, and that she did the same, but neither could see a car approach; that both listened and heard nothing to warn any one; that neither gong was sounded nor whistle blown; and that when the husband had advanced over the nearest track he was struck by a car running at great speed. She further says she was following her husband and was within two feet of the car when he was struck. Another witness, Lance, testified that he passed over the crossing in advance of plaintiff's husband, and that he had barely got across when the car that struck plaintiff's husband passed at a speed which he—formerly a locomotive engineer—estimated at about 25 miles an hour; that before he entered on the crossing he looked and listened, saw no car approaching, and heard no signal or any warning. This was the testimony offered by the plaintiff. Aided by the presumption that the deceased had exercised proper vigilance in attempting the crossing, it would be quite sufficient to establish a prima facie case of negligence. Did it disclose a case clear of contributory negligence? That depends entirely upon which of the conflicting statements plaintiff makes as to the place where she was standing with respect to her husband before and when the collision occurred is accepted as the true narrative. In one place she says that she was within two feet of the car and the husband immediately in advance of her, while in another place she says the husband had left her on the sidewalk and had started to cross the street when she looked and saw him struck by the car; that he was then on the first track while she was back on the sidewalk a half dozen steps away from the crossing where she says they had stopped, looked, and listened. The witness on further examination testified that she and her husband both stopped just where they came to the point where he started to cross, looked both ways, and saw no car. In view of this indefiniteness and uncertainty it was not for the court to deduce a conclusion that the deceased was negligent in the choice of a place at which to stop and look. Rather it was for the jury to decide where the actual place was.

[3] The case of Ely v. Pittsburgh, O., C. & St. L. Ry., 158 Pa. 233, 27 Atl. 970, is exactly in point. There the contradictions in the plaintiff's testimony were no less marked than here with respect to the opportunity he had of seeing the approaching train which collided with him. Mr. Justice Mitchell in his review of that case said:

"This testimony was contradictory, and the net result of it by no means clear. On part of it he was plainly entitled to go to the jury; on the other part equally plainly he was not. Under these circumstances the case must go to the jury, whose province it is to reconcile conflicting statements, whether of the same or different witnesses, or to draw the line between them and say which shall prevail. Had the testimony referred to a subject as to which the burden of proof was on the plaintiff, the result might have been different, for the court is not entitled to submit evidence which will merely enable a jury to guess at a fact in favor of a party who is bound to prove it. But in cases like the present, the plaintiff is not required to disprove contributory negligence, but only to make out a case clear of it. Unless, therefore, his negligence appears affirmatively, he is entitled to go to the jury on the general presumption against it, and so likewise where the evidence is conflicting as it was here. The weight of the evidence appears to us very clearly against the plaintiff on this point, but that was for the jury and the court below."

That was the condition here. The weight of the evidence appears to us very clearly against the plaintiff on this point, nevertheless the presumption against negligence and the conflict in the evidence necessarily carried the case to the jury.

The assignments are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

HARRIS CHEMICAL CO. v. F. W. TUNNELL & CO., Inc.

SALES — 152 — REFUSAL TO PERFORM — RIGHTS OF SELLER.

In action for breach of executory contract for sale of potash, time for delivery expiring July 1, 1915, potash to be delivered as ordered by buyers, where only one shipment was ordered and no further shipment directed until the afternoon of June 30th, and there was no time left for delivery, defendant could cancel the contract, and plaintiff could not recover for failure to deliver.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by the Harris Chemical Company, to the Use of Peters, White & Co., against F. W. Tunnell & Co., Incorporated. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

John Arthur Brown and Henry P. Brown, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. John Weaver, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

STEWART, J. The transaction out of which this controversy arises is evidenced by a written contract entered into March 29, 1915, under the terms of which the defendant company sold to the plaintiff company 300 tons muriate of potash of a certain refined quality at the price of $200 per ton, to be delivered f. o. b. Pennsylvania Railroad shipper's works, Philadelphia, in carload lots of not less than 15 tons, as ordered out by buyers. The contract contains the following provision:

"Buyers to give the seller reasonable notice of all shipments wanted. Final shipments under this contract to be completed by May 30, 1915, and any balance unshipped on the latter date through failure of buyers to furnish instructions, may, at the option of the sellers, be either shipped on this contract or canceled."

By supplemental contract dated May 21, 1915, the time for delivery of the potash was "extended until and completed by July 1, 1915, instead of May 30, 1915, as given in the original contract." On April 30th following the execution of the original contract, defendant shipped, upon order of the plaintiff, 15 tons of the amount sold. Plaintiff never ordered further shipment until June 30th following, and none was meanwhile shipped. On the date last mentioned plaintiff notified the defendant by writing that it had disposed of the remaining 285 tons which it had agreed to take under contract of March 29th and the extension of May 21st, and had assigned all its interest therein to Peters, White & Co. The writing thus concludes:

"This will be handed to you by Mr. Ellis Jackson representing Peters, White & Co., who will make the necessary arrangements with you, either for shipping or for holding on storage for their account."

This communication was delivered by Mr. Jackson on the morning of the 30th of June. Under same date, but not delivered until about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, this further communication was delivered to the defendant company:

"Gentlemen: We learn from Mr. Ellis Jackson, the representative of Peters, White & Company, of New York, with considerable astonishment, that you have refused to recognize the assignment which we made to that firm of our contract with you, so far as the balance of 285 tons of muriate, under our contract of March 29, 1915, with you and the extension thereof is concerned. We now notify you that in view of the fact that we have sold this product to Peters, White & Company, your refusal to deliver may result in a claim or suit against us for breach of contract and that if you persist in your refusal it is our intention to hold you to the repayment of any damage we may suffer thereby. In order that there may be no misunderstanding we now give you notice, in which Mr. Jackson representing Peters, White & Company joins, to ship the balance of this material, 285 tons in accordance with the terms of the contract to Peters, White & Company, New York City, New York, who will take up the sight draft with bill of lading and certificate of analysis attached, in accordance with the terms of that contract. If you do not comply with this request we again call your attention to the fact that we will hold you strictly responsible for any loss that may accrue. You may, of course, have any reasonable time in which to make the shipment. [Signed] Harris Chemical Company, by Edward J. Hasse, Treas. Ellis Jackson, Representing Peters, White & Company."

Under date of July 1, 1915, the defendant Company replied to this communication as follows:

"Harris Chemical Company, Gentlemen: Your letter of the 30th ult., which is also signed by Ellis Jackson representing Peters, White & Co., was received by us between 4:30 and 5 o'clock p. m. yesterday. Under the terms of the contract dated March 29, 1915, and the supplement dated May 21, 1915, it is our privilege to cancel it in so far as it relates to any balance of muriate of potash unshipped by July 1st, because of the failure on your part to give us such notice as would reasonably enable us to ship by that date. Your letter was the first notice received by us that you desired shipments to be made of the balance of 285 tons of muriate of potash, and it cannot be considered as 'reasonable notice or all shipments wanted' as provided in the contract. We, therefore, exercise our option to cancel the contract for the balance of the 285 tons of muriate unshipped. [Signed] F. W. Tunnell & Company, Inc."

The present action was brought 25th of August following, to recover from defendant $15,675, for alleged breach of contract, the plaintiff claiming this to be the difference between the contract price of the potash and the market price of the same at the time of the alleged breach, with interest added. The trial resulted in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum $5,765.33. A motion was filed by defendant for a new trial, since withdrawn, also for judgment non obstante on the whole record, which was refused, and judgment accordingly was entered on the verdict. The appeal brings nothing before us for our consideration but the refusal of the court to sustain the defendant's fifth point, which asked for binding instructions.

While the issue was single, namely, whether the plaintiff gave defendant reasonable notice of the shipment it wanted—the delivery of 285 tons of the potash remaining unshipped—this inquiry can be met only as some unascertained facts are first determined. The first and most important inquiry must be to ascertain just when the demand for shipment was made. The plaintiff averred in its statement of claim filed that on the morning of the 30th of June the use plaintiffs notified the defendant company of the assignment, and demanded immediate shipment of 285 tons of muriate of potash, which the defendant refused to deliver; and that again during the afternoon of the 30th of June the use plaintiff made another demand upon the defendant to deliver the said 285 tons, which the defendant again refused to deliver. It seems to be conceded that plaintiff's right to demand shipment continued until the expiration of June 30th, at midnight, conditioned, however, that there was left sufficient time between the hour when the demand was made and midnight of the same day to reasonably admit of a fulfillment by defendant of its contract obligation, which was to deliver f. o. b. in cars upon the railroad sidings at its plant, 285 tons of muriate of potash consigned to the plaintiff. In view of the second question, which is yet to be considered, the practicability of making this delivery in the time intervening between the demand and the close of the last hour of the day, the importance of fixing definitely when the demand was first made becomes apparent. There was no disagreement as to the fact that in the afternoon of that day, between 4 and 5 o'clock, a written demand for the shipment was made. Defendants insist that this was the first and only demand. In support of plaintiff's averment that the demand was made during the morning of the 30th, plaintiff called to the stand Mr. Ellis P. Jackson, who, as their representative in the transaction, had visited the defendant company at its place of business, to negotiate with respect to certain details, on the 29th as well as 30th of June. Whatever conversation occurred touching the shipment of the 285 tons occurred between Jackson and one or other of defendant's firm. Upon Jackson's testimony, and that alone, plaintiff relied to show an order for shipment given during the morning of the 30th. How far this testimony fell short of the purpose for which it was offered may be seen in witness' answers upon cross-examination. He was asked this question, "Did you give shipping instructions on the morning of June 30th?" His answer was, "I was there prepared to give shipping instructions." The examination proceeded:

"Q. Did you give shipping instructions on the morning of June 30th? A. Mr. Tunnell sort of turned me down so flatly that I didn't have a chance to give any. Q. You did not give any shipping instructions? A. I was there prepared to. I was their representative for that purpose. I could have a certified check there and paid for the whole stuff. Q. I asked whether or not you gave shipping instructions on the morning of June 30th? A. I didn't have a chance to give them. Q. Then you didn't give them? A. If I didn't have a chance to give them I did not give them. Q. I understand the first shipping instructions were given in the second letter of June 30th? A. Yes. Q. That was presented when? A. That was presented in the afternoon. I judge about half past 3 or 4 o'clock."

Here we have express and repeated denials by the person, who, as claimed by the plaintiff, made the demand during the morning of the 30th for shipment, that during the conversation he made any such demands, and the positive statement that the first demand was made by the letter which he said he delivered between 3 and 4 o'clock of the afternoon. There was not a particle of evidence outside the testimony of this witness in the whole case in support of the plaintiff's claim.

We come now to the second inquiry: Was it reasonably practicable for the defendant company, between the time when it was served with the demand, about 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the 30th, to comply with the demand then made by having on board of cars at its sidings, ready to be shipped, 285 tons of potash? The words "reasonable notice" as they occur in the contract can admit of no other meaning than we have here given them. They can have no reference to anything but the time required to load the particular shipment demanded upon the cars at defendant's siding. The time required would manifestly depend on the size of each shipment; what would be reasonable time for shipment of 15 tons would manifestly not be reasonable time for shipment of 285 tons. The surroundings of the parties at the time of making the contract, and the subject-matter of the contract, are always admissible to ascertain the intention and understanding of the parties, if the expression in the contract be in any measure disputed. These, as said in Bole v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 159 Pa. 53, 28 Atl. 205, form a sort of context which may be resorted to if there is any question to aid in arriving at the meaning of the contract. As we read this contract, it is entirely free from ambiguity, and can be read intelligently without recourse to extraneous conditions. We derive from the language used, with respect to the mutual obligations assumed, a covenant on the part of the buyer to receive and pay for 300 tons of muriate of potash, at such times, previous to the 1st day of July, 1915, and in such manner as the buyer may direct, giving to the seller reasonable notice of the demand, to the end that the seller might have reasonable opportunity, in view of its appliances and facilities—assumed to be such as are ordinarily in use—to meet its covenant, which was to place f. o. b. on cars upon such railroad sidings as it had in its plant for shipping the potash ordered. We see nothing in the contract to indicate that other facilities than those regularly employed by the seller in such cases would have to be supplied to expedite the shipment of any order received. The contention of the defendant is that notice of the demand for the shipment of 285 tons of potash, received at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of June 30th, did not afford reasonable time, within the meaning we have given these words, for the shipment to be made within the period fixed by the contract, and that its default in making the shipment is chargeable solely to the delay of plaintiff in giving notice of its demand for the shipment. On the other hand, the plaintiff insists that the notice of the demand was given in ample time to admit of its shipment within the period. With respect to this inquiry the burden rests on the plaintiff, since it is always for the plaintiff to show performance of the contract by himself when he seeks to recover for a breach of the other. The case was so proceeded with, the plaintiff introducing the question. He who seeks to compel performance by others must show his right to ask it by showing his own performance of all that is preliminary. Mint's Appeal, 128 Pa. 163, 18 Atl. 509. It is this principle that governs in cases where the action is for breach of contract. If the contract, as here, discloses prior conditions to be performed by the plaintiff, and on which defendant's performance depended, there can be no recovery except as the plaintiff avers and proves performance on his part. The first witness interrogated on the subject was Frederick W. White, one of the partners in the use plaintiff's firm. On cross-examination he was asked this question:

"I understand you to say that in your opinion it would be possible for Tunnell & Co., receiving notice to ship on June 30th, in the morning we will say, at the first visit at 10 o'clock to have shipped during the day of June 30th the 285 pounds of potash? A. I do not know what their facilities are."

The cross-examination thus proceeded:

"Q. I understand you to say that you are prepared to testify that Tunnell & Co., having received a notice of this kind, we will say on June 30th, could have delivered 285 tons of potash on June 30th? A. I think they testified that they made no efforts themselves to get the car. Q. I am asking you what you are prepared to testify to? A. I do not know what their facilities are. I have never been to their factory. I have testified that there are factories that could deliver a large quantity of muriate of potash in a few hours. Q. You are not familiar with the Tunnell Company's factory? A. I have never been in their factory. Q. You do not mean to tell us that Tunnell & Co. would have been able to deliver after the receipt of the notice on June 30th the balance of 285 tons on June 30th? A. I just told you I have never been to their factory, and I do not know what facilities they have. Q. You cannot give us any opinion on that point? A. I do not know anything about it."

The next witness interrogated was Ellis Jackson. On cross-examination he testified as follows:

"Q. Do I understand you to say that you think Tunnell & Co. could have delivered 285 tons of potash shipped on cars on June 30th after the receipt of that notice between half past 8 and 4 o'clock? A. We shipped soda ash, which is the nearest thing to bicarbonate of potash that I know, which comes in 250-pound bags, and we have repeatedly shipped in one day's notice 400 to 500 ton. This is the same kind of stuff exactly, and if I had sold 285 tons of soda ash, and somebody called me on the 30th of June, I would have got off as much as I could, and if I didn't get it all off that day, I would the next. It is the intent of these things it seems to me is the right sort of thing. Q. Do you think Tunnell & Co., I will repeat, could have prepared and shipped 285 tons of muriate of potash between half past 8 and 4 o'clock on June 30th at the close of the working day on that date? A. That is an hour and a half.

"The Court: It is midnight of that day. The legal day is midnight. Q. We will say midnight. A. I have worked until away in the morning. For an hour and a half you could not do it. Q. From 2:30 to midnight? A. They could have gotten 200 tons off by that time. Q. By midnight? A. Yes."

This was the whole of the testimony offered by the plaintiffs on this branch of the case. Its insufficiency is seen at once. Neither witness professed any knowledge of the facilities of the defendant company. The answer of the witness last named seemed to imply an acknowledgment of the impracticability of making the shipment by midnight when he said:

"If I had sold 285 tons of soda ash and somebody called me on the 30th of June, I would have got off as much as I could, and, if I didn't get it all off that day I would the next"

—overlooking and disregarding the fact that under this contract the defendant company was not obliged to put any of the potash on board the cars after midnight of the 30th, since the contract had then expired, and the parties had been left to their remedies. No more could the requirement of the contract have been met by loading a part of the shipment required than by loading none. We have no hesitancy in pronouncing as matter of law, viewing with greatest liberality the evidence offered by the plaintiff that it failed to show such performance of the obligation it assumed under the contract with respect to notice of its demand for shipment as entitled it to recover in this case. The court below should have so held. It was error, therefore, to refuse defendant's request for binding instructions.

The judgment is reversed, and judgment is now entered for defendant.

STATE v. BYRON.

1. BASTARDS \S 16—SUPPORT.

The father of a bastard is not entitled to the custody or the services of the child, and is therefore not chargeable with his support, in the absence of statute or contract, giving the right or imposing the duty.

2. BASTARDS \S 17½, New, vol. 12 Key-No. Series—SUPPORT.

Where the father of a bastard child has not been ordered, in proceedings brought for that purpose, under Pub. St. 1901, c. 87, to pay for the support of the child he cannot be convicted, under Laws 1913, c. 57, § 1, for willful neglect or refusal to support.

Transferred from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Allen, Judge.

Arthur Byron was indicted for nonsupport of his illegitimate child, and the question whether the prosecution could be sustained was transferred in advance of trial without a ruling. Case discharged.

William H. Sleeper, of Exeter, Co. Sol., for the State. Scammon & Gardner, of Exeter, for respondent.

WALKER, J. The statute upon which the prosecution is based (Laws 1913, c. 57, § 1) is as follows:

"Any person who shall without cause, desert or willfully neglect or refuse to provide for the support and maintenance of his wife in destitute or necessitous circumstances, or any, person who shall without lawful excuse desert or willfully neglect or refuse to provide for the support and maintenance of his or her legitimate or illegitimate minor child or children under the age of sixteen years in destitute or necessitous circumstances, shall be guilty of a crime and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding three hundred dollars ($300) or imprisonment for a term not exceeding fifteen months, or both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court."

[1] The respondent claims that, as he has not been adjudged guilty under the bastardy statute (P. S. c. 87, § 1), and ordered to contribute toward the support of the child, he cannot be found guilty of deserting or neglecting or refusing to support the child, under the statute quoted. That the father of a bastard is not entitled to the custody or the services of the child, and is not chargeable with its support, in the absence of a statute or contract giving him the right to the custody or imposing upon him the duty of support, cannot be seriously controverted. Hudson v. Hills, 8 N. H. 417; Kelley v. Davis, 49 N. H. 187, 6 Am. Rep. 499; Plymouth v. Haverhill, 69 N. H. 400, 401, 46 Atl. 460; Friesner v. Symonds, 46 N. J. Eq. 521, 527, 20 Atl. 257; 7 C. J. 955.

[2] But by section 4 of the act for the maintenance of bastard children (P. S. c. 87) he may be ordered, upon proceedings brought for the purpose, to pay a reasonable sum to the mother or to the selectmen of the town liable for the maintenance of the child, to be applied for such maintenance. A statutory duty is thus imposed upon him, under the order of the court, to support his illegitimate child. Brown v. Mansur, 64 N. H. 39, 40, 5 Atl. 768. It is unreasonable to assume that the Legislature of 1913 intended to create another and independent statutory duty of support. One purpose of the statute was to make it a crime for a person to fail to support his or her illegitimate minor child under the age of 16 years who may be in destitute circumstances, when such person is under a legal duty to care for the child, or when in the language of the statute no "lawful excuse" exists for the parent's neglect. Clearly it would be a "lawful excuse," if it appeared in a given case that the respondent, though he might be the natural parent of the child, was under no legal duty to furnish it with adequate support. It was not the legislative intention to impose a new and independent duty upon the fathers of illegitimate children, but to recognize and enforce such duties of maintenance as already existed. If, for instance, the respondent in bastardy proceedings has performed the order of the court by paying to the mother certain sums of money for the support of the child, a reasonable construction of the statute would not authorize a criminal prosecution against him for neglect to support the child found to be in needy circumstances; for no such legal duty would rest upon him. When no duty of support rests upon the father, the statute was not intended to apply; and in such a case no crime is committed. In the case of the father of a legitimate child, from whom the mother has obtained a divorce, custody of their child, and alimony for the support of herself and child, it would seem that he would not be liable to prosecution, if the needs of the child were not provided for by the mother. Other instances might be suggested, tending to show that it was the violation of an existing legal duty of the parent that the enactment of the statute was intended to prevent by declaring it to be a crime.

As, therefore, it appears that the respondent was under no legal duty either by statute or contract to support the child, of which he is alleged to be the natural father, the prosecution cannot be sustained. Case discharged. All concurred.

HAYWOOD v. BOSTON & M. R. R.

RAILROADS — §348(10) — CROSSINGS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action for death at a railroad crossing, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that plaintiff was not negligent, in that he relied upon the customary conduct of the defendant in running its trains at a certain speed over the crossing.

Transferred from Superior Court, Belknap County; Sawyer, Judge.

Action by Harold E. Haywood, administrator of the estate of William E. Pickard, deceased, against the Boston & Maine Railroad. Verdict for plaintiff. Transferred upon defendant's exceptions. Exceptions overruled.

Shannon & Tilton, Frank M. Beckford, and Charles B. Hibbard, all of Laconia, for plaintiff. Jewett & Jewett and Theo. S. Jewett, all of Laconia, for defendant.

PEASLEE, J. The evidence in this case is somewhat conflicting, and presents opportunity for widely differing conclusions as to what Pickard's conduct was at and just before the time of the accident. The question argued is whether a finding could be made which would be consistent with the exercise of due care on his part.

He was 13 years old. It could be found that he was familiar with the crossing; that it was the defendant's rule to limit the speed of trains at that point to 15 miles an hour, while on this occasion the speed was 35 miles; that as Pickard walked across the track he looked at the approaching train, and had no idea that he was in danger; and that another step would have put him in a place of safety. The plaintiff's case is thus brought within the rule that due care can be found from the party's reliance upon the customary conduct of others. Minot v. Railroad, 73 N. H. 317, 61 Atl. 509; Id., 74 N. H. 230, 66 Atl. 825.

No question is made as to the sufficiency of the evidence of the defendant's fault, and the case was properly submitted to the jury.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

POPE et al. v. BOSTON & M. R. R.

1. RAILROADS ⇨481(1) — FIRES — ACTION—EVIDENCE.

That the occupants of plaintiff's buildings, claimed to have been burned by defendant railroad, used liquor to excess, sold it on the premises, concealed in the hay in the barn, and had been seen to search for it with a lighted match, is relevant to the issue of cause of the fire.

2. TRIAL ⇨55—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—EXCITING PREJUDICE.

The test of whether evidence should be excluded because calculated to excite prejudice is whether the prejudice is undue.

3. TRIAL ⇨55—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—EXCITING PREJUDICE.

The issue of whether evidence is calculated to excite undue prejudice, relative to excluding it for that reason, is one of fact.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨992—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—EXCITING PREJUDICE.

There being evidence to sustain the court's findings that admitted evidence would probably aid the jury in its search for the truth, exception to its admission as calculated to excite prejudice must be overruled.

5. TRIAL ⇨133(1)—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL—QUESTION OF FACT.

Whether counsel was guilty of misconduct in asking incompetent questions, and, if so, whether it produced the verdict, are questions of fact.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1060(2) — HARMLESS ERROR—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL—FINDINGS.

Verdict will not be set aside because of any misconduct of counsel in asking incompetent questions, unless it be found that this produced the verdict.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨930(2)—PRESUMPTION—OBEYING INSTRUCTIONS.

It will be assumed, in the absence of a finding to the contrary, that the jury obeyed the court's instruction to pay no attention to what counsel said.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1050(1)—REVIEW—RELEVANT HEARSAY.

It is not usual for the Supreme Court to disturb a verdict merely because a witness was asked a question calling for relevant hearsay; the objection being to form, not substance.

9. TRIAL ⇨110—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL—REPETITION OF QUESTION.

Ruling that defendants could not show what witness had heard about a woman setting a fire is not a ruling that it could not show by competent evidence that she set the fire, so that the further question whether witness knew of the woman is not an offense against the law of the trial.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨206(2)—IRRESPONSIVE ANSWER—OBJECTION AT TRIAL.

The Supreme Court will not disturb a verdict merely because of incompetent matter in irresponsible answer; but instruction to disregard it must have been requested.

Transferred from Superior Court, Belknap County; Sawyer, Judge.

Action on the case by J. Frank Pope and another against the Boston & Maine Railroad for burning of plaintiffs' buildings. Verdict for defendant, and case transferred on plaintiffs' exceptions to evidence and remarks of defendant's counsel. Exceptions overruled.

Sweeney & Cox, of Lawrence, Mass., Stevens, Couch & Stevens and Martin & Howe, all of Concord, and Owen & Veazey and Charles B. Hibbard, all of Laconia, for plaintiffs. Jewett & Jewett and Theodore S. Jewett, all of Laconia, for defendant.

YOUNG, J. [1-4] The evidence admitted subject to exception was relevant to the matter in issue; that is, the facts the occupants of the plaintiffs' buildings used liquor to excess, sold it on the premises, concealed it in the hay in the barn, and had been seen to search for it with a lighted match, all tended to the conclusion that they might have set the fire in question. The objection, and the only objection, that can be urged against the admission of these facts, is that they were calculated to excite prejudice. The test to determine whether evidence should be excluded for that reason is to inquire whether the prejudice it excites is undue. The issue raised by that inquiry is one of fact, consequently the plaintiffs' exception to the admission of evidence must be overruled, for it cannot be said there is no evidence to sustain the court's findings that this evidence would probably aid the jury in its search for the truth.

[5-8] A witness the defendant's counsel was cross-examining testified, without objection, that he had heard that one of the occupants of the plaintiffs' premises burned another set of buildings; but, when counsel asked him if he had heard she did it by throwing a lamp at the man with whom she was living, the plaintiffs objected, and the court sustained their objection, and directed the jury to pay no attention either to what the witness said he had heard or to the question objected to. The plaintiffs contend that what the defendant's counsel did rendered the trial unfair and that the verdict should be set aside for that reason. Whether the defendant's counsel was guilty of misconduct, and, if he was, whether it produced the verdict, are both questions of fact. If he knew when he asked these questions that they were incompetent, and asked them for the mere purpose of prejudicing the jury against the plaintiffs, the court should discipline him; but it does not necessarily follow from the fact, if it is a fact, that counsel was guilty of misconduct, that the verdict should be set aside. Whether that should be done depends on how the court finds the fact as to whether his misconduct produced the verdict. But, whatever the fact may be, this exception must be overruled as the case stands, for the court directed the jury to pay no attention to what counsel said, and it will be assumed, in the absence of a finding to the contrary, that the jury obeyed the court's instruction. In short, the fact, if it were the fact, this woman burned another set of buildings by throwing a lamp at the man with whom she was living was relevant to the issue of the cause of the fire in question, and it is not usual for this court to disturb a verdict merely because a witness is asked a question which calls for relevant hearsay, for such an objection is to form, not substance.

[9] The plaintiffs also complain because defendant's counsel asked a witness whether he knew there was such a woman at the time of the fire in question. They based this complaint on the proposition that the court had ruled that what happened at the other fire was inadmissible, and that this question was an offense against the law of the trial. The difficulty with this contention is that it is not founded on fact. What the court ruled was that the defendant could not show what the witness had heard about the woman setting the other fire, not that they could not show she set it by competent evidence.

[10] They also complain of the witness' answer to this question. The answer was irresponsible, and this court will not disturb a verdict merely because incompetent matter is brought to the jury's attention in that way. If they thought the answer was prejudicial, they should have asked the court to instruct the jury to disregard it. Wheeler v. Contocook Mills, 77 N. H. 551, 94 Atl. 265. No reason has been suggested, and none is apparent, why the plaintiffs' exception to the opening statement of defendant's counsel should not be overruled.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

DAVISON CHEMICAL CO. OF BALTIMORE COUNTY v. BAUGH CHEMICAL CO. OF BALTIMORE COUNTY.
(No. 35.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 20, 1918. Motions for Rehearing and Modification of Opinion and Mandate Denied July 30, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS §147(1)—CONSTRUCTION.

In arriving at the intention of the parties to a contract, the court must regard the language employed, the subject-matter, and the surrounding circumstances.

2. SALES §69—SALE OF ACID—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—"CHAMBER ACID."

"Chamber acid," in a contract for the sale of sulphuric acid, to run a number of years, held to refer to sulphuric acid made from pyrites, almost universally employed in the manufacture of acid phosphate, to the production of which alone the seller's plant was adapted, to the knowledge of the buyer.

3. SALES §181(11)—DUTY OF SELLER—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In suit by one chemical company against another to compel specific performance of contract to deliver sulphuric acid, evidence held to show defendant exercised all reasonable diligence in efforts to secure pyrites necessary to enable it to comply with obligation to plaintiff.

4. SALES §150(1)—PRODUCT OF PLANT—DUTY OF SELLER.

Where a chemical company contracted to deliver to another company sulphuric acid, the product of its plant, it was not required to purchase acid from other manufacturers in order to make deliveries, but was bound to make every reasonable effort to secure raw material wherewith to manufacture it, and to pay any reasonable sum necessary.

5. SALES §172 — OBLIGATION OF SELLER—COST OF RAW MATERIAL.

Where a chemical company contracted to sell sulphuric acid made from pyrites by it at a given price, the fact that the price of pyrites arose sharply thereafter, on account of war conditions, did not release the company from its duty to perform.

6. SALES §181(11)—DUTY OF SELLER—DILIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In suit for specific performance of a contract to deliver sulphuric acid, evidence that other manufacturers were able to secure some pyrites as raw material is not conclusive evidence that defendant company, by reasonable diligence, could have obtained enough ore to meet its obligations.

Appeal from Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City; Henry Duffy, Judge.

Suit by the Baugh Chemical Company of Baltimore County against the Davison Chemical Company of Baltimore County. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and bill dismissed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, and STOCKBRIDGE, JJ.

Harry N. Baetjer and Charles McH. Howard, both of Baltimore (Venable, Baetjer & Howard, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellant. Frank R. Savidge, of Philadelphia, Pa., and W. Irvine Cross, of Baltimore (Lee S. Meyer, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellee.

THOMAS, J. The appellee, the Baugh Chemical Company of Baltimore County, plaintiff below, is a corporation engaged in the manufacture of acid phosphate, and its plant is located in Baltimore county, Md., and the appellant, the Davison Chemical Company of Baltimore County, is a corporation engaged in the manufacture of sulphuric acid, and its plant is also located in Baltimore county. The chief materials used in the manufacture of acid phosphate, the product of plaintiff's plant, are sulphuric acid and phosphate rock, and for a number of years prior to the year 1913, the plaintiff had purchased the sulphuric acid required in the manufacture of its acid phosphate from the defendant. Sulphuric acid is made from sulphur, and originally, or in the early days, the raw material employed in the manufacture of that acid was native sulphur or brimstone. After the discovery of the sulphur bearing ore called pyrites, containing about 50 per cent. of sulphur, it became the raw material generally used in the manufacture of sulphuric acid, particularly the low grade of acid used in the making of acid phosphate. Just when this change from brimstone to pyrites took place is not definitely fixed by the evidence in the case, but the lower court in its opinion stated that it was between 1880 and 1890. The chief supply of pyrites was imported from Spain, the supply from the Canadian mines and mines in this country being very small, and those mines were generally owned or controlled and their product consumed by companies engaged in the manufacture of acid or acid phosphate.

In the early part of 1913, the plaintiff and defendant began negotiations for the purchase and sale of sulphuric acid, which resulted in a contract executed by them the 28th day of April, 1913, by which the plaintiff purchased from the defendant from 30,000 to 50,000 tons, of 2,000 pounds each, of sulphuric acid per year, of the quality designated "chamber acid ranging from 50 degrees to 54 degrees Beaume," to be delivered at the plaintiff's works at Canton, or to Baugh & Sons Company, Norfolk, Va., for a period of five years beginning January 1, 1913, and ending December 31, 1917, for the sum of $5.75 per ton. The contract provided that the plaintiff should declare on the 2d of January of each year what amount in excess of the minimum amount of 30,000 tons it would take that year, and that the deliveries of sulphuric acid should be made as nearly as possible in equal weekly installments, and also contained the following provisions:

"Fire, accident or strike, in the work of any of the parties herein mentioned; obstruction to navigation, accident to acid, barges, war, insurrections or other uncontrollable causes rendering buyers unable to receive or sellers unable to deliver, shall be good and sufficient reasons to make this contract inoperative during the period of necessary repairs, reconstructions, or continuance of the difficulties."

Immediately following the execution of the contract, the price fixed thereby was by agreement reduced to $5 per ton. In pursuance of the provisions of the contract, the plaintiff elected to take 50,000 tons of acid per year, and it appears that the deliveries of the acid were accordingly and regularly made by the defendant during the years 1913 and 1914 and until some time early in the year 1915. During the year 1915, the defendant failed to make full deliveries to the plaintiff, and in February, 1916, the plaintiff filed a bill in equity to compel the defendant to perform its contract. The defense in that suit was that by reason of a breakdown in its plant, and other causes, the defendant had not been able to make full deliveries to the plaintiff and other parties to whom it had sold sulphuric acid, and that it was therefore compelled to make a proportionate distribution of the product of its factory among them. In disposing of the case on May 18, 1916, Judge Bond said that the evidence produced showed that there had been much interruption in the defendant's factory, due to accidents and breakdowns in its plant during the year 1915, "and up to this time," which cut down its capacity to an "extraordinary extent"; that as the defendant's contracts would have necessitated a full normal working of its plant, it was incapable by reason of such interruption of filling all of them; that the principle of "prorating" should govern and determine the rights of the parties when the output is involuntarily reduced was in that case conceded; that the suspected improper preference of later buyers over the plaintiff had not been established by the evidence, and that he would sign an order dismissing the petition for a preliminary injunction. The case was never pressed to a final hearing, and the bill was later dismissed by the plaintiff, and on the 10th of November, 1916, the plaintiff brought suit at law against the defendant to recover damages for the nondelivery of acid in accordance with its contract up to and including June, 1916.

Interference with the importation of pyrites caused by the war, and which had diminished the normal supply during the year 1915, had largely abated during the fall of 1916 and the early part of 1917, and by reason thereof, and the extra efforts made by the defendant in anticipation of difficulty in obtaining the ore, it had, in March, 1917, accumulated at its plant about forty-eight thousand tons. About that time, however, just preceding the entrance of this country into the war, the interference with navigation occasioned by the German U-boat campaign became very serious. The companies with which the defendant had contracted for delivery of the ore, and whose contracts contained a clause similar to the clause in the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant which we have quoted, notified the defendant that they would be compelled to suspend deliveries. After receiving this notice, and after making efforts to secure further deliveries of ore from the parties with whom it had contracted and from other sources, the defendant notified the plaintiff and all others with whom it had contracts for delivery of sulphuric acid that after the exhaustion of its accumulated stock of pyrites it would not be able to make deliveries of the acid contracted for, and would have to take advantage of the clause in its contract with the plaintiff authorizing a suspension of deliveries. At the same time the defendant stated that it would continue its efforts to secure pyrites, and continue to deliver to them their proportion of acid from any pyrites that it might be able to obtain, and offered to install in its plant brimstone burners, and to furnish the plaintiff and other parties to whom it had contracted to furnish acid, with brimstone acid, provided they would agree to pay the increased cost of the brimstone acid delivered in lieu of acid made from pyrites. All of the parties with whom the defendant contracted accepted the offer of the defendant and entered into agreements accordingly except the plaintiff, and on the 25th of September, 1917, the plaintiff filed in the court below a bill of complaint against the defendant, in which it prayed:

"(a) That a decree may be passed commanding the said Davison Chemical Company of Baltimore County to specifically perform, keep, and observe the several promises and agreement in the aforementioned contract set out to be performed, kept and observed, and commanding and directing the said defendant corporation, its officers, agents and servants, to make, during the time covered by said contract, the deliveries of acid to this plaintiff required by said contract.

"(b) That an injunction may issue, strictly enjoining and prohibiting the said Davison Chemical Company of Baltimore County, its and each of its officers, agents, and servants, from delivering during the terms covered by its said contract with the plaintiff any sulphuric acid to any parties with which it has entered into contracts on or subsequent to May 7, 1915, while said Davison Chemical Company of Baltimore County is in default as to the delivery of any part of the sulphuric acid to which this plaintiff is entitled under said contract.

"(c) And that a preliminary injunction may issue, strictly enjoining and prohibiting the said Davison Chemical Company of Baltimore County, its and each of its officers, agents, and servants, from discriminating against the plaintiff in the distribution and delivery among its customers of the sulphuric acid manufactured by it from whatever raw material, and from withholding from this plaintiff any part of the fair and accurate pro rata share of the sulphuric acid manufactured by it until the further order of this court."

On the same day the court passed an order, directing a preliminary injunction to be issued, requiring the defendant to "proceed forthwith to fulfill the contract between the complainant and the defendant dated the 28th day of April, 1913, in accordance with its terms," and providing that "the deliveries be at the rate of 50,000 tons a year, and that said deliveries be made weekly from this date, said deliveries to be made as nearly as possible in equal weekly installments of 961 tons each. Provided, however, that if in each and any week commencing from the date of this order the defendant is unable to produce the entire output which it is normally capable of producing, or if for any justifiable cause the defendant is compelled to pro rate its weekly output among its customers, then the defendant may abate the number of tons furnished to the complainant in each week in the same proportion that the deliveries in such week to defendant's other customers are abated." The order further required the defendant to "continue to make such deliveries until such contract is fulfilled, or until the further order" of the court.

The defendant answered the plaintiff's bill, and moved that the preliminary injunction be dissolved, and the testimony in this case was taken at the hearing of that motion. Upon the evidence produced at the hearing, and on the 8d day of December, 1917, the court overruled the motion to dissolve the injunction, and in accordance with the application of the plaintiff modified its order of September 25, 1917, granting the injunction to the extent of limiting the deliveries of sulphuric acid by the defendant to December 31, 1917, or the further order of the court. Nothing further appears to have been done in the case until it was submitted for final decree upon bill, answer, and evidence taken at the hearing of the motion to dissolve, and, the parties having agreed that after the issuing of the preliminary injunction on the 25th of September, 1917, and until December 31, 1917, the defendant had delivered to the plaintiff sulphuric acid at the rate of 50,000 tons per annum, the court passed the following decree, from which this appeal was taken:

"It is therefore, this 12th day of March, 1918, by the circuit court No. 2 of Baltimore city, adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the defendant under its contract with plaintiff and the evidence adduced was obliged to specifically perform and carry out said contract with plaintiff from the date of the filing of the bill on, and to deliver to plaintiff between September 25 and December 31, 1917, both inclusive, sulphuric acid at the rate of 50,000 tons a year and as nearly as possible in equal weekly installments of 961 tons each, irrespective of the raw material from which the said acid might be made, and that the injunction heretofore granted in this case on the 25th day of September, 1917, as modified by the order issued on the 3d day of December, 1917, be and it hereby is made perpetual."

The defense relied on by the appellant is that under its contract with the plaintiff of April 28, 1913, it was not required to deliver acid made from brimstone, and that it was unable by reason of the war to obtain the necessary amount of pyrites to fulfill its contract with the plaintiff and other parties with whom it had contracted to deliver acid or acid phosphate, it was entitled, under the provision we have quoted, to suspend the deliveries of acid to the plaintiff to the extent of its inability to secure pyrites. The contention of the appellee is that the appellant was bound to deliver the acid to the amount specified in its contract, regardless of whether it was made from brimstone or pyrites, and, further, that the appellant by a proper effort could have obtained a sufficient amount of pyrites to enable it to comply with its contract. The learned court below took the view that by reason of the conflict in the testimony as to the meaning of the words "chamber acid" the evidence produced by the defendant was not sufficient to establish a usage and to show that the trade meaning of the words "chamber acid" was acid produced from pyrites, and further held that the evidence showed that the defendant had not exercised due diligence to secure sufficient pyrites to enable it to fulfill its contract with the plaintiff, and that it had not made an effort to procure acid from other manufacturers of acid for that purpose. The effect of the preliminary injunction was to require the defendant, during the period between the 25th of September and the 31st of December, to supply the plaintiff with sulphuric acid made from brimstone or pyrites, at the rate of 50,000 tons a year, without regard to its ability to procure pyrites.

The pleadings, exhibits, and testimony in the case cover about 800 pages of the printed record. It would necessarily greatly prolong this opinion to undertake to discuss this evidence, and we shall not attempt to do more than state the conclusion we have reached after careful examination of it.

[1, 2] It is apparent that the first and important question in the case involves the construction of the contract between the plaintiff and defendant of April 28, 1913. A large part of the evidence was offered for the purpose of showing the meaning of the words "chamber acid." The witnesses produced by the plaintiff testified that they mean acid manufactured by the chamber process from either pyrites or brimstone, while the evidence offered by the defendant tends to show that at the time the contract of 1913 was executed they were generally understood by those engaged in the manufacture or sale of acid and acid phosphate to mean the low grade of acid manufactured from pyrites by the chamber process. The precise question, however, to be determined is, What is the meaning of the words "chamber acid" as used in the contract between the plaintiff and defendant? In the case of Saunders Co. v. Duck-er, 116 Md. 474, 82 Atl. 154, Ann. Cas. 1913 C, 817, this court said:

"It is an established canon of construction that: 'In order to arrive at the intention of the parties, the contract itself must be read in the light of the circumstances under which it was entered into. General or indefinite terms employed in the contract may be thus explained or restricted as to their meaning and application; and the contract must be so construed as to give it such effect and none other, as the parties intended at the time it was made.'"

Contracts "must receive a reasonable construction so as to give effect to the intention of the parties thereto, and so as to carry out rather than defeat the purposes for which they were executed. They should neither, on the one hand, be so narrowly or technically interpreted as to frustrate their obvious design; nor, on the other hand, so loosely or inartificially as to relieve the obligor from a liability fairly within the scope or spirit of their term." And in the case of Schlens v. Poe, 128 Md. 352, 97 Atl. 649, the court said:

"It is therefore the duty of the court to construe them (resolutions)—to ascertain the intention of the parties—and that intention must be gathered from the language of the resolution read in the light of the circumstances existing at the time. The rule of construction, as stated in Nash v. Towne, 5 Wallace, 699 [18 L. Ed. 527], is this: 'Courts, in the construction of contracts, look to the language employed, the subject-matter, and the surrounding circumstances. They are never shut out from the same light which the parties enjoyed when the contract was executed, and, in that view, they are entitled to place themselves in the same situation as the parties who made the contract, so as to view the circumstances as they viewed them, and so as to judge of the meaning of the words and the correct application of the language to the things described.'"

The evidence in the case shows that in 1913 the defendant had been furnishing the plaintiff the acid used in the manufacture of its acid phosphate for a great many years; that with one or two minor exceptions sulphuric acid of the quality used in the manufacture of acid phosphate, and sold for that purpose, was made from pyrites ore, which contains about 50 per cent. of sulphur, by the process known as the chamber process, and that only about 5 per cent. of the brimstone or sulphur sold in this country was used for acid making, and that that per cent. of brimstone employed in making acid was used in the production of what was known as a high grade acid or brimstone acid, which was used for purposes other than the manufacture of acid phosphate. Dr. Grosvenor, one of the plaintiff's witnesses, testified that in 1913 the amount of brimstone or sulphur used in the manufacture of sulphuric acid was only about 5 per cent. of the raw material used for that purpose. The evidence further shows that the cost of the brimstone or sulphur in 1913 was about $22.50 per ton, while the cost of pyrites containing an equal amount of sulphur was about $11 a ton, and that the cost of the brimstone required to make one ton of acid was $5.15, while the cost of the pyrites necessary to make one ton of acid was $2.60 a ton. The undisputed evidence also shows that the officers of the plaintiff were at the time considering the advisability of manufacturing the sulphuric acid necessary for its own plant, and knew what it would cost to produce it, and that they were familiar with the construction of the defendant's plant, and knew that it was at that time only adapted to the production of sulphuric acid from pyrites. In view of this evidence it is impossible to escape the conclusion that when the plaintiff and defendant used the words "chamber acid" to describe the subject-matter of their contract, they did not refer to acid made from brimstone, which they both knew the defendant could not produce in its plant as then constructed, and could not furnish at the contract price of $5 per ton. Whether, therefore, strictly and technically speaking, chamber acid may be said to include acid made by the chamber process from either pyrites or brimstone, if we are to give effect to the well-established canon of construction to which we have referred, arriving at the intention of the parties, it would seem reasonably clear that the contract referred to the kind of sulphuric acid that was almost universally employed in the manufacture of acid phosphate, and to the production of which the defendant's plant was adapted, and which alone the defendant could have furnished at the price agreed upon.

It would be giving the contract a strained and unreasonable construction to assume that the defendant obligated itself to deliver 50,000 tons of brimstone acid per year, through a period of five years and commencing at a date anterior to the date of the contract, when it knew and the plaintiff knew it could not do so except at a loss per ton equal to about one-half of the price agreed upon.

In regard to the second proposition, the evidence shows that in 1913 the capacity of the defendant's plant was about 170 tons of sulphuric acid per year; that about the time it executed the contract with the plaintiff the defendant entered into a contract with the Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Company by which the latter company agreed to furnish the defendant "as near as possible in equal monthly quantities, delivered alongside vessels at Curtis Bay, Baltimore, Md., their entire requirements of sulphur as pyrites, for use in their works at and near Baltimore, estimated as eighty thousand (80,000) tons of twenty-two hundred and forty (2,240) pounds, for the calendar years of nineteen hundred and fifteen, sixteen, seventeen and eighteen (1915, 16, 17 and 18); said ore to be Spanish smalls or fines from the Rio Tinto Company's mines, to be shipped from port in Huelva, Spain, and to average from forty-six (46) to forty-eight (48) per cent. of sulphur"; that the 80,000 tons of pyrites per year to be delivered by the Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Company would have been sufficient to produce 180,000 tons of sulphuric acid per year, and that that company had been supplying the defendant with its entire requirements for many years prior to 1913, and had never in the past failed to do so; that the defendant also entered into a contract with the Naylor, Benzon & Co., Limited, of London, for 140,000 tons of pyrites ore, to be delivered during the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920, a contract with the Pyrites Company, Limited, of London, for 20,000 tons of pyrites to be delivered during the years 1915 and 1916, and a further contract with the Pyrites Company Limited, for 25,000 tons of pyrites, to be delivered during the year 1917; that the total importation of pyrites was about 1,800,000 tons per year, and that of that supply the three companies mentioned imported about 1,000,000 tons per year. It further appears from the evidence that after the defendant received notice from these companies in the spring of 1917 that, owing to the U-boat campaign and their inability to secure the necessary tonnage, they would have to suspend the deliveries of pyrites ore under their contracts, the president and officers of the defendant made repeated and weekly visits to New York to see the representatives of the companies mentioned to induce them to make deliveries, and that they also investigated the possibility of obtaining Canadian and domestic pyrites, and found that it was impossible to secure any ore from that source; that they went to see the representatives of other importers of pyrites ore, and were unable to obtain from them any deliveries; that to induce the representatives of the importers mentioned and other importers of pyrites to make deliveries they agreed to pay any additional freight charges that might be necessary to secure the requisite tonnage; and that the only pyrites they were able to obtain between April 20th and the time of the institution of the present suit consisted of two cargoes, one cargo from the Pyrites Company, which was delivered in June, 1917, and one cargo from Naylor, etc., Company, delivered in July, 1917, both of which cargoes were used by the defendant in the manufacture of acid, and the acid was distributed among the parties with whom it had contracts, including the plaintiff.

The evidence produced by the defendant tends to show that a number of other manufacturers of sulphuric acid or acid phosphate were able to secure pyrites, but it also appears that many of them were comparatively small manufacturers, and that in a number of instances they owned or controlled the domestic or Canadian mines from which they obtained the ore, and all of the evidence tends to show that there was great scarcity of pyrites during the time in which the plaintiff was unable to secure deliveries other than the two cargoes mentioned.

The learned court below in its opinion referred to the fact that it did not appear that the defendant had instituted legal proceedings to compel the Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Company to comply with its contract, or that it had attempted to purchase sulphuric acid from other manufacturers with which to meet its obligation to the plaintiff.

In the case of Herrmann v. Bower Chemical Mfg. Co., 242 Fed. 59, 155 C. C. A. 3, where the contract under consideration contained a clause like the clause in the contract between the plaintiff and defendant, the Circuit Court of Appeals approved the following instructions of the court below:

"Now, where a party enters into a contract providing for the delivery of certain articles of merchandise, he is obliged to use diligence to supply himself with sufficient quantities to carry out the terms of his contract, if he can do that in the exercise of due diligence. * * * So that the questions for you to consider under all the evidence are whether you are satisfied from the evidence that the defendant did use the diligence which I have stated, that is, the diligence which a reasonably prudent man, in good faith, desiring to carry out the terms of the contract, would exercise, in obtaining supplies necessary to proceed with the manufacture and delivery of the prussiate of potash."

In the case of Simpson Bros. Corporation v. John R. White & Son (C. C.) 187 Fed. 418, the court said in reference to a clause of a similar nature in a building contract:

"In interpreting a clause of this character in a construction contract like that before us, due regard must be had to the circumstances and to the ordinary course of business in contemplation of the parties at the time of the execution of the contract," and that a contractor, in such a case, is required to show that he had exercised ordinary diligence to secure the materials.

In the case of Jessup & Moore Paper Co. v. Piper (C. C.) 133 Fed. 108, the court, dealing with a contract containing a clause excusing performance where the fulfillment of it was prevented by strikes or by hindrances beyond the control of the parties, said of the defendant:

"It is bound to carry out its contracts even with that clause in, so far as, at all events, to put forth all reasonable and proper exertion to overcome whatever hindrance may be offered to the carrying out of its contracts. * * * If * * * they could have obtained the cars for delivery to the plaintiffs by arrangement with the railroad company, they were bound to make it. They were bound, in other words, to do whatever was reasonable and proper to overcome whatever hindrance existed with regard to this car supply; and, if they failed to do whatever was reasonable and proper, whether it be the expenditure of labor and exertion, or the reasonable expenditure of money, then they have failed in the discharge of their duty, and to that extent they would be liable to respond to the plaintiff in damages. But if there was a scarcity of cars, a shortage of cars, and it was beyond their power—explaining as I have what their duty in that respect was—if it was beyond their power to remove that hindrance, if they gave the plaintiff its ratable share of cars during the period in question, then they certainly have discharged all their duty with reference to that part of the claim that they could be called upon to discharge."

In the case of Mineral Park Land Co. v. Howard, 172 Cal. 289, 156 Pac. 453, L. R. A. 1916F, 1, the Supreme Court of California said:

"The parties were contracting for the right to take earth and gravel to be used in the construction of the bridge. When they stipulated that all the earth and gravel needed for this purpose should be taken from plaintiff's land, they contemplated and assumed that the land contained the requisite quantity available for use. The defendants were not binding themselves to take what was not there. And, in determining whether the earth and gravel 'were available,' we must view the conditions in a practical and reasonable way. Although there was gravel on the land, it was so situated that the defendants could not take it by ordinary means, nor except at a prohibitive cost. To all fair intents, then, it was impossible for defendants to take it. 'A thing is impossible in legal contemplation when it is not practicable; and a thing is impracticable when it can only be done at an excessive and unreasonable cost.' 1 Beach on Contracts, § 216. We do not mean to intimate that the defendants could excuse themselves by showing the existence of conditions which would make the performance of their obligations more expensive than they had anticipated, or which would entail a loss upon them. But where the difference in cost is so great as here, and has the effect, as found, of making performance impracticable, the situation is not different from that of a total absence of earth and gravel."

[3-6] Applying the principles stated in the cases referred to to the facts of this case, we think the evidence shows that the defendant did exercise all reasonable diligence in its efforts to secure the pyrites necessary to enable it to comply with its obligation to the plaintiff. The contract of the defendant was to deliver to the plaintiff the product of its plant, and the defendant was not required to purchase acid from other manufacturers in order to make deliveries to the plaintiff. It was bound to make every reasonable effort to secure the pyrites, and to pay any reasonable sum necessary to enable it to do so. The fact that the price of pyrites ore was greatly in excess of the amount that it had contracted to pay for it did not relieve the defendant of its duty to perform its contract. The evidence tending to show that other manufacturers of acid or acid phosphate had been able to secure some pyrites is not conclusive evidence that the defendant, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, could have obtained sufficient quantities of the ore to meet its obligations, or sufficient to overcome the positive evidence adduced by the defendant to show that it made every effort to obtain the ore.

The case of Wilson & Co., Limited, v. Tenants, reported in 1 K. B. (1917) 206, referred to by the court below, was reversed on appeal by the House of Lords, and in the opinions of the majority of the Justices it was held that the evidence showed that the defendant was, within the meaning of the contract under consideration, prevented or hindered, because the cutting off of the German supply during the war left the defendant unable to secure enough of the articles to fill all of its contracts and supply its ordinary business. L. R. App. Cas. (1917) 495.

It follows from what we have said that the preliminary injunction should have been dissolved, and we must therefore reverse the decree from which this appeal was taken.

Decree reversed with costs, and bill dismissed.

(182 Md. 336)

MAIN v. MAYOR, ETC., OF HAGERSTOWN et al. (No. 5.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. Feb. 27, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 225(4) — POWERS — SALE OF REALTY — EASEMENT.

A grant of power to the moderator and commissioners of a town to sell realty authorizes them to grant an easement appurtenant to the realty sold.

2. EASEMENTS — 61(3) — INTERFERENCE — INJUNCTION — PLEADING.

Bill to enjoin interference with an easement need not allege irreparable injury in terms if the facts alleged show that the damage will be irreparable.

3. EASEMENTS — 61(2) — INTERFERENCE — INJUNCTION.

Interference with an easement of light in a warehouse by the use of an alley for storage purposes will not be enjoined where the light is not materially obstructed so as to make the premises materially less available for beneficial use.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County, in Equity; M. L. Keedy, Judge.

Suit by Martin L. Main against the Mayor and Council of Hagerstown and another, to enjoin interference with an easement. From a decree for defendants, complainant appeals. Affirmed and bill dismissed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Levin Stonebraker and J. A. Mason, both of Hagerstown, for appellant. Alex. R. Hagner, of Hagerstown, for appellees.

STOCKBRIDGE, J. Acting under the authority granted by Act 1813, c. 121, the moderator and commissioners of Hagerstown acquired a lot in that town upon which to erect a market house. It developed that the land purchased was more than was required for the purposes of the market, and by Act 1821-22, c. 66, legislative authority was given to the officials of Hagerstown to sell a portion of the ground so acquired. Thus authorized, they sold to George Brumbaugh the eastern half of the lot. In the deed conveying the property to Mr. Brumbaugh, there was included a covenant reading as follows:

"And the said moderator and commissioners for themselves and their successors in the office further covenant, grant, promise and agree to and with the said George Brumbaugh, his heirs and assigns, that they the said moderator and commissioners and their successors will secure to the said George Brumbaugh, his heirs and assigns, all the benefits and advantages of the light of the doors and windows in the brick buildings which the said George Brumbaugh has erected on the portion of the lot or parcel of ground hereby bargained and sold and which are on that side of said buildings which adjoins the said market space. And the said moderator and commissioners for themselves and their successors further covenant, grant, promise and agree to and with the said George Brumbaugh, his heirs and assigns, that no house, building, edifice or superstructure of any description whatever shall ever be erected on the market space aforesaid within ten feet of the houses which have been erected by the said George Brumbaugh on the portion of the aforesaid lot of ground hereby bargained and sold to the aforesaid George Brumbaugh. And that the said space of ten feet shall be forever kept open and clear and free from all obstructions for the better securing to the said George Brumbaugh, his heirs and assigns, the benefits and advantages of the light to the aforesaid doors and windows."

It will be observed that the effect of this covenant was to grant to Brumbaugh, his heirs and assigns, an easement of light on the west in favor of the building which might be erected by him. It did not include an easement of air or a right of way.

Upon the remaining portion of the lot the Hagerstown officials erected a market house, and left open a space of 10 feet between the lot conveyed to Brumbaugh and the east side of the market house. The easement granted by the deed mentioned has been a source of litigation, the latest phase of which is the present bill of complaint.

In 1875 a proceeding was had in the circuit court for Washington county by which the assignee of Mr. Brumbaugh sought to establish an easement to a right of way over the 10-foot space, but failed to do so, and the bill then filed by Mr. Kauffman was dismissed by Judge Alvey sitting in that court, and no appeal was taken from his decree. In that case, as in this, the town officers apparently placed some reliance upon the ground that the grant of the easement was an ultra vires act. So far as this case is concerned, the same contention, again set up by the defendant might well be regarded as res adjudicata, but that does not seem necessary in the establishment of the defendant's case, and the ground assumed by the judge from whose decree the present appeal is taken is clearly sound.

[1] That ground is that a grant of power of sale necessarily carries with it a grant of power to transfer an interest less than an absolute one. The act of 1821 left to the discretion of the moderator and commissioners the amount of the lot acquired which should be sold, and it was clearly within their power to grant an easement appurtenant to the portion which they did in fact sell.

The bill filed in the present case recites that Martin L. Main, by virtue of sundry mesne conveyances, became the assignee of the lot sold to Brumbaugh. It recites the covenants in the deed already quoted; complains that the mayor and council of Hagerstown have caused to be placed in the 10-foot open space certain "trestles, timber, boards, and structures of wood and other articles" used by those attending the market. The bill then charges that the articles mentioned are obstructions upon the 10 feet, and constitute a breach of the covenant, and closes with the following prayers:

"(a) That the defendants, their servants and agents, and all persons acting by their authority, may be enjoined and prohibited from causing or permitting the articles mentioned in the fifth and sixth paragraphs of this bill of complaint to be placed or stored upon the open space mentioned in said bill of complaint.

"(b) That a mandatory injunction be issued by this honorable court requiring the defendants, their servants and agents, and all persons acting by their authority, to remove, or cause to be removed, from said open space the articles mentioned in the said fifth and sixth paragraphs of this bill of complaint."

These recitals have been made in some detail for the reason that it is nowhere alleged or suggested in the bill, that the light of the building belonging to Mr. Main has been interfered with, nor that the injury suffered by him is irreparable, and the testimony in the case shows rather that what the plaintiff is seeking is to establish his right to an easement of right of way over the 10-foot space then a question of light, or of light and air.

[2] It is not necessary in a case of this sort that irreparable injury should in terms be alleged, but it is necessary that there should appear in the bill such facts as make it apparent to the court that the damage will be irreparable, going to the destruction of the estate of the plaintiff in the manner in which he has been accustomed to enjoy it. Baughner v. Crane, 27 Md. 36; Gilbert v. Arnold, 30 Md. 29; Davis v. Reed, 14 Md. 152; Blaine v. Brady, 64 Md. 373, 1 Atl. 609.

The cases in which an injunction have been granted are such cases as Dudley v. Hurst, 67 Md. 44, 8 Atl. 901, 1 Am. St. Rep. 368, in which the owner of a farm having a large canning establishment thereon was held entitled to an injunction to prevent the removal of the machinery, the deprivation of which would destroy his canning business; Scully v. Kose, 61 Md. 408, where an injunction was granted to restrain the removal of ore from an ore bank, on the ground of the permanent injury to the property; and Douglass v. Rigglin, 123 Md. 18, 90 Atl. 1000, which arose over the right of way in an alley that the defendant was repaving in a manner to effectually prevent the plaintiff's use of the same in the manner in which she had been accustomed to use it.

It is always to be borne in mind, in considering this case, that the only subject with which it is concerned is a question of light. The bill makes no reference whatever to the light, but it does appear in the testimony of the case and is the one grant mentioned in the covenant.

In Attorney General v. Nichol, 16 Ves. 342, Lord Eldon says:

"There is little doubt that courts will not interpose upon every degree of darkening ancient lights in windows; there are many obvious cases of new buildings darkening those opposite them, but not in such a degree that an injunction could be maintained."

The rule thus laid down was followed in England in such cases as Winstanley v. Lee, 2 Swanson, 336, and Sutton v. Lord Mont- ford, 4 Sim. 559. In Van Bergen v. Van Bergen, Chancellor Kent held that to justify the granting of an injunction there must be—

"that sort of material injury to the comfort and existence of those who dwell in the neighboring house which requires the power to prevent as well as remedy the evil."

The English rule was early followed in this country in Wilson v. Cohen, Rice, Eq. (S. C.) 80, and in numerous cases since that time. It does not affirmatively appear in these cases that there was a covenant distinctly relied upon, and the existence of such covenant is urged by the plaintiff in the present case as conclusive of the rights of the parties.

There are two clearly defined lines of cases in this country where a covenant is involved. In Massachusetts there are several cases which hold that, if there be a covenant, that fact alone is determinative of the question. A typical case of this character is the case of Brown v. O'Brien, 168 Mass. 484, 47 N. E. 195; and less strongly, but still tending in the same direction, Lattimer v. Livermore, 72 N. Y. 181. The other line is that the interference with the light, even in cases of a covenant, must be such as to inflict some material injury upon the enjoyment of the property.

In Hagerty v. Lee, 45 N. J. Eq. 1, 15 Atl. 399, there had been the reservation in a deed of light and air to the plaintiff, and it was held that, if it had been made to appear that the interference with the plaintiff's windows would result in his substantial loss of light and air, he would have been entitled to an injunction; but as that condition of affairs did not appear, and as his right under the reservation to maintain windows overlooking these lands, which were not necessary for light and air, had at the time not been settled at law, the injunction which had previously been granted should be dissolved.

In Clawson v. Primrose, 4 Del. Ch. 643, it was said:

"A court of equity will restrain the obstruction of lights, by the erection of adjoining buildings, only when the privation of light and air by a proposed erection will be in such degree as to render the occupation of the complainant's house uncomfortable if it be a dwelling house, or if it be a place of business materially less beneficial than it had formerly been."

The case of Hennen v. De Veny, 71 W. Va. 629, 77 S. E. 142, L. R. A. 1917A, 524, was decided by a divided court. In that case a lot had been conveyed for church purposes, with a covenant that no building should be erected within 10 feet. The church passed to commercial uses. The majority opinion says that:

"The rule is well established that if the covenant benefits the land to which it relates, and enhances its value, the easement created by it becomes appurtenant to the land and passes with it" —and it cites in support of this conclusion the cases of Salisbury v. Andrews, 128 Mass. 336; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Continental Ins. Co., 87 N. Y. 400; Brew v. Van Deman, 53 Tenn.

(6 Heisk.) 433; and Herrick v. Marshall, 66 Me. 435.

As a deduction from all the cases, the general rule is laid down as follows in 14 Cyc. 1218:

"Equity will enjoin any obstruction of an easement of light and air which will materially impair the complainant's enjoyment of his property, or which is in violation of a covenant in the deed by which he holds. Where plaintiff fails to show that he will suffer a substantial deprivation of light or air by the threatened obstruction, the injunction should be denied."

The reasons for this rule are well stated in Lattimer v. Livermore, 72 N. Y. 181, in which case there was a covenant for light and air, and the court said:

"If * * * this covenant had ceased to be of any substantial value to the plaintiff, she would not be permitted in equity to enforce it, simply to annoy and damage other people; but so long as * * * this covenant remains of substantial value to her, and she has in no way extinguished or released her easement, she must be permitted to enforce it."

This would appear to be the reasonable rule to follow to prevent a hold-up.

[3] What are the facts as they appear in the present case? The plaintiff has six windows and a door on the first floor of his west wall, and the same number of windows on his second and third floors, and one small window opening into the basement. The exhibits filed in the case do not show that the open space between the market house and Mr. Main's warehouse is of attractive appearance, or has been beautified to any large extent by the town authorities of Hagerstown. But the question is whether the light of the plaintiff has been obstructed so as to materially interfere with the light in the plaintiff's warehouse. The exhibits, while they show planks and boards resting against the warehouse occupied by the plaintiff, do not show them as resting against his windows, or being such as would diminish the illumination of his place.

It is in evidence that two of the windows have been partially and permanently closed up on the inside by the plaintiff; that as to the other four there are curtains which can be raised or lowered, and that against some of the windows the furniture in the premises of the plaintiff is regularly backed up. This interference with the light by the act of the plaintiff, or the plaintiff's tenant, is much more serious than the temporary placing against his wall of trestles, tables, planks, or other paraphernalia connected with the market, and these market appurtenances are not permanent in their character, but liable to be moved at any time for their use in connection with the market.

The remaining window, the small window in the basement, it is testified, and not contradicted, has been at times filled up by putting a box into the opening on the inside, by the tenant, the effect of which is to deprive the plaintiff's basement of a greater amount of light than any interference therewith on the part of the defendant, and these facts, all taken together, emphasize the limitation upon the right under the covenant for light, that the deprivation must be of such a character as to render the premises materially less available for beneficial use than they had formerly been.

The further fact that these proceedings were instituted without notice to the mayor and council of Hagerstown to remove the alleged obstructions, together with the entire absence from the bill of any allegations of an interference with the light of the plaintiff, all tend to the conclusion that there has not been any such deprivation as to materially affect the plaintiff, or the plaintiff's tenant, in their use of the building. If such a case had been made out, it would have been a proper one under the covenant of the deed for interference by a court of equity; but the proof in this case, and the allegations of the bill, are not sufficient for the granting of the relief prayed.

The decree below will accordingly be affirmed and bill dismissed.

Decree affirmed and bill dismissed, with costs.

RASST v. MORRIS. (No. 32.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 20, 1913.)

ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL \S 8(4)—CONTEMPORANEOUS SUITS.

An action at law to recover value of counterfeit currency, given as part payment on purchase price of property, and a suit in equity to have the purchase money declared a lien on the property sold, could both be maintained at the same time; the relief sought not being the same.

Appeal from Circuit Court of Baltimore City; Morris A. Soper, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Bill by Leon Rasst against Abbott Morris. From an order dismissing the bill, the complainant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Guion Miller, of Easton (Bartlett, Poe & Claggett, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellant. J. Royall Tippet, of Baltimore (Richard B. Tippet & Son, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellee.

BRISCOE, J. This appeal brings for review an order of the circuit court of Baltimore city dated the 20th day of March, 1913, dismissing the appellant's petition and refusing to require the appellee to elect whether he will prosecute a suit at law, in the superior court of Baltimore city, or one instituted by him in equity, in the circuit court of Baltimore city, against the appellant. By an inspection of the record, it appears that the suit at law was instituted in the superior court of Baltimore city on the 12th day of January, 1916, to recover the sum of $19,400 on a contract, under which the defendant paid to the plaintiff the sum of $19,400, in Carranza Mexican currency, and which currency after having been delivered, was found to be counterfeit, and of no value, and which it is alleged the Mexican government had declared to be counterfeit. The suit in equity, in the circuit court of Baltimore city, it will be seen, was filed in that court on March 13, 1916, and sought to have the balance of the purchase money, due under the contract, dated September 10, 1915, which was $19,435, with interest, less $2,500 paid by the appellant, declared to be a lien on the property sold, and described in the bill of complaint, and a trustee to be appointed to make sale of the property to satisfy this lien.

The prayer of the bill, as set out in the record, is as follows:

First. That this court pass a decree declaring the balance of $19,435, with interest thereon, less $2,500 paid by Leon Rasst to the Safe Deposit & Trust Company, owing to your orator by the said Rasst, a lien on said property, and appoint a trustee to make sale of same to satisfy said lien.

Second. That this court pass a decree to the effect that Leon Rasst hold the property for the benefit of and in trust for your orator for the payment of the balance of purchase money due of $19,435 and interest thereon due under the contract of purchase with the defendant of date September 10, 1915, less $2,500 paid by Leon Rasst to the Safe Deposit & Trust Company, trustee.

Third. That this court decree unto your orator such other and further relief as it is competent to give, and which he may be entitled to or which the nature of his cause may require.

The contract of sale which the appellee by the proceedings in the court of law and equity seeks to have enforced is dated September 10, 1915. The property consists of certain land and improvements known as the Mt. Vernon Brewery property, located on Ridgely, Scott, and Carey streets, Baltimore. The purchase price of the property was $32,985, and payable as follows: Twelve thousand five hundred dollars, to be represented by a mortgage for two years at 5 per cent. interest semiannually, with the privilege of prepayment after one year; $19,435 to be represented by the acceptance of $299,000 in Carranzistas Constitucionalista De Mexico currency without any obligation on the part of the purchaser to guarantee the value in United States currency of the said Mexican money, and the balance, to wit, $1,000 to be paid in cash, making in all $32,985.

The only question, at this stage of the proceedings, we are called upon to decide is whether the plaintiff may prosecute both an action at law and a suit in equity, against the defendant, at the same time, for the relief sought by him, or whether he should be forced to elect between the remedies sought and proceed with the one or the other, whichever he may select. The doctrine of the election of remedies is too well settled by former decisions of this and other courts to require any extended discussion here. In 9 R. C. L. 904; § 11, it is said:

"It is a general rule that where a plaintiff is prosecuting an action at law and a suit in equity against a defendant at the same time for the same cause, he may be compelled by the court, on application by the defendant, to elect whether he will proceed with the one or the other; but, to come within this principle, it is required that the two suits must have substantially the same aim and scope, and the relief sought must be in each case substantially the same. In other words, the plaintiff should not be compelled to elect, unless the remedy in the suit at law is equally complete and adequate with the remedy in equity."

In Way v. Bragaw, 16 N. J. Eq. 218, 84 Am. Dec. 147, it was held, that the plaintiff will not be put to his election, unless the suit at law is not only for the same cause, but the effect must be the same. The remedy must be coextensive and equally beneficial to the plaintiff with the remedy in equity. 2 Daniel Ch. Pl. and Pr. 721, 961; 7 Ency. of Pl. and Pr. 360; 15 Cyc. 266.

Judge Phelps, in his work upon Juridical Equity, § 120, says that the maxim that "equity prevents multiplicity of suits" entitles a defendant in equity, who is also sued at law by the same plaintiff for the same matter, after filing his answer, to an order requiring the plaintiff to elect the court in which he will proceed, but the two suits must be ad idem; that is, their object and purpose must be identical. Alex. Ch. Pr. 100; Union Bank v. Kerr, 2 Md. Ch. 460; Swan et al. v. Dent et al., 2 Md. Ch. 115, note; Bradford et al. v. Williams et al., 2 Md. Ch. 6.

In Foley v. Bitter, 34 Md. 653, under a somewhat similar state of facts as are presented in the case at bar, this court held that the lower court was right in dismissing a petition and refusing to require the plaintiff to elect. In that case, the court said:

"There is no rule requiring an election in the case here presented. The proceedings upon the attachment [at law] and the bill [in equity] in this case are not instituted for the same purpose, nor can they attain the same object."

The two suits are not ad idem.

In Wilhelm v. Lee et al., 2 Md. Ch. 823, the chancellor held that the general rule as to the election of remedies applies only to cases where the demand at law and in equity are equally personal, and not where the cumulative remedy is in personam, while the other remedy is upon the pledge or in rem. The remedy in a court of equity upon the mortgage was in rem, and that at law was in personam. Dunkley v. Van Buren, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 330; Jones v. Conde, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 77; 4 Kent, 183.

It is clear, we think, from an examination of the suit at law and the bill in equity in the instant case, that the remedy in the two suits are not coextensive, they were not instituted for the same purpose, and the relief sought is not substantially the same. The suit at law was instituted to recover the value of the counterfeit Mexican currency, which was given as part payment on account of the purchase money for the property sold the appellant by the appellee, and the action is one in personam, and the judgment, if recovered, would be a lien upon the appellant's property. The object and purpose of the suit in equity is to have the purchase money declared a lien on the property sold, and is an action in rem, against that specific property itself.

Upon a careful consideration of the case, we find no sufficient reason to justify us in disturbing the order appealed from, and for the reasons stated it will be affirmed.

Order affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

KRUG v. MERCANTILE TRUST & DEPOSIT CO. OF BALTIMORE et al.
(No. 22.)

1. TRUSTS §272(3)—DIVISION OF PROFITS—LIFE TENANT AND REMAINDERMEN.

Where the trustee held shares of its own stock in trust, and, having realized a profit from the purchase of stock of another corporation whose reduction of capital stock doubled value of that held by the trustee, declared a dividend to its own stockholders, consisting of shares in the other corporation, such dividends from the profits belonged to the life tenant as income.

2. TRUSTS §272(3)—DIVISION OF PROFITS—LIFE TENANT AND REMAINDERMEN—"INCOME."

Dividends of earnings made after the death of the testator are "income," and are payable by the trustees to the life tenant, whether in cash, scrip, or stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Income.]

Appeal from Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City; James M. Ambler, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Special case stated under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 16, § 206, between Caroline Selmar Krug and the Mercantile Trust & Deposit Company of Baltimore as trustee and others. From the decree rendered, Caroline Selmar Krug appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Argued before BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Frank Gosnell, of Baltimore (Karl A. M. Scholtz and Marbury, Gosnell & Williams, all of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellant. Charles McH. Howard, of Baltimore, for appellees.

BRISCOE, J. This is a special case stated under the forty-seventh equity rule (Code, art. 16, § 206), and is an amicable controversy between a beneficiary for life and remaindermen, for the purpose of determining whether or not a distribution of shares of stock of the Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Company (to be hereafter called the Transportation Company) constitute income or corpus of a trust estate. The facts are undisputed, and are set out in an agreed statement in the record, and all of the parties in interest are sui juris.

The testator under whose will the trust was created, died on the 4th of January, 1908, and his will was duly probated in the orphans' court of Baltimore city. The fourth clause of this will is as follows:

"I give, devise and bequeath unto the Mercantile Trust & Deposit Company of Baltimore, two thousand dollars Baltimore City stock, Harford Run, issue 1920, fifty shares of stock of the Maryland Casualty Company and ninety-two shares of stock of the Mercantile Trust & Deposit Company of Baltimore, in trust, to hold said investments for and during the natural life of my daughter, Caroline Selmar Krug, paying to her monthly the net income therefrom, and from and after her death then in trust for my said son, Theodore F. Krug, paying to him during his natural life, the net income therefrom, and immediately from and after my said son's death, said trust shall cease, and the said fund shall then go to and be divided by my said trustee in equal shares, between the descendants of my said son, per stirpes, and not per capita."

By the seventh item of the will one-half of the residuary estate was devised and bequeathed to the trustee upon the same trusts, and the trustee was given power to change the investments.

The appellant is a daughter of the testator, is now living, and is unmarried. The appellee Theodore F. Krug is a son of the testator, is also living, and has five children, who are also appellees, and all of whom are above the age of 21 years.

The Mercantile Trust & Deposit Company of Baltimore, the trustee (to be hereafter called the Trust Company), is a corporation, incorporated under the laws of this state, for the purpose of conducting the business of a safe deposit and trust company. It is admitted that the business transacted by the company includes the purchase of stocks, bonds, and other securities and the selling thereof. In the settlement of the estate of the testator, it appears that 221 shares of the stock of the Trust Company were distributed to the trustee, to be held in trust as provided by the testator's will. Subsequently, on the 23d of December, 1908, the capital stock of the Trust Company was reduced by retiring 25 per cent. of each stockholder's holdings at $130 per share, leaving 165 shares belonging to the Krug trust.

The material facts, bearing upon the investment from which the profit to the Trust Company resulted and which is the subject-matter of this controversy, are set out in the agreed statement of facts and are in part as follows: On April 15, 1914, the Trust Company purchased from the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company the following debentures and stock of the Transportation Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Maryland and engaged in the business of owning and operating a fleet of vessels between the port of Baltimore and the ports of Savannah, Boston, and elsewhere, viz.: $1,950,000 par value of 4 per cent. debentures, due May 1, 1932, 15,190.20 shares of stock of said company of the par value of $100 each. In January 1916, the capital stock of Transportation Company was reduced from $5,000,000 to $3,000,000, by the cancellation of 40 per cent. of its outstanding capital stock, so as to reduce the number of shares held by each holder to three-fifths of his former holdings, whereby the number so held by the Trust Company was reduced to 9,114.12 shares. At the same time the debentures so held by the Trust Company were surrendered and exchanged for new first mortgage 6 per cent. 25-year bonds of the Transportation Company of the aggregate value of $1,305,000, and 4,500 shares of additional capital stock of the Company, whereby the number of shares of stock held by the Trust Company was increased to 13,614.12. The additional shares so acquired, however, were like the former ones carried on the books of the Trust Company under the nominal valuation of $1. Subsequently, the first mortgage bonds acquired by the Trust Company were sold by it, and the amount realized from such sale exceeded the amount which was originally paid when the debentures and stock were first acquired, leaving the Trust Company the owner of 13,614.12 shares of the stock carried on its books at a nominal value. On January 4, 1918, at a meeting of the board of the directors of the Trust Company, the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, that there be distributed from the assets of the Mercantile Trust and Deposit Company to its stockholders for each three (3) shares of the capital stock of this company held by them and standing in their names on January 4, 1918, one (1) share of the capital stock of the Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Company and at the same rate for any smaller or greater number of shares. Such distribution to be made to the stockholders of record at 12 o'clock noon on January 4, 1918, and payable at this office on and after January 11, 1918."

At the time of this distribution, the Trust Company held 13,614.12 shares of the stock of the Transportation Company, and 10,000 shares of this stock were allotted and distributed to the various holders of stock in the Trust Company, in pursuance of its resolution of the 4th of January, 1918. As the Trust Company held, as trustee under the will of Gustav Krug, deceased, 165 shares of its own capital stock, it received by virtue thereof, in the distribution under the resolution, 55 shares of stock of the Transportation Company, and the single question upon the facts here presented is whether these shares of stock, so distributed to the trust estate shall be treated, between the beneficiary for life and remaindermen, as corpus or income. The court below, by its decree of the 27th of February, 1918, held that these shares of stock were corpus or principal, and not income of the trust estate, and that the stock, or any investments thereof, shall be held by the trustee as part of the corpus or principal of the trust estate. From this decree, this appeal has been taken.

It will not be necessary for us to review at length the numerous cases in this court upon the rights of life tenants and remaindermen to dividends or distributions by a corporation, among its stockholders, or to discuss the so-called "Pennsylvania" or "American" rule, which has been adopted and followed in this state. The rule has been stated and the authorities in support thereof have been discussed, in a number of recent cases in this court. Thomas v. Gregg, 78 Md. 545, 28 Atl. 565, 44 Am. St. Rep. 810; Quinn v. Safe Deposit Co., 93 Md. 285, 48 Atl. 835, 58 L. R. A. 169; Smith v. Hooper, 95 Md. 16, 51 Atl. 844, 54 Atl. 95; A. C. L. Dividend Cases, 102 Md. 73, 61 Atl. 295; Ex parte Humbird, 114 Md. 627, 80 Atl. 209; Coudon v. Updegraff, 117 Md. 71, 83 Atl. 145; Foard v. Safe Deposit Co., 122 Md. 476, 89 Atl. 724; Washington County Hospital v. Hagerstown Co., 127 Md. 1, 91 Atl. 787, L. R. A. 1915A, 738; Northern Central Ry. Div. Cases, 126 Md. 16, 94 Atl. 338; Miller v. Safe Deposit Co., 127 Md. 610, 96 Atl. 766.

[1] While the facts of the present case are somewhat unusual, and the question here presented is not free from difficulty, we think the case falls within the principle recognized by this court in Ex parte Humbird, 114 Md. 638, 80 Atl. 209, and followed in the more recent case of Washington County Hospital v. Hagerstown Trust Co., 124 Md. 10, 91 Atl. 787, L. R. A. 1915A, 738, wherein it is said, as stated in Taylor on Private Corporations (4th Ed.) 799, that moneys arising from the sale of corporate property and distributed as a cash dividend are income if they rise from a sale of property made by the corporation in the ordinary course of its business, when it sells only such property as its regular business is to sell. In Thomas v. Gregg, 78 Md. 555, 28 Atl. 568, 44 Am. St. Rep. 810, it is said:

"When a corporation, having actually made profits, proceeds to distribute such profits amongst the stockholders, the tenant for life would be entitled to receive them, and this without regard to the form of the transaction. Equity which disregards form and grasps the substance would award the thing distributed, whether stock or moneys, to whomsoever was entitled to the profits."

In the case at bar, "the assets" distributed among the stockholders represent the profit which had been realized by the Trust Company in the usual course of its business, and was in substance a distribution in kind of a portion of the identical specific profits accruing to the Trust Company from a transaction entered into and completed after the death of the testator. In Miller v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 127 Md. 611, 96 Atl. 766, it is said that:

"The principle is definitely settled * * * that a dividend from earnings accrued and declared after the trust has become operative is payable to the life tenant as income," and "that an income dividend is payable to the person entitled at the time it is declared."

[2] It is also well established that dividends of earnings made after the death of the testator are income and payable to the life tenant no matter whether the dividend be in cash, or scrip or stock. Atlantic Coast Line Cases, 102 Md. 73, 61 Atl. 295; Foard v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 122 Md. 480, 89 Atl. 724; Northern Central Railroad Cases, 126 Md. 16, 25, 94 Atl. 338.

It is clear, we think, under the authorities, that if the 10,000 shares of the Transportation Company had been converted into cash, and distributed in that form, instead of making distribution of the identical shares, which represented the profits, as was done in this case, that the dividend would be treated as income, and not corpus. The mere fact, then, that "the assets" which represented the gains and profits of the investment from this particular transaction were distributed in kind, that is, consisting of shares of stock of another corporation rather than in cash, should not alter or affect the principle involved. In Coudon v. Updegraff, 117 Md. 80, 83 Atl. 145, this court said:

"If this stock dividend was based upon the earnings of the company, and the company had the power to so distribute it, and this power was validly exercised, then this extra 250 shares, declared as a stock dividend, must be treated as income from the trust estate." Coast Line Dividend Cases, 102 Md. 73, 61 Atl. 295.

The English cases hold that dividends of profit consisting of shares of stock of another corporation are income and belong to the life tenant, and between a dividend paid in cash and one paid in property, that is, in stock of another corporation, owned by the distributing corporation, there is no substantial difference. And to the same effect are the cases of Hemenway v. Hemenway, 181 Mass. 406, 63 N. E. 919; Gray v. Hemenway, 212 Mass. 239, 98 N. E. 789, and 223 Mass. 293, 111 N. E. 713; Smith v. Dana, 77 Conn. 543, 60 Atl. 117, 69 L. R. A. 76, 107 Am. St. Rep. 51; Union Tr. Co. v. Taintor, 85 Conn. 452, 83 Atl. 697; Equitable Life Society v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 212 N. Y. 360, 106 N. E. 92, L. R. A. 1915D, 1052.

The facts of this case, we think, under the well-settled rules applicable to this class of cases, require us to hold that the dividend here in controversy is income and not corpus, and is payable to the life tenant. There are a class of cases which deal with the apportionment of dividends between life tenant and remaindermen, but they involve conditions and present a state of facts dissimilar and different from those in this case.

For the reasons stated, the decree appealed from will be reversed, and the cause remanded, to the end that a decree may be passed in accordance with the views expressed herein.

Decree reversed, cause remanded, the costs above and below to be paid equally by the life tenant and the remaindermen.

LANAHAN v. MERCANTILE TRUST & DEPOSIT CO. OF BALTIMORE et al.

(No. 23.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 20, 1918.)

Appeal from Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City; James M. Ambler, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Controversy between Charles M. Lanahan, Jr., and the Mercantile Trust & Deposit Company of Baltimore, trustee, and others. From the decree rendered Lanahan appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Argued before BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Charles Markell, of Baltimore (Karl A. M. Scholtz, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellant. Charles McH. Howard, of Baltimore, for appellees.

BRISCOE, J. The controlling questions, to be determined in this case, are the same as those disposed of and decided by us in No. 22, Krug v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co. et al., 104 Atl. 414, at this term, and for the reasons stated in that case the decree in this case will be reversed, and the cause will be remanded so as a decree may be passed, declaring that the shares of stock in the Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Company, distributed by the Trust Company to the trust estate herein, constitute income and not corpus or principal, and is payable to the life tenant.

Decree reversed and cause remanded, the costs above and below to be paid equally by the life tenant and remaindermen.

STOCKSDALE v. JONES et ux. (No. 31.)

1. PLEADING §324—BILL OF PARTICULARS—EXCEPTION.

In suit on the common counts, where defendants demanded bill of particulars, and plaintiff filed bill stating demand was for money "received by defendants from plaintiff's intestate, to wit," etc., exception to such bill was properly sustained, for, in view of Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 75, § 24, subsec. 107, as amended by Acts 1914, c. 878, a bill of particulars should be specific.

2. TRIAL §45(1)—OFFER OF EVIDENCE.

In suit by administratrix on common counts, announcement by plaintiff's attorney in opening statement that he proposed to show that during life of plaintiff's decedent defendants obtained money from him while he was incapable of making a valid deed or contract, was not a proffer to accompany a certain record from the orphans' court, where decedent's will had been offered for probate, with evidence of his mental condition when the checks involved were given.

3. TRIAL §45(1)—PROFFER OF OTHER EVIDENCE.

It is incumbent on a party to accompany an offer of evidence with a proffer to follow it up with other evidence only where the evidence is not of itself admissible, and to make it so the other evidence must be introduced.

4. WILLS §53(2)—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY—EVIDENCE.

Though the question is whether an alleged testator was capable of making a valid deed or contract at the time the will was executed, evidence of his mental condition prior and subsequent to execution is admissible to reflect on such question.

5. EVIDENCE ¶182—CAPACITY—PRIOR TESTAMENTARY INCAPACITY.

Because decedent was not capable of making a will in September, it does not follow that he could not give valid checks in November.

6. EVIDENCE ¶87(2)—PRESUMPTION OF CONTINUANCE OF CONDITION—INSANITY.

There is no presumption that insanity which is shown to have existed at one time continued, unless it is shown to have been of a permanent character, or the person was suffering from some disease which was progressive, or had been regularly found insane by an inquisition still in force.

7. WILLS ¶431—DENIAL OF PROBATE AS EVIDENCE OF CONTRACTUAL INCAPACITY.

In administratrix's action on common counts to recover money paid defendants by decedent by checks, record of probate proceedings in orphans' court, wherein decedent's alleged will presented by defendants was refused probate for lack of testamentary capacity, was admissible on issue of defendant's capacity to draw checks, but was not conclusive, and by itself was not even evidence on the point.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1056(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In administratrix's suit on common counts to recover money paid defendants by decedent by check on ground of decedent's lack of capacity, exclusion from evidence of record of orphans' court, in proceedings wherein defendant's alleged will was refused probate for lack of testamentary capacity, was harmless, where no further evidence was offered reflecting on defendant's mental condition.

9. TROVER AND CONVERSION ¶4—WHAT CONSTITUTES CONVERSION—DEPOSIT IN BANK.

In suit by administratrix to recover money paid by decedent by checks on ground decedent was without capacity, court properly excluded testimony of officer of bank, where check was deposited by defendant to his own credit, as to whether money was afterwards paid out; a conversion being shown by mere deposit.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1052(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

The exclusion of testimony on a point of fact which was later developed in evidence was harmless.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Carroll County; Robert Moss, Judge.

Suit by Ida F. Stocksdale, administratrix, against Thomas S. Jones and Frances S. Jones, his wife. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Guy W. Steele, of Westminster, for appellant. Theo. F. Brown and F. Neal Parke, both of Westminster (Jno. Milton Reifsnider and Bond & Parke, all of Westminster, on the brief), for appellees.

BOYD, C. J. The appellant sued Thomas S. Jones and Frances S. Jones on the common counts. There was a demand for a bill of particulars, and one was filed as follows:

"To money loaned to defendants by plaintiff's intestate, to wit: On or about November 13, 1914, $500; on or about November 30, 1914, $1,800; and to interest thereon."

At a later term leave was granted the plaintiff to amend the bill of particulars, and an amended one was filed. In place of the language used above it read:

"To money received by the defendants from the plaintiff's intestate, to wit" —and then follows the amounts as stated in the original bill of particulars. An exception was filed to that, which was sustained. The plaintiff then filed a second amended bill of particulars as follows:

"The defendants are indebted to the plaintiff for money had and received from the plaintiff's intestate for the use of the plaintiff's intestate, as follows."

The amounts and dates are the same as those set out above. Issue was joined on the general issue pleas and a plea of the statute of limitations, and the case proceeded to trial, but the plaintiff entered a non pros. as to Frances S. Jones. There are six bills of exception. The first five embrace rulings on evidence, and the sixth was to granting a prayer "that under the pleadings and evidence in this case there is no legally sufficient evidence to enable the plaintiff to recover, and the verdict of the jury must be for the defendant." That prayer was granted, and verdict rendered accordingly. From the judgment entered thereon this appeal was taken.

[1] The first point relied on by the appellant is the ruling of the court on the exception to the amended bill of particulars. There can be no doubt about the correctness of that ruling. "To money received by the defendants from the plaintiff's intestate, to wit," etc., gave the defendants no information as to what the suit was about, or how it was claimed to have been received. It might have been a gift, a loan, or, as stated in Mueller v. Michaels, 101 Md. 188, 60 Atl. 485, in reference to the particulars there filed in a suit under the Practice Act ("for cash money received from the plaintiff in the month of June, 1904, by the defendants in the sum of $285.00"), "it may have been received in the payment of a debt due the defendants; it may have been paid to them under some mistake; it may have been received to be delivered to some third party; or it may have been received by the defendants as a stake to be held to abide the determination of some event. In what way the alleged indebtedness of the defendants arose out of the receipt of the money is left wholly a matter of speculation." In Cairnes v. Pelton, 103 Md. 40, 44, 63 Atl. 105, it is said:

"The office and legal effect of a bill of particulars is to inform the opposite party of the precise nature and extent of the claim which the plaintiff intends to rely upon under each and every count of the narr., and to confine his evidence to the claim thus stated."

That a bill of particulars ought to be specific, like an account filed under a Practice or Speedy Judgment Act, may at least be implied from section 24, subsection 107 of article 75 of the Code, as amended by the act of 1914, chapter 378.

The most important question in this case is presented by the first bill of exceptions, whether the record from the orphans' court of Carroll county was admissible in evidence. Jacob Webster Caple executed a last will and testament on September 14, 1914, and died November 10, 1915. On November 19, 1915, Ida F. Stocksdale, his only daughter, filed in the orphans' court a petition in which she said she had heard there was in existence a paper writing purporting to be his last will and testament, and asked the court not to probate it until she had a reasonable time for an examination of it and the preparation and filing of a formal caveat thereto. On November 22d Thomas S. Jones, the appellee, presented the will to the orphans' court, and declared that the instrument of writing was the true and whole last will and testament of said Caple; that he had found it among the private papers of the deceased, and did not know of any other will or codicil. On November 26th Mrs. Stocksdale filed a caveat, alleging testamentary incapacity, undue influence, fraud, and other grounds, and on November 30th a summons was issued for the devisees and legatees named in the will, including Frances S. and Thomas S. Jones, which was returnable December 14, 1915. All were returned summoned, and on December 14th the trustees of the Sandy Mount Methodist Protestant Church in Carroll County (to whom he had left $500 to be invested and the income to be used for the care of a lot in the church burying ground) and Lewis W. Caple, the executor named, appeared in open court and verbally declined to take any action in the matter. The others did not appear or answer.

The will left Mrs. Jones $500 "for her care and trouble in nursing me and my wife during her illness" and Thomas S. Jones $500 "in consideration of his care and trouble in helping to nurse me and my wife during her illness, and also in caring for and feeding my stock." Item 3 is:

"And, whereas, the said Thomas S. Jones and Frances S. Jones, his wife, have promised to board, wash and iron and care for me during the balance of my life, I do hereby bequeath to them the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars ($250.00) for each and every year or proportionate part thereof, that they may so board, wash and iron and care for me, in the event that I have not already paid them in my lifetime, the sum to be paid in full payment for said board, washing and care."

By item (4) he left $500 to the trustees of Sandy Mount Methodist Protestant Church, as stated above, and he gave his daughter $5 "and no more" in item (5). By item (6) he left all the rest and residue of his estate to his two grandsons, Vernon W. Stocksdale and Howell Kelley Stocksdale, and he then appointed Lewis W. Caple his executor.

Nothing was done until May 2, 1916, when a summons for witnesses was issued returnable on May 12th, when the court heard testimony of witnesses produced on the part of the caveator. On May 26, 1916, the court met for the further consideration of the case, and passed a decree in which, after reciting the proceedings, amongst others that no party defendant had filed an answer, and, "the court being satisfied that at the time said paper writing was executed by the said Jacob Webster Caple he was not of sound and disposing mind and capable of executing a valid deed and contract, and that said paper writing is not the last will and testament of the said Jacob Webster Caple, deceased," the court "adjudged ordered, and decreed that the said Jacob Webster Caple died intestate, leaving as his next of kin and heir at law his only child, the petitioner, Ida F. Stocksdale, and that the probate of the said paper writing * * * be and the same is hereby refused." This exception shows that at the trial of the case in the circuit court the plaintiff's attorney, in his opening statement to the jury, announced that "he proposed to show that during the lifetime of Jacob W. Caple the defendants, Thomas S. Jones and Frances S. Jones, obtained money from him while he was not capable of making a valid deed or contract, and that he would prove he was not capable of making a valid deed or contract by the records of the orphans' court for Carroll county." The plaintiff called the register of wills, who produced "the original papers in the matter of a caveat to the supposed will of Jacob Webster Caple, and a transcript of the docket entries in that case before the orphans' court of Carroll county," which included the petition of Ida F. Stocksdale, of November 19, 1915, the will and depositions of the subscribing witnesses, the caveat, the decree, and the docket entries. The first exception is thus worded:

"Whereupon objection was made to them being offered in evidence, whereupon counsel for the plaintiff made the following offer: These papers offered in evidence, with a transcript of the docket entries in the matter of the caveat of Ida F. Stocksdale to the last will and testament of Jacob Webster Caple, deceased, are

"And the defendants renewed their objection to the introduction in evidence of said papers (but not on the ground that the original papers were offered and not a certified copy thereof), although coupled with the foregoing offer of proof, and the court sustained their objections, and refused to allow said original papers and the transcript of the docket entries to be offered in evidence, to which ruling of the court the plaintiff excepted," etc.

[2] Apparently it was intended to set out the papers and docket entries after the word "are" above, but, however that may be, no proffer to accompany or follow up the record from the orphans' court, with evidence as to the mental condition of the deceased at the time the checks were given, is disclosed in the record in this case. What was said in the opening statement of counsel cannot be said to be such proffer, although

It does show the ground the appellant was relying on for recovery. What is said in an opening statement of counsel cannot be treated as a proffer of additional evidence. Davis v. Calvert, 5 Gill & J. 310, 25 Am. Dec. 282; 38 Cyc. 1327. Nor do we find anything to justify the statement in the appellant's brief that the court refused to receive the record of the orphans' court, "as well as any evidence showing the mental condition of the plaintiff's intestate."

[3] The question, however, is whether any proffer of other evidence was necessary in order to introduce the orphans' court record. Sometimes it is incumbent on a party to accompany an offer of evidence with a proffer to follow it up with other evidence, but that is only where it is not of itself admissible, and in order to make it so other evidence has to be introduced. As has been said in several cases in this court, a party cannot afford all of his evidence at the same time, and when he tenders that which is legal and material to the issue, it is the duty of the court to receive it, and it cannot require him to state in advance what other proof he intends to offer. Patterson v. Crowther & Boone, 70 Md. 124, 132, 16 Atl. 581; Met. Life, Ins. Co. v. Dempsey, 72 Md. 288, 19 Atl. 642; Scaggs v. Reilley, 89 Md. 162, 43 Atl. 58, or, as was said in Taylor v. State, 79 Md. 130, 28 Atl. 815:

"It was his unconditional right to pursue his own order in offering his proof; and it was the duty of the court to admit any legal evidence material to the issue, although it would not be sufficient to maintain the issue on his part, unless followed up by other proof." (Italics ours.)

If it alone is not sufficient to sustain the case, the court can on application so instruct the jury. Plank Road Co. v. Bruce, 6 Md. 457.

[4-7] This record, if standing alone, would undoubtedly not be sufficient to prove that at the dates of the checks in November, 1914, the deceased was not mentally capable of making or giving them, but, as has often been held in will cases, while the question is whether the alleged testator was capable of making a valid deed or contract at the time the will was executed, evidence of his mental condition prior and subsequent to the execution is admitted for the purpose of reflecting on that question. Davis v. Calvert, 5 Gill & J. 300, 25 Am. Dec. 282; Brashears v. Orme, 93 Md. 442, 49 Atl. 620; Harris v. Hip-sley, 122 Md. 418, 89 Atl. 852. We entirely agree with the appellee that because a man is not capable of making a will in September it does not follow that he cannot give valid checks in November. That depends upon circumstances, and in this case there is not even anything to show for what the checks were given. It is also true that there is no presumption that insanity, which is shown to have existed at one time, continued, unless it was proven to be of a permanent character, or the party was suffering from some disease which was progressive, or he had been regularly found insane by an inquisition which was still in force. But that does not seem to us to meet the whole question, and the record was in our judgment admissible. It was, however, not conclusive, and by itself was not even evidence of the mental condition of the deceased when the checks were given, or sufficient to show that he was incapable of giving valid checks at those times. Nor can we agree with the appellee that the case of Packham v. Glend-meyer, 103 Md. 416, 63 Atl. 1048, is conclusive of the question now being considered. There a will executed in 1903 had been set aside on the findings of a jury that there was fraud, undue influence, and incapacity to make the will. A will executed in 1902 was then offered for probate, to which a caveat was filed, and the findings on the issues upon the will of 1903 and the judgment of the orphans' court were offered in evidence at the trial of the issues as to the one of 1902. Some of the caveatees in the contest over the will of 1902 were not parties to the caveat of the will of 1903. The court held that the finding of the jury upon the issue as to fraud under the will of 1903 was not admissible, and then said:

"In regard to the testamentary capacity of the testatrix which was passed upon by the jury, in the proceedings referred to in the offer of evidence in question, what was determined as to that was her capacity vel non at the very time of the execution of the will which was there in controversy. The finding had no relation to any time anterior, and was but the opinion of the jury upon evidence relating to the case in which it was adduced. Judgments and decrees as against those not parties to them are only 'admissible to prove rem ipsam, and the legal incidents and consequences' thereof; but 'not to prove the facts' upon which they are founded. Parr v. State, 71 Md. 220 [17 Atl. 1020]; [Dorsey v. Gassaway] 2 Har. & Johns. 402-406 [3 Am. Dec. 557]. The contention of the appellants here would give to the findings of a jury a greater or larger effect in respect to their admissibility as evidence than the law gives to judgments and decrees."

It will thus be seen that the court had in mind in that case that some of the parties to it were not parties to the first proceeding. In this case both Mr. and Mrs. Jones were parties to the caveat, and there would seem to be no doubt that they were bound by the decision made by the orphans' court; that is to say, that the deceased was not capable of making a valid deed or contract on September 14, 1914. Of course, it was not conclusive against them as to the capacity to draw the checks, but it was admissible evidence as reflecting upon that, if there was other evidence tending to show the lack of capacity to give the checks. The record offered in Packham v. Glendmeyer was not admissible against those who were not parties to it, and hence was necessarily rejected as to all, as the verdict of the jury would be as to the validity of the will of 1902, and it could not be said the record of the proceedings as to the will of 1903 was admissible as to some and not for other caveators.

In the discussion of the admissibility of judicial records in Reynolds on Trial Evidence, pages 52-61, the learned author points out that every record of a court consists of two distinct parts, denominated in Best on Evidence, § 590, as "the substantive and judicial portions," and he explains them. He says on page 55 that the judicial portions of records (the part in which the court expresses its judgment of opinion on the matter) are "admissible and conclusive as between the parties and their privies," and in further explanation of that it is stated that every judgment rendered by a court having competent jurisdiction over the parties and the subject-matter is, as between the parties, conclusive proof of all facts actually decided by the court, and appearing from the record itself to be the ground on which the judgment was based, unless evidence was admitted in the action in which judgment was delivered which is excluded in the action in which that judgment is intended to be proved, or vice versa." The case of Gridley v. Boggs, 62 Cal. 190, cited by the appellee, does not seem to us to meet the question spoken of above. The parties sought to be affected by the determination in the former proceeding do not appear to have been parties to that case. Moreover, the decision in Gridley v. Boggs, seems to have been largely influenced by a statute in force in that state.

[8] But, notwithstanding what we have said, the difficulty in this case is that there was no evidence offered which could be said in any way to reflect upon the mental condition of the deceased, excepting that record. We cannot understand why evidence was not introduced, if the appellant had it, but we find no evidence whatever in the record which throws any light on that question, excepting so far as the record may do so. The record itself was not legally sufficient to show incapacity of Mr. Caple at the time the checks were given, and hence we are forced to the conclusion that there was no error in the court granting the prayer taking the case away from the jury, even if the record of the orphans' court be considered and treated as in evidence, and as a result of that conclusion there is no reversible error in rejecting the record.

[9, 10] There can be no doubt about the correctness of the ruling in the second exception. The question was, "Now, Mr. Stem, that money was afterwards paid out?" Mr. Stem was the officer of the bank where the check was deposited by Jones, who had deposited it to his own credit. In the appellant's brief it is said that question was asked "to show the conversion by the appellee to his use of the $1,800," but it was certainly not necessary for the plaintiff to introduce it to show a conversion, as that was already shown by the appellee's depositing the check to his own credit in the bank. Moreover, it was later proven by the witness Benson that about December 1, 1914, Jones paid him $1,800, and told him he got it from Mr. Caple, and therefore the appellant could not have been injured by the refusal of the court to allow the question to be answered.

In regard to the questions in the third, fourth, and fifth bills of exception, it is only necessary to say that they did not in any way reflect upon the competency of the deceased to give checks, or tend to show any right of the plaintiff to recover, and, under our view of the instruction given, it would be useless to discuss them.

We have not thought it necessary to discuss the pleadings nor the form of the bill of particulars, but whatever the theory of the latter was, there is no legally sufficient evidence to sustain it. The only difference between it and the ordinary count for money had and received is that the bill of particulars states that it was received from the plaintiff's intestate. There is no evidence whatever to show that it was received for the use of the plaintiff's intestate, which is a very material part of the count and in this case of the bill of particulars.

From what we have already said, it will be seen that in our judgment there was no error in granting the defendants' first prayer. It follows that the judgment must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, the appellant to pay the costs.

BOWERS v. COOK et al. (No. 21.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 2, 1918.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §=85(4) —CONCEALMENT OF ASSETS—JURISDICTION OF ORPHANS' COURT.

Though jurisdiction of orphans' court, under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 93, § 243, prescribing action of administrator where person conceals part of estate, is limited to cases where title is not involved, under section 244, court has jurisdiction to determine title to property alleged to be concealed by or in possession of administrator, and not included in inventory or list of debts returned by him.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §=85(9) —CONCEALMENT OF ASSETS—ISSUE PRESENTING LAW AND FACT—STATUTE.

On petition against administratrix in orphans' court, under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 93, § 244, for concealment of assets, fact that issue, sent for trial to circuit court, whether there was such concealment, presented a mixed question of law or fact, did not render it fatally defective.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §=85(9) —CONCEALMENT OF ASSETS—TRIAL OF ISSUE IN CIRCUIT COURT—JUDGMENT OF ORPHANS' COURT.

After trial in circuit court of issue as to administratrix's concealment of assets, which issue covered entire case made by petition in orphans' court and answer of administratrix, she was not entitled to new issues as to facts admissible in evidence under old issue, and it became duty of orphans' court to render judgment in accordance with verdict certified to it.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶85(9)
—CONCEALMENT OF ASSETS—ISSUE FOR TRIAL IN CIRCUIT COURT—NOTICE.

Where administratrix was charged in orphans' court with concealment of assets, she should have been notified of issue proposed by petitioners to be submitted to circuit court, and given opportunity to object or propose another, and to exercise right of appeal from order of orphans' court.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶85(9)
—CONCEALMENT OF ASSETS—LACHES.

Administratrix charged in orphans' court with concealment of assets held guilty of laches, depriving her of any relief she might have been entitled to on prompt application to court after she became aware of granting of issue of concealment for trial in circuit court, or discovered alleged fraud in procuring it.

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶85(9)
—CONCEALMENT OF ASSETS—APPEAL FROM ORDER OF ORPHANS' COURT—STATUTE.

Under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 93, § 245, appeal to Court of Appeals of administratrix from order of orphans' court dismissing her petition to set aside a judgment, entered on trial of an issue in the circuit court, finding her guilty of concealment of assets, must be dismissed; order being reviewable in circuit court.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Baltimore County.

"To be officially reported."

Petition by Georgeanna Bowers, administratrix of William Thomas Bowers, deceased, against John H. Cook and Samuel M. Lucas. From an order dismissing the petition, petitioner appeals. Appeal dismissed.

See, also, 124 Md. 567, 93 Atl. 162.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Linwood L. Clark, of Baltimore, for appellant. T. Scott Offutt, of Towson (Thomas H. Robinson, of Bel Air, on the brief), for appellees.

THOMAS, J. William Thomas Bowers, of Baltimore county, Md., died leaving a last will and testament, which was duly admitted to probate by the orphans' court of Baltimore county on the 18th day of September, 1913, and letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to his widow, Georgeanna Bowers. The testator devised and bequeathed his estate to John H. Cook and Samuel M. Lucas, in trust to pay the income therefrom to his said widow, as therein provided, during her life, and after her death to divide his estate between his "children or their heirs," and on the 9th of February, 1916, the trustees, who were administering the trust under the jurisdiction of the circuit court for Baltimore county, filed a petition in the orphans' court of Baltimore county, alleging that Georgeanna Bowers, administratrix, had filed what purported to be her final account, and—"that the said Georgeanna Bowers * * * collected and reduced to her possession the sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000) of the proper estate and property of William T. Bowers, * * * deceased, * * * and although said money belonged to and should have been accounted for and returned by her as a part of the estate and property of William T. Bowers, her said decedent, in the inventory and other accounts filed by her in the above-entitled matter, yet she failed and neglected to account for the same, or any part thereof, and still fails and neglects and refuses to account for the same, or any part thereof, but conceals and retains the same in her possession, in violation of her duties in the premises, and to the loss and injury of said estate, and that the inventory and accounts filed by her in the matter of the estate of William Thomas Bowers are false, in that they did not fully and completely show the amount of the personal property of the testator which came into the hands of Georgeanna Bowers, administratrix as aforesaid, in that it does not show she received the said sum of $2,000 which in truth and fact she did receive as of the goods, chattels, and property of William Thomas Bowers, deceased, and that the neglect of said administratrix to make and file an inventory of the same, and to account for the same to the court, is a fraud upon your petitioners."

The petition prayed the court to pass an order requiring said administratrix to appear before the court on a day to be therein named "to show cause, if any she has, why the money mentioned and referred to in this petition should not be returned and accounted for to this court as a part of the estate of her decedent, William Thomas Bowers, and her letters of administration revoked, and an administrator or administrators appointed to properly administer said estate," and on the same day the orphans' court passed an order as prayed. The administratrix answered the petition, alleging that she had accounted for the whole of the personal estate of the deceased, and alleging, in substance, that the $2,000 mentioned in the petition belonged to her, and was not a part of the decedent's estate. The answer also relied upon the decision of this court in 124 Md. 567, 93 Atl. 162, as having determined her right to the money mentioned in the petition. On the 25th of April, 1916, the petitioners filed a replication to the answer, and also a petition praying the orphans' court to send to the circuit court for Baltimore county for trial the following issue:

"Whether the said Georgeanna Bowers, administratrix of William Thomas Bowers, collected and reduced to her possession the sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000) of the proper estate and property of William Thomas Bowers, late of Baltimore county, deceased, as aforesaid, which she conceals and refuses to account for as a part of the estate of said William Thomas Bowers."

On the same day the orphans' court passed an order directing that the issue as framed by the petitioners be sent to the circuit court for trial, and that in the trial thereof the petitioners should be the plaintiffs and the administratrix the defendant. The record shows that the case was removed from the circuit court for Baltimore county to the circuit court for Harford county, and that the transcript of the record was filed in the latter court on the 25th of October, 1916; that the trial commenced on January 8, 1917, and resulted in a verdict, on January 10, 1917, in favor of the plaintiffs.

On the 3d of April, 1917, the administratrix filed her petition in the orphans' court of Baltimore county, praying that court to "rescind the issue" previously granted by it, that the verdict of the jury thereon be not received, and that said verdict be rejected as the basis of a final judgment or order in the case, and that certain issues contained in her petition be sent to a court of law for trial in lieu of the issue tried in the circuit court for Harford county. The petition alleged, as reasons for granting the relief prayed:

That the issue sent to the circuit court for trial was defective in form, and presented a question of law and not an issue of fact; that "the ambiguous, complex, and misleading form of this issue, considered together with the clandestine way it was put through by the petitioners, without any knowledge to the respondent or her attorney, until called for trial in the circuit court, which fact compelled the removal of said issue, represented a fraudulent and collusive attempt to confuse the issue by ambiguous and technical language, and to deliberately keep your respondent in ignorance of the request for and transmission of said issue until too late for this court to revoke or remodel, so as to present the issue in a plain and clear way," and that, "no notice having been received by her or her attorney from any source, that she was to be or was defendant in said trial of issues, until same was peremptorily called for trial in the circuit court months later, your respondent could do no more, and no less, than defend her rights the best she could under said so-called issue, and thereafter rely upon your honorable court for the relief hereby prayed; the established rule of law being that 'the orphans' court has no power to revoke or remodel issues after they have been transmitted for trial.'"

The petition prayed the court to pass an order requiring the trustees to show cause under oath why the prayer of the petition should not be granted, and that she be given an opportunity to offer testimony in support of the facts therein alleged. The orphans' court accordingly passed an order requiring the trustees to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be granted. The trustees answered, denying the averments of the petition, and alleging that the issue tried in the circuit court was in proper form and the orphans' court passed an order setting the petition for hearing on the 13th of September, 1917. At the hearing the administratrix offered to prove that neither she nor her attorney knew of the application for the issue sent to the circuit court at the request of the trustees, or of the transmission of said issue to the circuit court, until it was called for trial in the circuit court for Baltimore county; that she was taken by surprise, and in order to gain time in which to determine what to do she had to resort to her right of removal, and that before the jury was sworn in the circuit court for Harford county her attorney announced that his appearance at the trial was not to be construed as a waiver of her right to move the orphans' court for a rescission of the issue as illegal. This evidence was objected to by counsel for the trustees, and the objection was sustained by the orphans' court, and on the 18th day of September, 1917, the orphans' court passed the order, from which this appeal was taken, dismissing the petition of the administratrix and requiring her to pay the costs of the proceedings, and adjudging, on the verdict of the jury in the circuit court for Harford county, which had been certified to the orphans' court, that she had "collected and reduced to her possession the sum of $2,000 of the proper estate and property of William Thomas Bowers, late of Baltimore county, for which she has not accounted as part of the estate of William Thomas Bowers."

The theory of the appellant is (1) that the only question raised by the petition of the trustees and her answer thereto involved the title to the $2,000 mentioned in the petition, and that the orphans' court had no jurisdiction to determine that question; and (2) that the issue sent to the circuit court for trial at the instance of the trustees presented only an issue of law, and that the verdict of the jury in the circuit court for Harford county could not therefore be made the basis of an order or judgment of the orphans' court.

[1] Section 243 of article 93 of the Code prescribes the course to be pursued by an administrator where any person conceals a part of his decedent's estate, and section 244 extends the provisions of section 243 "to all cases where any person interested in any decedent's estate shall by bill or petition allege that the administrator has concealed, or has in his hands and has omitted to return in the inventory or list of debts, any part of his decedent's assets." While the jurisdiction of the orphans' court under section 243 is limited to cases of concealment of assets belonging to the estate of a decedent, where no question of title to the property is involved (Gibson v. Cook, 62 Md. 260; Linthicum v. Polk, 93 Md. 84, 48 Atl. 842; Dronenberg v. Harris, 108 Md. 597, 71 Atl. 81), this court has repeatedly decided that under section 244 the orphans' court has jurisdiction to determine questions of title to the property alleged to be concealed by or in the possession of the administrator, and not included in the inventory or list of debts returned by him (Linthicum v. Polk, supra; Dronenberg v. Harris, supra; Pratt v. Hill, 124 Md. 252, 92 Atl. 543). The reasons for so holding are fully stated in Linthicum v. Polk, supra, where the court, referring to section 244, said:

"The plain language of that section not only applies to concealment by the administrator, but to cases in which he has omitted to return in the inventory, or list of debts, any part of his decedent's estate," and that the orphans' court could not "be shorn of all power to compel administrators to file true and correct inventories and lists of debts on the mere allegation of the administrator that the property belonged to him."

[2] In Pratt v. Hill, supra, Chief Judge Boyd, speaking for this court, quotes the statement in Cummings v. Robinson, 95 Md. 83, 51 Atl. 1105, that, in order to give the orphans' court jurisdiction under section 244:

"It must be alleged and shown, either that the administrator 'has concealed or has in his hands and has omitted to return in the inventory or list of debts' some part of his decedent's assets."

Both of these averments were made in the petition of the trustees, and were denied by the answer of the administratrix, who also alleged in her answer that the $2,000 mentioned in the petition was her property. The allegations of the petition, and the issue sent by the orphans' court to the circuit court for trial followed very closely the language of section 244. The fact that the issue presented a mixed question of law and fact did not render it fatally defective. In the case of Connelly v. Beall, 77 Md. 116, 28 Atl. 408, Chief Judge Alvey said:

"The sixth issue is objected to as being but the mere statement of facts fully covered by, and made admissible under, the second issue, and that, if the second issue be found for the caveator, it would embrace all the facts that could be given in evidence under the sixth issue proposed. In this contention of the appellants we entirely agree. The statute has fixed the standard of mental capacity to enable a party to make a valid last will and testament. * * * This standard prescribed by the statute requires a further definition by the court as to what condition of mind is required to enable a party to execute a valid deed or contract. But an issue formed in the terms of the statute presents a mixed question of law and fact, and that question can always be submitted to the jury under proper instructions by the court. This test, as prescribed by the statute, is fully presented by the second issue; and every fact that could be offered under the sixth issue can be availed of under the second."

And in the later case of McSherry v. Wimsatt, 116 Md. 652, 82 Atl. 451, the court said:

"The phraseology adopted by the orphans' court of Frederick county is a paraphrase of the language of the Code (article 93, section 317), and undoubtedly the better form in which to present an issue upon the execution of a will is to adopt as nearly as possible the language of the statute."

[3] The issue tried in the circuit court covered the entire case made by the petition of the trustees and the answer of the administratrix. After the trial of that issue, the administratrix was not entitled to new or other issues as to facts admissible in evidence under the issue already tried, and it became the duty of the orphans' court to render its judgment in accordance with the verdict of the jury certified to it. Pegg v. Warford, 4 Md. 385; Levy v. Levy, 28 Md. 25; Diffenderfer v. Griffith, 57 Md. 81; Decker v. Fahrenholtz, 107 Md. 522, 68 Atl. 1048, 72 Atl. 339; Pleasants v. McKenney, 109 Md. 277, 71 Atl. 955; Sumwalt v.

[4, 5] The petition of the administratrix alleges in general terms that the issue sent to the circuit court was procured by fraud, and that she was kept in ignorance of the request for and transmission of said issue until it was called for trial. The petition does not allege of what the fraud consisted, nor is there any proof to sustain the charge. She did offer to prove that she did not know that the issue had been granted until it was called for trial in the circuit court for Baltimore county. The record, however, shows that the case was removed by her from the circuit court for Baltimore county to the circuit court for Harford county, and that the record was filed in the latter court on the 25th of October, 1916. There was no request for issues in the petition filed by the trustees on February 9, 1916, which was answered by the administratrix on the 23d of February, 1916. The petition for the issue sent to the circuit court was not filed until April 25, 1916, and the issue was granted by the orphans' court on the same day without, so far as the record discloses, any notice to the administratrix. This is not in accordance with the proper practice in such cases. The administratrix should have been notified of the issue proposed by the petitioners, and given an opportunity to object to it, or to propose another issue in lieu thereof, and to exercise her right of appeal from the order of the orphans' court in reference thereto. But in this case the administratrix knew that the issue had been granted when the case was called for trial in the circuit court for Baltimore county. She thereafter participated in the trial of the issue in the circuit court for Harford county, and did not file her petition in this case until the 3d of April, 1917. Under these circumstances, she must be held to have been guilty of such laches as deprived her of any relief she might have been entitled to upon prompt application to the orphans' court, after she became aware of the granting of the issue, or discovered the alleged fraud in procuring the same. Redman v. Chance, 32 Md. 42; Munnikhuysen v. Magraw, 57 Md. 172; Pleasants v. McKenney, supra. Her title to the $2,000 was not determined in 124 Md. 567, 93 Atl. 162.

[6] A motion has been made to dismiss the appeal. Section 245 of article 93 of the Code provides that either party to a bill or petition filed under sections 243 or 244 "may appeal to the circuit court for the county, or to the superior court of Baltimore city," and this court has held in numerous cases that the appeal provided for in this section applies to every proceeding instituted under sections 243 and 244, and is exclusive of all other appeals. Hignutt v. Oranor, 62 Md. 219; Linthicum v. Polk, supra; Stonesifer v. Shriver, 100 Md. 27, 59 Atl. 139; McAvoy v. Renehan, 116 Md. 333, 81 Atl. 673. In McAvoy v. Renahan, supra, the proceeding was under what is now section 244 of article 93 of the Code, and the appeal was from an order of the orphans' court refusing to receive the answer of the administrator and to grant his application for issues to be sent to a court of law for trial. This court held that the order appealed from was only reviewable in the circuit court, and dismissed the appeal. The appeal in this case must be dismissed upon the same ground.

Appeal dismissed, with costs.

McMULLEN, State Comptroller, v. SHEPHERD. (No. 26.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 20, 1918.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §26 — POWER OF LEGISLATURE—LIMITATION.

The Legislature of the state has all power, except such as is expressly denied to it by the state or federal Constitution.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §16 — CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTION.

In construing the Constitution, the Court of Appeals is to consider the circumstances attending its adoption, and what appears to have been the understanding of the people when they adopted it; one of the useful and most helpful sources being the debates of the convention.

3. PUBLIC LANDS §154—COMPENSATION OF LAND COMMISSIONER—STATUTE—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Acts 1900, c. 318 (Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 54, § 13), providing treasurer of state shall pay back to commissioner of land office 25 per cent. of moneys received from him, is violative of Const. art. 7, § 45, providing commissioner shall semiannually report all fees to comptroller of treasury, and void.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Anne Arundel County; Robert Moss, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Petition for mandamus by James S. Shepherd, Land Commissioner of the State of Maryland, against Hugh A. McMullen, Comptroller of the State. From an order that the writ issue, respondent appeals. Reversed, and petition dismissed.

Argued before BOYD, O. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Albert C. Ritchie, Atty. Gen., for appellant. J. C. France and Edgar Allan Poe, both of Baltimore, for appellee.

CONSTABLE, J. James S. Shepherd, land commissioner of the state of Maryland, filed his petition praying that Hugh A. McMullen, comptroller of the state of Maryland, be directed to issue his warrant upon the treasury of the state of Maryland in favor of the said petitioner, in the amount of 25 per cent. of the moneys paid by the petitioner into the treasury, as shown by accounts filed by him with the comptroller on the 31st day of March and on the 30th day of September, 1917. The comptroller filed an answer to the said petition denying that the petitioner was entitled to the 25 per cent. of moneys referred to in his petition, and further averring that chapter 318 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland of 1900, codified as section 13 of article 54 of the Annotated Code of Maryland, upon which alone the petitioner based his alleged right to the writ of mandamus, was unconstitutional, null, and void so far as the same provides that:

"25 per cent. of such moneys so received the treasurer shall pay over on warrant of the comptroller semiannually to the commissioner of the land office."

The petitioner demurred to the answer, and, upon the court overruling the demurrer, the writ was ordered issued, and this appeal taken. This appeal brings up for decision the right of the land commissioner to receive, by way of compensation, fees of his office in addition to the salary provided by the Constitution.

[1] The only question involved is whether chapter 318 of the Acts of 1900 is obnoxious to the Constitution of Maryland and therefore void. It is a well-settled rule that:

"The Legislature has all power, except such as is expressly denied to it by the state or federal Constitution." Thrift v. Laird, 125 Md. 70, 93 Atl. 449.

The constitutional provisions relating to the land commissioner are found in sections 4 and 5 of article 7, and are as follows:

"Sec. 4. There shall be a commissioner of the land office, who shall be appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold his office during the term of the Governor, by whom he shall have been appointed, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified. He shall perform such duties as are now required of the commissioner of the land office, or such as may hereafter be prescribed by law, and shall also be the keeper of the chancery records. He shall receive a salary of one thousand five hundred dollars per annum, to be paid out of the treasury, and shall charge such fees as are now, or may be hereafter fixed by law. He shall make a semiannual report of all the fees of his office, both as commissioner of the land office, and as keeper of the chancery records, to the comptroller of the treasury and shall pay the same semiannually into the treasury.

"Sec. 5. The commissioner of the land office shall also, without additional compensation, collect, arrange, classify, have charge of, and safely keep all papers, records, relics and other memorials connected with the early history of Maryland not belonging to any other office."

The Constitution of 1861, section 6 of article 7, provided that the commissioner should sit as judge of the land office and should receive as a salary therefor the sum of $200 per year and should retain for the performance of the other duties of his office, as compensation, the fees received. By chapter 415 of the Acts of 1853, and chapter 149 of the Acts of 1854, the commissioner was authorized to receive fees for recording papers and proceedings in land cases, and further to deduct as his compensation 25 per cent. from all moneys on account of public lands, the remaining 75 per cent. to be paid to the state. By chapter 208 of the Acts of 1861-62, the commissioner was made the custodian of the records of the court of chancery and was paid a salary of $500 per annum.

As we have seen from a perusal of the present constitutional provision relating to this office, it is apparent that somewhere between the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1851 and the Constitution of 1867 it changed from a fee office to a salary office, and we will find that this change was made by the framers of the Constitution of 1864 and continued with slight modifications in the Constitution of 1867.

[2] In construing the Constitution we are to consider the circumstances attending its adoption and what appears to have been the understanding of the people when they adopted it, and one of the useful and most helpful sources is the debates of the convention. Bandel v. Isaac, 13 Md. 202; Mayor, etc., v. State, 15 Md. 376; Bonsal v. Yellott, 100 Md. 481, 60 Atl. 593, 69 L. R. A. 914; Jackson v. State, 87 Md. 191, 39 Atl. 504.

According to the Debates of the Maryland Constitutional Convention of 1864, as found in volume 1, at page 163, the committee on civil offices made a report to the convention in which they recommended that the land commissioner should be elected by the people for the term of six years, and should receive a salary of $1,800 and should turn all of the fees of his office into the treasury. On page 1069 of the second volume of the "Debates," the section referring to the land office was first taken up for debate. The section was read, and the president of the convention said:

"The President: 'I have been requested by the commissioner of the land office to state to the convention that the salary fixed in this section does not amount to what he actually receives at the present time. I think he said the amount he now receives was not less than two thousand dollars. I make this statement for the consideration of the convention at his request.'

"Mr. Briscoe: 'Does that include the compensation he receives for performing the duties of keeper of the chancery records?'

"The President: 'My understanding was that it applied to both offices.'

"Mr. Daniel: 'He referred a petition to us on that subject, asking that his salary be fixed, instead of giving him fees. I wish to say further that I think the report of the commissioner of the land office shows that some years his compensation has gone down as low as $1,500 or $1,600; on other years it has gone up as high as $2,700 or $2,800. It shows that his fees are now decreasing, and in a few years they will doubtless not amount to as much as $1,800. That consideration influenced the committee to fix his salary at some reasonable sum, and they considered that $1,800 was about a fair compensation under all circumstances.'"

"The President: 'I understand that the commissioner of the land office receives a stipulated salary, as keeper of the chancery records, under the existing law, of $500; and that all the fees are to go into the treasury.'

"Mr. Daniel: 'It was the intention of the committee that all the fees should be paid into the treasury, and he should receive the $1,800 as a substitute.'"

The petition that the then land commissioner referred to the committee, and which was mentioned to the convention, was read to the convention and is too lengthy to insert in this opinion, but we will insert one paragraph of it from page 1183 of volume 2:

"I would respectfully suggest that the office may be continued in its present form, and the evil growing out of the influence of the commissioner's decisions upon his emoluments corrected, by fixing a salary to be paid out of the treasury of the state, the fees of register and examiner general to be charged and received by the commissioner, to be paid by him into the treasury, after deducting necessary office expenses. This would also relieve the office from the embarrassment necessarily arising from the uncertain and unsettled state of his compensation."

The section was afterwards passed by the convention fixing the salary at $2,000, although there was considerable debate as to whether or not the smallness of the business done did not justify an abolishment of the office.

No one can have any doubt, after a reading of the debates, that it was the intention, not only of the members of the convention but of the land commissioner himself, that a salary of $2,000 was to be in lieu of all fees, and the language of the section itself, "providing that the fees shall be turned in to the state treasury," gives assurance. When the convention of 1867 met, an effort to abolish the office was again renewed, and the convention at first voted to abolish the office (see proceedings Maryland Constitutional Convention 1867, p. 486), but later reconsidered their action and continued the office at a salary reduced from $2,000 to $1,500 and added section 5 as it now stands, which simply made him the historiographer of the state of Maryland. By chapter 66 of the Acts of 1874, the commissioner was made the custodian of certain deed books, and provision was made for him receiving and retaining fees for making copies and searches of the same. The provision of this act, together with the Acts of 1853 and 1854 about which we have heretofore spoken, were codified as sections 6, 9, 11, and 13 of article 54 of the Code of 1888. Section 11 of the Code of 1888, which was the Act of 1853, § 5, which authorized the commissioner to deduct as his other compensation 25 per cent. of all moneys received on account of the public lands the balance to be paid over to the state, was amended by the Acts of 1894, c. 191, so as to require the commissioner to pay over all such moneys to the state. The Acts of 1900, c. 318, now codified as section 13 of article 54 Bagby's Code and is the act involved in this controversy, sought to restore to the commissioner the right to this 25 per cent., and is as follows:

"All moneys payable to the state on account of the public lands and all fees shall be paid to the commissioner of the land office, whose receipts therefor shall be a good acquittance to the party paying the same; and the said commissioner shall keep an accurate account of all such payments in a book kept for the purpose, and shall account semiannually on the thirty-first day of March and the thirtieth day of September with the comptroller, on oath and pay over to the treasurer all such moneys so received; and twenty-five per cent. of such moneys so received & treasurer shall pay over on warrant of the comptroller semiannually to the commissioner of the land office."

[3] What more is this legislative enactment than an attempted amendment of a constitutional provision? The Constitution says in plain, unequivocal, and express language that he shall make a semiannual report of all the fees of his office, both as commissioner of the land office, and as keeper of the chancery records, to the comptroller of the treasury, and shall pay the same semiannually into the treasury, the plain meaning of which can only be that fees collected are not to be retained as any part of his compensation, notwithstanding which the Legislature passes this statute, which, in effect, it seeks to set aside this constitutional provision. There is no question the Legislature can place additional duties upon the office, but it cannot allow the occupants, in the face of the express prohibition of the Constitution, to retain or recover any part of the fees, but they as a whole shall go to and be retained by the state. Being of the opinion that the Constitution expressly says the commissioner shall not have any of the fees of his office, but shall take a salary in lieu thereof, section 13 of article 54, attempting to do that, is null and void and of no effect.

Order reversed, and petition dismissed, with costs to the appellant.

HICKS v. KERR et al. (No. 9.)

WILLS §=578(1)—LEGACIES—INCOME.

A bequest of specific registered stock did not carry with it stock dividends subsequent to execution of the will, which became a part of the general estate.

Appeal from Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City; Henry Duffy, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by R. Randolph Hicks against Charles G. Kerr and Reverdy J. Kerr, executors of the will of Ella J. Kerr, deceased. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

R. E. Lee Marshall and John G. Schlipp, both of Baltimore, for appellant. Clapham Murray, Jr., and Walter L. Clark, both of Baltimore, for appellees.

URNER, J. The eighth paragraph of the will of Ella J. Kerr, late of Baltimore city, deceased, is as follows:

"To my daughter, Ella K. Hicks, wife of R. Randolph Hicks, of Norfolk, Virginia, I give and bequeath the forty-two (42) shares of stock in the Northern Central Railway Company, now registered in my name. I further provide with reference to said legacy that, in the event my said daughter predeceases me without children or descendants of children surviving her, the same shall become the absolute property of her husband, R. Randolph Hicks."

The will was executed July 1, 1913, and the testatrix died on the 17th day of March, 1917. During the period between the execution of the will and the death of the testatrix, her daughter, Mrs. Hicks, died without leaving any children or descendants, but survived by her husband, to whom the 42 shares of stock specifically bequeathed by the clause of the will we have quoted have been transferred in due course of administration. At the time of her death the testatrix was also the owner of 16 additional shares of stock of the Northern Central Railway Company, which she had received, by virtue of her existing share holdings, as her proportion of a 40 per cent. stock dividend declared by the company in July, 1914, on account of surplus earnings appropriated to improvements or otherwise invested. The 16 shares which thus accrued to the testatrix are claimed by her son-in-law, Mr. Hicks, as the substituted legatee, under her will, of the 42 shares therein bequeathed, upon the theory that the dividend stock subsequently issued bore such a relation to the original shares as to follow the course of their testamentary disposition. This claim is contested by the two surviving sons of the testatrix, who assert that the 16 shares in question have passed to them as residuary legatees. The appeal is from a decree by which the latter view was sustained.

The descriptive terms of the bequest are clear. The property intended to be bequeathed was plainly designated by the testatrix as "the forty-two (42) shares of stock in the Northern Central Railway Company now registered in my name." It was the only stock of that company owned by her when she executed her will, and it was readily identified by the description quoted when the will took effect at her death. So far as the specific terms of the bequest are concerned, they are completely gratified by the delivery to the legatee of the 42 shares precisely described. It is only because the stock dividend represented assets which previously formed elements of value of the stock already issued that the dividend stock is claimed by the legatee of the original shares.

When the 16 shares of dividend stock were issued to the testatrix, she also received her due proportion of a cash dividend, likewise declared on account of accumulated earnings of the corporation. It is, of course, not suggested that this cash dividend would pass under the bequest of the stock, even if the money thus derived could be identified at the period when the will became operative. The railway company might have distributed its surplus earnings wholly in the form of cash dividends, instead of using a part of such funds for improvements on account of which stock dividends were declared. If the former course had been pursued, it would not be contended that the bequest of the 42 shares should be treated as carrying with it such part of the proceeds of the cash dividends as the testatrix may not have expended in her lifetime. The fact that the dividends were declared partly in stock, instead of entirely in cash, does not affect the principle of the question now being determined. Northern Central Dividend Cases, 126 Md. 16, 94 Atl. 338; Miller v. Safe D. & T. Co., 127 Md. 612, 96 Atl. 766.

The ordinary rule is that dividends and income accruing prior to the death of the testatrix, from stock or other property which is the subject of a specific bequest under the will, do not follow the legacy, but form part of the general estate. 40 Cyc. 1549; Thompson on Corporations (2d Ed.) vol. 4, § 4292; Wethered v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 79 Md. 157, 28 Atl. 812. In the application of that rule no distinction can properly be made between stock and cash dividends of corporate earnings received by a testator under such circumstances as those shown by this record.

In the case of In re Brann, 219 N. Y. 263, 114 N. E. 404, L. R. A. 1918B, 663, a testatrix had bequeathed the 30 shares of stock of the Standard Oil Company owned by her at the time of the execution of her will, to be held in trust for her brother for life and for certain charities in remainder. The will was executed in 1908 and the testatrix died in 1912. About a year prior to her death she received from the Standard Oil Company a number of shares of the stock of its various subsidiary oil companies, which it distributed to its stockholders under a decree of the United States Supreme Court requiring it to dispose of its holdings in corporations under its control. The question in the case was whether the shares of the subsidiary companies, thus accruing to the testatrix in her lifetime, passed with her bequest of the primary shares, on account of which they were distributed, or were included in the portion of the estate to which the residuary legatee was entitled. The Court of Appeals of New York adopted the latter theory, and in the course of its opinion said:

"The new shares are, in effect, an extraordinary dividend declared during the life of the testatrix. * * * The case stands the same as if the Standard Oil Company had sold the shares, and distributed the proceeds. It is hardly denied that a voluntary dividend, whether paid in money or in stock, would be separate from the primary shares."

A different rule could not be invoked, the court said, merely because the dividend in that case was compulsory. Due consideration was given to the fact that the subsidiary shares, while held by the parent company, contributed to the value of its stock, but it was held that the reduction which their distribution caused in the value of the bequeathed shares was analogous to a partial ademption of the legacy.

If, in the present case, the dividend shares had been received by the testatrix before her will was executed, it is obvious that they could not be held to be embraced in the specific bequest of the original 42 shares of which she was the owner. In such a situation the omission of the testatrix to mention the additional shares in connection with the legacy would be accepted as a plain indication of her intention that they were not to be included in the bequest. They would certainly not be attached to the legacy by judicial action, simply because they represented assets from which the bequeathed stock had formerly derived a part of its value. While the dividend stock with which we are now dealing had not been received by the testatrix at the time of the execution of her will, it was in her possession for more than two years prior to her death; but no change was made in her will to include the new stock within the terms and effect of the bequest under consideration. If it had been the desire of the testatrix to have the legacy include the 16 shares of Northern Central stock issued to her in 1914, as well as the 42 shares specified in the bequest, it may well be supposed that, in the ample time available, she would have made the simple alteration in her will necessary to accomplish that result.

Decree affirmed, with costs.

KAMPS et al. v. ALEXANDER et al.
(No. 34.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 20, 1918.
Motion for Reargument Denied July 30, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶345(1)—TIME FOR APPEAL.

An appeal must be filed within two months of rendition of a verdict in a court of law in trial of issues from orphans' courts, and filing motion for new trial does not extend the time.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶355—TIME FOR FILING APPEAL—ESTOPPEL.

That appellees participated after the filing of an appeal in an argument regarding what the bill of exceptions should contain did not estop them from objecting in the Court of Appeals that the appeal was not taken in time.

Appeal from Baltimore City Court;
Charles W. Heusler, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Proceeding by William Kamps and others against Alfred Alexander and others, to try issues from the orphan's court of Baltimore City, involving the validity of the will of Elizabeth Everett. Verdict for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. Motion to dismiss appeal granted.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, and STOOKBRIDGE, JJ.

Charles F. Harley, of Baltimore, for appellants. Clarence A. Tucker, of Baltimore (Lee I. Hecht and Knapp, Ulman & Tucker, all of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellees.

THOMAS, J. This appeal is by the plaintiffs from a ruling of the Baltimore city court in the trial of issues from the orphans' court of Baltimore city, involving the validity of the will of Elizabeth Everett, and the appellees have filed a motion in this court to dismiss the appeal on the ground that it was not taken within the time prescribed by the statute, and on the further ground that the bill of exceptions was not signed and filed within the time required by law.

[1] Section 6 of article 5 of the Code provides:

"All appeals, or writs of error, allowed from any judgment or determination of a court of law, to the court of appeals of this State, other than from decisions on questions arising under the insolvent law, shall be taken within two months from the date of such judgment or determination, and not afterwards."

The record in this case shows that the verdict of the jury on the issues involved in this appeal was rendered on the 27th of October, 1917, and that the order for the appeal was not filed until the 6th of February, 1918, more than three months after the date of the verdict.

It appears, however, from the docket entries, that on the day the verdict was rendered the plaintiffs filed a motion for a new trial, and that the motion was not finally disposed of by the court until the 1st day of February, 1918, and the appellants contend that where a motion for a new trial is filed in due time there can be no appeal until that motion is disposed of. That is the settled rule in ordinary suits at law, where the court enters a judgment, from which alone the appeal may be taken, and where the judgment cannot be entered until the motion for a new trial is overruled. But in the trial of issues from orphans' courts, courts of law do not enter a judgment, and the appeal is allowed by the statute from the "determination" by the court of law of questions of law arising during the trial of the issues. Hoppe v. Byers, 60 Md. 381. Such determinations or rulings of the court of law become effective and final upon the rendition of the verdict, and the time within which the appeal must be taken runs from the date the verdict is rendered. A petition for a rehearing after the entry of a decree does not operate to suspend the decree so as to arrest the running of the time in which an appeal must be taken. Jacobs v. Bealmear, 41 Md. 484. Upon the same principle, a motion to strike out a judgment does not suspend the judgment, nor can a motion for a new trial, after a verdict upon issues from the orphans' court, operate to suspend the rulings of the court of law, or the verdict.

Whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, the precise question was decided by this court in the case of Bradley v. Bradley, 123 Md. 506, 91 Atl. 685. In that case the verdict of the jury in favor of the defendant on the issues sent from the orphans' court was rendered on the 23d of August, 1913. A motion for a new trial was filed by the plaintiffs on the 25th of August, 1913, and was overruled by the court on the 12th of November, 1913, and the order for the appeal was filed on December 2, 1913. In dismissing the appeal, this court, after referring to the section of the Code quoted above, said:

"It is well settled that the circuit court has no authority to enter a judgment on a verdict rendered on issues sent from the orphans' court; and the appeal in such cases is taken from the determinations and rulings of the court, in the course of the trial of the issues. * * * In this case, the verdict of the jury was in favor of the appellee on all the issues and was rendered on August 23, 1913; there was no appeal taken until the 2d day of December, 1913; and as this date was not within the time limited by the statute for an appeal, but afterwards, the appeal from the rulings or determinations of the court during the trial below is clearly too late."

[2] It is suggested by the appellants that, as counsel for the appellees participated in the argument before the court below, on the 11th of March, 1918, in regard to what the bill of exceptions should contain, and the court, at the instance of the appellees' counsel, directed certain evidence to be inserted in the bill of exceptions, the "appellees are too late with their objections." They cite in this connection the case of Williams v. U. S. Fidelity Co., 105 Md. 490, 66 Atl. 495; and, if the suggestion had reference to the motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the bill of exceptions was not signed and filed within the time allowed by statute, there would be some force in the contention. But this court has held that the order for an appeal must be filed, or "the entry of the appeal must be made within the time limited by the statute," and that the filing of a bill of exceptions is not equivalent to the entry of an appeal. The State, etc., v. Mackall, 11 Gill & J. 456; Gaines v. Lamkin, 82 Md. 129, 38 Atl. 459. The connection of the appellees' counsel with the preparation of the bill of exceptions, relied on by the appellants, and set out in the certificate of the judge who presided at the trial in the court below, cannot therefore operate to estop the appellees from objecting in this court that the appeal was not taken in time.

As the appeal must be dismissed on the ground that it was not entered within the time fixed by the statute, it is not necessary to consider the other ground of the appellees' motion.

While we cannot dispose of the appeal on its merits, we may add that we have examined the record, and do not find any error that would justify a reversal of the ruling of the court below. The only exception in the case is to the rejection of the plaintiffs' second prayer, and the granting of the defendants' tenth, eleventh, and thirteenth prayers. Plaintiffs' second prayer is like the third prayer of the plaintiffs in Lyon v. Townsend, 124 Md. 163, 91 Atl. 704, which this court said, in that case, should have been granted. But in that case the court also rejected the plaintiffs' first prayer, and the effect of the court's ruling on all the prayers, as noted by Judge Burke in the opinion, was to leave the jury without any satisfactory rule by which "to measure the testatrix's testamentary capacity," or to guide them in determining from all the facts and circumstances of the case whether she had sufficient capacity to make a will. In the case at bar the court below granted the plaintiffs' first prayer, which is like the plaintiffs' first prayer in Lyon v. Townsend, supra, and which gave the jury a rule by which to measure, and to guide them in passing upon, the testamentary capacity of the testatrix.

The only objection urged by the appellants to the defendants' tenth, eleventh, and thirteenth prayers is that, in describing the mental capacity necessary to make a will, instead of following the exact language of the Code, "valid deed or contract," the defendants used the words "valid deed or ordinary contract." The same words were employed in the defendants' third prayer in Lyon v. Townsend, supra, which the court held should not have been granted. But the prayer was condemned by this court upon another and entirely distinct ground, and there is nothing in the opinion of the court to suggest that the prayer was defective because of the language referred to.

We see no objection to the plaintiffs' second prayer, but the record does not indicate that the instruction was of such vital importance to the plaintiffs as to make the refusal of the court to grant it serious error; and, while the defendants' tenth, eleventh, and thirteenth prayers would, perhaps, have been more accurate if they had followed the exact language of the Code, in view of the instructions granted we see no such error in the rejection of the second prayer, or in the granting of the defendants' tenth, eleventh, and thirteenth prayers, as would warrant a reversal of the ruling appealed from.

Appeal dismissed, with costs.

MAYOR, ETC., OF BALTIMORE et al. v. GAMSE & BRO. (No. 98.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 12, 1918. Motion for Modification of Opinion Denied Aug. 3, 1918.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN §147—LEASEHOLDS—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Where a leasehold is sought to be condemned under the power of eminent domain, the tenant is to be allowed the market value of his estate.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN §147—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—LEASEHOLD.

In proceedings to condemn a leasehold, in arriving at the value of the lessee's right to continue in possession, the labor and expense of dismantling, removing, and reassembling the machinery and appliances in another place at the time they were required to quit the premises could not be considered, since such expenses would, regardless of condemnation, have to be incurred by them at the end of their tenancy.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN §147—EVIDENCE—IMPROVEMENTS.

In condemning a leasehold, improvements made by the tenant are only to be considered in ascertaining the extent to which the value of the use and occupation of the premises is enhanced thereby.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN §147—LEASEHOLDS—AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION.

In proceedings to condemn a leasehold under the power of eminent domain, the compensation to which the tenants were entitled is to be the difference between the fair value of the use and occupation of the premises for the unexpired term, if such use and occupation exceeded the amount of rent contracted to be paid and the rent which the tenants had contracted to pay for the remainder of the term.

5. EMINENT DOMAIN §202(1)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In proceedings to condemn a leasehold, evidence as to the cost of constructing the leased buildings was inadmissible, where the inquiry was limited to the value of the lessee's right to use and occupation.

6. EMINENT DOMAIN §201—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In proceedings to condemn a leasehold to which the city had acquired the reversion, the deed of such reversionary interest was admissible; the jury being entitled to know that the original landlord's interest had passed to the city.

Appeal from Baltimore City Court; Carroll T. Bond, Judge.

Proceeding by the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore and others against Gamse & Bro., to condemn a leasehold under the right of eminent domain. An award was affirmed by the city court after a jury trial, and the City appeals. Reversed, and new trial awarded.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BURKE, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

S. S. Field, City Sol., and Benjamin H. McKindless, Asst. City Sol., both of Baltimore, for appellants. Edgar Allan Poe, of Baltimore (James Fluegel, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellees.

PATTISON, J. This is a proceeding by the mayor and city council of Baltimore to condemn, under the right of eminent domain, the leasehold interest of the appellees in a lot of land and the improvements thereon, situated on the northwest corner of Saratoga and Courtland streets, and occupied by them in the conduct of their business of lithographing and printing. The said lot of land, which fronts 50 feet on Saratoga street, with a depth of 100 feet on Courtland street, is improved by a brick building of three stories and a basement. The premises were first leased unto the appellees, Herman Gamse and Benno E. Gamse, trading as H. Gamse & Bro., by the Owners' Realty Company, by deed of lease dated the 9th day of December, 1910, for the term of five years, commencing on the 1st day of April, 1911, and ending on the 31st day of March, 1916, at and for the annual rental of $3,000. The said lease contained the following provision:

"That at the expiration of the lease, and upon a previous notice of six months by H. Gamse & Bro., this lease shall continue in force for another period of five years, subject to the same conditions as herein set forth, but subject to an increased rental of $3,300 per annum."

Before the expiration of the lease it was agreed by the parties thereto that upon a renewal of it the lessors should make certain improvements upon the leased property, for which the lessees were to pay to the lessors, as rent, the sum of $210 per year, in addition to the said rental of $3,300 provided for by the original lease, making a total rental therefor of $3,510; and on the 27th day of March, 1916, a renewal lease was executed by the parties, in conformity with the agreement so made, for the term of five years, commencing on the 1st day of April, 1916, and ending on the 31st day of March, 1921. This lease contained no provision for its renewal.

It was to condemn the leasehold interest of the appellees in said property that these proceedings were instituted. The commissioners for opening streets awarded to the appellees $1,000 compensation therefor, and the appellees, being dissatisfied with said award, appealed therefrom to the Baltimore city court, where a trial by jury was had, which resulted in an award of $9,250 to the appellees, as compensation for the taking of their leasehold estate. From that award the city has appealed to this court.

At the conclusion of the evidence, both the city and the appellees asked for instructions to the jury as to the measure of damages applicable to the facts before them. The appellees' first and third prayers were refused, and its second was granted as modified. The appellant's first, fourth, fifth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth prayers were refused. Its second was granted, and its fourth A and sixth prayers granted as modified. In addition to the prayers granted, the court granted an instruction of its own.

The city, prior to the institution of these proceedings, had acquired the reversionary interest of the Owners' Realty Company in said property by a conveyance from it, and, as we have said, the controversy here relates only to the amount the appellees are entitled to be paid for their leasehold interest, taken from them under these proceedings. The appellees, as owners of the leasehold, and the city, as owner of the reversion, acquired from the Owners' Realty Company, together held the fee-simple estate, and the sum of the values of these interests is the value of the property taken. Gluck v. M. & C. C. of Baltimore, 81 Md. 321, 32 Atl. 515, 48 Am. St. Rep. 515. The value of the property is not enhanced by the fact that the entire title or estate in the property is not held by one and the same party. Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) § 716.

In proceedings instituted to condemn the reversionary interest, as well as the leasehold interest, the rule is to ascertain the entire compensation to be allowed as though the entire title or estate in the property belong to one person, and then apportion the sum between the holders of the different interests, according to their respective rights. Baltimore City v. Latrobe, 101 Md. 629, 61 Atl. 208. As was said by this court, speaking through Chief Judge Boyd, in the case last cited:

"The condemning party, as a rule, ought not to be required to pay for the two interests more than the portion taken would be worth if owned by one person. * * * The jury, or other tribunal authorized to make the award, should always keep the value of the entire property in mind, and should limit the whole amount to be paid to that value, unless it is clearly shown that the lessee is entitled to more than the difference between what they allowed the reversioner and what the whole property would be worth in the market, if there had been no ground rent."

When 'the entire property included in a lease is taken, the question is one of comparatively easy solution, although there may be, as in this case, two separate estates therein, held by different parties. In such case the rule stated above may ordinarily be applied without difficulty.

[1] By the weight of authority, the rule as to the measurement of compensation in cases like the one before us is, generally speaking, precisely the same, whether the assessment of damages be to the tenant in fee, for life, or for years. The tenant should be allowed the market value of his estate. See note to Baltimore v. Latrobe, 4 Ann. Cas. 1005. In Baltimore City v. Latrobe, supra, Judge Boyd said:

"The reversioner is undoubtedly entitled to what his interest is worth in the market and prima facie the leasehold is charged with that value." Gluck v. Baltimore City, supra.

In Baltimore City v. Rice, 73 Md. 307, 21 Atl. 181, the city was granted a prayer, by which the jury were instructed that they could award the owner of the leasehold estate "only the fair market value of his interest in the brickyard, less the fair market value of his interest in so much thereof as would remain after the opening of Clare street." This court held that prayer good, and said of it that it covered the whole question. It would thus seem that, in this state, at least, the measurement of compensation for the appropriation of an estate, in cases of this character, is ordinarily the market value of the estate.

"That they are to estimate and allow to the lessees the value of the right to continue in undisturbed possession of the premises for the remainder of the term fixed in the lease now existing, and that this value so to be estimated is represented by the price at which a lessee in the situation of the present lessees willing but not compelled to sell would sell the right, and a buyer, if there should be any such, willing, but not compelled, to buy, would pay for the right; that in arriving at their estimate the jury should consider the extent to which the building has been specially equipped and adopted for the lessees and the labor and expense of dismantling, removing, and reassembling the machinery and appliances in another place at this time; not that the jury shall award to the lessees the items of expense of equipment and adaptation of the building and of moving the plant, but they shall bear such items in mind as possible factors, which might play some part in the value and selling price mentioned above in this instruction."

It is contended by the appellant that this prayer incorrectly states the law applicable to the facts and circumstances of this case as disclosed by the record, and should not have been granted. The building and improvements upon the leased premises were constructed for the appellees by the Owners' Realty Company, with special regard for the adaptability of the same to the purposes for which the premises were to be used by the appellees; and the lessees, at their own expense, made other improvements for the better adaptation and equipment of the premises for the use for which they were intended.

The terms and conditions, if any, upon which the improvements were made by the appellees, do not appear in the record. It is not shown that there was any agreement between the lessor and the lessee by which the latter were to be paid therefor, or that such improvements were to be property of the lessees, to be removed by them at the expiration of the lease. The substantial or permanent character of some of the improvements made by the appellees indicates that they were not to be removed by them at the end of their tenancy, for they could not be removed without injury to the building. It may be that some of the improvements are of such a character as to entitle the lessees to remove the same at the end of their tenancy, without any agreement to that effect; if so, they are still entitled to remove them when they are required to quit the premises because of these proceedings. The city does not under such proceedings take the personal property of the tenants, but only their rights in the leasehold.

The appellees, as we have said, have not shown that they were to be paid for the permanent improvements made by them, or that such improvements were to be their property at the expiration of their tenancy, and therefore to allow them for said improvements, which they have not shown they are entitled to; might result in paying them for something to which they have no claim or right.

[3] Upon the facts of this case, as found in the record, the improvements made by the tenant upon the leased premises are only to be considered in ascertaining the extent to which the value of the use and occupation of the premises was enhanced or increased by reason of such improvements. In cases where it is shown that the value of the use and occupation of the leased premises has been increased by the improvements placed thereon by the lessee, proportionate to the amount expended therefor, the cost of such improvements may be submitted to the jury as an element of proof in arriving at the value of the use and occupation of the property after such improvements are made.

As the appellees placed improvements upon the leased premises, in addition to those placed thereon by the Owners' Realty Company, they are entitled to show, by proper evidence, of what the improvements consist, and the extent to which the value of the use and occupation of the premises is increased thereby, in ascertaining the value of their leasehold interest in the property. This prayer is faulty, in our opinion, in that it instructs the jury that in arriving at their estimate of the value of the lessees' right to continue in possession of the leased premises they should consider the labor and expense of dismantling, removing, and reassembling the machinery and appliances in another place at the time they are required under these proceedings to quit the leased premises.

If the tenants were to remain upon the premises for the full length of their term, the cost, labor, and expense of dismantling, removing, and reassembling the machinery and appliances in another place would fall upon them, or at least this is true so far as the record discloses; and the fact that they must, as a result of these proceedings, remove therefrom at an earlier time, and pay the costs of the same, does not, as shown by the record, impose upon them additional burdens. The effect of condemnation under these proceedings would be to hasten the removal of the appellees and to shorten the term of their tenancy, but not to place upon them any additional burden, in dismantling, removing, and reassembling the machinery and appliances in another place in consequence thereof, which they would be required to do at their own expense at the end of their tenancy, if not disturbed by these proceedings. It is said in Lewis on Eminent Domain, § 27:

"The business conducted upon the property is not taken [under condemnation proceedings], and the owner can remove it to a new location. Any incidental loss or inconvenience in business which may result from removal must be borne for the sake of the general good in which he participates."

And in the case of New York, W. S. & B. R. Co., 35 Hun (N. Y.) 635, the court in discussing this question said:

"The circumstances of this case do not present the question of compensation for the expense of removing personal effects from the premises in any different light than it would be if the appellant were the owner of the fee, instead of being tenant for a term of years. The company seeks to acquire a complete title to an entire parcel of land. It should not in fairness be compelled to pay more for the land than its market value, because the owner of the fee has carved out of it a leasehold estate."

See Hunter v. O. & O. R. R., 107 Va. 158, 59 S. E. 417, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 124, and other cases cited in note to Blincoe v. Choctaw, Okla. & Western R. R. Co., 16 Okl. 286, 83 Pac. 903, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 890, 8 Ann. Cas. 689.

[4] In this case the amount of compensation to which the appellees are entitled, upon the facts before us, is the difference between the fair value of the use and occupation of the leased premises for the unexpired term, (if such use and occupation exceeds the amount of rent contracted to be paid by the appellees for said premises for such time) and the rent which the appellees had contracted to pay for said premises for the remainder of the term.

The first and fourth prayers of the city are consistent with the views we have expressed as to the measurement of the compensation to which the appellees are entitled, and so was the city's four A prayer as offered. These prayers should have been granted.

The city's fifth prayer should have been granted, and the reason therefor is given in what we have said in holding the court's prayer defective.

The modifications of the city's sixth prayer was, we think, wrongfully made, in that it was thereby made subject to the finding of the jury under the court's prayer, which, as we have said, was defective.

The city's seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth prayers were all refused, because, as the court stated, they were likely to confuse the jury in view of the instructions above referred to, which we have held to be defective. Upon the evidence offered these prayers should have been granted.

The eleventh, thirteenth, and fourteenth, prayers of the city were properly refused, because not qualified in conformity with the view we have expressed as to the measurement of compensation. The twelfth prayer should have been granted for the reasons we have stated in disposing of the court's instruction.

The first, second, eleventh, and fourteenth exceptions are to the admission of evidence as to the intentions of the landlord and tenant to renew the lease of the property mentioned in these proceedings. This testimony was first admitted, but afterwards stricken out, and the petitioner's prayer based upon this testimony was refused.

The third, fourth, seventh, and eighth exceptions are to the admission of evidence as to the cost of the improvements to the property placed upon the property by the appellees. This evidence was inadmissible, as it did not as offered conform to the qualifications heretofore indicated as necessary to render such testimony competent.

[5] The fifth and sixth exceptions refer to the admission of evidence as to the present cost of constructing the leased buildings. For the purpose of this inquiry as to the value of the lessee's right to the use and occupation of the premises we think such evidence was inadmissible.

The ninth, tenth, twelfth, thirteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth except to the admission of evidence in relation to the cost of dismantling and removing the machinery of the appellees to another location and the rent they would be required to pay at such new location. This evidence should have been excluded for the reason given in disposing of the court's prayer.

[6] The eighteenth exception was to the refusal of the court to admit in evidence the deed of the Owners' Realty Company conveying to the city of Baltimore its reversionary interest in the leased property. The deed should have been admitted in evidence, as the jury were entitled to know that the interest of the Owners' Realty Company in said property had passed from it to the city. The fact that the city had become the owner of such interest in the property by virtue and in pursuance of Ordinance No. 513 approved October 8, 1914, and Ordinance No. 77, approved January 21, 1916, sets at rest the question of a renewal of the lease by the appellees at the expiration of its term. It was because of the court's errors in its rulings above stated that this court reached the conclusion announced in the per curiam opinion heretofore filed.

Rulings reversed, and new trial awarded, with costs to the appellants.

McMICHAEL v. CULLITON et al.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. July 23, 1918.)

1. ARREST §63(1)—AUTHORITY TO ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT—MISDEMEANOR—VIOLATION OF FEDERAL STATUTES.

A state officer was not justified in law in making an arrest without complaint and warrant for acts which under the federal statute constitute only a misdemeanor and were not committed in the presence of such officer.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §27—MISDEMEANORS AND FELONIES.

Though crimes in this state are divided into high misdemeanors and misdemeanors, and both classes comprise crimes which were felonious at common law, the legal rules as they existed at common law, growing out of the distinction between felonies and misdemeanors, are still in force, except in so far as modified by statute.

3. ARREST §63(1)—ARREST BY STATE OFFICER FOR VIOLATION OF FEDERAL STATUTE—NECESSITY OF WARRANT.

U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 1674, authorizing designated state officers to make arrest for violation of federal statutes, process to be issued against offender "agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such state," requires such arrest to be made with complaint and warrant.

4. FALSE IMPRISONMENT §7(1)—JUSTIFICATION—ARREST WITHOUT WARRANT—MISDEMEANOR—VIOLATION OF FEDERAL STATUTES.

In action for false imprisonment, the fact that the arrest was made upon information received from agents of the Red Cross that plaintiff had committed acts constituting a misdemeanor under federal statutes is not legal justification, where arrest was without complaint and warrant; U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 1674, authorizing designated state officers to make arrest for violation of federal statutes, requiring that such arrest be made with complaint and warrant.

5. FALSE IMPRISONMENT §20(2)—PLEADING—ANSWER.

Where complaint in false imprisonment action alleges that plaintiff was arrested without cause, an answer denying such allegation, and alleging that arrest was with cause, raises issue for jury, although answer admits arrest was without complaint or warrant; there being no inference from such admission that it was not a proper case for arrest without complaint and warrant.

Action by William P. McMichael against James P. Culliton and others. Plaintiff moves to strike out answer and special defense. Special defense stricken, and motion to strike out answer denied.

Argued before KALISCH, J., at chambers, under the Practice Act.

Josiah Stryker, of Newark, for the motion. Charles E. Bird, Henry M. Hartman, and W. Holt Appar, all of Trenton, opposed.

KALISCH, J. The plaintiff sues the defendants in an action for false imprisonment. The complaint alleges that on the 26th day of June, while plaintiff was at the Clinton Street station of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in the city of Trenton, the defendant James Stanton approached plaintiff and willfully, violently, and without cause laid his hands upon him and informed plaintiff that he was under arrest; that the defendant

Stanton called the police patrol wagon and forcibly compelled plaintiff to enter the same, and took him by force and against his will to the police station, and there delivered him to the defendant James O'Rourke, who was there doing desk duty as police sergeant, and who then and there caused plaintiff's name to be entered upon the police blotter, compelling plaintiff to give his name, age, occupation, and place of residence, and then and there willfully and without cause imprisoned and detained him for an hour and a half; that the defendant James T. Culliton, as police captain, willfully and without cause ordered the defendant to arrest the plaintiff as aforesaid, and ordered the defendant James O'Rourke to detain plaintiff, as above mentioned; that no complaint or charge of any kind was made or entered against the plaintiff, and no warrant was issued for his arrest.

The defendants in their amended answer admit that the defendant Stanton put the plaintiff under arrest, but deny that the former willfully, violently, and without cause laid his hands upon plaintiff. The defendants further admit that in consequence of such arrest the defendant Stanton forcibly compelled plaintiff to enter the patrol wagon, and took the latter by force and against his will to the police station, and delivered him to the defendant O'Rourke, who dealt with the plaintiff as stated in the complaint, with the exception that the defendants deny that the plaintiff was imprisoned and detained willfully and without cause. The defendants, in their answer, deny the fifth averment of the complaint, which is to the effect:

"That the defendant James T. Culliton, as police captain of the first precinct of the police department of the city of Trenton, willfully and without cause ordered the said James Stanton to arrest plaintiff as aforesaid, and ordered the said James O'Rourke to detain plaintiff as aforesaid."

The defendants, in their answer, further admit that no complaint or charge of any kind was made or entered against the plaintiff, and no warrant was issued for plaintiff's arrest. As a special defense to the action, in the nature of the common-law plea of justification, the defendants set up that upon information received from George O. Tablyn and other agents of the American National Red Cross, directing the collection of funds in the city of Trenton for said organization, to the effect that the plaintiff had committed certain acts described and set forth in the defendants' special defense, which acts were in direct violation of section 4 of an act of Congress, entitled "An act to amend an act to incorporate the American National Red Cross, approved January 5, 1905," and which acts of the plaintiff under said sections constitute a misdemeanor, indictable and punishable in the federal courts.

Counsel for plaintiff moves to strike out this defense upon the ground that the matters set up therein do not constitute a legal justification for the arrest.

[1, 2] The contention of counsel of plaintiff is that, since the defendants admit that the arrest was made without complaint and warrant, for acts which under the federal statute constitute only a misdemeanor, and were not committed by the plaintiff in the presence of the officer, the officer was not justified in law to make the arrest. I think this contention is sound. While it is true that crimes in this state are divided into high misdemeanors and misdemeanors, and both classes comprise crimes which were felonies at common law, nevertheless the legal rules, as they existed at common law, growing out of the distinction between felonies and misdemeanors, are still in force and effect in this state, except in so far as modified by statute. Reported cases on the civil and criminal sides, expository of this view, are numerous in this state, and must be familiar to the general practitioner. It is highly important to observe that the offense charged against the plaintiff was the violation of a federal statute, of which the state courts have no jurisdiction. Prior to the enactment of section 1674 (3 U. S. Comp. Stat. p. 3447), the right to arrest for the violation of a federal statute by a state officer did not exist. The settled practice was for a complaint to be made before a United States commissioner, who issued a warrant to the United States marshal. I recall a case in my own practice, where the offense was committed in the District of Columbia, and the accused was arrested in Newark, by virtue of a bench warrant issued by the presiding judge of the court of common pleas of Essex county, and upon habeas corpus proceedings before Depue, J., the accused was refused a discharge and remanded to the Essex county jail, and upon a habeas corpus sued out of the United States District Court, it being made to appear that no complaint had been made before a United States Commissioner, and that the accused was held on a bench warrant and commitment issued out of the state court, Nixon, J., discharged the accused from custody.

[3, 4] By the section above referred to, Congress empowers certain state officials, enumerated in the act, to issue process against offenders, "agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such state," which language I think clearly indicates that there must be a complaint and warrant. It is to be remarked that this statute does not confer any jurisdiction of the offense denounced by it upon any of the state officials designated, but only constitutes them, so to speak, special officers for certain purposes only, and the limitations placed upon them must be strictly observed in order to give validity to their acts. The right to hear and determine which is the insignia of the investiture of judicial authority is not conferred. I am therefore clear that the facts set up in the special defense do not constitute a legal justification, and therefore must be stricken out.

[5] Counsel of plaintiff also moves to strike out the answer of the two defendants James Stanton and James O'Rourke. The contention is that their answer presents no issue to be passed upon by a jury, in that both of these defendants admit the arrest to have been made without complaint and warrant. The complainant alleges that his arrest was without cause. The defendants, in their answer, deny this, and assert that it was with cause. The fact that the complainant was arrested without complaint and warrant does not justify the inference that it was not a proper case in which such an arrest could be made without complaint and warrant. I cannot assume, without anything appearing in the complaint or answer to the contrary, that the offense for which the complainant was arrested was not a felony, or that the offense, if a misdemeanor, was not committed in the presence of the officer. What the facts were at the time the arrest was made can only be developed on the trial of the cause. Of course, if it should appear that the offense charged was a misdemeanor, and not committed in the presence of the officer making the arrest, the arrest was unlawful; or if it should appear that the arrest was made for an offense committed by the plaintiff against the United States, the arrest was unlawful, if made without complaint and warrant. In deciding, however, on the validity of the answer, the facts set up in the special defense must be disregarded.

The answer may be open to the criticism that it is unscientifically drawn, but I think that it can be fairly held to be equivalent to the plea of general issue under the old practice, and therefore the motion to strike out the answer is denied.

In re BATTIN. (No. 44/581.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 14, 1918.)

1. TRUSTS ⇐165—DISCHARGE OF TRUSTEE.

The Chancery Court has power to discharge a trustee and appoint a substitute in his place.

2. TRUSTS ⇐160(2)—APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEE—POWER OF COURT.

The Chancery Court has power to appoint a trustee to administer a trust, where no trustee is in existence; the identity of trustees being a matter of pure judicial discretion.

3. TRUSTS ⇐160(1)—APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEES—NUMBER NAMED IN INSTRUMENT.

The Chancery Court is not obliged to appoint the same number of trustees provided for by the trust instrument, when it appoints a trustee to administer the trust; the number of trustees being a matter of pure judicial discretion.

4. TRUSTS §169(1)—APPOINTMENT OF SUBSTITUTE TRUSTEE—REASONS.

On application of trustees for appointment in place of one deceased, survivors expressing desire to resign, Chancery Court will appoint trust company, where parties in interest assent, it has proved difficult to get responsible persons, satisfactory to all, to accept, expense of surety bonds will be avoided, the beneficiaries have increased in number, etc.

5. TRUSTS §169(2)—APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEE—AWARD OF COMPENSATION.

The Chancery Court, where it appoints a trustee, if necessary to secure a proper trustee, may award fairly adequate compensation, notwithstanding the provisions of the trust instrument.

In the matter of the application of surviving trustees under deed of trust made by Joseph Battin, deceased, for appointment of trustee in place and stead of deceased trustee. Application by four-sixths in interest in the trust fund for appointment of a trust company as sole substitute trustee granted.

Frank Bergen, of Newark, for the application. C. McK. Whittemore, of Elizabeth, and Philip D. Elliott, of Newark, for certain beneficiaries.

LANE, V. C. [1-3] The deed of trust provides for three trustees and for succession by appointment by the court to any trustee who shall die, refuse or become unable to discharge his duties. Upon the filing of the petition, the two surviving trustees expressed a desire to resign, thus leaving, upon the acceptance of their resignations, no one to administer the trust, unless an appointment is made by the court. The application is now made by four-sixths in interest in the trust fund for the appointment of the Union County Trust Company as a single trustee. There was no objection from the other parties in interest, and on the hearing their counsel consented. That this court has power to discharge a trustee and substitute another, to appoint a trustee to administer a trust where no trustee is in existence, needs no citation of authority, nor is the court obliged to appoint the same number of trustees as provided for by the trust instrument. Barker v. Barker, 73 N. H. 353, 62 Atl. 166, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 802, 6 Ann. Cas. 596; 39 Cyc. 283, 285. The number of trustees and their identity is a matter of pure judicial discretion.

[4, 5] The reasons which induce me to grant the prayer of the petition are as follows: The parties in interest assent. It has been difficult to get responsible disinterested persons, satisfactory to all parties in interest, to accept the trust as individual trustees. Individual trustees would be required to give large surety bonds at considerable expense to the estate. Appointment of a qualified trust company will insure succession for the life of the trust. The expense and trouble of probable further applications for appointment of successor trustees during the next 21 years will be obviated. The compensation allowed by the trustee agreement is inadequate when divided among three trustees, and is scarcely adequate for one. It is doubtful if three trustees of ability and responsibility could be found who would be willing to accept their meager share of the total compensation provided, for the increasing trouble and responsibilities of administering the trusts. The number of beneficiaries concerned has already increased over those provided for originally, and there will be many more to deal with in the future. A trust company is now qualified by law to accept appointment as trustee. At the time the trust was created trust companies in New Jersey were not legally qualified to accept appointment, and it is not unreasonable to assume that, if the law of New Jersey had permitted the appointment of a trust company as trustee, the donor would have made such appointment. I do not mean to indicate by anything that I have said that I am of the opinion that the court is bound by the provisions in the trust deed as to the amount of compensation. I think the court may, where it appoints a trustee, if necessary to secure a proper trustee, award compensation as may be fairly adequate notwithstanding the provisions of the trust instrument.

McBRIDE et al. v. GARLAND et al.
(No. 44/731.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 18, 1918.)

1. INSURANCE §148(1) — REFORMATION — GROUNDS—IMMORAL CONTRACT.

That insured had his life insurance policy made payable to his mistress upon her promise to continue illicit relations with him does not entitle the executors of insured's estate, upon insured's death, to have the policy reformed to make it payable to them.

2. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS §33—PARTIES.

Where there was no fund or policy within the jurisdiction of the court, in a suit to reform life insurance policy so as to change the beneficiary thereof, the named beneficiary was a necessary party; the action being one in personam and not in rem or quasi in rem.

3. EQUITY §263—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT.

That a necessary party defendant cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of the court by service of process or agreement to appear cannot be raised by motion to strike out the bill.

4. ACTION §68—MOTION TO STAY SUIT.

That a necessary party defendant cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of the court by service of process or agreement to appear may be raised by motion to stay the suit until such defendant be brought in.

Suit by Hesser G. McBride and another, as executors of the estate of Edward M. Richman, deceased, against Mabel Brooks Garland and another. On order to show cause; on motion to strike out bill. Motion to strike out granted, order to show cause dismissed, and the restraint dissolved.

George Edward Quigley, of Union Hill, for complainants. Wolber & Blake, of Newark, for defendant Garland. Alfred Hurrell, of New York City, and James Guest, of Newark, for Prudential Ins. Co. of America.

LANE, V. C. The bill, considered as favorably to complainants as possible, may be said to allege that the Prudential Insurance Company of America, at the request of Edward M. Richman, deceased, and in consideration of premium paid by him, issued its policy of insurance upon his life, payable to Mabel Brooks Garland, his mistress; that Richman obtained the policy and had it made payable to Garland upon Garland's promise that she would continue illicit relations with him; that such illicit relations continued; that the contract between Garland and Richman was immoral and illegal; that the policy provided that in case of the death of Garland prior to Richman, the proceeds should be paid to the executors, administrators, or assigns of Richman. No other provision of the policy is set out. The bill alleges that the proceeds should be paid not to Garland, but to the contingent beneficiaries. The bill also prays that the policy be reformed by striking out the provisions making it payable to Garland and inserting a provision making it payable to the executors, administrators, or assigns of Richman.

[1] I have not been favored with a brief of complainants. The defendant Prudential Company, moving to strike out, has furnished me with exhaustive briefs. It seems to me that it would be superfluous to consider the numerous cases cited. Upon what theory complainants insist that the proceeds should be paid to them as contingent beneficiaries is not disclosed. It is only in case Garland predeceases Richman that his executors, administrators, or assigns are given any rights under the policy. The fact that Garland was the mistress of Richman, and that the policy was made payable to her for this reason, does not equal her death. The attempt of complainants in reality is, not to reform the policy, but to make a contract not thought of by either of the parties to it. It seems to be the idea of complainants that because Garland induced Richman to have the policy written in her favor by an immoral promise, this court may compel the Prudential Company, not a party to the immoral transaction, to make a contract which it never dreamed of making. Whether the Prudential Company can resist the claim made by Garland is, so far as the allegations of the bill disclose, no concern whatever of complainants. Their uttermost rights would be to recover, for the estate, the premiums paid by Richman if, in fact, the Prudential Company does not pay the amount due on the policy. No case has been brought to my attention that would warrant the court in taking any such action as complainants ask.

[2] As there may be an application to amend the bill, there is another insurmountable difficulty to the granting of any relief that should be mentioned. Defendant Garland is a necessary party. She is a nonresident, and has appeared specially, objecting to the jurisdiction of the court. Her objection is well founded. The action is one in personam, and not in rem or quasi in rem. Cross v. Armstrong, 44 Ohio St. 613, 10 N. E. 160; Gary v. Northwestern Masonic Aid Association (Iowa, 1891), 50 N. W. 27; Coe v. Garvey, 130 Ill. App. 221.

There is no fund within the jurisdiction of this court. The policy is not within the jurisdiction of this court, so that, even if Ely v. Hartford Life Insurance Co., 128 Ky. 799, 110 S. W. 265, may be considered as expressing good law, complainants are not aided. The Prudential Company could not interplead unless it could acquire jurisdiction over defendant Garland by personal service or appearance. Hills v. Aetna Life Insurance Co., 39 N. J. Law J. 132 (Speer, Circuit Court Judge, 1916); Hinton v. Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co., 126 N. C. 18, 35 S. E. 182, 78 Am. St. Rep. 686; Gary v. Northwestern Masonic Aid Association (Iowa) 50 N. W. 27. Any decree which might be rendered in this court would not bind defendant Garland, and she might sue the company in California or any other state. That a double recovery is not a remote possibility is illustrated by a consideration of some of the foregoing cases in which it has actually occurred. It seems to me that defendant Garland is a necessary party, and that this suit cannot proceed without her presence. Reed v. Baker, 42 Mich. 272, 8 N. W. 959; Hyams v. Old Dominion Co. (D. C.) 204 Fed. 681. This being so, it would be useless to permit the bill to be amended unless defendant Garland agrees to appear. Hyams v. Old Dominion Co., supra.

[3, 4] The fact that defendant Garland cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of the court cannot, of course, be raised by motion to strike out. It may be raised by motion to stay the suit until the defendant be brought in. Whether it should not be raised by answer in lieu of plea under the sixty-eighth rule (100 Atl. xii), with permission to defendant to answer over if the plea be found insufficient or untrue and what, if such a plea be filed and found true and sufficient, the decree should be are questions not now before me. In any event, it appearing on the return of the order to show cause that defendant Garland has not been served with process within the state and will not appear, the order to show cause would have to be dismissed and the restraint dissolved even if the bill were sufficient.

The motion to strike out will be granted.

the order to show cause dismissed, and the restraint dissolved. Settle order on two days' notice.

SEACOAST REAL ESTATE CO. v. AMERICAN TIMBER CO. et al.

(No. 41/238.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. July 24, 1918.)

1. MORTGAGES ¶460 — FORECLOSURE — ACCOUNTING FOR COLLATERAL — BURDEN OF PROOF.

Complainant in mortgage foreclosure has the burden of showing how it credited or disposed of the proceeds of the sale of any collateral.

2. MORTGAGES ¶492 — FORECLOSURE — ACCOUNTING FOR COLLATERAL.

Defendant, owner of lots subject to the B. mortgage, having conveyed eight of them as collateral security to complainant mortgagee, who then bought the B. mortgage, is entitled to credit for the entire proceeds of complainant's sale of the eight lots without deducting the amount due on the B. mortgage, unless complainant surrenders such mortgage.

3. USURY ¶2(2) — LAW GOVERNING.

The law of the state where notes are made and payable governs as to usury.

4. USURY ¶127 — DEFENSE BY SURETY.

A surety may plead defense of usury.

5. ESTOPPEL ¶68(4) — PLEADING IN OTHER SUIT.

Defendant is not estopped to plead usury in notes because in a prior proceeding against it still untried, to collect them, it was not pleaded; pleadings therein being still amendable on proper application.

6. USURY ¶83 — DEFENSE BY CORPORATION.

Act April 3, 1902 (P. L. p. 459), forbidding a corporation setting up defense of usury against an obligation executed by it, does not relate to its ordinary debts.

7. MORTGAGES ¶203 — MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION — REPAIRS AND PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS — REIMBURSEMENT.

While a mortgagee in possession may make necessary repairs for protection or preservation of the property, and be reimbursed therefor, he may not, as complainant, have allowance for permanent improvements made by him without any mistaken belief of absolute ownership and without consent of owner.

8. MORTGAGES ¶203 — MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION — IMPROVEMENTS AND REPAIRS — REIMBURSEMENT.

Mortgagee in possession making expenditures without notice to or knowledge of owners, not merely for repairs, but as part of scheme to improve and develop, when mortgage was due and security ample, which work, because badly designed or improperly executed, was destroyed by elements, is not entitled to reimbursement for any part of expenditures.

9. MORTGAGES ¶202 — MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION — REPAIRS — REIMBURSEMENT.

Mortgagee in possession, honestly making repairs under expert advice in the belief that they were necessary for protection of the property, is entitled to reimbursement, though perhaps the necessary repairs under some other method might have been made for a smaller expenditure.

Suit by the Seacoast Real Estate Company against the American Timber Company and others. Decree for complainant.

Durand, Ivins & Carton, of Asbury Park, and John D. McMullin, of Philadelphia, Pa.,

for complainant. Martin V. Bergen, of Camden, and De Witt Robinson, of Philadelphia, Pa., for defendants.

FOSTER, V. C. Complainant's bill is filed to foreclose, as a mortgage, a conveyance made by the defendant American Timber Company to Lydia S. Hinchman, under date of May 31, 1912. On June 22, 1914, Lydia S. Hinchman and Charles S. Hinchman, her husband, assigned this conveyance, or mortgage, and the indebtedness secured thereby, to complainant. These deeds were given to secure the payment of the indebtedness owing by one Henry H. Yard to both Mr. and Mrs. Hinchman.

The premises in question consist of two tracts of land at Manasquan Beach in Monmouth county, with an ocean frontage of about 3,000 feet, and the lands extend southerly along the beach from a point about 500 feet north of the Brielle Road to the Manasquan river. At the time the deed from the American Timber Company to Mrs. Hinchman was made and delivered, Henry H. Yard and wife gave to Mrs. Hinchman a quitclaim deed dated June 1, 1912, for their interest in the premises. The defendants are the American Timber Company, of which Henry H. Yard, now deceased, was president, and his widow and minor son. The complainant, of which Mr. Hinchman, now deceased, was president, is practically another name for Charles S. Hinchman and the members of his family, and the defendant corporation is only another name for Mr. Yard and members of his family.

The indebtedness which these deeds were intended to secure complainant claims now amounts to $37,818.90, and arises out of the following transactions: In 1901 Mr. Yard borrowed from Joseph M. Gazzam and A. O. Granger certain sums of money, and gave to each of them his notes for $3,000. On October 1, 1904, the indebtedness being unpaid, Yard gave to Gazzam and Granger his notes for $3,500, each payable in one year with interest. After maturity these two notes were purchased by Mrs. Hinchman, and later were assigned by her to complainant. The security which Gazzam and Granger held for their notes was the first tract of land in question, which the American Timber Company had conveyed to Gazzam and Granger, and which they in turn conveyed to Mrs. Hinchman when they sold her the notes, and which she transferred with other security, to complainant when she assigned the notes.

The indebtedness of Mr. Yard to Mr. Hinchman is entirely distinct from the indebtedness due on the notes bought by his wife, and is based upon a note dated October 31, 1904, payable to Hinchman's order for $22,452.12. This note was given as a result of a settlement between Yard and Hinchman at this date, and attached to this note is a statement, dated October 19, 1904, showing the collateral held by Hinchman for its payment. Since the delivery of the deeds in 1912 Mr. and Mrs. Hinchman and complainant have been in actual possession of the premises, and have rented portions thereof, and Mr. Hinchman has had the entire control and management of the property, and has collected a gross annual income therefrom of about $5,000, and complainant now values the property as being worth about $75,000. The parties recognize that the Hinchmans and the complainant have since 1912 been occupying the position of mortgagees in possession, but defendants dispute the amount claimed to be due complainant, on the following grounds:

(1) That complainant has not given proper credit for the amount realized from the sale of some of the collateral shown on the above-mentioned statement; (2) that the amount claimed to be due on the notes to Gazzam and Granger is usurious; (3) that the amount charged for repairs to the mortgaged premises is improper and illegal.

Considering these objections in the order stated, it appears that the first objection is based upon the following circumstances: In the statement of collateral prepared by Mr. Yard and Mr. Hinchman under date of October 19, 1904, appears, among other property, the following:

Belmar lots, 2952-59.....$3,000 00

In the account attached to the replication, complainant makes this statement:

12/31/08 Proceeds 2952/7 Belmar.. $2,297 51
Less Brown Mtg. & Int. for 9/15/04 1,402 30

The Brown mortgage referred to was a mortgage given by Harry Tatu and wife to Peter and Anthony Brown on October 15, 1900, covering about ten acres of land at Belmar, and not part of the lands involved in this action. Subsequently Tatu and wife conveyed this property to the American Timber Company subject to this mortgage, and on January 27, 1902, the American Timber Company, as part of the collateral for Yard's indebtedness, conveyed to Charles S. Hinchman out of this tract eight lots, Nos. 2952-2959, both inclusive, subject to the Brown mortgage.

On September 14, 1904, the Browns assigned this mortgage to C. Russell Hinchman, the son of Charles S. Hinchman, for the consideration of $1,115. On September 9, 1904, Charles S. Hinchman sold lots Nos. 2958 and 2959 for $1,200, and on December 5, 1908, he sold the remaining lots, Nos. 2952-2957, for $2,500. Releases of the Brown mortgage were given by C. Russell Hinchman for all these lots for the nominal consideration of $1 in each case. The total amount received from the sale of the eight lots by Mr. Hinchman was $3,700, from which he paid taxes, commission, and a recording fee amounting to $232.49, leaving a net balance in Hinchman's hands of $3,467.51, and of this sum complainant gives defendants a credit of only $895.21.

[1] Complainant seeks to justify its position by claiming that lots Nos. 2958 and 2959 had evidently been included in the statement of collateral through mistake; that the sale had been made and credit therefor given to Mr. Yard's account six months before the settlement was reached between Yard and Hinchman. Complainant contends there is no proof to show that the proceeds of this sale were not properly credited as it claims, but the answer is that there is no proof to show that it was, and the burden is upon complainant to show how it credited or disposed of the proceeds of the sale of any of the collateral held by Mr. Hinchman or itself as security for Yard's debt. The deed for these two lots was executed and acknowledged by Mr. Hinchman on September 19, 1904, just one month before the date of the collateral statement; and I am unable to find anything in the record to support the claim that the proceeds of the sale had been previously credited on Yard's indebtedness, or that the collateral statement erroneously included these two lots; and my conclusion is that defendants should be credited with $1,170, the net amount realized by Mr. Hinchman from the sale of these lots, with interest.

[2] Complainant further insists it is entitled to charge against the proceeds of the sale of the remaining six lots, Nos. 2952-2957, the amount due on the Brown mortgage. It appears that C. Russell Hinchman actually bought and held the Brown mortgage for his father. It further appears that for reasons satisfactory to Mr. Hinchman, the son released the lien of this mortgage from the collateral lots, as they were sold for a merely nominal consideration of $1. Complainant claims Mr. Hinchman was obliged to purchase the Brown mortgage to protect his collateral and prevent its foreclosure, and it is clear that he did not buy it for the Yard account, but apparently held it as an investment, and did not charge it against nor connect it with the Yard account until 1912, eight years after he bought it and four years after the last of the eight lots were sold. At the time of the sale of the lots, Hinchman credited the entire proceeds thereof in his books, and did not charge the principal and interest of the mortgage to defendants until December, 1912. It would seem that Mr. Hinchman in releasing the lots for a nominal consideration thought he had ample security in the balance of the Tatu property, for the amount due on the Brown mortgage; and in this he was probably correct. Whether he was or not, defendants are entitled to have either the entire net proceeds of the sale of these eight lots credited on the amount now claimed to be due, or they are entitled to have the Brown mortgage surrendered to them for cancellation. If complainant desires to hold the Brown mortgage as an investment, which it is entitled to do, because the transaction is entirely independent of the matters involved in this controversy, then defendants are entitled to be credited, on the amount now claimed to be due, with the net proceeds of the sale of the Belmar lots amounting to $3,467.51, instead of the credit of $895.21.

[3] The defendants' next objection, that the Gazzam and Granger notes are usurious, is based on the claim that between October 9, 1901, and December 11, 1901, Mr. Yard had borrowed sums of money from both Gazzam and Granger, that the amounts he actually borrowed from each of them was $2,400, and that as evidence of his indebtedness he gave each of them four notes for sums aggregating $3,000. Apparently Yard did not pay either the principal or interest of the notes when due, and on October 1, 1904, he gave Gazzam and Granger the notes in question for $3,500 each, payable in one year; the balance of the interest due on the old notes of $21.26 was paid by Yard to Gazzam and Granger.

It appears from the testimony of Wm. S. Wallace, a member of the Philadelphia Bar, and who for years acted as the attorney of Mr. Gazzam, that he is personally familiar with these transactions, and he states that Gazzam and Granger agreed to loan Yard $4,800, that each of them loaned him $2,400, and that Yard gave each of them his notes for $3,000, the difference between the amounts of the loans and the amount of the notes representing the bonus Yard had agreed to pay them for the accommodation; that in 1904, when Yard was pressed for payment, he agreed to give Gazzam and Granger each his note for $3,521.26, representing the principal of, and the interest due on, the old notes. Later he gave his note dated October 1, 1904, to each of them for $3,500, and paid $21.26 to each of them in cash. Wallace is corroborated by a copy of his letter to Gazzam's nephew, in which he explains the transactions between Yard and Gazzam and Granger in connection with negotiations, then pending, for the sale of these notes to Mrs. Hinchman. He is further corroborated by the entries on the stubs in Mr. Gazzam's check book, and the proof is convincing that the amount actually owing by Yard to both Gazzam and Granger, including interest, on October 1, 1904, the date of the notes in suit, and which were purchased in the name of Mrs. Hinchman after maturity, was $5,592.28, and not $7,000, as complainant claims.

The pleadings and proofs show that notes were made and were payable in Pennsylvania. Under the Pennsylvania Act on Usury and Negotiable Instruments (P. L. 1901, p. 202, §§ 52, 58), only the amount actually loaned on them, with legal interest, can be recovered, and the law of Pennsylvania governs such a situation. Trust Co. v. Electric Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 42, 41 Atl. 488.

ped from setting up such defense in this action. This contention is based on the fact that in other proceedings instituted by Mrs. Hinchman in 1911 (and not yet tried), to collect the amount due on these notes, Yard and the American Timber Company appeared and filed pleadings therein, but they did not, in any of these actions, set up the defense of usury against the amount claimed to be due; and in consequence, by their failure so to do, it is claimed that the defendants herein are estopped from doing so. And it is further claimed that it is doubtful if the American Timber Company, as a surety, can, under P. L. 1902, p. 459 (C. S. 5706), which forbids a corporation to set up usury as a defense to an obligation, set up the defense of usury now. All the defendants have pleaded usury in this case—the American Timber Company pleading it especially as surety, which it may do (39 Cyc. 1074)—and, if necessary, the pleadings filed in the other actions could, on proper application, be amended to permit the defendants therein to set up such defense. Hill v. Collie, 25 N. J. Eq. 460; Corning v. Ludlum, 28 N. J. Eq. 398. The right of the timber company to raise the defense is not affected by the act of 1902, as this statute has been held to be limited in its application, not to the ordinary debts of a corporation, but to obligations of a corporation which have been bought in the open market and have gone before the public for investment. Lembeck v. Storage Co., 70 N. J. Eq. 757, p. 761, 64 Atl. 126; Mazarin v. Building Co., 80 N. J. Law, 35, 76 Atl. 322. As the proofs show that neither Mrs. Hinchman nor complainant paid the face value of the notes and as they also show that the transactions with respect to them, between Yard and Gazzam and Granger, were usurious, all that complainant can be permitted to recover thereon is the amount actually loaned on the notes, with lawful interest.

The last objection to complainant's claim questions the necessity for and the legality of the charges made by complainant for repairs to the mortgaged premises. Defendants claim the repairs were unnecessary; were extravagantly made, and were actually improvements, and not repairs; and that they were made for the present and future permanent improvement and development of the property, with the intent on the part of Mr. Hinchman to improve defendants out of their property by making the amount they would be required to pay, in order to redeem, so large that defendants would be unable to pay it. About one-half of complainant's total claim, or $18,986.16, represents the cost of the repairs which complainant claims it was necessary to have made, in order to protect and preserve the mortgaged premises, and that these repairs were absolutely necessary because of the following circumstances: About 1882 the federal government completed the construction of a stone crib at the southeasterly end of the mortgaged premises; this crib extended from the line of the beach into the ocean for a distance of about 100 feet and extended inland for about 200 feet. In connection therewith the government also constructed a dike extending inland from the westerly end of the crib for a distance of about 1,800 feet to Stump Point, the highest and nearest point of firm land on what is called the Island of Sedges. The government's purpose in building the crib and dike was to establish a permanent channel for the Manasquan river. Prior to the construction of the crib and dike the river had no fixed outlet to the ocean. The action of the elements caused the outlet to shift from time to time towards the north; the sand would be washed and blown away; at times the erosion on the beach would be very pronounced. Sometimes the greater part of the beach was washed away by the shifting of the inlet as much as half a mile north of its present location. Before the government improvement was made there was no building of any kind on the beach. As a result of the construction of the crib and dike, the inlet was retained in its present location; the beach became wider and 10 or more feet higher; the creeks or bodies of water back of the beach became smaller and the marsh land firmer; all erosion ceased; a street was built nearly the entire length of the beach; water mains were laid therein by the municipality; about 200 bungalows have now been built on the beach, producing an annual rental of about $5,000. And complainant claims that under Mr. Hinchman's management the rental value of the lands has increased from $10 per lot in 1911 to $50 a lot now, and that the value of the property has increased from $25,000 in 1912 to $75,000 now.

Under the deed from defendant timber company to Mrs. Hinchman she entered into possession of the property in 1912, and from that time to the present the property has been under the sole charge of Mr. Hinchman and complainant. For some time prior to 1912 the dike, which was then about 30 years old, had been getting out of repair; about half of the plank sheathing had broken or rotted away, and some of the piling were gone and some of the stringers were rotten. Some of the stone riprap that lay in front of the filling had been allowed to drop down by the water scouring the sand from under it. The government had not, and apparently would not, make any repairs. The crib at the mouth of the inlet adjoining the beach was, and is, in fairly good condition. As a result of the changed condition of the dike the waters of the river got behind it and formed large sized pools or lagoons at times—some of them more than 75 feet in width—and washed or scoured some sand away from part of the beach adjoining the crib. Mr. Hinchman did nothing to remedy this condition until the summer of 1914, and then he called on one Howland, a practical bulkhead builder, and after they had inspected the situation and talked the matter over, and without consulting defendants, he gave Howland an order to repair the dike at a cost of about $11,970, without any plans, specifications, or written contract. Mr. Hinchman told Howland's son, who actually did the work that the purpose in repairing the dike was to fill in behind the dike with sand level with the plank on the dike. In 1913 Hinchman told the witness Haberle that he intended to fill in on the northwest side of the dike and put a boulevard there parallel with the dike, and while Howland was at work on the dike Mr. Hinchman told the witness Mount that he was going to improve the river front and put a boulevard in there and lay out some lots, and gave Mount an option to purchase one of the lots. Within a few months after Howland had finished his work, the severe storms of the winter practically demolished all of it, and left the dike in almost the same condition it was in during the early part of 1914.

In 1915 Hinchman had the dike repaired again, and employed Mr. Rogers, an engineer, to advise about the work. Rogers examined the dike in the fall of 1915, and found that in the central portion of it, for a distance of probably 150 feet in length, the filling and sheathing had been taken out by the action of the tides, and a contract was given on his specifications to the Logan Construction Company for $6,882, to rebuild, repair, and reinforce about 1,000 feet of the dike; and an additional contract was also made for $490 for repairs to the crib. In connection with their talk about repairing the dike Hinchman gave Rogers the idea that he contemplated filling in the swamp or meadow land out to the dike, and Rogers, at Hinchman's request, prepared maps in January, 1915, showing the meadow lands north of the dike and west of the beach strip laid out in streets and lots, and from what Hinchman told him, Rogers understood that there was a general scheme to deepen the creek and fill in north of the dike by pumping sand from the bars in the river on the northerly tide of the dike. The repairs made to the dike in 1915 are still very largely intact, although some part of the piling has been drawn out of place and is leaning out towards the river, and the scouring of sand and the formation of the pools back of the dike have almost entirely ceased.

Practically all the parties agree that the crib and dike have kept the inlet in a permanent location. Most of them agree that it is probably necessary that the crib and the dike, or some substitute for the dike, should be maintained in order to prevent the tide of the river from reaching the beach and from washing away the sand that has formed back of the crib or dike, but they greatly differ as to the methods to be adopted and the expenditures that would be required for such purposes.

Complainant and its witnesses, with the exception of Mr. Oram, who was the engineer of, and superintended the repairs made by, the Logan Construction Company in 1915, all claim that the repairs were necessary, and that their cost was reasonable. Mr. Oram states that the work necessary to preserve the property could have been done for about $8,000 by building a spur dam, but he did not inform Mr. Hinchman or Mr. Rogers of this, because there was more profit in it for his company to do the work as Hinchman and Rogers outlined it, and because the spur dam would not answer the purpose Mr. Hinchman told him he had in mind in doing the work, which was to pump in sand from behind the present bulkhead and fill it up; and the work his company did was not to preserve the property, but to fill in with sand and carry out a further development scheme. The engineers of defendants claim that scarcely any repairs were required to be made to the dike for the purpose of protecting the property. They agree with Oram that if protection and not development had been the object in doing the work, then the total cost of the same would not exceed $2,000 or $3,000.

It further appears that whatever scheme of improvement or development was contemplated, nothing further had been done to carry it out.

It is admitted that at the time these expenditures were made in 1914 and 1915, Mr. Hinchman knew that he was simply a mortgagee in possession, and that he did not make the repairs, or improvements, under the mistaken belief that he was the absolute owner in fee.

[7] The law applicable to the present situation is well settled, and the principle adopted by our courts is that a mortgagee in possession has the authority and is under the duty to keep the premises in necessary repair, and is entitled to be repaid any disbursements made for the protection or preservation of the property. In Clark & Smith v. Smith et al., 1 N. J. Eq. 121, at page 139, Chancellor Vroom remarked that:

"The language of the books is, 'necessary repairs'; and this language has been construed strictly."

In Venderhaise v. Hugues, 18 N. J. Eq. 410, Chancellor Green held that credit should be given the grantee for both necessary repairs and lasting improvements, but this extension of the principle was made, as Mr. Justice Dixon points out in delivering the opinion of the Court of Errors and Appeals in Freichnecht v. Meyer, 39 N. J. Eq. 551, at page 562, on the inference that all parties considered the grantee to be the absolute owner, and that as such he had made the lasting improvement. And in this latter case, where complainant sought the redemption of the mortgaged premises, it was held that when the grantee, under the mistaken belief that he was the absolute owner of the property, made permanent improvements thereto, complainant, in order to redeem, must pay the mortgagee the value of the improvements, applying the maxim that one who seeks equity must do equity. All the authorities that have come to my notice in cases where the mortgagee is the complainant limit his right to reimbursement to the money expended for necessary repairs made for the protection or preservation of the property. Where allowance has been granted to a mortgagee as complainant for permanent improvements, it has been based on the fact that such improvements had been made under a mistaken belief of absolute ownership on the part of the mortgagee; or it has been allowed in cases where the mortgagor as complainant sought to redeem and attempt to appropriate the benefit of the mortgagee's expenditures without compensation.

The principle that must control the present situation is stated in the opinion of the Court of Errors and Appeals in Laible v. Ferry, 32 N. J. Eq. 791, at page 801, where it is held that:

"It is perfectly well settled that where one knowingly makes permanent improvements upon the lands of another, without the consent or fault of the latter, he cannot, as a complainant in equity, obtain reimbursement for such expenses, even to the value of the benefit conferred upon the landowner."

[8, 9] The facts in this case bring it within the range of this principle. Complainant when he made his expenditures in 1914 knew that he was not the owner of the premises, but only the mortgagee in possession. Assuming some repairs to the dike were necessary, the danger, at the time, of injury to the property and mortgage security, was neither imminent nor impending. The expenditures were made without notice to the owners and without their knowledge, and these expenditures were made not merely for repairs, but as a part of a scheme to improve and develop the property.

At the time the expenditures were made in 1914, there was not much more than $15,000 due on the mortgage, which was past due, and which could have been foreclosed with little delay at any time. The Hinchmans had possession of the property from 1912, but made no repairs thereon until 1914. If the dike was out of repair in 1912, as they claim, then they neglected it for nearly 2 years. At the time these expenditures were made the property is estimated to have been worth at least $50,000, over three times the amount due on the mortgage. The net annual income from the property was then about $4,000, and Mrs. Hinchman and complainant were in position to apply it at any time to the reduction of the amount due on the mortgage, and such reduction would have resulted in paying off the greater part of the mortgage debt by the time the expenditures now claimed were made.

The expenditure of over $11,000 in 1914 was wasted because the work it paid for was either badly designed or improperly executed, or both, as most of it did not last a year; and neither the property nor any of the defendants were in any way benefited thereby. The expenditure of nearly $7,000 on the dike in 1915 may be said to have been of some value to protecting a part of the property, and the work done then, or the greater part of it, is still in a fair condition and is a benefit to the property.

This work of 1915 was done under expert advice and was fairly thought to be necessary, and I believe these or some other repairs were necessary, at that time. It is true that the proofs show that some other method of repair could have been adopted, the probable cost of which would not have exceeded $2,000 or $3,000. This proof, however, is largely a matter of speculation and estimate on the part of defendants' engineers. The other methods of repair suggested by them might or might not have proven as effective as the one Mr. Hinchman's engineer advised him to adopt, and these other methods of repair might have been built for the estimated amounts, and they might have cost much more. The whole subject is largely based on speculation and estimate of the most general character, and is too uncertain to justify me in holding that the cost of the necessary repairs made in 1915 was excessive.

On all the facts I find that Mr. Hinchman was not justified in making the expenditures for repairs and improvements to the dike which he did in 1914; that he was justified in making the expenditures he did in 1915 in making repairs that were necessary to both the dike and the crib, and, while these expenditures for 1915 are considerably in excess of defendants' estimate of the cost of such repairs, still I am satisfied they were honestly made, in the belief that they were necessary to protect the property, and were made under expert advice and for the repair work only which Mr. Hinchman's engineer had designed as necessary for the proper repair of the crib and dike in order to protect the property.

A decree will be advised in accordance with the views herein expressed.

FIRE PROTECTION DEVELOPMENT CO.
v. AMERICAN DIST. TELEGRAPH CO.

June 17, 1918.)

PATENTS ¶218(5)—FIRE ALARM TELEGRAPHS —CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—ROYALTIES.

Contract between assignee of owner of patents for telegraphic fire alarm, who had leased system of fire alarm, and defendant, giving defendant control of the system and reserving royalty to the assignee and binding defendant to pay expenses of operating the system held to absolve the assignee from payment of such expenses from its royalties notwithstanding its prior contract with its lessor to pay the expenses.

Black and Williams, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Supreme Court.

Action by Fire Protection Development Company against the American District Telegraph Company. Judgment for defendant and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Magoffin & Signor, John W. Griggs, of Paterson, and Martin Conboy, of New York City, for appellant. Kinsley Twining, of Newark, and Rush Taggart, of New York City, for appellee.

GUMMERE, C. J. This is a controversy over the division of receipts coming from the operation of a manual fire alarm system in the city of New York. The trial was had before Adams, J., sitting without a jury, and resulted in a judgment for the defendant. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

In order to understand the respective claims of the parties in the present suit a rather detailed account of the history of their contractual relations is necessary:

On February 18, 1904, one Robert L. McElroy, who owned patents for a manual fire alarm system, entered into an agreement with the defendant company, a corporation of this state, whereby his system was to be operated by it over its lines in all places where those lines existed or might thereafter be constructed. Under this agreement many reciprocal duties and obligations were imposed, of which the following throw light upon the question to be determined:

McElroy was to manufacture all of the devices and apparatus which were to be used under the contract, and to deliver them to the defendant company free. He was also to put canvassers to work to solicit subscribers in the various cities of the United States where this system was to be put in operation. This, also, he was to do at his own expense. The defendant company was to equip central offices, to run wires therefrom to the buildings of the customers who should be obtained by McElroy, to install at its own cost the McElroy devices in these buildings, and to operate and maintain the system, making such ordinary repairs thereto as might be necessary to preserve the same in first-class working order. The company was also to collect from the subscribers of McElroy all of the rentals which the said subscribers under their contracts were to pay for the use and operation of the electrical devices covered by the contract, and to keep a just and accurate account of all the moneys so collected, and to remit and pay to McElroy each month 45 per cent. of the gross rentals which it should collect.

In April, 1905, McElroy assigned all of his rights under this contract to a corporation of the state of Maine known as the Automatic Fire Protection Company, and that corporation assumed all of his obligations thereunder. At the time of the assignment the contract referred to was not operative in the city of New York, because of the fact that the defendant company had no property or franchises there. A purely manual fire alarm service, however, was being carried on in that city by a New York corporation, known as the Special Fire Alarm Electrical Signal Company, and on the 27th of July, 1905, the Automatic Company took a lease from this New York corporation of all its business, assets, and franchises of every name and nature for a period of 49 years, the business to be transferred as a going concern. The annual rental to be paid was the sum of $5,000, and the Automatic Company also covenanted to keep the property in good condition, make all necessary repairs, and pay all taxes and assessments. The defendant company guaranteed the lease, and the payment of the consideration called for by it. The lessor company, however, continued to operate the plant until the 21st of August, 1906, and on that day, apparently, turned it over to the possession of the defendant company. The expense of operation between the dates mentioned was paid by the defendant as appears from a letter of its superintendent written on the latter day. Thereafter the defendant company continued in the full control of the leased property, and in the sole operation of it, including the collection of rentals from subscribers.

No formal instrument declaring the respective rights and obligations of the Automatic Company and of the defendant in the leased property was executed until October 12, 1905. On that day a contract was entered into between them which, after reciting that one of the purposes and considerations for the lease with the Special Fire Alarm Electrical Signal Company was to secure fire department connections for the National District Company, a subsidiary of the defendant (no other purpose being disclosed in the agreement), and that the rentals from subscribers were being received by the defendant, then provided that out of the gross income received by it from the business and contracts aforesaid there should be first paid, during the term of the lease, the annual rental of $5,000, and that the remainder of the gross income which should be received by the defendant during the term of the lease for manual signal service in the city of New York, up to the aggregate of $29,000, remaining after deducting the said $5,000 rental, should be divided between the Automatic Company and the defendant in the following proportions, 45 per cent. to the Automatic Company, 55 per cent. to the defendant, and that all income in excess of $29,000 should be retained and enjoyed by the defendant for its own use.

On April 29, 1909, by an agreement made between the Automatic Company and the present plaintiff (the Fire Protection Development Company), the latter corporation succeeded to the rights and obligations of the Automatic Company under the agreements and lease above recited. The documents thus referred to, and the provisions thereof which have been recited, constitute all of the documentary evidence necessary to be considered.

Turning to the other facts in the case we have the following:

From the date of the lease of 1905 until May 25, 1912, the defendant paid over to the Automatic Company, and afterward to its successor, the present plaintiff, the full 45 per cent. of the gross income, after the deduction of the $5,000 rental. On the latter date, conceiving that under the McElroy contract of February 18, 1904, they were entitled to deduct the expense of service contract solicitation, and moneys expended in the construction of devices and manual fire alarm apparatus, out of the share of the gross income payable to the plaintiff, they proceeded to make such deduction. On the 1st of April, 1913, the defendant claimed the right to deduct also from the plaintiff's share of the gross proceeds all necessary repairs made to the leased property and all taxes and assessments paid thereon. The right to make this latter deduction is challenged by the present litigation, and is the sole question presented to us for determination.

The fact that the contract of October 12, 1905, between the Automatic Company and the defendant (which shows on its face that it was prepared by a skilled draftsman), provided that, after deducting the rental to be paid to the Special Fire Alarm Electrical Signal Company, 45 per cent. of the gross income received by the defendant company from the operation of the leased property should be paid to the Automatic Company, and that it contains no suggestion that this 45 per cent. should be subject to any deduction to be made by the defendant, is significant of the intention of the parties to it with relation to the matter now under consideration; and this significance is emphasized by the further fact that the acquisition of the leased property was concededly for the purpose of enabling the defendant company to secure fire alarm connections in the city of New York. The fact that up to the time of the execution of that contract, and ever since, the cost of maintenance and repair of all the various manual fire alarm systems in the operation of which the parties are jointly interested is, by mutual agreement, to be borne solely by the defendant company, is a further indication of the purpose of the parties. So, too, the fact that from the time when the defendant company took over the leased property in 1905, up to April 1, 1913, the defendant company paid out of its own treasury the whole cost of the maintenance and upkeep of the manual fire alarm system leased from the Special Fire Alarm Electrical Signal Company, including the taxes and assessments laid against the property, without any claim that it was doing so solely for the benefit of the Automatic Company and its successor, the plaintiff, or that either of them was liable to repay these expenditures, is a very potent aid in determining the scope of the contract, for it amounts to a practical construction put by the parties upon this portion of their agreement, and is difficult to explain, except upon the theory that both parties understood that these payments were in discharge of an obligation resting solely upon the defendant company under the contract.

We find nothing in the case to diminish the force of this congeries of facts, unless it be the provision of the lease made by the Special Fire Alarm Electrical Signal Company to the Automatic Company, by which the latter binds itself to pay the cost of maintaining and repairing the leased property, and paying the taxes and assessments thereon, during the term of the lease. We are of opinion, however, that this covenant, although it binds the lessee company and its successors so far as the lessor company is concerned, has no bearing upon the obligation of the plaintiff or the defendant, as between themselves, to meet these expenses. If we should hold otherwise, that is, if we should conclude that it was the intention of the Automatic Company and the defendant that the plaintiff and its predecessor should bear all the burden imposed on the lessee by the terms of the lease, except to the extent they were exonerated by the agreement of October 12, 1905, then we would be driven to say that, in the absence of any such agreement, the parties must be presumed to have intended that all of this burden should be borne by the Automatic Company and its successor, notwithstanding the fact that the defendant company was at once to receive the whole of the leased property, operate it, and collect all of the rentals from the subscribers; in other words, that the defendant company should enjoy all of the benefits flowing from the possession of the leased property and its operation, without any obligation to pay any part of the rentals, or contribute a penny toward its upkeep.

The conclusion we reach, therefore, is that the plaintiff was entitled to receive from the defendant its 45 per cent. of the gross income derived from the operation of the manual fire alarm system held under the lease from the Special Fire Alarm Electrical Signal Company, without any deductions for maintenance, repairs, taxes or assessments, and that, consequently, the judgment under review must be reversed.

BLACK and WILLIAMS, JJ., dissent.

(92 N. J. Law, 200)

LENNON v. ERIE R. CO.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §—289(32)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The plaintiff's testator, while in the line of his duty as defendant's servant, was killed when riding on the running board of a moving car, on which defendant had negligently allowed a plank to be placed and carried for the use of one of defendant's trainmen, and while the train was in motion a fellow servant of the deceased, passing along the running board in order to dismount, negligently struck his foot against the plank causing one end to fall to the ground, and the other to strike and kill the deceased. Held, it was not error to leave to the jury the question whether the deceased had assumed the risk of working in a dangerous place, the evidence not being conclusive that the risk was obvious.

2. DEATH §—52, 57 — FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—CAUSES OF ACTION—PLEADING.

The cause of action rested on the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act Cong. April 22, 1906, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657-8665]), under which the representative of a deceased person may recover in a single action, damages for pain suffered by an injured person between his injury and death, and also for pecuniary damages resulting to the next of kin from the death, although the causes of action are separate and distinct. Held, that under this statute both causes of action must be set up in the pleadings if recovery be sought in each, and if plaintiff proceeds to trial on a complaint for pecuniary damages resulting from death alone, and refuses, when given opportunity to do so, to amend his complaint to embrace the other cause of action, it was error to permit evidence, over objection, in support of the injury not covered by the complaint. The statute gives a single action for a double wrong, but each wrong must be declared on.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hudson County.

Action by Martha Lennon, executrix of Adolph Schneider, deceased, against the Erie Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and remanded.

Collins & Corbin, of Jersey City, for appellant. Alexander Simpson, of Jersey City, for appellee.

BERGEN, J. This action was instituted by the plaintiff as executrix of Adolph Schneider, deceased, under the Employers' Liability Act of the United States, for the benefit of the wife and children of the deceased, who was so injured that he died from the result of an accident happening to him while in defendant's service. Under the charge of the court the jury rendered verdicts for separate sums, one for $1,000 for the pain and suffering endured by the deceased between the accident and his death, and another for $6,000 for the pecuniary loss sustained by the widow and children of deceased. The wife survived her husband but a short time, and the court instructed the jury as to her pecuniary loss to which no exception was taken. There were facts proven from which the jury might infer, if they accepted the testimony as true, that a train of defendant's consisting of about 22 cars, was being moved a short distance in charge of defendant's servants, and that deceased had some duties to perform in relation thereto which required his presence on the train; that the train consisted of cars of different character, some being tank cars for carrying oil; that on each side of these cars was a running board for the use of trainmen; that some one had placed on the running board of one of them a plank, which was not a part of the equipment, but carried for the benefit of one of the trainmen for firewood; that deceased was sitting on the running board near one end of the car with his legs hanging over the edge, and when it approached the point where one of the servants desired to get off the car, while in motion, he struck the plank causing it to move so that one end fell to the ground and the other, supported by the edge of the car, struck the side of the deceased and threw him to the ground, causing injuries from which death resulted in four days thereafter.

First. That it was error to submit to the jury any question of defendant's negligence because of an alleged custom to permit its employes to carry planks and boards on its trains; the contention of the plaintiff being that the servants of defendant had been accustomed to transport on this and similar trains wood, planks, and boards for their own purposes for so long a time that it had become a known custom; that in this case the plank was being carried according to that custom by permission of the agents of the company who had the power to prevent it, and that this custom had so long existed that the company or its authorized agents were chargeable with notice of it. Against this the appellant argues: (a) That the complaint did not allege the custom. We see no force in this. The complaint avers that because of the plank the deceased was not furnished with a safe place to work, and knowledge of that condition may be charged to defendant if a course of conduct has been pursued by its servants for so long a time as to charge it with notice of such a custom. Proof of knowledge of a dangerous situation sustains the averment that the place furnished is unsafe. (b) That there was no sufficient proof of the custom, we think there was enough to take that question to the jury, for there was proof that on many occasions defendant's servants carried bundles of wood, and in other cases boards and planks were put on cars for the benefit of servants, and that this had been going on for a long time. That one of the witnesses said it had become a habit of the servants to take home firewood in this way, and we cannot say that there was no evidence of such custom which a jury ought not to be allowed to consider. (c) That even if such a custom was established the defendant was not liable because these planks and boards were carried by defendant's servants outside the scope of their duties, and therefore not fellow servants, and that the defendant could not, legally, expressly, or impliedly, consent to the free transportation of the plank. But this overlooks the rule that the master is bound to provide a safe place in which his servants are to work, and he cannot avoid that duty by permitting some of his servants to make the place unsafe for others, nor is his neglect cured because another servant creates the condition when not in service. His duty is to correct the unsafe condition if he has knowledge of it, and he will not be relieved, if consenting, upon the ground that he has no authority to consent, for he cannot escape liability by saying, "My consent to the act which made the place unsafe was unlawful." It makes no difference by whom the unsafe condition is created the master must, if he has knowledge, correct it, or if likely to result from a course of conduct to his knowledge, take reasonable precautions to prevent it. The ground of this action is not the negligence of a fellow servant in the line of his duty, but the negligence of the defendant in permitting a condition which made or was likely, to its knowledge, to make the place unsafe for his servants to work in.

Second. That there was no evidence of negligence on the part of defendant in not using reasonable care to provide a safe place. The argument in support of this is that there was a thorough inspection before the train started and no plank was on the car. There was testimony from which a jury might infer that the plank was on the car, and if the inspectors did not see it a jury question arose, whether the inspection was properly made. This is argued as a question of fact which the jury found against the defendant. We do not review questions of fact if there be any evidence to support the verdict. There was evidence that the plank was in plain view and could have been seen by proper inspection, and the jury might determine that testimony that the plank was not on the car indicated careless inspection, and the submission of that question to the jury was not error.

Third. That there was no evidence of negligence by a fellow servant of the deceased. The facts proven were that a servant of the defendant named Scott was, in the line of his duty, on the running board of the car with the deceased upon which the plank was; that Scott intending to get off the car while in motion at a point near his home, started to walk along the running board to the end of the car where a step was located, and in doing this stepped on the plank which caused one end of it to drop from the car and strike the ground, producing the accident. We think that a jury might find that under the circumstances Scott ought reasonably have expected that stepping on, or striking it with his foot, the plank would produce the result which occurred, and that in doing this he was negligent. If he had avoided the plank, and there is nothing to show he could not, the accident would not have happened, and whether his conduct was negligent was for the jury and properly submitted to it.

Fourth. That deceased so conclusively assumed the risk of injury by sitting on the running board that no jury question remained; that is, with the plank on the car, deceased assumed the risk that some one would step on the plank so as to overbalance it sufficiently to throw it to the ground in such manner as to come in contact with him. Whether a servant assumes the risk of injury in his master's service depends upon the facts and circumstances in each particular case. "It is not merely the physical surroundings of the servant that must be obvious to him in order that he may be held to have assumed the risks arising therefrom, but it must be obvious to him, or, at least, to an ordinarily prudent servant, under the circumstances, that there is danger in such a situation." Burns v. Del. & Atl. Telegraph Co., 70 N. J. Law, 745, 59 Atl. 220, 592, 67 L. R. A. 956. In the present case there was no direct proof that deceased ever saw the plank before it struck him. It is urged that, situated as he was, he must have seen it; but Scott, who was on the same running board, testified he did not see it until he stepped on it. We are of opinion that it was not so conclusively shown deceased knew of the presence of the plank as to withhold the question from the jury. But if he did not know it cannot be said that the concurring cause, viz. the conduct of Scott in making the primary negligence effective, was so obvious that its risk was assumed. The consequence of the negligence of the master, through a concurring cause for which he is responsible, does not charge the injured servant with the assumption of the risk, unless it be obvious, and where, as in this case, the knowledge by the servant of a dangerous condition, the risk of which it is claimed he assumed because obvious, or otherwise acquired, is to be inferred from testimony which is not conclusive, a jury question is present and its submission to the jury was not error.

[2] Fifth. That it was error to submit to the jury, as a basis for recovery, the pain and suffering the deceased endured between the accident and his death; there being no supporting allegation in plaintiff's complaint. The complaint does not aver any such ground for recovery, and when the evidence on that point was offered defendant objected to it for that reason. The trial court then, expressing doubt, offered to permit the plaintiff to amend his complaint in order to meet this objection, but the plaintiff refused to amend upon the ground that "the statement comes in the damage clause," which was, "The plaintiff demands $50,000 damages." That such a clause does not state a cause of action requires no discussion, and without amendment the cause of action alleged in the complaint was for pecuniary damages recoverable by the next of kin, because of the death of the deceased. Notwithstanding plaintiff's refusal to amend the complaint to cover the pain and suffering of deceased between the accident and death, the trial court admitted the evidence objected to, and instructed the jury, if they found for plaintiff, to render separate verdicts, which they did as above stated, and judgment was entered for $7,000. This action is based on the federal Employers' Liability Act, and is governed by that statute, and under it the Supreme Court of the United States held in St. Louis & Iron Mtn. Ry. v. Craft, 237 U. S. 648, 35 Sup. Ct. 704, 59 L. Ed. 1160, that a recovery could be had for damages growing out of loss and suffering endured by an injured decedent while he lived, and also for the pecuniary loss suffered by the beneficiaries named in the statute because of his death, in the same action, recognizing, however, that the two claims are different. "Although originating in the same wrongful act or neglect, the two claims are quite distinct, no part of either being embraced in the other." But the right to recover in a single action for a double wrong does not include a right to recover for a wrong not counted on in the pleadings, and not within the issue framed by them. The defendant was not required by the complaint to prepare to meet the question relating to pain and suffering, and if the complaint was amended might have been allowed time to meet the new issue with a different defense, but to prevent this the plaintiff refused to amend his pleadings to embrace the issue to which the objectionable testimony was directed, and the defendant had no opportunity to plead to the issue the plaintiff was allowed to prove without an averment which defendant might traverse. Nor ought this court to now permit an amendment which the plaintiff refused at the trial, probably because at that time the statute of limitations had run as to the new matter, but, whatever the reason, he had the opportunity and he refused it, and an amendment now would perhaps deprive defendant of a legal defense which he could not raise at the trial for want of a pleading to answer. That the pleading should include both causes of action for the double wrong is indicated in

The admission of the testimony objected to was error, and without it there is no support for so much of the judgment as includes the verdict of $1,000 awarded for pain and suffering of deceased, and to that extent the judgment is erroneous and should not exceed $6,000.

The judgment will be modified and the record remitted to the Supreme Court in order that the judgment be modified according to the views herein expressed.

Remanded for modification.

BOURGEOIS v. EDWARDS et al.
(No. 38/666.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. June 10, 1918.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — 101—DELAY IN PAYMENT AS DEFENSE.

Where buyer of judgments delayed short time in tendering balance of price on account of failure of seller's attorney to provide assignment, seller cannot defend buyer's suit for specific performance on ground of delay.

2. ACCORD AND SATISFACTION — 8(1) — CONSIDERATION.

Parole purchase by debtor of his debt for lesser sum than amount due does not liquidate it, on account of lack of consideration.

3. MORTGAGES — 534—FORECLOSURE—TITLE OF PURCHASER.

Purchaser under foreclosure sale acquires title of mortgagee and interests of all defendants as of time of institution of suit.

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 104(7) — MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE.

Fraud on creditors perpetrated by judicial procedure, as a mortgage foreclosure, wife of debtor purchasing property, is as impotent as any other imposition, whatever the scheme, as equity looks to substance.

5. JUDGMENT — 704—RES JUDICATA—MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE.

Decree in mortgage foreclosure is not res judicata as between defendants whose rights have not been litigated.

6. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 299(12) — MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In daughter's suit for specific performance of contract to sell judgments against her father, defended on ground father procured sale by falsely representing he had no property, evidence held insufficient to establish that hotel property, to which plaintiff's mother held title through mortgage foreclosures, belonged in fact to plaintiff's father, and that foreclosures were fraud on his creditors.

7. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 278(2)—DEFENSE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In daughter's suit for specific performance of contract to sell judgments against her father, defended on ground father procured sale by falsely representing he had no property, burden to prove untrue and fraudulent plaintiff's mother's claims on her husband's property through a mortgage foreclosure was on defendant.

8. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 57(2) — IMPLICATION OF INTENT.

Where, when preferences were given by a debtor to his wife, he was only contingently liable, as surety for another, fraudulent intent as to creditors as a matter of law is not to be implied.

9. HUSBAND AND WIFE — 125 — PROFITS OF WIFE'S BUSINESS.

Profits of wife's business, though derived through activities of husband, belong to her.

Suit for specific performance by Rebecca Estell Bourgeois against Martha Edwards and others. Decree for complainant.

George A. Bourgeois, of Atlantic City, for complainant. Wilson & Carr, of Camden, for defendants.

BACKES, V. C. [1] In 1908 Martha Edwards, trading as Charles B. Edwards Company, recovered four judgments in the Supreme Court against Anderson Bourgeois and others, aggregating $6,149.58. They were assigned to her son Earl S. Edwards, who, in July, 1914, sold and agreed to assign them to Rebecca Estell Bourgeois for $2,250. $1,853 of the purchase price has been paid, and the balance was tendered and refused, and this bill is filed to compel an assignment. The verbal agreement of sale is set out in the bill and admitted by the answer, and is evidenced by a receipt which reads as follows: "$200.00. Ocean City, July 16, 1914.

"Received of Rebecca Estell Bourgeois check for $200, which when paid shall be a receipt on account of $2,250, which is to be paid inside of 60 days from the date hereof, said $2,250 when paid shall be in full for all claims Earl Edwards has or had against Anderson Bourgeois et al., and which said Edwards agrees to assign to said Rebecca Estell Bourgeois.

"[Signed] C. L. Smyth,
"Attorney for Earl S. Edwards."

The $1,853 was paid in four installments within the 60 days agreed upon, as mentioned in the receipt, and when the balance was offered a few days after the expiration of that time Edwards refused to receive it and live up to his bargain, on the shallow pretext that time was of the essence of the contract, and he sets it up as one of his defenses. It lacks merit, if for no other reason than that the delay was brought about by Smyth, the attorney of Edwards. At the time fixed for the transfer, and payment of the balance, a few days before the expiration of the period, Smyth had not provided himself with an assignment, and time was given him to obtain it. The real ground for refusing to perform the contract, and the main defense offered, is that Anderson Bourgeois, the judgment debtor, procured it by falsely representing that he was possessed of no property out of which the judgments could be made, and that he was execution proof, whereas in truth he was the owner of the Hotel Normandie at Ocean City, held for him by his wife, Annie Estell Bourgeois, in trust, in fraud of creditors; that he carried on the hotel business in her name; that the money used to buy the judgment was his money, the proceeds of said business; that he was the actual purchaser; and that the complainant, Rebecca Estell Bourgeois, his daughter, was a mere figurehead. By cross-bill the defendant Edwards seeks to impress his judgments as liens upon the hotel property.

[2] It is established that Anderson Bourgeois negotiated the purchase of the judgments in the name of the complainant; that he represented his financial condition as alleged; that the purchase money came from the hotel business; and that the hotel was managed by him and the funds of the business banked in the name of his daughter. The explanation is that the property and business were those of the wife; that he managed both for her without fixed compensation; that the trade funds were handled by the daughter as the agent of the wife; and that the judgments were purchased with the wife's funds, for her, in the name of the daughter. That a contract to purchase a debt may be enforced in equity (Pomeroy on Cont. § 20); that specific performance of a contract obtained by deceitful practices will be denied (36 Cyc. 600; 6 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur., § 785); that a parol contract of purchase by a debtor of his own debt for a sum less than the amount due is unenforceable for want of consideration (Eckert v. Wallace, 75 N. J. Law, 171, 67 Atl. 76); and that a husband may give his time and labor to the management of his wife's business, without remuneration, and immune from creditors' attack (Taylor v. Wanda, 55 N. J. Eq. 491, 37 Atl. 315, 62 Am. St. Rep. 818)—are all well-settled and pertinent principles asserted, but not debated, by counsel. The proposition of law advanced by the complainant that Edwards, at the time the contract was made, knowing that the representations were false and that the business was that of his debtor, is without redress, citing Baker v. Spencer, 47 N. Y. 562, Adams v. Sage, 28 N. Y. 103, Parsons v. Hughes, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 591, Ackerman v. Ackerman, 44 N. J. Law, 173, and Lembeck v. Gerken, 86 N. J. Law, 111, 90 Atl. 698, is inapplicable; for, if both falsity and knowledge of deceit be admitted, then the situation would be governed by the rule already stated that a purchase by a debtor of his debt for a lesser sum than the amount due does not liquidate it.

There was no testimony offered to impeach the representations that induced the making of the contract, other than that which related to the ownership of the hotel and the proprietorship of the enterprise, and the question to be decided is: Does the evidence establish that the hotel was the debtor's property, or that the business belonged to him? The conclusion reached as to the former will have a strong bearing in disposing of the latter, and that subject will be first examined.

[3-6] The history of the hotel ownership is somewhat involved, tedious to follow, and difficult to miniature. The Normandle Hotel was owned originally by the Ocean City Real Estate & Investment Company, of which Anderson Bourgeois was the holder of 60 per cent., and his wife, Annie Estell Bourgeois, the owner of 40 per cent. of the capital stock. In September, 1907, the company sold the hotel to Phillip H. S. Cake for $55,000; $10,000 in cash, and mortgages for $30,000 and $15,000 respectively. Only $7,000 of the cash consideration was paid. The company at that time went into liquidation, and the $30,000 mortgage was taken in the name of its directors, statutory trustees, and shortly after assigned to Mrs. Bourgeois. The property was sold to Cake, subject to a $16,000 mortgage held by one Wiley, which was to have been paid off by the company, but, as only part payment was made, reducing the principal to $11,600, the $15,000 mortgage given by Cake was assigned to Wiley in escrow. Cake immediately began to remodel the hotel, and purchased an adjoining strip of land, upon which he started to build an addition or annex. Mrs. Bourgeois advanced the money necessary to buy this strip over and above a mortgage of $3,500 held by one Corson. In the spring following, 1908, after Cake had dismantled the hotel and partly erected the annex, he was stalled in his operations for want of cash or credit. Mrs. Bourgeois had advanced to him considerable money, and in this fix she had to step in, in self-protection, and advance more to finish the jobs. At that time, May 20, 1908, Cake executed to her a mortgage on the hotel and annex for $80,000, to secure past loans and future advances. While the building operations were still going on, foreclosure proceedings were begun on the Wiley mortgage, and at the sheriff's sale, June 7, 1909, the property was struck off to Mrs. Bourgeois for $19,500. Nixon v. Cake, Docket 30, p. 544. The Corson mortgage was also foreclosed and struck off to Mrs. Bourgeois September 20, 1909, for $6,900. Corson v. Cake, Docket 81, p. 72. In both cases Mrs. Bourgeois was a party defendant, by reason of her subsequent mortgages, and in the latter suit the assignor of Edwards was a defendant because of the judgments here involved. After the sale Mrs. Bourgeois found herself unable to negotiate a loan upon the property or to otherwise raise a sufficient sum to pay the sheriff and other obligations which were then pressing, approximately $35,000, and in this dilemma Mr. George A. Bourgeois, her brother-in-law, and an esteemed member of our bar, came to her rescue, and by joining her in a bond to the Central Trust Company of Camden, secured by a mortgage on the hotel property, obtained a loan of $30,000, and by indorsing her note secured $4,500 from the Marine Trust Company of Atlantic City, which put her in funds to square her liabilities. To secure himself against loss

Mr. Bourgeois incorporated the Ætna Company, which he controlled and to which he had the property transferred, and by means of which he managed the hotel business during the following season. Immediately upon the conveyance the company executed to Mrs. Bourgeois three mortgages of $17,500, $80,000, and $2,000 respectively, concurrent liens, the first two presumably representing her investment, and the latter to secure the balance due a materialman, American Art Marble Company, and thereafter conveyed the premises to Rebecca Estell Bourgeois, the conveyance being made to her instead of to her mother, to prevent a merger of the mortgages. In 1913 the Central Trust Company foreclosed its mortgage, and at the sale the property was bid in by Mrs. Bourgeois and conveyed to her by the sheriff on August 28, 1913. She financed the purchase by a loan of $30,000 from the Economy Building & Loan Association, to which she also gave two mortgages of $15,000 each. This ends the recital of the title, and at this point we may properly pause to consider the efficacy of the title conveyed to Mrs. Bourgeois by the sheriff under the two foreclosure proceedings of the Nixon and Corson mortgages; for it is thoroughly settled by abundance of authority that a purchaser under a foreclosure sale acquires the title of the mortgagee and the interest of all the defendants as of the time of the institution of the suit. Mount v. Manhattan Co., 43 N. J. Eq. 25, 9 Atl. 114, affirmed 44 N. J. Eq. 297, 18 Atl. 80; Boorum v. Tucker, 51 N. J. Eq. 135, 26 Atl. 456; Henninger v. Heald, 52 N. J. Eq. 431, 29 Atl. 190; Wimpfelheimer v. Prudential Insurance Co., 56 N. J. Eq. 585, 39 Atl. 916. It is true, as the defendant asserts, that refuge cannot be taken behind them if it is satisfactorily made out that Anderson Bourgeois thereby concealed his interest in the hotel and caused this interest to be transferred to his wife in fraud of creditors. The form of the transaction is immaterial. Equity looks to the substance. A fraud perpetrated by means of judicial procedure is as vulnerable and impotent as any other imposition, whatever the scheme may be. Metropolitan Bank v. Durant, 22 N. J. Eq. 35, affirmed 24 N. J. Eq. 556; Lee v. Cole, 44 N. J. Eq. 318, 15 Atl. 531, reversed on facts, 45 N. J. Eq. 779, 18 Atl. 854. A decree in a mortgage foreclosure is not res judicata as between defendants whose rights have not been litigated. 23 Cyc. 1279; Gardner v. Raistbeck, 28 N. J. Eq. 71. Now, unless it is shown that the foreclosure sales were effected in promotion of a fraudulent design to cheat the creditors of her husband, or that she acted as trustee for her husband, Mrs. Bourgeois' new title, born of the two mortgages, which admittedly were bona fide, is unimpeachable. The charge and the insistence that the mortgage foreclosures were brought about by the connivance of Mr. and Mrs. Bourgeois are not in the slightest degree supported by evidence. There is not a shred of testimony that they, or either of them, contrived or were instrumental in the bringing of the suits, and for aught that appears they were unwilling parties to it; there is nothing in the circumstances to justify the inference that they in any manner invited them, nor is there anything in the case upon which to found a belief that in purchasing the property at the sheriff's sale Mrs. Bourgeois acted otherwise than for herself. The desperate financial straits in which she then was and which required the assistance of her brother-in-law to relieve her argues profoundly against inviting so distressing a situation. So far as the ownership is concerned, these conclusions could end here, but I surmise it will be more satisfying to the contending parties to discuss the circumstances from which it is argued that fraud is inferable, and I will state them as succinctly as possible.

[7] Mrs. Bourgeois was possessed of an extensive land estate inherited from her parents, and, having the business capacity and experience of the ordinary gentlewoman only, she throughout her married life left its management and disposition to her husband who used it according to his own good judgment and accounted for it when and as he willed, and undoubtedly fairly and honestly. He had used considerable of her money, collected from the sale of her land, and in repayment gave her the 40 per cent. of the stock in the Ocean City Real Estate & Investment Company when it was formed in 1899. From that time until 1908, when the corporation went into liquidation, he had appropriated considerable more of her estate. When Cake purchased the Normandie, he contracted with him to erect the annex for $33,000, and to build bathrooms for $6,600. He completed these contracts, but was never paid. It is claimed that he obtained the lumber from his wife's estate, and that she furnished him with money to carry on the operation, in the aggregate to the value and amount of $20,000, and to secure her he caused to be assigned his three fifths interest in the $30,000 purchase-money mortgage given by Cake; the remaining two fifths belonged to her by reason of her proportionate stockholdings in the real estate company. That Mrs. Bourgeois advanced to her husband $8,000 towards this undertaking, that he procured lumber of the value of $12,000 from her sawmill, and that she lent to Cake and paid for his use, in remodeling the hotel, approximately $60,000, for which Cake gave his mortgage of that amount, is the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Bourgeois. It is not clear whether this mortgage was intended to refund the Nixon and Corson mortgages. The explanations of the various transactions are not harmonious, and the proof of the advances equal to the securities is inconclusive, but withal it is satisfactorily shown that Mrs. Bourgeois invested a vast sum of her private estate; that she borrowed much money from banks and friends and pledged her resources to the point of exhaustion to save the hotel; that her husband's appropriations were large; and that the assignment and execution of the two mortgages to her were actuated by motives of good faith and for the single purpose of securing her against loss. That the testimony is in confusion and that Mr. and Mrs. Bourgeois were unable to account to the amount of her securities after the lapse of seven years, when accounts and vouchers were no longer available and memory had failed, is not surprising and her diligent, but unsuccessful, efforts to round out the grand total is in no sense compelling evidence against the integrity of her claims. The onus of establishing it is not upon her; the burden of proof that her claims were untrue and fraudulent was upon the defendant Edwards. Taylor v. Wanda, supra. This burden the defendant has not sustained.

[8] There is one additional aspect to which allusion should be made, which counsel urges as a badge of fraud, and as demonstrating that a valuable interest in the hotel is held by Mrs. Bourgeois in trust for her husband. His outlay in performing his contract with Cake of $33,000 for the annex and $25,000 for extras, gave additional value to his wife's mortgage liens, and it is the insistence that fraud is to be inferred from his failure to secure his debt by mechanic's lien or mortgage on the property; in other words, the argument is that he should have protected himself at the expense of his wife and sacrificed her interests for his own gain. An all-sufficient answer to this is that, in view of the confidence reposed in him, under the influence of which his wife surrendered to him the management and control of her fortune, which he jeopardized, such an advantage, in the crisis, would have been unconscionable and unpardonable. In the circumstances common honesty and justice dictated that he should forego his own rights rather than that she should suffer. It was his privilege to grant her the preference, and I know of no rule of law or equity that required him to subordinate her interests to his or to those of his creditors. Furthermore, it is to be noted that at the time the preferences were given Mr. Bourgeois was only contingently liable as surety of Cake to the defendant Edwards' assignor, and fraudulent intent as a matter of law, is therefore not to be implied. Severs v. Dodson, 53 N. J. Eq. 633, 34 Atl. 7, 51 Am. St. Rep. 641.

Nor is there anything in the contention that Mrs. Bourgeois holds the hotel in trust for her husband to the extent of the value added to the property by reason of the performance of his contract with Cake. There is no proof of a trust relation, and none is inferable from the circumstances. There is no evidence of the present value of the property, to show that it exceeds the amount of Mrs. Bourgeois' investment, nor is there any as to the state of the hotel at the time it was sold to her by the sheriff and that in its then incomplete condition it was worth more than the amount of her bids. And in support of the new title acquired by Mrs. Bourgeois from the mortgages under the foreclosure sale is the undisputed fact that the purchase price was her money exclusively, obtained by her without the participation of her husband in its procurement.

[9] Now, as to the business: The management of this, like the other affairs of Mrs. Bourgeois, is in the hands of her husband, who has general charge of the conduct of the hotel. The finances, however, are under the control of her daughter, the complainant. Annually, at the beginning of each season, she is put in funds by her mother which, together with the proceeds of the business, are deposited in her name and checked out by her as the requirements of the business demand and as her mother and father may direct. She accounts to her mother. During the prosperous season Mrs. Bourgeois received the profits and in lean years she has been compelled to resort to other funds to keep the concern going. I have little doubt that the enterprise is hers, and that the moneys used to buy the judgments belonged to her, and that they were bought for her in the name of her daughter. The profits of a wife's business, though derived through the activities of her husband, nevertheless belong to the wife. Tresch v. Wirtz, 34 N. J. Eq. 124; Elliot v. Bodine, 59 N. J. Law, 567, 36 Atl. 1038; Taylor v. Wanda, supra; Kutcher v. Williams, 40 N. J. Eq. 436, 3 Atl. 257; Dickson v. Shay, 45 N. J. Eq. 821, 18 Atl. 688; Arnold v. Talcott, 55 N. J. Eq. 519, 37 Atl. 891.

A decree will be advised in favor of the complainant, with costs.

MOLINA v. COMISION REGULADORA DEL MERCADO DE HENEQUEN.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. July 17, 1918.)

1. INTERNATIONAL LAW §4—RECOGNITION OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENT—RETROACTIVE EFFECT.

The recognition by the United States on August 31, 1917, of the Carranza government as the de jure government of Mexico is retroactive in effect, and validates all actions and conduct of the government so recognized from the commencement of its existence.

2. INTERNATIONAL LAW §8—RIGHT OF SE- QUESTERATORS—CUSTODIANSHIP.

A government which has sequestered property occupies to it the position of custodian only.

3. INTERNATIONAL LAW §12—SEQUESTERED PROPERTY—ACTION FOR CONVERSION—PROOF.

In an action for conversion of property sequestered by an agency of a foreign government on motion to strike the complaint, defendant must show, not only that the agency had authority to dispose of the property sequestered, but that it had authority to dispose of all of it.

4. INTERNATIONAL LAW ⇐10—JURISDICTION
—RESIDENCE OF PARTIES.

That both plaintiff and defendant in a conversion suit for property sequestered by an agency of a foreign government are citizens of a foreign country wherein the wrong complained of was committed does not deprive the courts of this state of jurisdiction.

5. INTERNATIONAL LAW ⇐10—JURISDICTION
—FOREIGN TERRITORY.

That the courts of one independent government will not sit in judgment on the validity of the acts of another done within its territory does not deprive the courts of the first government of jurisdiction once acquired over the case.

Action by Ricardo Molina against the Comision Reguladora del Mercado de Henequen. On motion to strike out the complaint. Motion denied.

Argued before Justice SWAYZE sitting alone pursuant to 1912 Practice Act (P. L. p. 377).

Nelson S. Spencer and Otto O. Wierum, Jr., both of New York City, and Robert H. McCarter, of Newark, for the motion. William Bradford Roulstone, of New York City, and Robert S. Hudspeth, of Jersey City, opposed.

SWAYZE, J. After the denial of the motion to dissolve the attachment in this case (108 Atl. 397), the defendants obtained leave to move to strike out the complaint, and to take testimony with that in view. This motion is now before me.

[1] It is unnecessary to go into the evidence in detail. I am satisfied that on April 15, 1915, the revolutionary authorities in Yucatan took proceedings against the property of the present plaintiff. These revolutionary authorities were acting under Gen. Carranza; and their action was subsequently recognized by his government as early as 1916. The Carranza government had then been recognized by the United States (on October 19, 1915) as the de facto government in Mexico; it has since been recognized (on August 31, 1917), as the de jure government; and the recognition by the United States is retroactive in effect, and validates all the actions and conduct of the government so recognized from the commencement of its existence. Oetjen v. Central Leather Co., 246 U. S. 297, 38 Sup. Ct. 309, 62 L. Ed. 726.

It is settled by the decisions in that case and in Ricaud v. American Metal Co., 246 U. S. 304, 38 Sup. Ct. 312, 62 L. Ed. 733, that our courts will not sit in judgment on the validity of the acts of another independent government done within its own territory. It is therefore unnecessary to inquire whether the action taken by the revolutionary authorities of Yucatan against Molina's property was legal or not. It was effective under the existing circumstances of revolution; and the only question for this court is what the action was. The answer depends, in the first instance, upon the construction of two documents: (1) The decree (to call it by that name) of Gen. Alvarado, of April 15, 1915; and (2) his instructions to Andres Barera, dated April 16, 1915. Subsequent acts are important as showing that the Mexican government recognized, and, so to speak, took over the action of the Yucatan government, and that the decree of April 15th applied to Mr. Molina. The decree of April 15th does not mention Molina's name; but it is sufficiently proved that he was one of the class of persons therein referred to. The decree prevented him from selling, mortgaging, or alienating his property, and, in itself, went no further.

The instructions to Barera the next day are more specific. Their force and effect is to be determined by the quotation therein contained from the order issued by Gen. Alvarado to Alvarez, representative of Molina, which was embodied in the instructions to Barera evidently to define the scope of those instructions.

On these documents the defendant relies.

The case shows clearly that they amounted to what is called by the defendants a sequestration of Molina's property. The case does not turn upon the proper or the improper translation of words; nor does it depend at all upon the use of the word "sequestration" by the defendants. It depends upon the acts of the parties, and the authority given.

[2] The announcement, as it is called, to Alvarez, which is set forth in the order to Barera, states that the government has resolved to sequester the properties of Molina with the purpose of beginning the investigation of the civil and penal responsibilities which the state will exact. It was, then, a sequestration at the beginning of a proceeding, call it judicial or not. It was a sequestration by way of mesne process, and not by way of final process; for evidently, before Molina's title could be divested under the proceeding, there was meant to be some investigation. This investigation was had, and Molina was found to come within the class of persons whose property was to be sequestered. The rights that passed by the sequestration were such rights as would pass upon a sequestration by way of mesne process under our law; those rights are rights of custody only, and not of title. It has been held that on such a sequestration under our law a sale may be ordered by the court of certain kinds of property, including the produce of a farm. Shaw v. Wright, 8 Ves. 22; Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 5 Hare, 123. Where a government has sequestered property, no doubt it also may order a sale. But speaking generally, the position of sequestrators is that of custodians only.

That this was the nature of the procedure in the present case is shown by the express limitation upon the authority given to Alvarez, as the representative of Molina. He is ordered to abstain, as long as the sequestration lasts, from disposing in any way of Molina's property under his strictest responsibility to the government. This prevented any sale by him; and there is no suggestion of any sale by the government or its agents. That is excluded by the fact that investigation was to be made before Molina was condemned. Alvarez is also told by the order of Gen. Alvarado that this does not deprive him of the administration of such properties; that he must give an account of it to the provisional superintendent and controller, Andres Barera. The subsequent papers, especially the detailed report of July 12, 1916, from the director general of sequestered property, shows that it was the policy of the government to keep the administrator's staff which was officiating in control of the sequestered property, for the very obvious reason that in that way the property would be made very much more productive.

[3] It is clear that, under the order of April 16th to Barera, he was not to have the actual management of the property, but to receive the accounts of the administration by Alvarez, Molina's own representative. It is quite likely that the administration later involved the turning of the property, or the proceeds of the land, into cash, notwithstanding the express prohibition in Gen. Alvarado's order to Alvarez; and it may be, and I think it probable, that the accounting by Alvarez to Barera involved not merely a statement of account, but the actual turning over of proceeds of sales if any were subsequently permitted, and it is possible that Alvarez, as the recognized representative of Molina, confided with the administration of Molina's property by Gen. Alvarado himself, subsequently was permitted to sell the produce of the farm and to pass a good title thereto. This, however, is not the claim of the defendants. Such a claim would not avail on this motion, since, in the absence of an express order for sale, it involves inferences to be drawn by a jury from facts proved. The defendant's present claim is that in some way and at some time the revolutionary government had power to sell and pass a title to the crops of henequen. The evidence makes it probable that that was the situation at least as to a part of the crops; but, as counsel for the plaintiff well argued, in order that the defendants may prevail upon the present motion, they must show, not only that there was authority to sell part of the crops, but that there was authority to sell all; for if the title to any part of the henequen converted by the present defendant was imperfect, this action can be maintained, although the amount of damages might be less. Probably this is the true situation. Considerable time elapsed before the Mexican government took over from the revolutionary government of Yucatan, the administration of the sequestered estate. Nieto testifies that the general manager in the republic was first appointed about the end of 1915. It may well be that the revolutionary government of Yucatan would not, or could not, take the responsibility of parting with the property without the action of the Mexican government. If so, there was in the meantime no one authorized to sell the henequen. It was impounded, but not yet forfeited or condemned, if in fact it ever was.

[4] The motion to dismiss the complaint must be denied unless I am required to grant it because both plaintiff and defendant are citizens of Yucatan, and the wrong complained of was committed there. I know of no such rule in New Jersey; and the cases cited by counsel from the New York courts, to which I have had access, do not sustain his position. On the contrary, the first case cited, Robinson v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., 112 N. Y. 315, 19 N. E. 625, 2 L. R. A. 636, quotes McCormick v. Railroad Co., 49 N. Y. 303, to the contrary, and calls attention to the fact that the then pending case was governed by the Code of Civil Procedure enacted after the decision of the McCormick Case. We have no such statute as required the decision reached by the New York Court of Appeals in Robinson v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co.

Latourette v. Clark, 30 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 242, is said in Burdick v. Freeman, 120 N. Y. 420, 24 N. E. 949, to be regarded as overruled; and in the latter case the court did take jurisdiction, although it said that the Supreme Court might, in its discretion, have refused to entertain the action. This is far from holding that there is a lack of jurisdiction in such a case.

Hoes v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Co., 173 N. Y. 435, 66 N. E. 119, comes nearer being in point, but the ground of decision there was, as the court said, that it presented a case of collusion and legal fraud.

I have not felt called upon to examine the other New York cases referred to, which were decided by inferior courts.

Even the case of Dewitt v. Buchanan, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 31, cited in defendant's brief, implies that special reasons may justify an action by a nonresident plaintiff against a nonresident defendant for an injury happening abroad. Such a special reason exists in this case, where the proceeding is in rem to reach property attached in our jurisdiction.

[5] Even if counsel for the defendant are right in their contention that the henequen said to have been converted by the defendant had all of it been sold to the defendant by the authority of the government of Mexico or of Yucatan, it would not be my duty to dismiss the complaint. The rule was stated by the United States Supreme Court in Ricaud v. American Metal Co. Justice Clarke for the court says that the rule that the courts of one independent government will not sit in judgment on the validity of the acts of another done within its own territory does not deprive the courts of jurisdiction once acquired over the case. It requires only that when it is made to appear that the foreign government has acted in a given way on the subject-matter of the litigation, the details of such action or the merit of the result cannot be questioned, but must be accepted by our courts as a rule for their decision. To accept a ruling authority and to decide accordingly is not a surrender or abandonment of jurisdiction, but an exercise of it. The Supreme Court in that case in fact decided the question upon the merits, as it had also previously decided the case of Underhill v. Hernandez, 168 U. S. 250, 18 Sup. Ct. 83, 42 L. Ed. 456. In the case of the American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U. S. 347, 29 Sup. Ct. 511, 53 L. Ed. 828, 16 Ann. Cas. 1,047, it is true that the action of the court was a dismissal of the complaint; but it was after a trial upon the merits, not on a mere preliminary motion. The action taken was equivalent to the direction of a verdict under our practice after all the evidence is in; and the defendant would be swift if a verdict should be directed in its favor to call attention to the difference in the legal effect of a judgment thereon and the mere dismissal of the complaint. Moreover, if I understand the case, the claim of the defendants is a claim of right not shown by documents which the court must construe, but shown by facts, by acts of the revolutionary authorities, or the Mexican government, the effect of which and the inferences to be drawn therefrom are the proper subjects of inquiry by a jury, as well as the date upon which the alleged right to sell accrued.

The present motion is denied, with costs.

ELDRIDGE BREWING CO. v. COCHECO BOTTLING CO.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Strafford. June 29, 1918.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES §47—ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—VALIDITY—FRAUD.

An assignment of all assets including stock in trade, for benefit of creditors, is not void as to creditors as a sale of stock in trade, in violation of Laws 1909, c. 69, § 1.

Transferred from Superior Court, Strafford County; Allen, Judge.

Assumpsit by the Eldredge Brewing Company against the Cochecho Bottling Company. Transferred, without a ruling, from the superior court. Case discharged.

Assumpsit. The defendants assigned all their assets, including stock in trade, book accounts, tools, and machinery, to one O'Malley for the benefit of all their creditors. After he had accepted the trust and taken possession of the property, the plaintiffs attached it as the defendants' property. The court permitted the assignee to intervene in this suit and ask for an order dissolving the attachment. Transferred, without a ruling, from the January term, 1918, of the superior court.

Ralph C. Gray and Ernest L. Guptill, both of Portsmouth, for plaintiffs. Fred H. Brown, of Somersworth, and Hughes & Doe, of Dover, for defendants.

YOUNG, J. The plaintiffs are creditors of the defendants, and they contend that the assignment is void as to them, because of Laws 1909, c. 69, § 1. While an assignment like the one in question may be a sale for some purposes (Kenefick v. Perry, 61 N. H. 362; McGreenery v. Murphy, 76 N. H. 338, 82 Atl. 720, 89 L. R. A. [N. S.] 874; Clough v. Glines, 77 N. H. 408, 92 Atl. 803; Goodrich v. Woodsome, 102 Atl. 533), it is not a sale within the ordinary meaning of that term. This tends to the conclusion that such transactions are not void under the provisions of section 1. The fact such a transaction tends rather to prevent than to promote the evil at which that section is aimed—that peculiar to merchants selling their stock in trade in order to defraud their creditors—also tends to the conclusion that such an assignment is not a sale, within the meaning of that term as it is used in this section. In fact, all the evidence points to this conclusion. It must be held, therefore, that the attachment of the trust property was illegal.

Case discharged. All concurred.

CLOUGH et al. v. WILTON.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Grafton. June 29, 1918.)

TIME §8(8)—EXCLUDING FIRST OR LAST DAY—APPEAL.

An appeal from the probate court was not claimed in time, where, excluding only the day on which the decree appealed from was made, it was not claimed within 60 days thereafter, as required by Pub. St. 1901, c. 200, § 2, as section 34 of chapter 2, providing that the day from which time is to be reckoned is to be excluded in computing the time within which an act must be done, tends to the conclusion that that is the only day to be excluded.

Transferred from Superior Court, Grafton County; Sawyer, Judge.

Proceeding by A. M. Clough and another, executors, to probate the will of Ella A. Higginson. From a decree allowing the will, George Wilton, administrator, appealed to the superior court. Motion to dismiss the appeal, and case transferred to the Supreme Court. Case discharged.

Probate appeal. The probate court allowed the will of Ella A. Higginson on March 3, 1917, and the defendant appealed from that decree on May 3d of that year. The plaintiffs moved to dismiss, because the appeal was not claimed within 60 days after the decree appealed from was made.

Drew, Shurtleff, Morris & Oakes, of Lancaster, for plaintiffs. George W. Pike, of Lisbon, and L. F. Sherman, of Boston, Mass., for defendant.

YOUNG, J. The fact P. S. c. 2, § 84, provides that the day from which time is to be reckoned is to be excluded in computing the time within which an act must be done tends to the conclusion that that is the only day to be excluded in making the computation. As there is nothing to rebut this conclusion, it must be held that the appeal was not claimed within the time limited by P. S. c. 200, § 2. It does not necessarily follow that the appellant is remediless for sections 7-9 of this chapter provide that one who is prevented from claiming an appeal by accident, mistake, or misfortune may petition the court for relief, and it has been held that a mistake of counsel may be a misfortune within the meaning of section 7. Grout v. Cole, 57 N. H. 547; St. Pierre v. Foster, 75 N. H. 10, 11, 70 Atl. 289.

CASEY v. FRANK JONES BREWING CO.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Rockingham. June 29, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT § 361—INJURIES TO SERVANT—STATUTES.

To recover under Laws 1911, c. 163, an employee need not have been, at the time of the injury, working upon or in proximity to power-driven machinery.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT § 278(16)—INJURY TO SERVANT—INSPECTION.

In an action by a servant for injuries occasioned by a sliver on a hoop on a barrel, evidence held to sustain a finding that the master should have discovered the defect before the barrel was delivered to plaintiff.

3. TRIAL § 811—APPLICATION OF PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE OF JURORS.

In an action for damages by one who lost a hand through septic poisoning, recovery could be had for pain and suffering, although there was no evidence offered thereon; the jury in such case using the knowledge they possess in common with men in general.

4. EVIDENCE § 14—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

It is a matter of common knowledge that old scars are often sensitive, and that amputation of a hand is frequently followed by suffering.

Transferred from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Sawyer, Judge.

Case by William Casey against the Frank Jones Brewing Company, under Laws 1911, c. 163, to recover for injuries suffered by the plaintiff while employed in rolling barrels of ale across a cellar in the defendant's brewery. Trial by jury, and verdict for the plaintiff. The injury was caused by a sliver of iron, which projected from a hoop on a barrel. The sliver appeared old and rusty, and the barrel was not roughly handled after it passed from the control of those whose business it was to inspect and repair it. The defendant excepted to the denial of its motion for a nonsuit and to certain instructions given to the jury. Transferred from the May term, 1917, of the superior court by Sawyer, J. Exceptions overruled.

Ralph C. Gray and Ernest L. Guphill, both of Portsmouth, for plaintiff. Charles H. Batchelder and John L. Mitchell, both of Portsmouth, for defendant.

PEASLEE, J. [1] The defendant's claim that it is not liable under Laws 1911, c. 163, because at the time of the accident the plaintiff was not working upon or in proximity to power-driven machinery, is based upon a misconception of the first opinion in the Lizotte Case, 78 N. H. 354, 100 Atl. 757. The later decision in that case makes it certain that liability under the act is not so limited. Morin, Adm'r, v. Company, 78 N. H. —, 103 Atl. 312.

[2] The defendant also argues that there was no evidence of its fault in permitting the hoop on the barrel the plaintiff was handling to be in a dangerous condition. There was evidence that the defendant provided for more or less inspection to discover such defects, that the sliver which injured the plaintiff was rusty, and that the barrel had not been subjected to rough usage after it left the custody of those who were supposed to put it in order. This affords a substantial basis for a finding that the defect existed, and should have been discovered and remedied, before the barrel was delivered to the plaintiff.

[3, 4] The defendant also excepted to the charge upon the ground that there was no evidence as to pain suffered or likely to be suffered by the plaintiff. The injury consisted of a wound in the hand, from which septic poisoning resulted, necessitating the amputation of the hand and a part of the forearm. There was no testimony on the subject of pain, but it must be evident that it is a usual and ordinary accompaniment of such an injury. It is a matter of common knowledge that old scars are often sensitive, and that amputation is frequently followed by suffering and discomfort for a long period of time. If damages had been asked upon the ground of unusual suffering, the defendant's position would be well taken, and the authority it relies upon (Jewell v. Railway, 55 N. H. 84) would be applicable. But the instruction to which exception was taken did not submit that proposition. It merely left the matter to the jury upon the general question. In this situation the jury were to use the knowledge of the subject they possess in common with men in general. Moran v. Railway, 74 N. H. 500, 69 Atl. 884, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 920, 124 Am. St. Rep. 994; Wheeler v. Contoucook Mills, 77 N. H. 551, 94 Atl. 265.

If the defendant's position was that the plaintiff did not and would not suffer any pain, it could have inquired of him, or introduced other evidence upon the subject. It was also open to counsel to argue the absence of suffering, from the fact that the plaintiff failed to produce testimony to show its existence. Boucher v. Larochelle, 74 N. H. 433, 68 Atl. 870, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 416. Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

TURNER et al. v. HUDSON CEMENT & SUPPLY CO. OF BALTIMORE CITY et al. (No. 24.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 20, 1918.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 96(2) — CONVEYANCE TO DAUGHTER.

If husband's creditors will be injured, he, holding as tenant by entireties with his wife six months before her death, cannot during her illness, when there is every probability of surviving her, claim as valid consideration for a transfer to his daughter a request from the wife that he give the property to the daughter.

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 96(2) — CONVEYANCE TO CHILD — RENDITION OF SERVICES.

Even when a child over age, and while residing with his parents without any agreement for compensation, renders them services, such services do not constitute valuable consideration for a conveyance from one of the parents, as against creditors.

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 157(1) — KNOWLEDGE OF GRANTEE.

A daughter who kept her father's accounts, drew checks and notes for him, and was familiar with his business, was chargeable with such knowledge of his financial condition as was necessary to bind her as a fraudulent grantee under conveyance from him to her fraudulent as to his creditors.

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 43(1) — EXTENSION OF CREDIT — FAITH IN GRANTOR'S OWNERSHIP.

If a man is in debt, and inherits property, or it becomes vested in him as a tenant by the entireties, he cannot give it away to the deprivation of his creditors merely because credit was not given him on the faith of his ownership of the property.

5. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 208 — VOLUNTARY DEED — INTENTION TO DEFRAUD.

A voluntary deed, which is fraudulent in law, is void as against pre-existing creditors, and a voluntary deed, made with the design to defraud subsequent creditors, may be impeached by those so defrauded.

6. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 274 — SUIT BY SUBSEQUENT CREDITORS — BURDEN OF PROOF.

In suit by subsequent creditors to set aside voluntary deeds, the burden was on such creditors to show that it was the intention and design of the grantor and grantee to defraud subsequent creditors.

7. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 298(4) — INTENTION TO DEFRAUD — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In suit by subsequent creditors to set aside voluntary deeds, evidence held insufficient to show that it was the intention and design of the grantor and grantee, father and daughter, to defraud such creditors.

8. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 313(2) — SUIT TO SET ASIDE — RELIEF — SUPPORT BY BILL.

In suit by subsequent creditors to set aside fraudulent conveyances by father to daughter, under prayers, including one for general relief, court can decree sale of whole lot, subject to mortgage, to distribute third of proceeds which creditors are entitled to have, and to pay over balance, if any, to daughter; she being entitled thereto.

9. GIFTS — 18(1) — DELIVERY.

Where a mother intended her daughter should have a sum of money in the house, or whatever was left of it after her death, but made no delivery of it during her lifetime, there was no complete gift of the money to the daughter.

10. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 43(1) — GIFT OF MONEY.

A husband had no right to give away to his daughter, to the prejudice of his creditors, a third of a sum of money belonging to his wife at her death, and therefore coming to him in the settlement of her estate.

11. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 312(3) — RIGHT OF GRANTEE — ALLOWANCE OF INTEREST.

In suit to set aside fraudulent conveyances from father to daughter, daughter being adjudged entitled to a sum of money, but having lived in property which is to be sold for division of proceeds between himself and creditors, interest should not be allowed her.

12. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 312(3) — RIGHT OF CREDITOR — INEQUITY.

In suit to set aside fraudulent conveyances, held that it would be inequitable to permit a company to furnish materials for the fraudulent grantor's house, receiving payment for them, and, as a subsisting creditor, to profit by the increased value of the property caused by the materials which it furnished and was paid for.

13. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 312(3) — RIGHT OF CREDITORS.

What creditors of a voluntary grantor, injured by the transfer, had a right to at the time was the value of the property as it then stood vested in the grantor as a tenant by the entireties.

14. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 208 — "SUBSISTING CREDITORS."

Though companies received payments in full at times for material furnished builder, and though amount due when his claimed fraudulent transfers were made was afterwards paid, other indebtedness having been created almost immediately, and there being practically a running account, companies were "subsisting creditors" of builder at time of conveyances.

15. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 208 — "SUBSEQUENT CREDITOR."

Where an account was fully settled, with no arrangement or expectation of immediate continuance, the creditor was a "subsequent creditor" in relation to the debtor's voluntary conveyance.

Appeal from Circuit Court of Baltimore City; Morris A. Soper, Judge.

Suit by the Hudson Cement & Supply Company of Baltimore City and others against Roberta L. Turner and Carroll A. Turner, her husband, and Frederick E. Tobe. From the decree, defendants appeal. Reversed, and cause remanded.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRIS-

COE, THOMAS, PATTISON, STOCK-BRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Benjamin Rosenheim and Myer Rosenbush, both of Baltimore, for appellants. John C. Kumpf and Ferdinand C. Dugan, both of Baltimore (Meyer Steinberg, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellees.

BOYD, C. J. The bill of complaint was filed in this case by the appellees against the appellants to set aside two deeds made by Frederick E. Tobe to his daughter, Roberta L., who is now Mrs. Turner, a deed from Roberta L. Turner and her husband to said Tobe, and a lease from him to his daughter, and to sell the property described in the deeds and apply the net proceeds to the payment of the claims alleged to be due the plaintiffs. The American Exchange & Savings Bank and the West North Avenue Savings & Loan Association, mortgagees, were also made defendants. A decree was passed, adjudging (1) that Frederick E. Tobe was indebted to the Lafayette Mill & Lumber Company in the sum of $6,454, to the Hudson Cement & Supply Company in the sum of $604.94, to George H. Harrington & Bro. in the sum of $187.79, and to A. Weiskittel & Son Company in the sum of $191.39; (2) that the deeds and lease be set aside; and (3) that the properties, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be sold subject to the mortgages thereon. From that decree this appeal was taken.

The evidence shows that Frederick E. Tobe was what is spoken of as a "bonus builder," and had been for some years. In this instance a Mr. Lauer made an arrangement with Mr. Tobe, and after Mr. Lauer's death his wife continued the arrangement, by which she advanced at different stages of completion of the houses built on her property 75 per cent. of the cost, and then made leases to Tobe subject to ground rents, varying from $70 to $120 per annum. He then executed mortgages to her to secure the amounts so advanced. The appellees furnished Tobe with materials used in the houses. This had been going on for some years, and the Hudson Cement & Supply Company and the Lafayette Mill & Lumber Company had large dealings with Tobe.

On May 5, 1910, Tobe assigned to his wife, for a consideration named in the deed as $3,500 a leasehold property known as No. 2403 West North avenue, subject to an annual ground rent of $120. On the same day she gave a mortgage to the West North Avenue Savings & Loan Association for $1,040. On May 7, 1914, the Provident Realty Corporation conveyed to her and to her husband, as tenants by the entirety, a property known as 2804 Garrison avenue. On that day they gave a mortgage on that property to the West North Avenue Savings & Loan Association for $1,768. Mrs. Tobe died on November 8, 1914, and her husband qualified as her administrator on November 12th. On November 24th an inventory was returned which included the leasehold property on West North avenue, appraised at $2,500. On the same day the administrator filed an account, distributing that property—one-third to himself, as surviving husband, and two-thirds to his daughter—Roberta L. Tobe (now Turner). On the same day he executed a deed as administrator, conveying the property to himself and his daughter in the proportions mentioned, and also on that day assigned his third interest in that property to his daughter. On February 17, 1915, Roberta L. Tobe gave a mortgage on the North avenue property to the West North Avenue Savings & Loan Association for $1,976, the other mortgage having been taken up or paid off. On December 3, 1914, Frederick E. Tobe conveyed to his daughter the Garrison avenue property. On August 11, 1915, she mortgaged it to the American Exchange & Savings Bank for $3,500. The same day she and her husband conveyed it to Frederick E. Tobe, and he leased it to her, reserving a ground rent of one cent per annum.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss the transfer of the Garrison avenue property from Mr. and Mrs. Turner to Tobe and the lease from him to his daughter, as they were evidently made simply for the purpose of making it leasehold, instead of fee-simple property. We do not understand the appellees to question the title of Mrs. Tobe to those two properties, and the bill does not attack the deeds to her. As the one-third interest in the leasehold on West North avenue was distributed to him, and as the survivor of his wife he became entitled to the Garrison avenue property in fee, they being tenants by entirety, our inquiry will be confined to his right to convey them to his daughter.

It would have saved us some labor in ascertaining the amounts of the liabilities and assets of Tobe at the dates of the transfers, if more concise statements giving them had been in the record, but for the purposes of this opinion it will be sufficient to adopt the admission in the appellants' brief and what Mr. Tobe himself testified to. In that brief is the following:

Liabilities of F. E. Tobe, December 3, 1914.
Lafayette Mill & Lumber Co.....	$5,455.77
Hudson Cement & Supply Co.....	1,311.00
Harrington & Bro.....	317.00
Sundry other creditors.....	500.00

Total liabilities, December 3, 1914, $7,583.77

In the examination in chief of Mr. Tobe this appears:

"Q. That made your total assets on December 3, 1914, $11,725; is that correct? A. About that; yes. Q. And your total liabilities as $7,583.77? A. About that. Q. Making you have an excess of assets over liabilities of $4,142; is that right? A. Yes."

The appellants contend that at the dates of those transfers he had ample property to meet his obligations, and hence he had the right to convey the properties to his daughter; but, without taking up each item included in the statement of his resources, it is clear that most of them were subject to reductions. The ground rent and interest on prior mortgages had to be deducted out of the proceeds of sales that he made, but were not allowed in the estimates of resources. There were other items which were at least questionable, and, if not allowed, as the appellees contend they should not be, there was no excess of assets at the time of the transfers. But, without discussing them, and conceding that there was the nominal excess testified to by Tobe, the evidence showed that he was contracting new debts and making use of the assets he had, which were of a very doubtful character—being dependent upon his ability to sell the property. The mortgages he had were second or third mortgages, and the equities in other properties were on unfinished houses and leasehold lots, the titles to which were not as a rule in him. That they were of a most unsatisfactory character is shown by the fact that when there was a foreclosure of some of the mortgages the property brought much less than the estimates of Tobe, and nothing went to the second mortgages on them. The collection of those which were collected was postponed until Tobe could make sales of the properties, which of itself would, in many instances, have delayed the creditors for several years if they had to rely on them. We can have no doubt that when he transferred the properties to his daughter he did not have sufficient assets, or of such kind as authorized him to do so.

In one of the latest cases in this court on the subject (Wilmer v. Placide, 131 Md. 399, 102 Atl. 541), we quoted from Goodman v. Wineland, 61 Md. 449, where it was said that:

"It is a 'hindrance' to creditors for a debtor to dispose of his real property and tangible chattels, which are readily subjected to execution, and compel them to reply upon merely personal obligations, with the risks and the necessity for numerous attachments usually incident to such a resource."

In the Wineland Case it was contended that he had ample means outside of what he had conveyed to his wife, and, immediately preceding what we have quoted above, the court said:

"It is further to be observed that in showing the debts due to Wineland, they are not such means as can be considered equal to real and personal property, such as was conveyed to his wife, in their availability to creditors for the prompt satisfaction of their claims."

In Bullett v. Worthington, 3 Md. Ch. 99, the chancellor on page 106 said:

"If there be a reasonable doubt of the adequacy of his means, or if his property be so circumstanced that delays, difficulties, and expense must be encountered before it can be made available to his creditors, then, as I conceive, the voluntary conveyance must fall, because then it has the effect to delay and hinder his creditors."

That was quoted with approval by Judge Eccleston in Williams v. Banks, 11 Md. 198, and was not disapproved of by the other judges in that case, and was later approved in Warner v. Dove, 33 Md. 579. In the latter case, the effort was to set aside three sales of real estate which had been conveyed to the wife by third parties. While under the circumstances there proven the court refused to set aside the deeds, the decision does not support the contention of the appellant that the appellees are not entitled to relief, because the properties owned by Tobe at the time he made the deeds were of the same character as those he had when the debts were contracted, as the facts were so different. It was there said:

"The evidence in our judgment shows beyond reasonable doubt that the husband at the time of these gifts was in prosperous circumstances, unembarrassed, and possessed of ample means, consisting of the same kind of property that he had when the debts of this firm were contracted, to pay all the debts he then owed, and that the settlement was a reasonable one. He had remaining of such property and assets more than ten times the amount of this, the only pre-existing debt."

In this case Tobe was not "in prosperous circumstances, unembarrassed," and it is not shown "beyond reasonable doubt" that he was "possessed of ample means," etc. The court went on to say:

"It is to be observed, this is not a case where a party possessed of real estate and also of assets of this description conveys the former, which is unincumbered, visible, tangible, and easily accessible to creditors, in settlement upon his wife and family and leaves his creditors to resort to the latter, where their remedy might be more precarious and difficult, and the property, at all events, less readily and conveniently accessible to their claims. A conveyance of that character would of necessity operate to hinder and delay creditors in the collection of their debts, and for that reason would be void, though enough might be shown to remain for their eventual satisfaction, as was decided by the Chancellor in Bullett v. Worthington, 3 Md. Ch. 90."

The court in another part of the opinion referred to the fact that it did not appear that the husband owned any real estate.

[1, 2] There can be no doubt that these deeds were voluntary and without sufficient consideration to support them. Tobe said, in reply to the request of his attorney to state why he transferred those properties:

"The principal consideration and the whole consideration was that my daughter had taken care of my wife, taken care of the house, looked after everything in general, and my wife wanted her to have it" —and in reply to another question said:

"The primary interest in that was the service my daughter rendered my wife and myself during my wife's illness, of nearly three years."

The daughter stated the consideration to be that:

"The properties were bought with my mother's own money, and by her request they were given to me—by her request I was to receive everything that was hers."

A sufficient answer might be, as far as the Garrison avenue property is concerned, that it was not her mother's to give, as it was conveyed to her and her husband, as tenants by the entireties, and that too only six months before her death. A wife and husband cannot thus hold property, and then during the illness of the wife, when there is every probability of the husband surviving her, claim, as a valid consideration for the transfer of the property, a request that the husband give it to their daughter, if the husband's creditors will thereby be injured. It is very commendable in a husband to carry out the wishes of his wife, if he is in such financial condition as he can properly do so, but not if it is at the expense of his creditors. According to the evidence of the daughter, her mother dealt very generously with her in her lifetime, gave her nearly $3,000 in cash, bank stock, and some other property, but she did not either give her the North avenue property in her lifetime or leave it to her by will. The daughter was just 21 years of age when her mother died, and had lived with her parents all of her life up to that time. Since then she has lived with her father, or, as she says, her father lives with her. Even when a child is over age, and, while residing with his parents without any agreement for compensation, renders them services, that does not constitute a valuable consideration for a conveyance, as against creditors. Sunderland v. Ebling, 125 Md. 686, 94 Atl. 344.

[3] There can be no doubt in this case about the knowledge of the grantee of her father's financial condition. She kept his accounts, drew checks and notes for him, and in most respects seemed to be as familiar with his affairs as he was. She is clearly chargeable with such knowledge as is necessary to bind a grantee, in a proceeding to set aside deeds, and we will not discuss that branch of the case further.

[4] It is said on the part of the appellants that the credits were not given on the faith of the ownership of the properties in question. From the 7th of May, 1914, the creditors had the right to look to some interest of Tobe in the property on Garrison avenue, and the Lafayette Mill & Lumber Company accepted renewals of some of its notes between that date and the transfers to the daughter, but we do not understand that to be a material question in this case. He had the titles to the properties in him, and he was largely indebted when he transferred them to his daughter. It could scarcely be contended that if a man is in debt and inherits property, or it becomes vested in him as a tenant by entireties, he can give it away and deprive his creditors of it, merely because he did not own it when the debts were contracted.

[5] The law in this state is well settled as to the rights of creditors against debtors making voluntary deeds. In Kane v. Rob- erts, 40 Md. 590, after citing Williams v. Banks, supra, Cooke v. Kell, 13 Md. 469, and Moore v. Blondheim, 19 Md. 175, the court said:

"These cases hold that a voluntary deed, which is fraudulent in law, is void as against pre-existing creditors, and also that a voluntary deed, which is made with the design to defraud subsequent creditors, may be impeached by those so defrauded. But they also hold that where a voluntary deed is made without design to defraud subsequent creditors and is recorded, it is valid against all subsequent creditors, because they deal with the party with knowledge, either actual or constructive, of the existence of the conveyance."

It is there also said that a deed that is fraudulent and void against the grantor's subsisting creditors is valid if recorded against subsequent creditors "when there is nothing in the deed itself, and no evidence offered tending to prove that any fraud was intended against the latter."

In Matthal, Ingram & Co. v. Heather, 57 Md. 483, the court reiterated the rule announced in prior cases that a voluntary conveyance made by a party solvent at the time may be impeached and set aside by subsequent creditors, "provided it be executed with the intention and design to defraud those who should thereafter become his creditors," but it was there said that in such case "the fraudulent purpose will not be presumed but must be proved. The onus rests on the parties assailing the deed to establish the fraudulent intent by satisfactory proof." In Diggs v. McCullough, 69 Md. 592, 16 Atl. 453, the court quoted from Moore v. Blondheim, supra, and held, referring to the syllabus for convenience:

"A deed, fraudulent in fact cannot by registration be made effective against subsequent creditors whom it was made to defraud, or bar their right to impeach it" —and it was decreed that the deeds assailed were executed with the intent to hinder and delay creditors, and to defraud persons who might become creditors thereafter, and that in consequence they were void and must be set aside. In Scott v. Keane, 87 Md. 709, 40 Atl. 1070, 42 L. R. A. 359, it was contended that there was no such thing as fraud in law as affecting subsequent creditors, and that, as no actual fraud was proven, the bill should be dismissed, but it was held that a voluntary deed may be avoided by subsequent creditors where no actual fraud is proved to have existed, if the provisions of the deed itself are fraudulent in law. It was held that the deed in that case was void as to subsequent creditors, whether they had notice of it or not.

In Spuck v. Logan & Uhl, 97 Md. 152, 54 Atl. 989, 99 Am. St. Rep. 427, it was shown that there were running accounts between Spuck and the appellees—the course of dealing at first being, that for purchases made one month Spuck paid the next month, etc. He did not always pay in full, and the indebtedness increased. The amount Spuck owed the appellees when the deed was made was subsequently paid, but before it was paid he had incurred other indebtedness to them, for a larger amount, and that course of dealing continued until finally Spuck was indebted to them in the sum named in the opinion in that case. The court said:

"If that was all, we would find difficulty in reaching the conclusion contended for by the appellants that the appellees were merely subsequent creditors. In Paulk v. Cooke, 39 Conn. 572, it was contended that the debts which existed at the time the conveyance attacked was made had been paid with one exception, and that a voluntary conveyance could only be impeached by existing, and not by subsequent, creditors, but that court thus replied: 'This principle clearly has no application where there has been a continued, unbroken indebtedness. The debts are owed though they may be due to new creditors. It is a most unsubstantial mode of paying a debt to contract another of equal amount. It is the merest fallacy to call such an act getting out of debt.' In Wait on Fraud, Con. § 103, that author, in speaking of the subject, says: 'The case should be treated as if the prior indebtedness had continued throughout, or as a case of a continued or unbroken indebtedness.' In this case there is all the more reason to adopt that rule, as Spuck was indebted to the appellees (not merely to new parties) constantly and without interruption from January 1, 1898, and to say that under those circumstances they must be denied any rights that subsisting creditors have against a fraudulent conveyance would be protecting fraud by a distinction that should not be made in favor of the guilty against the defrauded."

[8-9] Under the authorities there can be no doubt that the one-third interest of Tobe in the North avenue property and his interest in the Garrison avenue property were liable to his subsisting creditors, but we do not think the evidence proves that those properties, or either of them, were conveyed with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his subsequent creditors. The deeds were promptly placed on record; and, although the burden is on subsequent creditors to show that it was the intention and design of the grantor and grantee to defraud those who would thereafter become creditors, Matthai, Ingram & Co. v. Heather, supra, that is not satisfactorily shown. The principal difficulty we have is to apply the law to the peculiar facts of this case. Two-thirds of the North avenue property belonged to Mrs. Turner, and were properly distributed to her (as Miss Tobe), but the one-third of it should go to her father's subsisting creditors. She has burdened that third by the mortgage to the West North Avenue Savings & Loan Association for $1,976 dated February 17, 1915, which is conceded to be valid, although we do not know the precise amount now due on it. If a sale is made of the one-third, subject to the mortgage, it will necessarily reduce the value of it to the extent of one-third of the mortgage or more. Any one who would buy the third would take into consideration the possibility of default in the mortgage, and a sale of the whole lot, unless the mortgage in full was paid. That would have a tendency to reduce the value of the third still further. So the only equitable way of disposing of it which occurs to us is to decree a sale of the whole lot subject to the mortgage, and take out of the proceeds of sale the value of the third interest if free of the mortgage, and the balance, if any, to be paid over to Mrs. Turner. We think that can be done under the prayers in the bill, including the one for general relief. Mrs. Turner has no right to complain of that because it was her act which makes it necessary. If the parties can agree upon the value of the third interest, and that is paid, a sale can be avoided, and the decree can so provide.

The creditors have actually been only deprived of the value of the Garrison avenue lot unimproved, excepting such as the little work spoken of, trenches for foundations and some stonework, which may or may not have added something to the value of the lot, subject to the mortgage on it for $1,768, given by Mr. and Mrs. Tobe when it was purchased. All that Mrs. Turner claims to have expended in making the improvements on the lot is the proceeds of the mortgage given to the West North Avenue Savings & Loan Association ($1,976), the difference between the mortgage given August 11, 1915, on the Garrison avenue property for $3,500 and the mortgage given on it May 7, 1914, for $1,768, which difference she and her father estimate at $2,000 (part of the $1,768 mortgage having been previously paid, and the balance having been paid when the new mortgage was given) and $2,929 which she says her mother had in cash and gave to her.

[9, 10] Mrs. Turner and Mr. Tobe both swore that the sum of $2,929, or thereabouts, was in the safe at the house in the lifetime of Mrs. Tobe, and belonged to her. Without prolonging this opinion by giving our reasons, we are compelled to say that there is some doubt as to whether it was there, but, giving them the benefit of the doubt, we are convinced that there was no such gift of that money as the law can recognize. Mrs. Turner was asked, "Whose (money) was it at the time of your mother's death?" and replied:

"It was her money at the time of her death. Q. Her money? A. It was her money, and she had given it to me. She had collected it and given it to me before her death. It was to be my money."

On cross-examination she testified:

"Q. You got some of it away back in 1913, and some back in 1912, you were not going to use it then, were you? A. It was my mother's at that time, it was not mine. Q. When did it become yours? A. It became mine at her death. It was mine in word and deed, but hers to use as she saw fit up until that time."

That and other evidence we might refer to satisfy us that her mother never did in fact part with it, and the most that could be said was that she intended that her daughter should have whatever was left of it after her death, but she left no will, and made no sufficient delivery of it in her lifetime. It should therefore have been accounted for in the settlement of her estate, and her husband was entitled to one-third of it, which he had no right to give away to the prejudice of his creditors.

Some doubt is cast on the $1,976 transaction by reason of the fact that the same amount was deposited in Tobe's bank account on the day the mortgage for that sum was given, but Tobe denied that it was the same, and it was not traced. But, assuming that it was the same, if it was paid out on account of the improvements, it can make but little difference whether it was deposited in his account or placed in the safe as Tobe and his daughter said. If the appellees' evidence that the property is worth from $14,000 to $15,000 is correct, undoubtedly as much as appellants claim went into the house was spent on the improvements, and the mortgage was given for the $1,976, as shown above.

[11] We thus have the $1,976 given by Mrs. Turner, subject to what we have said above, the $3,500, and she was entitled to two-thirds of the $2,929, as the only child of Mrs. Tobe. The property will have to be sold subject to the $3,500 mortgage, and Mrs. Turner will be entitled to be repaid the $1,976 obtained through the mortgage spoken of above (provided the North avenue property protects the creditors from loss as to the third interest of Tobe, and, if it does not, they should be protected out of the proceeds of the Garrison avenue property) and two-thirds of the $2,929. As she has lived in the property, we do not think interest should be allowed her.

[12, 13] The evidence shows that the Lafayette Mill & Lumber Company, sold considerable quantities of materials for the house erected on Garrison avenue, and it was paid for it. The exact amount we do not know. The company had furnished some material for it before the death of Mrs. Tobe, in her name. After her death the manager of that company called on Mr. Tobe to see what was to be done. It was agreed that the materials were still to be furnished in the name of Mrs. Tobe, which was done. Tobe told him that he had the money to pay all the bills contracted for that house, and that the account would be paid the first of every month. He said that Tobe told him when they started the job that it was Mrs. Tobe's house, and he was going to pay the bills on that every month. The bills were paid, and there is nothing due that company on account of that house. Nor is there anything to show that any misrepresentation was made to the company, and, although it is not proved that the officers had actual knowledge of the deed that Tobe made to his daughter, it was on record, and the manager certainly knew enough to put him on inquiry. Under those circumstances, it would seem to be inequitable to permit that company to furnish materials for the house, get paid for them, and then, as a subsisting creditor at the time of the transfer, profit by the increased value of the property caused by the materials which it furnished and was paid for. It must be remembered that what the creditors had the right to, at the time of the transfer, was the value of the property as it then stood, which had vested in Tobe as a tenant by the entirety. The only doubt we have had is whether or not under the circumstances the Lafayette Company should not be held to be estopped to make any claim against this property. The facts in the record do not seem to justify that, but we are of the opinion that it should not be permitted to participate in the distribution of the proceeds of sale of that property without first deducting from its account the amount it furnished, and was paid, for that house.

[14, 15] The same principle should be applied to the Hudson Cement & Supply Company's account. The company is a subsisting creditor within the meaning of what we have said in Spuck's Case. While payments in full were made at times, and the amount due when these transfers were made was afterwards paid, almost immediately other indebtedness was created. There was practically a running account right along. Sometimes there was a day or two between the payment and the new indebtedness, but the debt was practically a continuous one. The same thing seems to be the case as to the account of George H. Harrington & Bro. From the statement in the record there is nothing to show that the account of A. Weiskittel & Son Company was in existence prior to July 10, 1915. If that is the case, it cannot be allowed.

The lower court can take testimony, if it deems that proper, as to these and other accounts, so as to ascertain whether the claims are held by subsisting creditors within the meaning of what we have said, remembering that where there was a running account, the fact that it was settled in full, but immediately, or within a day or two, a new indebtedness was contracted, such creditor, under the principle announced in Spuck v. Logan & Uhl, can be treated as subsisting; but, where the account was fully settled, with no arrangement or expectation of immediate continuance, the party must be held to be a subsequent creditor, and as such no distribution can be allowed in this case.

It follows that the decree must be reversed and the cause remanded, so that a decree may be passed in accordance with this opinion, after taking such testimony as authorized above or the lower court may deem proper. Much of the evidence in the record is in regard to the resources and liabilities of Tobe, but there can be no doubt that he was not authorized to convey those two properties, and no further testimony is needed on that question. Most of the questions of fact left in doubt should readily be agreed to, or so presented by an agreed statement as to avoid taking much, if any, new testimony. We will direct that the costs be equally divided between the appellants and the appellees.

Decree reversed, and cause remanded, the costs to be equally divided between the appellants and the appellees.

(133 Md. 1)

BOWIE v. WESTERN MARYLAND R. TERMINAL CO. (No. 15.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 26, 1918.)

1. EJECTMENT §—95(1)—RIGHT TO RECOVER—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In ejectment for land in the city of Baltimore, patented to an individual in 1668 by Lord Baltimore, evidence held insufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover.

2. PUBLIC LANDS §—196—LAND COVERED BY NAVIGABLE WATERS—RIGHT OF COLONIAL PROPRIETOR.

Lord Baltimore, the colonial proprietor of Maryland, acquired the same right to dispose of land covered by navigable waters under his charter from the king as the king had prior to the charter, subject to the public's right of user for fishing and navigation, and the right afterwards became vested in the state, subject to the same restrictions.

3. DEEDS §—111 — LAND BORDERING ON STREET OR STREAM — EXTENT OF CONVEYANCE.

In absence of statute, the deed of an owner of land abutting on a stream conveys as far as his title extends, unless he limits the conveyance by appropriate terms.

4. NAVIGABLE WATERS §—87(4) — CONVEYANCE TO MIDDLE OF STREAM.

A deed describing the land as running to the water of Herring Pond, then running and bounding on the water of Herring Pond by two courses, conveyed to the middle of the bed of the stream.

5. DEDICATION §—20—STREET—REVOCATION.

Title to both sides of a street and to its bed being vested in defendant in ejectment, for the purposes of the case, the dedication of the street, if any, by defendant's predecessor, the city not being a party, must be treated as revoked.

6. BOUNDARIES §—14 — WATERS — LAND IN FRONT OF STREET.

Dedication of a street being revoked, conveyance of its bed from its northerly terminus to its southerly terminus at a pond is sufficient to carry whatever right the grantor's estate had in the bed of the pond in front of the street.

7. EJECTMENT §—84(3)—PLEA OF NOT GUILTY—RIGHT OF POSSESSION.

In ejectment, the plea of not guilty not only puts in issue the title to the premises but the right of possession.

Appeal from Superior Court of Baltimore City; Robert F. Stanton, Judge.

Action by Carter Lee Bowie, trustee, against the Western Maryland Railroad Terminal Company. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Alexander Preston and Frederick W. Story, both of Baltimore, for appellant. George R. Gaither, of Baltimore (George P. Bagby, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellee.

BOYD, C. J. This is an action of ejectment, brought by the appellant against the appellee in the superior court of Baltimore City for—"all that portion of Upton Court, in the city of Baltimore, which is described as follows, to wit: All that portion of the Herring Pond which lies to the east and north of the middle file thereof, from the southeastern outline of that part thereof heretofore on the sixth day of January, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-nine (by deed now recorded among the Land Records of Baltimore City in liber G. E. S. No. 162, folio 413, etc.) conveyed by Alexander Gould to Thomas Winans, southerly and then easterly to and into the northwest branch of the Patapsco river."

A plea of not guilty was filed, and the case was tried before the court without a jury. The court rejected the plaintiff's prayer, and granted the defendant's third and fourth, which held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The verdict was accordingly rendered for the defendant, and from a judgment entered thereon this appeal was taken.

A tract called "Upton Court," containing 500 acres more or less, was patented on the 2d of August, 1668, by Lord Baltimore to David Pool, which became vested in John Giles by deed on June 18, 1720. John Giles, by his will proven in 1725, devised a part of his "dwelling plantation and land adjacent, which is between a pond called Herring Pond and the Middle Pond," etc., to his wife for life, and after her death to his son John. He then devised part of that tract to his son John, and the remainder to his son Jacob. Before John Giles, Sr., died, he had applied for a resurvey of said tract; but he died before it was patented, and on August 12, 1731, a patent was issued to John Giles, Jr.

The will of John Giles, Sr., certainly leaves in grave doubt the question whether he intended to give his son John (whom for convenience we have designated in this opinion John Giles, Jr.) any, or, if some, what part, of Herring Pond. The description of what he left to Jacob does not say whether the beginning was to be on the one side or the other of the mouth of Herring Pond, and, if it must therefore begin in the center of the mouth, there is nothing to show where the trees at the head of the Pond stood, although, of course, the call would take the line to the trees. The rest of the will would seem to indicate that John was not to have any part of Herring Pond. The patent granted to him on the 12th of August, 1731, does not help, because by the deed made by him to Jacob February 28, 1732, he undertook to convey to Jacob what was left him by their father's will.

Then the deed from Gerard Hopkins to Hugh Young, dated November 20, 1778, is very indefinite. It began at a point somewhere "20 feet southeast from a poplar and two oak stumps formerly marked trees," etc. Apparently, or at least probably, they were the poplar, red oak, and "water oak" referred to in the will of John Giles, Sr., at the head of Herring Pond. The deed then calls to run to the southwest branch of Patapsco river, thence running and bounding on and with the said branch by several lines given, and then "south 55 degrees west 11 perches to the mouth of a small branch called the Herring Pond, and running and bounding on and with the said pond west 10 perches," etc. The courses and distances of 12 other lines are then given, without any calls, and "then by a straight line to the beginning." Where the beginning was depends upon where the trees were, and then some point from which the trees were "at the distance of 20 feet southeast" would be adopted; but it will be observed that the call is to the mouth of Herring Pond "and running and bounding on and with the said ponds." It is not "to the south side of the mouth of the said Herring Pond, thence on and with the said Herring Pond," as in the partition deed between Sarah Hopkins and Elizabeth Webster of September 8, 1768. Upon what principle of construction or locations the call in the Hopkins-Young deed could be taken to the south side of the mouth of Herring Pond we do not understand. It may or may not have been a mistake, but it may have been that Hopkins had some such idea as the appellant attributes to Gould—that it would be well to hold on to this pond, although he sold his land abutting on it. Whatever the reason was, if the description set out at length in the record is correct, it did not take the grant to the south side of the mouth of the pond, and hence did not convey any of the pond, unless the home line—then by a straight line to the beginning—included some portion up about the head.

[1] Inasmuch as Gould claimed through John Giles, Jr., and Hugh Young, if Herring Pond was not conveyed by them, or either of them, then Gould did not acquire it. As the record stands, we cannot see how the court below, sitting as a jury, could have rendered a verdict for the plaintiff, and he would have been justified in declaring as a matter of law that under the proper construction of the Hopkins-Young deed the plaintiff could not recover. It is not in the record, but the appellee's brief states that it did offer a prayer that there was no legally sufficient evidence to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and we think that could have been granted.

But as the lower court relied on other grounds, which must have assumed that title to the part of Herring Pond in controversy in this case became vested in Alexander Gould, we will further consider the case with that assumption, which makes it unnecessary to go beyond him. It may be well to add that the appellee does not deny that Gould had title to the land outside of the pond, and claims that he conveyed whatever title he had to that pond, which has now become vested in it. If he never had any title in the bed of the pond, of course he cannot maintain the action of ejectment for it, and any rights he had as riparian owner have undoubtedly passed out of him.

Alexander Gould and wife, by deed dated the 24th day of January, 1853, conveyed to J. Washington Tyson two parcels of land which were parts of Upton Court, both of them being on the easterly side of Herring Pond. They were separated by a street 50 feet wide, which the deed says was "laid out by the said Gould for the benefit of the purchasers of his ground fronting thereon." The first parcel is described as beginning on the southeast side of that street (which in later deeds is called Gould street) at a point described, "and running thence bounding on the southeast side of said 50-foot street south 46½ degrees west 282 feet to the water of Herring Pond; then running and bounding on the water of Herring Pond the two following courses, viz.: south 22½ — west 562 feet, north 85 degrees east 354 feet to the water of Patapsco river," etc. The second parcel begins on the northwest side of that street and calls to run "to the water of Herring Pond, then running and bounding on the water of Herring Pond, south 12½ degrees east 120 feet to the northwest side of said 50-foot street." James R. Read, trustee, conveyed to William P. Twamley seven different properties, including one that is described as follows:

"First, all of the bed of Gould street 50 feet wide extending from its northerly terminus at the northeasternmost outline of the property formerly belonging to the estate of Alexander Gould, deceased, to its southerly terminus at the Herring Pond, a distance of about 1,800 feet."

Twamley and wife subsequently conveyed the same property to the appellee, but we do not find the dates of either of those deeds in the record. The two parcels conveyed to Tyson by the above-mentioned deed became vested in Thomas Winans by deed of April 25, 1850, and subsequently the Winans interest became vested in the appellee.

We will first consider the effect of the deed from Gould to Tyson for the two parcels of land. The appellant contends that, as the deed from Gould to Winans, dated January 6, 1850, expressly called to run to the margin and then to the center of Herring Pond, etc., it shows that it was not intended to so run by the deed from Gould to Tyson, made six years before; but that would be a violent presumption, and inasmuch as Winans purchased the property acquired by Tyson a few months after he purchased the property from Gould, it is more likely that he thought that the Tyson property extended into the pond, if he thought anything about it. Before Gould sold to Winans he had ample front on the pond for that property, after he had sold to Tyson, and it is difficult to see any possible use he could have made of it, excepting in front of the property he retained until he sold it to Winans.

[2] The case of Browne v. Kennedy, 5 Har. & J. 196, 9 Am. Dec. 503, seems to us to be conclusive of most of the questions. Whatever the law was elsewhere, that case settled it for this state, and has never been overruled or qualified. It was there held that Lord Baltimore, a proprietor of Maryland, acquired the same right to dispose of land covered by navigable waters within the province, under the charter granted to him by the king, as the king had prior to granting the charter—subject to the right of the public to use it for fishing and navigation. The right to grant land covered by navigable waters afterwards became vested in the state—subject to the same restrictions. In June, 1700, a tract of land called Todd's Range, being a resurvey of Cole's Harbor, was granted to James Todd. The courses and distances included Jones' Falls, and at the time of the grant, and until 1786, the ordinary tides flowed up Jones' Falls to a place marked on the plat, and boats went to that place until 1787. By mesme conveyances and devises the tract called Todd's Range became vested in Charles Carroll of Annapolis, who on April 18, 1757, conveyed a part of the tract on the northwest side of Jones' Falls to William Lyon, which called to run "unto Jones' Falls, then bounding down and with the said falls the twelve following courses," etc. On the 20th of May, 1757, said Carroll conveyed to Alexander Lawson another part of said tract, also binding on Jones' Falls, on the southeast side. That was described as running "unto Jones' Falls, then bounding upon and with the said falls the seven following courses," etc. On January 26, 1796, Charles Carroll of Carrollton, the heir at law of Charles Carroll of Annapolis, made a deed to John Smith, Benjamin Williams, and others, by which he conveyed all that part of Todd's Range which is described as "beginning for the same at," etc., "and running * * * to the middle or center of the bed of Jones' Falls, thence running in the middle or center of said falls," etc. The question was whether, by the deeds of Charles Carroll of Annapolis, Lyon and Lawson, the grantees, and those claiming under them, were entitled to the land under Jones' Falls to the middle of the stream, or whether the title remained in Charles Carroll of Annapolis, so that his heir could convey it to other parties. Chief Judge Chase filed a separate opinion, in which he held that the plaintiff, who claimed under Lawson, had a right to recover the land in question to the middle of the bed of Jones' Falls; that Charles Carroll, having title to the land in question, and all rights, privileges, and advantages derivable therefrom, did by his two deeds to William Lyon and Alexander Lawson convey the same to them, and thereby did divest himself of all right and interest in the same. The Chief Judge reached the same conclusion as the majority of the court, but on different grounds, and Judge Buchanan delivered the opinion for the majority. The case was represented by distinguished attorneys. Messrs. Harper and Taney (afterwards Chief Justice of the United States) were for the appellants, and Messrs. Pinkney, Winder, and Williams (Assistant Attorney General) for the appellee. Judge Buchanan said:

"It is very certain that by the common law the right was in the king of England; and it seems equally clear to me that he had the capacity to dispose of it sub modo. Whatever doubts are entertained on the subject, they probably have arisen from inattention to the distinction between the power of granting an exclusive privilege in violation or restraint of a common piscarial right, or other common right, as that of navigation, and the power of granting the soil aqua cooperta, subject to the common user. The subject has, de communi jure, an interest in a navigable stream, such as a right of fishing and of navigating, which cannot be abridged or restrained by any charter or grant of the soil or fishery, since Magna Charta at least. But the property in the soil may be transferred by grant (Hargrave's Law Tracts, 17, 22, 36, 37)—subject, however, to the jus publicum, which cannot be prejudiced by the jus privatum acquired under the grant. This distinction runs through all the books, and, wherever grants have been held not to pass the soil, it was not because the king had not the capacity or right to grant it, but because there were not apt words in the grant to effect the purpose."

Again he said:

"It seems to be admitted that as the lands conveyed by Carroll to William Lyon and Alexander Lawson are described in the deeds as bounding upon Jones' Falls, if that had been a private river, they would have been entitled to hold to the middle of the stream; and, if I am right in supposing that the property in the soil was Carroll's, subject only to the common user, I cannot perceive why Jones' Falls, when the bed had become private property, should not be subject, sub modo, to the same rules (as to the right to the soil) that prevail in relation to private rivers, which are private property. In many respects the same rules do prevail."

Then on page 206 of 5 Har. & J. (9 Am. Dec. 511) he said:

"If, therefore, where a man, having an estate through which a private river runs, conveys away his land lying on one side of the stream, and describes it as bounding on the river, the purchaser will, by operation of law, hold to the middle, it would seem, by parity of reason, that if the same man, having an estate through which a public river runs, the soil of the bed of which makes a part of his estate, as in the case of a private river, conveys away the land lying on one side, and makes the river the boundary, the purchaser would by the same operation of law be entitled to hold, in respect of the right of soil, to the middle of the stream."

He concluded his opinion by saying:

"All the lands in this state have not been distributed or granted out to the citizens as they are supposed to have been in England; but unnavigable rivers, and lands not patented, are as much the property of the state as public rivers in England are the property of the king. And if the state grants a tract of land, bounding on an unnavigable river, I hold the rule, before alluded to, to apply, and that the grantee will be entitled to the soil to the middle of the stream. And applying the same rule to this case, I think that Alexander Lawson, under his deed from Charles Carroll, was entitled to hold to the middle of Jones' Falls, and agree with the Chief Judge that the appellant is entitled to recover the land which forms the subject of this suit."

Judges Johnson and Martin concurred in that opinion. Judge Earle dissented, holding that the bed of Jones' Falls still belonged to Carroll after the deeds made by him to Lyon and Lawson.

[3] It is therefore seen that the question was directly presented, and our predecessors held that, although the deeds called to run "unto Jones' Falls, then bounding down and with the said falls," in the one case, and "unto Jones' Falls, then bounding upon and with the said falls," in the other, the grantees took title to the middle of the bed of the stream, which was conceded to be a navigable stream. Although that case has been cited at least 14 times (see Shepard's Md. Ctt.), it has never been overruled, and it might affect titles to land to overrule a case which had been accepted as law for so many years. The act of 1862 (chapter 129) which is now embraced in sections 47, 48, and 49 of article 54 of the Annotated Code, made considerable changes in the laws of this state as to rights on navigable waters; but, as that act is not applicable to this case, we need not refer to it further, except to say it now prohibits patents for lands covered by navigable waters, and gives valuable riparian rights to the proprietors of land bordering on them. Other acts, such as that of 1745 (chapter 9), had been passed years before, and they had in view giving such proprietors of land the benefit of the waters on which their lands bordered. The decision in Browne v. Kennedy was a logical one, as the general principle is that, in the absence of a statute regulating it, the extent to which a deed of an owner of land abutting on a street or stream goes depends upon how far his title extends, unless he limits the conveyance by appropriate terms. In 2 Devlin on Real Estate, § 1028, it is said that the rule is that, when lands are bounded by navigable streams or tide waters, the grantee's right extends only to high-water mark, but that is because it is very unusual for the grantor to own the bed of a navigable stream, and if he does, according to Browne v. Kennedy, the same rule applies as in case of nonnavigable waters. After giving some illustrations in section 1028, the author in section 1028a gives reasons which are very applicable to this case when we keep in mind Browne v. Kennedy. That section in part is:

"Reasons for These Rules.—The natural presumption, where a deed conveys land bordering on a stream or highway, is that the grantor means to convey what he owns, and not to reserve a strip of land of no value to him, but the loss of which to the grantee might be productive of great injury. He has power by apt words to reserve what and as much as he pleases, or so to frame the language of his conveyance as to limit the land conveyed to the line of the stream or highway, without extending further, and in all such cases courts are bound to give effect to his expressed intention. But, in the absence of words showing such an intention, it is not presumed that the grantor intended to retain in himself the fee to the street or stream when he has parted with the adjoining land. Therefore it may be said to be a universal rule that a deed giving a stream as a boundary will convey title to the center of the stream or to low or high water mark, depending upon how far the grantor's title extends. By such a description the grantor will convey all that he owns, unless a contrary intent appears from the language of the deed. The deed is taken most strongly against the grantor in the application of this rule, and courts will not favor the presumption that he has retained title to the bed of the stream."

In the note to the case of Hanlon v. Hobson, 24 Colo. 284, 51 Pac. 433, as reported in 42 L. R. A. 502, the annotator says:

"A grant bounding on a stream or on tide water will be held to carry all the land owned by the grantor, in the absence of anything to show an intention not to do so. If the grantor owns to the thread of the stream, the grantee will also do so."

See, also, Braxon v. Bressler, 64 Ill. 489, Brooklyn v. Smith, 104 Ill. 429, 44 Am. Rep. 90; Richardson v. Prentiss, 48 Mich. 90, 11 N. W. 819; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 830, 11 Sup. Ct. 808, 838, 35 L. Ed. 423; Boston v. Richardson, 95 Mass. (13 Allen) 155. Although some of these cases are controlled by statutes or ordinances, the principles are discussed.

[4] The language of the deed from Gould to Tyson seems to us to clearly convey the right of Tyson's successors to the middle of the bed of the stream. There can be no intelligent meaning given to the reference "to the waters," if it was not intended to give the grantee the right to use the waters. That is what in reality is done, as the grantee takes it subservient to the rights of the public, and the main advantage in having the title to the bed is to prevent the grantor from interfering with the grantee's use of it. Such rights of the grantees are very similar to those given proprietors of lands on navigable waters by sections 47, 48, and 49 of article 54, above referred to.

[5-7] We see no difficulty about the deed for the bed of Gould street. The plaintiff's predecessor conveyed that. The appellee has acquired all the land on both sides of that street, which one or more of the deeds speaks of as vacated, and also the title to the bed of the street. Any attempted dedication of it was not, so far as the record shows, accepted, or anything done by the city in reference to it. As the city is not a party to this case, of course what we say will not affect any right it may have; but, as we are informed by the record that the title to both sides of the street and to the bed of the street is vested in the appellee, we can have no doubt that, at least for the purposes of this case, the dedication, if any, must be treated as revoked. Clendenin v. Md. Construction Co., 86 Md. 80, 37 Atl. 709. That being so, the conveyance of the bed of the street from its northerly terminus to its southerly terminus at Herring Pond is sufficient to carry whatever right the Gould estate had in the bed of the pond in front of the street. When the street was laid out by Gould "for the benefit of the purchasers of his ground fronting thereon," and went to Herring Pond, the purchasers surely were intended to have the right to use that pond in any way not contrary to the rights of the public, and, as the appellee is the sole owner of the properties binding on it, the appellant would have no right to eject it from the pond, regardless of the question whether the dedication is revoked. The plea of "not guilty," not only puts in issue the title to the premises, but the right of possession.

So, without prolonging this opinion further, by discussing other questions raised, we are satisfied that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and we will not discuss the prayers separately. We will require the appellant to pay the costs. As there is nothing in the record to show whether the suit was brought with the approval of the equity court that had jurisdiction over the trust, that court can determine whether he shall be reimbursed out of the trust funds for the costs to be paid by him.

Judgment affirmed; the appellant to pay the costs.

BALTIMORE & O. R. CO. v. STATE, to Use of McCABE. (No. 28.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. July 9, 1918.)

1. NEGLIGENCE §93(1) — IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE—COLLISION AT CROSSING.

The negligence of the driver of the automobile, in which plaintiff's intestate was riding at the time of collision with defendant's train at railroad crossing, and over which intestate had no control, could not be imputed to intestate.

2. DEATH §23—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

The right of plaintiff to recover for death of his minor son, killed in collision with train at railroad crossing while son was a passenger in automobile driven by another, would be defeated by a showing that son contributed to the accident by his own negligence.

3. RAILROADS §350(13) — CROSSING ACCIDENT — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for damages sustained by plaintiff because of death of his infant son, killed when automobile in which son was a passenger collided with defendant's train at a railroad crossing, question of son's contributory negligence held, under evidence, for jury.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Frederick County; Hammond Urner, Glenn H. Worthington, and Edward C. Peter, Judges.

Action in the name of the State, for the use of John R. McCabe, against the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

F. Neal Parke and James A. C. Bond, both of Westminster, for appellant. George A. Pearre, Jr., of Frederick (Edwin E. Garrett and Richard H. Tebbs, both of Leesburg, Va., on the brief), for appellee.

PATTISON, J. This action was brought in the name of the state, for the use of John R. McCabe, against the appellant, the defendant corporation, for loss and damage sustained by him in the death of his infant son, John R. McCabe, Jr., caused by the alleged negligence of the defendant in the management and operation of its train. The trial resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, upon which a judgment was entered. It is from that judgment that this appeal has been taken.

The accident happened at a public crossing in the town of Point of Rocks, in Frederick county, Md., through which the defendant's road, with its double tracks, passes from east to west. The said crossing is about 1,900 feet west from Washington Junction, where the Metropolitan branch from Washington joins the main line of the road, and where the station for that vicinity is located. A watchman's box, 7 feet and 6 inches square, and about 8 feet high, is located immediately east of said crossing, and 7 feet north of the north rail of the west-bound track. East of this box, starting at a point 122 feet therefrom, is a switch on the north side of the tracks, and north of the switch and tracks is a public road running parallel therewith and extending westward to and beyond the said box and road that crosses the tracks of the defendant's road at the place of the accident.

McCabe, with one Newton, both residents of Leesburg, Va., on the evening preceding the accident, which occurred about 1 o'clock in the morning of September 11, 1915, had attended a corn boiling party at Taylorsville, a town in Virginia, several miles from Point of Rocks. Each of them carried with him to the party a young lady from the last-named place. The party was over about 12 o'clock, and they returned to the homes of their lady companions, in Point of Rocks. McCabe left at this place the machine he had driven to the party, and he, with Newton, started to return to their homes in Virginia in the automobile driven by Newton, one that he had borrowed in Virginia for the occasion. In reaching their homes they again had to cross the tracks of the defendant, this time from north to south. The automobile, in which they were to return, was described as a very large one, with a wheel base of 144 inches. Both McCabe and Newton were seated upon the front seat, Newton on the right, at the wheel, and McCabe upon his left. To reach the crossing they rode south on one of the streets or roads of the town to the street we have described as running north of and parallel with the switch and tracks of the defendant's road. Upon reaching that road they turned to the right, and proceeded westward toward the watchman's box and road that crosses the tracks at the place of the accident. When they turned in said road, running parallel with the railroad, there were upon the switch to the left of them four or five box cars which prevented them, at such time, from seeing up the track toward the junction. These cars, Newton said, extended westward to about the beginning of the switch, which is 122 feet east from the watchman's box. Newton, the only witness who saw the accident, testified that at the time they reached that point both he and McCabe looked and listened for trains that might be coming from either direction, but heard no whistles or bells. They proceeded to a point in the road where the beaten way curved somewhat to the right and away from the tracks in order to pass around the box and to better enable persons to ascend the grade of the road that passed over the tracks, the grade of the same being so much as 14 to 18 inches in 30 feet. At this point, which they regarded as a good position from which to ascertain whether or not a train was approaching the crossing, he stopped his machine, and they both looked up and down the track, and also listened for an approaching train, but they neither saw nor heard any. Newton testified that at this time he asked McCabe, who was upon the left and was looking to the left, "if he saw any lights anywhere or heard a whistle, and we talked just a second or two, and he said he did not see anything, looked like the road was clear to him, and it looked clear to me. I couldn't see down the track all the way, I could see down just only a short way, and then these box cars had me cut off from any view of that track." He then started forward toward the tracks, which were then about 30 or 35 feet away. In going this distance his view eastward up the tracks was obstructed by the watchman's box until he got within a few feet of the west-bound track.

It will be remembered that the distance from the box to the north rail of the west-bound track was only 7 feet. After getting to a point where the box was no longer an obstruction to his view, he could see eastward to the junction, if the track was clear. He explained, however, that seated upon the seat of the car its fenders and front wheels would be nearly upon the track before the view, after passing the box, would be opened to him. He said that McCabe was looking eastward for a train, and as "I pulled up on the track, pulled around, straightened the car, and was up on the track, when young McCabe jumped against me, and about the same time the engine struck me." McCabe was thrown from the car, and his skull was fractured, from which he died.

Miss Louise Hardy of Washington, who was then visiting her grandmother at Point of Rocks, and whose father was at such time a railway mail clerk upon that run, testified that her father's train was due at Point of Rocks "some time around 12 o'clock"; that, after retiring she remained awake, listening for the whistle of her father's train, but had not heard it at the time she heard the crash caused by the collision of the engine with the automobile in this case; that she heard no whistle nor bell preceding the crash.

A civil engineer of the defendant company, when placed upon the stand by it, testified that:

"At a distance of 11 feet from the north rail of the west-bound track you can see from the center of the traveled way down the west-bound track to the east, at least 122 feet from the crossing; and at a distance of 13 feet you can see 62 feet from the center of the crossing."

At the conclusion of the evidence the plaintiff offered seven prayers; of these the fourth and fifth were granted as offered, the seventh was granted as modified by the court, and the others were refused. The defendant offered three prayers, all of which were refused. The first asked the court to direct a verdict for the defendant because of a want of evidence legally sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover. The second asked for an instruction that there was no evidence legally sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover under the first count of the declaration, while the third asked for a similar instruction as to the second count of the declaration.

The plaintiff's fifth prayer instructed the jury:

"That if they shall find from the evidence that the defendant, on or about the 11th day of September, 1915, was the owner and operator of a certain railroad running from Washington city and points west to and beyond Point of Rocks, Md., and run, controlled, and operated thereon certain locomotives and trains of cars attached thereto, and if the jury shall find from the evidence that on or about said date a certain public road crossing and public highway crossed the said railroad tracks of the said defendant at the village of Point of Rocks, and that the said John R. McCabe, Jr., was at the time being run, guided, and driven over and along said public road and highway in a certain automobile, in the direction of and at and near said public crossing, if the jury shall find the same, and that the defendant at the same time was driving, running, and directing its said cars and trains over and along said railroad in the direction of said public crossing, then it was and became the duty of the defendant, its agents and servants, in approaching said crossing with its locomotives and trains, to give proper and sufficient signals by blowing their whistles or ringing their bells so as to warn persons from their tracks; and if the jury shall find from the evidence that the said John R. McCabe was injured and killed at said public crossing, while using due care and caution, by reason of the failure of the defendant, its servants and agents, in charge of its locomotive and cars, to give proper and sufficient signals of their approach, then the verdict of the jury must be for the plaintiff."

The plaintiff's fourth prayer defined "ordinary care," and his seventh prayer stated the measure of damages.

It is from the rulings of the court in granting the plaintiff's said fourth, fifth, and seventh prayers and in refusing the defendant's prayers that this appeal is taken.

The plaintiff's fifth prayer is in full accord with the principle enunciated in P. W. & B. R. R. Co. v. Hogeland, 66 Md. 149, 7 Atl. 105, 59 Am. Rep. 159, B. & O. R. R. Co. v. State, Use of Strantz, 79 Md. 335, 29 Atl. 518, 47 Am. St. Rep. 415, United Rys. Co. v. Biedler, 98 Md. 564, 56 Atl. 813, and United Rys. & Elec. Co. v. Crain, 123 Md. 332, 91 Atl. 405, that:

"The contributory negligence of a carrier, or of the driver of a public or private vehicle, not owned or controlled by the passenger, and who is himself without fault, will not constitute a bar to the right of the passenger to recover for injuries received."

[1, 2] It is well settled by the above-cited cases and others that the negligence of the driver in such cases cannot be imputed to the passenger injured or killed, but it is equally well settled in all such cases that the right to recover for the injury or death of such party is defeated, when it is shown that he has contributed to the accident by his own negligence, and therefore, when there is any evidence tending to show such negligence legally sufficient to go to the jury, it should be submitted to it. United Rys. & Elec. Co. v. Crain, supra.

[3] The evidence in this case was legally sufficient to go to the jury, tending to show contributory negligence on the part of McCabe, but it was not of a character that warranted the court in holding that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

It is shown by the evidence that McCabe did about all he could to learn of the approaching train, unless it was to warn Newton, the driver of the automobile, not to cross the tracks of the defendant company without again stopping at a point beyond the watchman's box, where he could have seen the oncoming train. He may have thought Newton was going to stop at such point, and, after reaching it, there was little or no time for him to warn Newton before the train was upon them. When the box ceased to obstruct their view up the track, the front of the machine was only a few feet from the west-bound track, and the first thing McCabe saw, or could have seen, when the view opened to him was the onrushing train only a few feet away. What effect this had upon him we do not know. Newton says he fell against him, and about that time the engine struck the automobile. Under these circumstances it could not properly be said as a matter of law that McCabe was guilty of contributory negligence in not warning Newton against crossing the track at such time. The question of his negligence was properly submitted to the jury.

The plaintiff's fourth and seventh prayers were also properly granted, and from what we have said the court properly refused the defendant's first prayer, and we discover no reversible error in the court's ruling upon the defendant's third and fourth prayers, or upon its action upon the demurrer to the declaration.

We will therefore affirm the judgment of the court below.

Judgment affirmed, with cost to appellee.

BLISS v. BLISS et al. (No. 12.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 19, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §628(2) — TIME FOR FILING TRANSCRIPT—EXCUSE.

An appellant cannot be held responsible for failure of a transcript of record to reach Court of Appeals within required time, if the delay is chargeable to clerk of lower court or an express company.

2. INSANE PERSONS §32—APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN.

Under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 16, § 114, court of equity may intrust person of a lunatic to one committee and the estate to another.

3. INSANE PERSONS §30—MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE.

Under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 16, § 114, the chief concern of court in selection of persons for management of estates of lunatics and care and custody of their persons is to advance their welfare and comfort.

4. COURTS §138—CIRCUIT COURTS—EQUITY JURISDICTION.

The judges of the circuit courts have all the power, authority, and jurisdiction which the court of chancery formerly held and exercised, except as modified by statute (Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 16, § 85).

5. INSANE PERSONS §8—NONRESIDENT—JURISDICTION OF COURT.

The court has jurisdiction to inquire into and adjudge insane a nonresident within the state, although he has no property in the state.

6. INSANE PERSONS §48—EXPENSES—PAYMENT.

A court having jurisdiction of the person and estate of a lunatic must see that proper care and comfort are provided for out of the funds under its control, leaving the question of the liability of others for the expenses incurred to be determined in some appropriate proceeding.

7. INSANE PERSONS §27—PROCESS—REVIEW—WHO ENTITLED TO NOTICE.

Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 5, § 37, providing that complaint cannot be made on appeal of lack of notice of proceedings in certain cases applies only to defendants in a suit in equity, and not to a proceeding to inquire into the sanity of a person.

8. INSANE PERSONS §=18 — HEARINGS — NOTICE TO LUNATIC.

In a proceeding to inquire into the sanity of a person, the alleged lunatic is entitled, except in the most extreme cases, if at all, to notice and an opportunity to be heard.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Prince George's County, in Equity; Fillmore Beall, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Proceeding by Eva Jackson Bliss, by her next friends, Sallie F. Jackson and Vivia G. Holmes, against Alonzo O. Bliss and R. A. Bennett, committee of Eva Jackson Bliss, to set aside a decree adjudging her insane and appointing a commission. From an order dismissing the petition, she appeals. Case remanded without reversing or affirming, with directions.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Eugene A. Jones, of Washington, D. C. (William J. Neale, of Washington, D. C., on the brief), for appellant. Ogle Marbury, of Baltimore, and George P. Hoover, of Washington, D. C., for appellees.

THOMAS, J. On the 7th of September, 1917, Alonzo O. Bliss filed in the circuit court for Prince George's county a petition, alleging that his wife, Eva Jackson Bliss, was, and had been "for some time past," of unsound mind and incapable of the government of herself or the management of her estate; that she had "little property," and was dependent upon the petitioner "for her support and livelihood," and that it was necessary for her protection that a suitable committee be appointed for her person and estate; that she was then undergoing treatment at the Laurel Sanitarium, near Laurel, in Prince George's county, Md.; that the petitioner was informed by her physicians that it was "important and essential to her welfare" that she be allowed "to remain quiet and undisturbed for an indefinite time"; that it would greatly excite and injure her to remove her from said sanitarium; and that it would be impractical, dangerous, and injurious to her to have her brought before a jury. The petition then prayed that a "writ de lunatico inquirendo be issued to the sheriff of Prince George's county to inquire into the lunacy of the said Eva Jackson Bliss," and that by the order of the court her actual presence before the jury of inquisition and notice to her of the time of the sitting of said jury be dispensed with. The petition further prayed for a writ of subpoena, directed against Mrs. Bliss, commanding her to be and appear in said court on some certain day to be named therein, "and to answer the premises and abide by and perform such decree" as might be passed. The petition was sworn to by the petitioner, and there was filed with it the affidavit of Dr. Cornelius De Weese, physician of Laurel Sanitarium, as to the mental condition of Mrs. Bliss, and that it would greatly excite and injure her to bring her before a jury, and on the same day the court ordered the writ de lunatico inquirendo, and the writ of subpoena, to issue as prayed, and further ordered that in the execution of the first-mentioned writ the presence of Mrs. Bliss before the jury, "and notice to her of the time of the sitting" of the jury, be dispensed with.

The inquisition was taken on the 18th of September, 1915, at Laurel, and the jury found that Mrs. Bliss was of unsound mind and not capable of the government of herself or the management of her estate, and that she was possessed of the property described in the inventory as "$50,000 80-year 4 per cent. bonds Alonzo O. Bliss properties" and "$2,000 worth of securities. All in a safe deposit box in District National Bank, Washington, D. C.—Total value $52,000." The record shows that the writ of subpoena was returned by the sheriff, "served this 18th day of September, 1915." The inquisition was confirmed on the 28th of September, 1915, and Arthur L. Bliss and Cornelius De Weese were appointed committee of the person and estate of Mrs. Bliss. On the 23d of March, 1916, Arthur L. Bliss and Cornelius De Weese filed a petition to be relieved of their duties as such committee, and with it an account in which they charge themselves with three months' interest on the $50,000 4 per cent. mortgage bonds of the Alonzo O. Bliss property, amounting to $500, claimed credit for board, and attention at Laurel Sanitarium, costs, expenses, etc., amounting to $1,939.25, and stated that the amount of expenses in excess of income was advanced by Alonzo O. Bliss. They also filed an inventory of the estate of Mrs. Bliss, consisting of $50,000 bonds of the Alonzo O. Bliss property, a policy of life insurance in the Prudential Life Insurance Company, and a number of chattels, all of which were stated to be in the possession of Alonzo O. Bliss, and on the 28th of March, 1917, the court below passed an order, discharging the petitioners and appointing Alonzo O. Bliss and R. A. Bennett committee of the person and estate of Mrs. Bliss.

On the 8d of July, 1917, Mrs. Bliss, by her mother, Sallie F. Jackson, and her sister, Vivia G. Holmes, as her next friends, filed a petition in the cause, in which, after referring to the previous proceedings, including the appointment of Alonzo O. Bliss and R. A. Bennett committee of her person and estate, she alleged that at the time of the appointment of said committee she was a patient at the Laurel Sanitarium; but, as her condition did not improve while there, she was, with the advice and consent of her said committee, removed to the home of her sister, Vivian G. Holmes, near Wheaton, in the state of Maryland, where she still resided, and that since then she had shown marked improvement in her mental and physical condition; that for three months or more Alonzo O. Bliss had not been inclined to contribute to her proper support and maintenance, and had from time to time threatened to remove her from the home of her sister. The petition further alleged that the said mother and sister of Mrs. Bliss, as her next friends, had filed a bill of complaint in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against Alonzo O. Bliss, in which they sought to compel him to contribute out of his own estate to her support; to have set aside a deed alleged to have been executed by her and procured by him while she was insane, and to have a proper person appointed trustee on the ground that, as she was a resident of the District of Columbia, and had no property in the state of Maryland, the circuit court for Prince George's county had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings in which she was adjudged insane and Alonzo O. Bliss and R. A. Bennett were appointed committee of her person and estate, but that Alonzo O. Bliss had evaded service of process in that case. The petition then alleged that Alonzo O. Bliss, in execution of his threats, had induced R. A. Bennett to unite with him in an order directing one of the deputy sheriffs of Montgomery county to take forcible possession of Mrs. Bliss and to remove her from the house of her sister to the Springfield Hospital for the Insane, at Sykesville, in the state of Maryland; that the deputy sheriff, accompanied by certain physicians, had attempted to execute the order by going upon the premises of Vivian G. Holmes and demanding the custody of Mrs. Bliss, but that the demand was refused because the welfare of Mrs. Bliss, "mentally and otherwise," depends upon her being taken care of in the home of friends and relations, and because to subject her to the excitement incident to her removal and association with the violent insane would impair her chances of ultimate recovery; that Alonzo O. Bliss was threatening further and other attempts to secure possession of the person of Mrs. Bliss; that as she was not a resident of the state of Maryland and had no property in that state, the circuit court for Prince George's county had no jurisdiction to appoint Alonzo O. Bliss and R. A. Bennett committee of her person and estate, and that they were not lawfully entitled to the custody of Mrs. Bliss, and that the proceedings instituted by Alonzo O. Bliss in said court was a fraud upon that court and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. The petition prayed that Alonzo O. Bliss and R. A. Bennett be restrained "from in any wise molesting the said Eva Jackson Bliss"; that the order appointing them committee be vacated and set aside, and for further relief. The court passed an order restraining the committee as prayed until the further order of the court to be passed after a hearing to be had on the 10th of July, 1917.

On the 24th of July, the committee filed in the court below a petition, setting out the proceedings in the case, and alleging that while Mrs. Bliss was a patient at Laurel Sanitarium, some of the members of her family expressed doubt as to her mental condition, and that with the view of convincing them of her insanity, and at their request, they permitted her to be removed to the home of Vivian G. Holmes, in Montgomery county, Md., with the understanding that she was to remain there temporarily; that upon information that came to them from time to time they concluded that she was not receiving in the home of Mrs. Holmes the care and attention she required, and that, after consulting eminent physicians they decided that it would be to her interest to remove her to some proper institution; that accordingly they arranged to have her received as a patient at Springfield State Hospital, at Sykesville, Md., and gave an order to Dr. Charles O. Marbury for her removal from the home of Mrs. Holmes to that institution. The petition prayed for an order, commanding Mrs. Holmes to surrender the custody of Mrs. Bliss to the petitioners. On the same day the committee answered the petition of Mrs. Bliss, by her mother and sister as her next friends, and filed a demurrer "to so much and such part of the petition" as questioned the jurisdiction of the court and alleged that the orders thereof were procured by fraud. The court below passed an order, requiring Mrs. Holmes to show cause why the prayer of the petition of the committee should not be granted, and setting the matter for hearing on August 3d, on which date the court sustained the demurrer of the committee, and ordered "that testimony be taken in open court on the remaining allegations of the petition, the answer of the committee thereto, the petition of the committee, and the answer of Vivian G. Holmes to said petition."

The record contains about 200 pages of testimony taken in pursuance of the order of August 3d, and on October 30, 1917, the court below passed an order, dismissing the petition filed by Mrs. Bliss, by Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Holmes, as her next friends, requiring Mrs. Holmes to deliver Mrs. Bliss to her committee, and requiring the committee to place her in the Shephard and Enoch Pratt Hospital, and to "provide for her there all necessary requirements of a person in her mental condition, including the regular and permanent care of two nurses." The order further provided that Mrs. Bliss should not be removed from said hospital without an order of the court, directed the committee to pay for her care there out of the income from her estate in their hands, and further provided:

"And in case said fund shall not be sufficient said committee are required and directed to demand and collect from Alonso O. Bliss, husband of Eva Jackson Bliss, the necessary and additional amount therefor."

On the 2d of November, 1917, Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Holmes, as next friends of Mrs. Bliss, filed an order for an appeal from the order of October 30th, "as well as from the order of the court sustaining a demurrer of the respondents to their petition," and the appellees have filed in this court a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the record was not transmitted to this court within three months from the time the appeal was prayed, and a further motion to dismiss the appeal from the order of the court below, sustaining the demurrer to the petition of Mrs. Bliss, by her next friends, on the ground that said order was an order in the nature of a final decree, and the appeal therefrom was not entered within two months from the date thereof.

[1] In regard to the first of these motions, it is only necessary to say that it appears from the affidavit of the clerk of the circuit court for Prince George's county that the transcript of the record was completed on January 1, 1918, was paid for on the 17th of January, and was deposited in the express office on the 29th of January for delivery to the clerk of this court. Under such circumstances the appellants cannot be held responsible for the failure of the record to reach this court within the required time. If the delay is chargeable to any one other than the express company, it must be attributed to the neglect of the clerk of the court below, who held the transcript 12 days after it was completed and paid for before attempting to transmit it to this court.

Section 26 of article 5 of the Code authorizes an appeal from any final decree "or order in the nature of a final decree," and section 28 provides that "on an appeal from a final decree or order, all previous orders which may have been passed in the cause shall be open for revision in the Court of Appeals," unless an appeal has been previously taken under section 27, allowing appeals in certain specified cases. In construing these sections, this court has held that an order in the nature of a final decree, from which an appeal lies under section 26, cannot be reviewed on an appeal from a final decree under section 28 (Peoples v. Ault, 117 Md. 631, 84 Atl. 60), and the contention of the appellees in support of their second motion is that the order of the court below, sustaining their demurrer to the appellants' petition, was an order in the nature of a final decree, from which an appeal should have been entered within two months from its date, and that it cannot therefore be reviewed under the appeal taken on November 2, 1917. They rely upon the case of Hendrickson v. Standard Oil Company, 126 Md. 577, 95 Atl. 153, where the court upheld the right of immediate appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to three paragraphs of a bill of complaint, each one of which alleged distinct acts of the defendant, or causes of injury, in respect to which relief by injunction was sought, and referred to sections 26 and 27 as authorizing the appeal. In the later case of Reynolds v. Russler, 128 Md. 606, 96 Atl. 75, the court refused to extend the doctrine of Hendrickson's Case to a case in which three distinct grounds for the relief claimed were set out in the same paragraph of the bill of complaint, and the appeal was from an order sustaining a demurrer to one of them. But as the demurrer in this case was to so much of the petition as attacked the jurisdiction of the court below on the ground that Mrs. Bliss was not a resident of and had no property in the state of Maryland, and as we concur in the view of the court below upon that question, it is not necessary to determine whether the order sustaining the demurrer was one from which the appellants were bound to appeal within two months from its date.

[2-3] Learned counsel for the appellants, in carefully prepared briefs, have collected and cited many cases bearing upon the question of jurisdiction in such cases, but none of them goes to the extent of holding that where the alleged lunatic is within the jurisdiction of the court at the time the writ is applied for and issued, the court is without jurisdiction unless she is a resident of or has property within the state. In the case of In re Fowler, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 305, decided in 1847, where the alleged lunatic formerly resided in New York, but was at the time the commission was applied for a resident of the state of Ohio, the chancellor said:

"The court had no jurisdiction to issue a commission unless the alleged lunatic resided here, or was the owner of property in this state. And that in case of his nonresidence, the fact of his owning property here must be stated in the petition."

It does not appear, however, from the report of that case that Fowler was, at the time the commission was applied for, in the state of New York. In re Devausney, 52 N. J. Eq. 506, 28 Atl. 459, quoted by the appellants, sustains the jurisdiction of the court of chancery to issue a commission if the alleged lunatic is a nonresident and has property in the state. The court stated that the duty of the care of the person and property of the lunatic, formerly imposed on the chancellor, had been transferred by a statute of that state to a guardian appointed by the orphans' court of the county in which the lunatic resided, and also referred to statutes of that state providing for the care of estates of nonresident lunatics, but the court did not decide that a court of chancery had no jurisdiction to issue a commission where the alleged lunatic was in the state, unless he was a resident of or had property in that state.

The origin of the jurisdiction of the courts of equity of this state in such cases is stated by Judge McSherry in Hamilton v. Traber, 78 Md. 26, 27 Atl. 229, 44 Am. St. Rep. 258, from which it appears that the authority to direct an inquisition to be taken did not belong to the English Court of Chancery, but was a portion of the King's executive power as parens patriæ, and was delegated by an instrument called the "sign manual" to the chancellor, as the personal representative of the crown, to be exercised by him alone, and not by the Court of Chancery. When this special jurisdiction had been exercised by adjudging an "individual to be a lunatic and by appointing a committee of his person and property, a further jurisdiction then arose in the Court of Chancery to supervise and control the official conduct of the committee." 3 Pom. Eq. § 1811. It is said in 14 R. C. L. 554, § 4:

"In this country, after the Revolution, the care and custody of persons of unsound mind, and the possession and control of their estates, which in England belonged to the King as a part of his prerogative, were deemed to be vested in the people, and the courts of equity of the various states have, either by inheritance from the English courts of chancery, or by express constitutional or statutory provisions, full and complete jurisdiction over the persons and property of idiots and lunatics" —and on page 556, section 7, of the same volume, it is said:

"In this country, as has been seen, jurisdiction over the persons and property of the insane is exercised by the courts of equity of the various states as the representatives of the people of the state, and from this general jurisdiction, in the absence of statute authorizing any particular court or officer to issue a commission of inquiry, the right to ascertain judicially whether or not a person is of unsound mind is deemed to be implied."

See, also, Hughes v. Jones, 116 N. Y. 67, 22 N. E. 446, 5 L. R. A. 632, 15 Am. St. Rep. 386. Section 114 of article 16 of the Code (which was originally enacted by the act of 1785, chapter 72, section 6), provides:

"The court [court of equity] shall have full power and authority, in all cases, to superintend and direct the affairs, of persons non compos mentis, both as to the care of their persons and the management of their estates, and may appoint a committee or a trustee or trustees for such persons, and may make such orders and decrees respecting their persons and estates as to the court may seem proper."

In the exercise of this jurisdiction, the court may intrust the person of a lunatic to one committee and the estate to another (Rutledge v. Rutledge, 118 Md. 552, 85 Atl. 661), and the leading object and chief concern of the court in the selection of the persons for the management of the estate of lunatics and the care and custody of their persons is to advance their welfare and comfort. Estate of Rachel Colvin, 8 Md. Ch. 278, 286; In the Matter of Colah, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 529. In Colah's Case, Chief Justice Daly, speaking for the court, said:

"The jurisdiction assumed to be inherent in a state over that unfortunate class of persons within its limits, who are deprived of the use of their mental faculties, may be said to rest upon two grounds: First, its duty to protect the community from the acts of those who are not under the guidance of reason; and, secondly, its duty to protect them, as a class incapable of protecting themselves, which has its foundation in the reciprocal obligations of allegiance and protection, which extends to aliens and strangers who, while they are within the limits of a state, are under the obligations of a temporary and local allegiance, and are entitled to its protection."

In the case of Gerke v. Colonial Tr. Co., 117 Md. 579, 83 Atl. 1092, this court, referring to lunacy cases, said:

"It is a matter of frequent occurrence that proceedings of this character are set in motion by some friend or acquaintance of the lunatic, or even by a law officer of the state where no such proceeding has been started by relatives and friends, and that with which the courts are mainly concerned is not who institutes the proceedings, but whether the proceeding is for the best interest of the individual alleged to be a lunatic, and of the people among whom he lives."

In Campbell's Case, 2 Bland, 209, Chancellor Bland, referring to a writ de lunatico inquirendo, said:

"With regard to the county to which it must be directed; it is, in general, proper, and may, in some cases, be indispensably necessary, that the person alleged to be of unsound mind should be brought before the jury who are convened by the sheriff to ascertain his intellectual condition, and for that reason the writ is almost always directed to the sheriff of the county in which the person said to be insane resides, or may at the time be placed; but, if he is out of the state at the time, or it is impractical, or, as in this case, it would be attended with great inconvenience and injury to the afflicted person to have him brought before the jury, his actual presence may be dispensed with, and the writ may be directed to the sheriff of the county in which he last actually resided, or in which the principal part of his estate lies. Ex parte Southcott, 2 Ves., 402."

The judges of the circuit courts have, in their respective circuits, all the power, authority, and jurisdiction which the court of chancery formerly held and exercised, except as modified by statute (Code, art. 16, § 85), and as the jurisdiction of courts of equity to issue writs de lunatico inquirendo is exercised for the protection of the community, and the protection of the person and property of the alleged lunatic, there is no reason why it should be confined to cases in which the unfortunate persons are residents of or have property in the state. It is their presence within the limits of the state that necessitates the exercise of the power to protect their persons and the community in which they may be placed, and the jurisdiction of the court does not depend upon whether they also have property within the state. [6] We have carefully examined the evidence in the case upon which the court below based its order or decree of October 30th, and, apart from a further question as to the jurisdiction of the court, to which we shall refer, we see no reason to disturb that order. As we have said, section 114 of article 16 of the Code authorizes the court to make such orders and decrees respecting the person and estate of a lunatic as to the court may seem proper, and, assuming that we have authority to review the action of the court below in requiring Mrs. Bliss to be placed in the Shephard and Enoch Pratt Hospital, as to which we express no opinion, we think the evidence fully sustains the propriety of the court's action, and we do not understand the appellants to question it on this appeal. They suggest, however, that there was error in that part of the order requiring the expenses of her care at the hospital to be paid out of her property, on the ground that her husband is liable for such expenses. It is said in 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 596:

"It is the husband's primary duty to support his insane wife, and it is only when he is unable to do so that resort can be had for her maintenance to her separate estate"

—and in 4 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cases, 787, many cases to the same effect are collected. In this state it has been held that the statutes preserving to the wife the ownership and enjoyment of her property do not relieve the husband of his common-law obligation to maintain his wife and to pay for medical attendance upon her and her funeral expenses. Willis v. Jones, 57 Md. 368; Stonesifer v. Shriver, 100 Md. 24, 59 Atl. 139. But we are not required in this case to determine whether Mrs. Bliss' husband is legally liable for her care at the Shephard and Enoch Pratt Hospital. The court having jurisdiction of the person and estate of a lunatic must see that her proper care and comfort are provided for out of the funds under its control, leaving the question of the liability of others for the expenses incurred to be determined in some appropriate proceeding. Estate of Colvin, supra; In the Matter of Colah, supra; 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 579; Code, art. 16, § 121.

[7, 8] It is further urged by the appellants that the proceedings in the court below are void because Mrs. Bliss was not given any notice of the time and place of taking the inquisition and an opportunity to be heard. Whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, the necessity for such notice was determined by this court in the case of Royal Arcanum v. Nicholson, 104 Md. 472, 65 Atl.

320, 10 Ann. Cas. 213. In that case, after reviewing the decisions in other states, Judge Burke, speaking for this court, said:

"There is no statute in Maryland providing for notice to the person alleged to be non compos, and therefore the authorities we have cited have a direct bearing upon the point under consideration, and are so in consonance with the dictates of the plainest justice that we are disposed to approve them, so far as they declare the general rule that the party proceeded against must be given timely notice of the proceedings and an opportunity to be heard."

In the later case of Packard v. Ulrich, 106 Md. 246, 67 Atl. 246, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 895, this court held that the failure to give notice to the alleged lunatic did not render the proceedings absolutely void or open to collateral attack, and Judge Pearce said:

"Here, there is no intervention by the alleged lunatic, no direct attack upon the proceedings by any one in her behalf, or by any one having direct interest in the prior proceedings."

In the case at bar, the petition was filed by Mrs. Bliss, by her mother and sister as her next friends, and prayed that the order appointing the committee be vacated and set aside on the ground that the court below had no jurisdiction to appoint them. It is true the petition did not attack the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that Mrs. Bliss did not have notice of the proceedings, and it is suggested on behalf of the appellees that under section 37 of article 5 of the Code the question cannot be raised in this court. That section, however, applies only to defendants in a suit in equity. In Wicks v. Westcott, 59 Md. 270, the court said:

The Code, art. 5, § 27 (now section 37), "does not meet the case, for that section is applicable only to defendants in a regular chancery proceeding, who, having been brought in and submitted to the jurisdiction without question, will not be permitted to question the jurisdiction on appeal."

Mrs. Bliss, by whom the petition was filed, cannot be said to be in the attitude of a defendant who submitted without question to the jurisdiction of the court below. In Royal Arcanum v. Nicholson, supra, Judge Burke referred to the case of Matter of Vanauken, 10 N. J. Eq. 190, in which it was said: "In cases of confirmed and dangerous madness it [an opportunity to be heard] may be dispensed with, but then only by the express order of court," and also to the statement in Campbell's Case, supra, "but if he [alleged lunatic] is out of the state at the time, or it is impractical, or, as in this instance, it would be attended by great inconvenience and injury to the afflicted person to have him brought before a jury, his actual presence may be dispensed with," and then said: "The person alleged to be non compos must have reasonable notice of the proceedings and opportunity afforded to him to contest the truth of the allegations in the petition, and must be produced before the jury, unless the court, for sufficient reasons shown, similar to those stated in Campbell's Case, supra, and Vanauken's Case, supra, should dispense with notice and personal attendance." In that case the question of the authority of the court below to dispense with notice to the lunatic under certain circumstances was not involved; but, even if we treat the case as decisive of that question, the rule announced in Vanauken's Case cannot be said to apply to the case at bar. There is nothing in the record to indicate that Mrs. Bliss' condition was such as deprived her of the right to timely notice of the proceedings and an opportunity to defend herself. The rule stated in Campbell's Case refers only to the "actual presence" of the alleged lunatic, and makes no reference to dispensing with notice of the proceedings. When we consider the serious consequences that follow an adjudication of insanity, in respect to both the person and property of the alleged lunatic, and the possibility of such proceedings being suggested by considerations foreign to the purposes for which the jurisdiction of the court may properly be invoked, it is obvious that persons against whom such charges are made cannot, except in the most extreme cases, if at all, be deprived of notice and an opportunity to contest before the jury the truth of the allegations in the petition.

The contention that the court had no power to set aside the order appointing the committee, because it had become enrolled, is disposed of in Royal Arcanum v. Nicholson, supra, and Packard v. Ulrich, supra.

The writ of subpoena, which was returnable on the first Monday of October, and which appears to have been "served" on the 18th of September, the day the inquisition was taken, did not give Mrs. Bliss any notice of the allegations of the petition, or of the time of the sitting of the jury. While the order of the court below dispensed with notice to her of the time of the sitting of the "jury of inquisition," it may nevertheless be that she did in fact have timely notice of the proceedings and an opportunity to be heard, and if it so appeared by the record, we would affirm the order appealed from. But, as it does not so appear, we will remand the case under section 38 of article 5 of the Code, without reversing or affirming the decree, in order that testimony may be taken to show whether Mrs. Bliss had such notice of the proceedings under the petition of Alonzo O. Bliss, filed on the 7th of September, 1915, as afforded her an opportunity to appear before the jury of inquisition and to contest the allegations of the petition. If the court shall find that she did not have such notice, the inquisition, return, and the order of confirmation thereof should be set aside, and a new jury summoned and inquisition taken.

Case remanded, without reversing or affirming the decree, the costs above and below to abide the final result.

CASTELBERG et al. v. HAMBURGER. (No. 7.)

APPEAL AND ERROR '628(1) — FILING OF TRANSCRIPT—EXCUSES FOR DELAY.

Under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 5, § 6, requiring transmission of transcripts of record within three months from time appeal is taken, and section 40, excusing delay in transmission when occasioned by the neglect of clerk or appellee, failure to transmit record until two days after expiration of three-month period is fatal; the misapprehension of appellant's attorney as to expiration of time, and the fact that he was assisting draft registrants in filling out questionnaires, being no excuse, where transcript was ready for transmission 10 days before expiration of period, and held by clerk upon request of appellant's attorney, who desired to inspect it.

Appeal from Superior Court of Baltimore City; Robert F. Stanton, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action between Henry Castelberg and others and Oscar Hamburger. Judgment for the latter and the former appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Argued before BRISCOE, THOMAS, PAT-TISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CON-STABLE, JJ.

B. H. Hartogensis and Howard Bryant, both of Baltimore, for appellants. S. S. Field and R. Contee Rose, both of Baltimore, for appellee.

URNER, J. If this appeal could be entertained, the judgment would be affirmed, as the rulings of the trial court are free of error; but it is our plain duty to grant the motion of the appellee to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the record was not transmitted to this court within the time prescribed by law.

The appeal was entered on October 10, 1917, and the period of three months allowed for the transmission of the record to this court expired on January 10, 1918. It was not until January 12, 1918, that the record was in fact transmitted. The transcript of the record was completed and certified by the clerk of the court below on December 31, 1917. It was thereafter held subject to the order of Mr. Hartogensis, one of the appellant's counsel, who wished to examine it further, and he had possession of it for that purpose during the greater part of the ensuing time until it was forwarded to the clerk of this court. On January 8th Mr. Hartogensis wrote to Chief Judge Boyd, inquiring whether the period for the transmission of the record could be extended, as he had not been able to find time to examine it, because of the pressure of his duties as a member of the legal advisory board in the work, then in progress, of aiding registrants to answer their questionnaires under the federal selective service system. In the course of his immediate reply to this inquiry Chief Judge Boyd said:

"I would be glad to do anything within my power to avoid interference in any way with the kind of work you are engaged in for the government, and I know that all of the judges feel the same way; but I am not authorized to extend the time for sending up the record, even if the court could do so, which I question."

In his affidavit filed in opposition to the motion to dismiss the appeal, Mr. Hartogensis stated that after the signing of the bills of exception in the case, which was done on December 4th, some delay, for which he was not responsible, occurred in procuring certain documentary evidence to be included in the record, and that after the transcript was completed he addressed himself to its verification, and was able to point out several small clerical errors, which were corrected, but that he found it would be necessary to search for other errors, and to compare the copies of exhibits with the record as transcribed, and, not having them sufficient time for such further examination, in view of the patriotic service he was performing, and being under the erroneous impression that the period for the transmission of the record would not expire until January 12th, he wrote to Chief Judge Boyd, and also to Mr. Magruder, clerk of this court, in an effort to secure an extension of the time. Upon learning that this could not be accomplished, the affidavit states, Mr. Hartogensis on the afternoon of January 11th communicated with his colleague, Mr. Bryant, who had been unable to give his personal attention to the appeal at that juncture because of the legislative duties in which he was then actively engaged. The following morning Mr. Bryant delivered to the clerk a check drawn by Mr. Hartogensis for the payment of the cost of the transcript, which was then at once mailed to the clerk of this court, who received it on the afternoon of that day.

The affidavit of Mr. Thomas A. Campbell, the deputy clerk of the lower court who prepared the record for this appeal, is to the effect, in part, that after the transcript was completed on December 31st it was held subject to the order of Mr. Hartogensis, or was in his possession, until January 12th, and upon its return on that day, and the payment of the cost of its preparation, it was immediately mailed to the clerk of the Court of Appeals.

It has been repeatedly emphasized that the rule (Code, art. 5, § 6) requiring transcripts of records on appeal to this court to be transmitted within three months from the time of the taking of the appeal has the controlling force of a statute, and is binding upon the court as well as upon the parties, so long as it remains unrevoked. When the record, as in this case, has been in fact transmitted after the expiration of the period limited by the rule, it is obligatory upon the court to dismiss the appeal, unless the appellant proves that the delay was occasioned by "the neglect, omission or inability of the clerk or appellee." Code, art. 5, § 40; Steiner v. Harding, 88 Md. 345, 41 Atl. 799; Horsey v. Woodward, 124 Md. 361, 93 Atl. 9; M., D. & V. Ry. Co. v. Hammond, 110 Md. 124, 72 Atl. 650; Estep v. Tuck, 109 Md. 528, 72 Atl. 459; Parsons v. Padgett, 65 Md. 356, 4 Atl. 410; Willis v. Jones, 57 Md. 362; Warburton v. Robinson, 113 Md. 24, 77 Atl. 127; Horseman v. Furbush, 124 Md. 581, 93 Atl. 149. The rule expressly forbids any presumption that the clerk or appellee was delinquent in regard to the transmission of the record in due time, and places upon the appellant the burden of thus shifting the responsibility for the delay. In this case it is plainly apparent from the evidence on both sides that neither the clerk nor the appellee can be held accountable for the fact that the record reached this court after the time allowed by the rule. The clerk had the transcript ready to be forwarded ten days before the expiration of the three-month period, and it is not suggested that there was any subsequent act or omission on the part of the appellee that resulted in the further detention of the record. It was wholly because of the desire of Mr. Hartogensis to inspect the transcript after its completion, and because of his misapprehension as to the time yet available for its transmission, that the delay beyond the period limited by the rule occurred. Neither of these causes of delay is recognized by the rule as a proper ground of exemption from the effect of its plain and imperative terms. There was no necessity for counsel to detain the transcript after its completion and certification, in order that it might be examined for possible errors. When the clerk had certified that it was a true record, its verity might have been safely assumed, and if any errors had been discovered after the case reached this court there were means to be provided here for their correction. The mistake of counsel as to the time remaining for the transmission of the record is of course not a sufficient reason for suspending the operation of the rule in this instance.

Great stress was laid in argument upon the fact that the counsel in charge of the appeal was closely engaged in the performance of an important patriotic duty, which prevented the attention he desired to give to the inspection of the record during the time available under the rule, and we are urged on this ground to disregard the slight extent to which the specified period has been exceeded. With the strongest disposition to deal sympathetically with such a plea, we have been altogether unable to find that the failure to transmit the record in time can properly be attributed to the patriotic service which the counsel had undertaken and was zealously performing. After the record was completed on December 31st, he had no affirmative duty in reference to its transmission with which the questionnaire work, in which he was engaged, can be said to have interfered. It was simply necessary for him to withdraw his request that the record be held for his inspection, and to direct that it be transmitted, and, if required, to pay the cost of its preparation. This was done on January 12th, while the questionnaire work was still in progress, and there is nothing to suggest that the same course could not have been as readily adopted ten days previously, when the record was finished and certified. The time employed in the effort to obtain an extension of the period for the transmission of the record would have been more than sufficient to secure the forwarding of the transcript. It was the assumption of the unnecessary task of verifying the certified record, and not the pressure of the patriotic duty, that appears to have caused the delay with which we are now concerned.

It may be said in this case, as we observed in Horseman v. Furbush, supra, where the record was only one day late in reaching this court:

"While we are naturally reluctant to enforce the rule when the time it allows for the transmission has been exceeded by such a narrow margin as on this appeal, we could not rightfully modify its express and definite terms, or make its application depend upon a mere measurement of the extent to which it has been transgressed, in order to avoid the prescribed consequence of the delay in a particular case."

Appeal dismissed.

(132 Md. 412)

TAYLOR v. COMMISSIONERS OF PERRYVILLE. (No. 17.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 2, 1918.)

1. TRIAL §336(4)—INSTRUCTIONS—GENERALITY.

In trial to court without jury, prayer that "the court instructs the court sitting as a jury that under the pleadings and evidence in the case their verdict must be for the defendant" was too general, and technically defective.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §151(3)—REMOVAL OF BAR.

Published financial statement of town, acknowledging some indebtedness to plaintiff, published nearly 7 years before action was brought, was of no effect in removing the bar of the statute of limitations.

3. TRIAL §51—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—PROVISIONAL ADMISSION—STRIKING TESTIMONY.

Where testimony was admitted subject to exception and was stricken out on general motion, but which in fact could not have been misleading, there was no error.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §143(1)—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF INDEBTEDNESS—POWERS OF OFFICER.

Since one member of the city council cannot validly acknowledge city's indebtedness to an individual, evidence of such acknowledgment is incompetent to establish removal of the bar of the statute of limitations.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §148(1)—REMOVAL OF BAR—LETTERS—SUFFICIENCY.

Letter from board of commissioners to plaintiff, asking him to submit bill and stating that the writers had no account of a bill owing plaintiff, was insufficient to remove any account which plaintiff had against the city from the statute of limitations.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR §1064(1)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Though the instruction merely that verdict should be for defendant was technically erroneous, the judgment would be affirmed where no prejudice resulted therefrom.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Caroline County; W. H. Adkins and Philemon B. Hopper, Judges.

Action by Orion Taylor against the Commissioners of Perryville. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

T. Alan Goldsborough, of Denton, and James F. Evans, of Elkton (Wm. S. Evans, of Elkton, on the brief), for appellant. H. A. Warburton, of Elkton (M. H. Fahey, of Havre de Grace, Fred R. Owens, of Denton, and W. T. Warburton, of Elkton, on the brief), for appellees.

BOYD, C. J. The record in this case does not show that there was an entry of final judgment before the appeal was taken, but as the clerk of the lower court has certified that it was merely an oversight of his which he has since corrected, with the authority of the court, by entering the judgment as of the date the motion for the new trial was overruled, and as the attorneys have filed in this court an agreement that the judgment so entered shall be considered as having been entered before the appeal was taken, we will so treat it. By that agreement the attorneys also waived the effect of the omission to file a replication and join issue on the plea of the statute of limitations, which the record does not show had been done. We will therefore pass on the merits of the case regardless of those irregularities.

[1] The prayer granted by the lower court was unquestionably too general, and therefore technically defective. It was:

"The court instructs the court, sitting as a jury, that under the pleadings and evidence in the case their verdict must be for the defendant."

When a case is tried before the court, as much attention is sometimes not given to the form of a prayer as would have been if tried before a jury, especially one seeking to reach the end that this was intended to accomplish, but that sort of a prayer has been held to be bad a number of times by this court, although we will only refer to 2 Poe, § 297. As the real question in the case is whether there was legally sufficient evidence to take the plaintiff's claim out of the statute of limitations, we will pass on that.

The account of the plaintiff is for the most part made up of a number of small items which cover over 25 pages of the printed record. The first item is "June 4, 1901. To bill rendered to date, $254.46"—and after that there are charges running from August 20, 1902, to July 14, 1906, amounting in all, including the one of June 4, 1901, to $1,801.86. There are also three items in April, 1910, amounting to $8.75. There is a credit of $150 on June 15, 1906, and one of $100 July 5, 1906, leaving a balance of $1,559.61, due on the last-named date, as stated in the account filed, which should have been $1 more according to the figures given. The account is for work and labor done and materials furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant.

[2] The plaintiff offered as evidence to remove the bar what is entitled "Financial Statement, Town of Perryville, Md.," published in a newspaper at Elkton. It is addressed "To the Taxpayers and Citizens of the Town of Perryville, Md.," signed by A. H. Owens, secretary and treasurer, and purports to give the receipts and payments. At the end of it there is an item as follows: "Due Orion Taylor, as near as we can find out, being unable to get bill, $1,000.00"—but the statement is dated June 26, 1906, having been published July 11th of that year, and as the suit was not instituted until January 4, 1915, it is clear that it cannot affect the question of the removal of the bar of the statute of limitations.

[3] When the plaintiff was on the stand he was asked as to a conversation between him and Mr. Campbell (the record says "Cameron" in some places, but "Campbell" was doubtless intended), who was one of the commissioners of Perryville, and also acted as secretary. The testimony was admitted subject to exceptions, and was subsequently stricken out on motion. That constitutes the first exception. The ruling is objected to because the motion was too general. It ought to have stated the questions objected to more specifically, but it must have been thoroughly understood that it related to the conversation between the plaintiff and Mr. Campbell which had been admitted subject to exception. There are only three questions and answers, and, especially as the case was being tried before the court, there would seem to have been no room for misunderstanding as to what was intended to be, and what was stricken out.

[4] It would be a dangerous practice to permit one of three or more commissioners, councilmen, or whatever their official titles may be, of a municipal corporation to bind the corporation by statements he might make in reference to claims against it, unless he was duly authorized to act for the municipality. Mr. Campbell did not become one of the commissioners until 1911, and he testified, when called by the plaintiff, that he knew nothing whatever about the account alleged by the plaintiff to be due, and he said that they never did "business single handed. We always had the others to do business." The members of a municipal body "cannot make a valid determination binding upon the corporation by their assent separately and individually expressed." 2 Dillon on Mun. Cor. (5th Ed.) § 501. The court was clearly right in striking out the evidence.

The only possible ground for contending that the alleged indebtedness to the plaintiff was admitted or so acknowledged as to revive it is a letter which was in evidence and is as follows:

"Perryville, Md., Jan. 13, 1913.

"Mr. Orion Taylor, Alkin, Maryland—Dear Sir: I have been instructed by the board of town commissioners as follows: 'As we have no account or record of any bill which the town of Perryville owes Mr. O. Taylor, the secretary will on or before the 15th day of January, mail Mr. Taylor a request for to place an itemized bill of all work done and materials furnished which he claims the town owes him for; same to be in the hands of the secretary on or before February 3, 1913, as any bill or claim for work done or material furnished previous to February 3, 1910, will not be recognized after Feb. 3, 1913.'

"Yours truly,

"The Commissioners of Perryville,
"George B. Campbell, Secretary."

The commissioners were Messrs. Campbell, Rutter, and Gorrell. Mr. Rutter did not testify, but Mr. Campbell did, and Mr. Gorrell testified that he did not become a commissioner until 1912. The evidence implies that neither of the three was a commissioner until some time after 1910. There is enough in the record to show that the appellant was claiming that the town owed him a bill, and that the three commissioners were trying to ascertain the facts about it. They knew nothing themselves, but the plaintiff was endeavoring at the trial to prove some admissions, promises, or something that would take the claim out of the statute, and called Messrs. Campbell and Gorrell, two of the commissioners, to the stand. All the evidence in the record was offered by the plaintiff, the prayer having been granted at the conclusion of his testimony. This appears in the testimony of Mr. Gorrell in reference to the letter above quoted:

"Q. Will you explain what you meant by this letter, or by this resolution which is contained in this letter: 'As we have no account or record of any bill which the town of Perryville owes Mr. Taylor,' etc.? As a matter of fact you didn't have a record of a great many things, did you? A. We didn't have any record pertaining to his accounts. Q. Were your records faulty, not only as far as he was concerned, but in a great many other cases? Were the records imperfect, incomplete? A. What I mean, there was no regular meetings all along the line. Of course what records was there we couldn't dispute, what records was on the books, but there was nothing that showed any record in regard to Mr. Taylor all along the line. Q. You knew that Mr. Taylor had a bill of some kind, didn't you? A. All I knew was what he presented us. Q. Why did you write him this letter if you didn't know he had a bill? A. I can tell you how the letter came about. Q. All right, go ahead. A. Mr. Campbell was out at the station one time, and he heard Mr. Taylor talking about the commissioners. * * * The witness, continuing his answer, further states: Mr. 'Cameron,' when he heard he mentioned the commissioners' names, he stopped to hear what he was talking about, and he said that he said, 'These other commissioners in before this,' he said, 'he couldn't get a d— cent out of them,' and he said, 'These s— of b—s are a great sight worse.' That's why we wrote the letter, to know why we were called s— of b—s, and to know if he had any claim against the town of Perryville. If there was, we wanted it."

[8] The letter was not sufficient to remove the bar of the statute. It is not only the right, but the duty, of municipal officers to require claims to be presented for their consideration. The bill that was produced before the commissioners ran from 1901 to July 14, 1906, and then had added to it the three small items referred to, in April, 1910. Nothing had been paid on it since July, 1906. The only credits on it amounted to $250, which was not quite enough to pay the bill rendered June 4, 1901. The account amounted to over $1,500, consisting for the most part of what seem to be day wages and teams hired from time to time. If the plaintiff had informed the commissioners in office in 1913 of the character of the bill claimed to be due him, they would naturally be suspicious of it, and would not be ready to acknowledge it as correct. They would be derelict in their duties if they paid such a claim without thoroughly investigating it, but at the same time were justified in calling upon the plaintiff to file it, especially if he was using such language in reference to them as we have quoted above. It would be difficult to find any acknowledgment, recognition, or admission in this letter. Mr. Gorrell and Mr. Campbell both testified that they could find no record of the account, and they wanted and had the right to demand an itemized bill. The account was long since barred, except the three items for work in April, 1910, amounting to $8.75. As the other items were from 6 to 10 or 11 years old, they were perfectly right in naming a time, by which the itemized bill was to be left with the secretary, if they then had any idea of the amount the plaintiff claimed, and if they did not know what he claimed, they had the right to know it, and have the account in such shape as they could investigate it. The letter does not admit that they owed him anything, and does not promise, expressly or by implication, that they would pay him anything, although they do say that any bill or claim for work done or material furnished previous to February 8, 1910, will not be recognized after February 8, 1913, and they do not intimate that they would recognize any part of his bill as due. Shortly after he filed this claim they notified him they would not pay it, but he still waited for nearly 2 years before bringing suit.

It is not unusual for municipalities to publish notices requiring claims to be filed within a certain time named—the charters of many of them require such claims to be filed properly proven. Mr. Campbell testified that they found that they did not owe the account, and refused to pay it, and Mr. Gorrell's evidence is to the same effect. They ought to have returned his account, but they probably thought it safer to keep it, so as to have something to show what he was claiming in case of suit. It would be giving our decisions on the subject, some of which have already gone quite far, a dangerous construction to hold that officers of municipalities, who know nothing whatever about claims, acknowledge them by writing such a letter as this. They could not properly admit them to be due, as they were not in office at the time they were alleged to be contracted and did not know whether they were due or not. It would open the door for the grossest fraud to permit a stale claim of this sort to be revived by such a letter. It might be impossible for the commissioners then in office to procure testimony to meet that of the plaintiff as to whether the account was due, or had been paid, if it ever was due. If the publication in the newspaper offered by the plaintiff was given effect, it showed that the secretary and treasurer thought there was due $1,000 in June, 1906, but in February, 1913, the plaintiff claimed over $1,500, besides interest, although according to his account only $8.75 had become due after 1906. That statement shows that they were unable to get a bill. It is so improbable that any one would permit a claim of that kind to run from year to year without being paid, and then for 2 years after the last item not even present a bill, that it behooved the officials to very carefully scrutinize one which was finally presented years after the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. The account does not show where the men named in it worked, what the teams were employed for, nor does it show why the plaintiff was employing persons or teams for the town of Perryville. In 25 Cyc. 1361, the rule is thus announced as to municipalities:

"The statute may be suspended as to debts of a municipality by acknowledgment, which may be made by ordinance duly passed by the legislative body or by procuring legislation providing for the payment of such debts and the levy of taxes therefor. But it is not suspended by a promise or acknowledgment made by an officer, not expressly authorized to bind the city; by levying and collecting taxes to pay interest on debts generally; by reference of a claim to experts; or to a committee; by including it in a statement of indebtedness prepared in obedience to a statute; by an acknowledgment of it in the annual report of an officer; by the adoption of such report; by a reference to it in a report of a committee, or by the adoption of such report."

See, also, 17 R. C. L. 920, § 282.

This entire account was barred, except the three items in 1910, when the letter was written, if it ever was due, and commissioners or councilmen of a municipality should not be permitted, much less be held to have intended, to have acknowledged an account by such a letter as this, written under the circumstances it was. It might result in the commissioners who were in office during the years the account covered refusing, for proper reasons, to pay it, and then, by calling upon those who knew nothing about it to pay it, have them agree to look into it, and, if they happen to use some expression from which it could be contended that there was an acknowledgment, make the municipality liable. "There must be shown to exist one of three things to take a case out of the operation of the statute of limitations: First, an admission or acknowledgment by the debtor of a subsisting debt from which a promise to pay may be implied; secondly, an unconditional promise to pay the debt; or, thirdly, a conditional promise to pay the debt, and evidence which shows that the condition has been performed or gratified." Wilmer, Trustee, v. Galtner, 68 Md. 342, 345, 12 Atl. 8, 253. While under some of our decisions it has not required very much to establish an admission or acknowledgment by the debtor, who is presumed to know whether he owes the debt, when it is sought to hold a municipality for statements made by officers, who know nothing whatever about the account, it would be a great injustice to taxpayers if the officers were permitted to make them responsible for something that they knew nothing about. We are satisfied that the letter is not an acknowledgment or recognition of any debt due by the commissioners of Perryville to the plaintiff, and that, even if the terms used might be held sufficient if used by an individual debtor in reference to a debt claimed to be due by him, it is not sufficient to bind the commissioners of Perryville.

[6] Although we have said the prayer was too general, as the only question in the case was in reference to the statute of limitations, no harm was done the appellant by its form. A prayer that there was no legally sufficient evidence to take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations, and the verdict must be for the defendant, would have been sufficient, and, as that is manifestly what the lower court meant by granting the one it did, and we are satisfied that the plaintiff is not prejudiced by the error as to the form of the prayer, we will follow the course adopted in White v. Bramble, 124 Md. 395, 92 Atl. 763, and affirm the judgment.

Judgment affirmed; the appellant to pay the costs.

MAYOR, ETC., OF BALTIMORE v. MATTERN. (No. 10.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 28, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §821(20)—INJURIES IN STREET — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against a city by a pedestrian for injuries from a defective street crossing, question as to plaintiff's care held for the jury, under evidence that she was carrying her child and was as careful as she could be.

2. NEGLIGENCE §136(26) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—WITHDRAWAL OF ISSUE FROM JURY.

Before plaintiff's right to have the jury pass on the issue of her negligence could be denied by the court, her conduct must have been found so manifestly reckless as to leave no opportunity for difference of opinion as to its imprudence in the minds of ordinarily prudent men.

3. EVIDENCE §553(4)—EXPERT TESTIMONY—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION.

Testimony of plaintiff's physician, in answer to question partly hypothetical and partly based on knowledge, was admissible, where there was no substantial difference between plaintiff's testimony and that attributed to her in question, while answer showed opinion was based largely on observation.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas of Baltimore City; Morris A. Soper, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Mary Mattern against the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

S. S. Field, City Sol., of Baltimore (Edw. J. Colgan, Jr., Asst. City Sol., of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellant. J. Cookman Boyd and Peter J. Campbell, both of Baltimore, for appellee.

URNER, J. While the appellee was passing over a street crossing in Baltimore, with her little child in her arms, her foot was caught in a hole between two flagstones, and she was thrown down and sustained a serious injury to her knee, for which she brought suit against the city and recovered the judgment which is the occasion of this appeal.

The principal exception in the record was taken to the refusal of the trial court to instruct the jury that according to the undisputed evidence the plaintiff did not exercise reasonable care to avoid the accident, but by her negligence contributed directly to the injury of which she complains, and that the verdict should therefore be for the defendant. This prayer, of course, presupposed the existence of primary negligence on the part of the city in respect to the condition of the street crossing at the point where the plaintiff was injured. It was estimated by the witnesses that the hole between the flagstones was 6 or 8 inches deep, about 6 inches wide, and from 6 to 12 inches long. It had been there for a period of four or five months before the accident. Apparently it had resulted from the wear of wagon wheels in the space between the two stones.

[1, 2] The accident occurred in the daytime, and the theory of the city's prayer was that the defect in the street was obvious to any one using due care, and that because of her failure to avoid it the plaintiff should be judicially declared to have been guilty of contributory negligence. It was testified by the plaintiff that, when she came to the street crossing she took up her 17 months old baby in her arms to help it over to the other side, and that in passing over she did not see the hole between the stones, as she was looking toward the opposite gutter and curb, beyond which the child was to be carried. She stated that, if she had been looking for defects in the street, she might have seen the hole into which she stepped, but that she supposed the crossing was all right, and she was going over it as carefully as she could under the circumstances.

Upon this evidence the court below was clearly right in declining to hold the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The question as to whether she exercised ordinary care to avoid the accident was properly submitted to the jury as an issue of fact, in a prayer granted at the defendant's request; but it would be pressing the doctrine of contributory negligence very far to hold that a case like the present should be withdrawn from the jury on that ground. It was entirely natural that the plaintiff should have carried her child over the crossing, and it is easy to understand how the hole, as located, could escape her attention while she was thus engaged. The fact that she failed to notice the defect in the crossing and assumed it to be safe, as she passed over it with her child in her arms, is certainly not such a conclusive indication of negligence as to prevent the submission of the question to the jury. Her conduct was not so manifestly reckless as to "leave no opportunity for difference of opinion as to its imprudence in the minds of ordinarily prudent men." It would have to deserve such a characterization before her right to have the jury pass upon the issue could be denied. B. & O. R. R. Co. v. Wiley, 72 Md. 40, 18 Atl. 1107, 6 L. R. A. 706, 20 Am. St. Rep. 454; McCarthy v. Clark, 115 Md. 464, 81 Atl. 12; Com'rs of Delmar v. Venables, 125 Md. 478, 94 Atl. 89.

In the case of Knight v. Baltimore, 97 Md. 647, 55 Atl. 388, cited by the appellant, the driver of a wagon was thrown from his seat and injured when one of the wheels ran into a hole in the middle of the street. It was held that his own negligence contributed to his injury because he could readily have seen the hole, which was visible at a distance of half a square; but he was talking to a companion and was not looking ahead as due care would have prompted him to do in such a situation. But in stating that conclusion this court observed that:

"Greater watchfulness * * * is required of the driver of a team upon a city street than of a pedestrian upon a sidewalk."

The only other grounds on which the appellant contends for a reversal are that the physician who attended the plaintiff was permitted to be asked as a witness whether the condition in which he found her knee three days after the accident could have resulted from that occurrence, as described in the plaintiff's testimony, and that a hypothetical question, allowed to be propounded to the same witness, as to the permanence of the injury was an incorrect statement of the facts upon which his expert opinion was to be based. The point sought to be raised in the objection to the first of the questions just noted is that the accident as described by the plaintiff did not necessarily involve any injury to her knee. This objection is without force, in view of the testimony of the plaintiff that, when her foot went into the hole, she was thrown down and sustained an injury to her knee, by which it has ever since continued to be affected.

[3] The other question objected to was partly hypothetical and was based in part upon the direct knowledge of the witness, as the physician who observed and treated the injury in regard to the permanence of its effects. It is urged that the hypothetical portion of the question overstated the plaintiff's testimony as to the extent to which the injury disabled her from performing her usual household duties. It was assumed by the question that she had testified to being unable to attend to her housework and move around because of the condition of her knee, and it is said that her testimony in fact did not disclose such a complete state of disability. When the interrogatory is taken as a whole, it does not convey the idea that the plaintiff had described her condition as being one of total incapacity for work or movement about her home. It refers to her testimony as being to the effect that since the accident she suffers severe pain in her knee, when it is about to rain; that before this injury she was able to do her own housework, but that now when she attempts to do any washing, there are times when her knee apparently gives way, and she must sit down and rest for hours, and sometimes as much as a day. It is immediately in this connection in the question that the statement occurs as to her being unable to move around and do her housework. The plaintiff actually testified on this subject, in part, as follows:

"Now in cloudy weather the pain is terrible; they shoot up and down in me, and I have to sit down for hours, and if I am washing at the tub, I have to sit down until the pain leaves me, and then maybe go back and try to do some more washing, a little more, but I cannot do it. I have been sending my wash to the laundry, but a few fine pieces I try to keep home and do myself, and I have to do my own housework, what I can, and what I cannot has to go dirty, as I am no millionaire, and I cannot afford to hire any one. My knee, even when it does not hurt, is all trembling."

There does not appear to us to be any substantial difference between the testimony given by the plaintiff and that attributed to her in the hypothetical question. Besides, the answer of the physician to the question shows that his opinion as to the permanence of the injury was based largely upon his own professional observation of its condition. For the reasons stated, we think this evidence was properly admitted.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

488 Md. 649

MT. SAVAGE GEORGE'S CREEK COAL CO. et al. v. MONAHAN et al.
(No. 27.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 8, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶847(1)—REVIEW—SCOPE—EQUITY CASES.

In equity cases, fact findings of the trial court are reviewable on appeal, notwithstanding stipulations or agreements made by the parties.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶544(3)—BILL OF EXCEPTION—NECESSITY.

In action for damages for mining coal from plaintiff's land, where some prayers suggested question of negligence, and the judge rejected all the prayers indorsing the disposition of them, such record sufficiently presented the right to review the finding as to negligence, though no bill of exception was filed.

3. MINES AND MINERALS ¶125—TRESPASS—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show negligence of defendants in mining coal belonging to plaintiffs with knowledge that they were approaching or had passed the boundary.

4. MINES AND MINERALS ¶125—TRESPASS—MINING COAL—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Landowner's measure of damages for negligent mining of coal from under his land is the value of the coal when severed and at the mouth of the mine.

5. MINES AND MINERALS ¶125—TRESPASS—MINING COAL—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 75, § 92, providing that if one furtively or in bad faith abstracts minerals from the land of another he may be charged with their whole value and allowed no deduction for labor and expenses in mining, does not change the rule as to liability in cases of negligent mining of another's coal.

6. INJUNCTION ¶198—RELIEF—DAMAGES—ASSESSMENT.

That a suit is in equity for injunction and for damages for negligent mining of another's coal does not require imposition of a different measure of damages than if the suit were at law.

7. MINES AND MINERALS ¶125—TRESPASS—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

That value of coal when mined may exceed and be disproportionate to value of the land does not prevent allowance to owner, against whom trespass is committed of the value of the coal when severed.

8. MINES AND MINERALS ¶125—TRESPASS—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In action for mining coal by trespass where the verdict, though large, actually charged the defendants with only five per cent. of the amount allowed, by reason of the profits made from the coal, the award was not excessive.

9. MINES AND MINERALS ¶51(5)—STATUTE—LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 75, § 92, changing rule of damages for trespass on mineral land, being contrary to the long-established rule, should not be extended beyond the clear intention of the Legislature.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Allegany County; Robert R. Henderson, Judge.

Bill by Andrew Monahan and others against the Mt. Savage George's Creek Coal Company and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

W. Calvin Chestnut, of Baltimore, and Albert A. Doub, of Cumberland, for appellants. William E. Walsh and Walter C. Capper, both of Cumberland (William C. Walsh, of Cumberland, on the brief), for appellees.

BOYD, C. J. The bill in this case was filed by Andrew Monahan and others, the appellees, against the Mt. Savage George's Creek Coal Company, and certain of its officers, to enjoin the defendants: (1) From trespassing upon the plaintiffs' land and mining and carrying away their coal; (2) from removing supports, etc., necessary to keep open the passages through the defendant company's mines leading to the plaintiffs' coal; and (3) from preventing the plaintiffs, their surveyor and helpers, from going into the company's mines and thence into plaintiffs' coal, and the places from which said company had carried it away, and from interfering with the surveyor from measuring and ascertaining how much of plaintiffs' coal had been taken and carried away by said company. There are also prayers to require the defendants to disclose how much of said coal the company had taken, when and to whom sold, to account for that taken, as well as for the damages to the plaintiffs' remaining coal, and for general relief. The defendants filed an answer in which they denied that they had trespassed upon the plaintiffs' property or removed any coal therefrom, but subsequently they filed an amended answer, in which they admitted that the company had sold and marketed coal estimated at 3,250 tons taken from the land of the plaintiffs, admitted that the company had been paid for said coal, and stated that it was ready to compensate the plaintiffs for it. They denied that:

"The said coal was worked or removed from the plaintiffs' land fraudulently, negligently, or willfully, but say that the said coal was taken purely by accident, without fraud, and without negligence on the part of the said defendants, and also with the utmost good faith, and with the belief on the part of the said defendants that they were taking and removing coal which belonged only to the Mt. Savage George's Creek Coal Company; and these defendants further say that the defendants ought not to be required to pay for the said minerals more than its value in its native state before severance, to the said plaintiffs."

The defendants in open court waived "any objection to the jurisdiction of the court in this case as to the determination of the question as to the quantity of coal removed and the value of the coal, all of which will be determined, and the court can pass upon the issues in this case the same as if it were a trial at law and the same as if the case were tried by the court sitting as a jury." The attorneys for the plaintiffs assented to that agreement, and it was made a matter of record.

[1, 2] The lower court adopted the defendants' evidence in regard to the amount of coal taken out of the land of the appellees by the company, the cost of severing, loading, and transporting it to the mouth of the mine, and there seemed to be no controversy as to its market value. The principal questions, therefore, to be determined are whether the court was right in finding that 4,508 tons of the coal were negligently mined, and, if so, what measure of damages should be allowed. We cannot agree with the appellees that as it was a question of fact whether the coal was negligently mined the decision of the lower court as to that is conclusive and cannot be reviewed. In equity cases findings of the lower court as to questions of fact are reviewable on appeals, and if the agreement referred to above be construed as changing that rule in some respects, it could not have been intended to have such an effect as that contended for. The agreement suggested some uncertainty as to the mode of procedure, and the plan of offering instructions was adopted; Judge Henderson remarking that that could be done so as to secure the right of appeal. Some of the prayers clearly presented the question of negligence, and while bills of exception were not filed, the judge in his opinion rejected all of the prayers offered by the defendants, except the first, which does not refer to that subject. The prayers in the record, together with the indorsement on them of the disposition made of them by the judge, and the statement in the opinion that "all the prayers submitted by the defendant, except the first, are rejected," must, under the circumstances, be regarded as sufficiently presenting the right to have his finding reviewed.

1. There is no real controversy about the division line between the properties. That could have been ascertained before the defendant company commenced mining in November, 1916, as well as in March, 1917. Mr. Stern, the president of the company, testified that they commenced mining some time from the 10th to the 15th of November. The Maryland Coal & Iron Company formerly operated this mine, and Mr. Stern was treasurer of that company, and Mr. Avery, one of the defendants, was president. Both before and after the defendant company commenced operations Mr. Stern and Mr. Farrell, a director of the defendant company, tried to get a lease of the Monahan coal, but the owners declined to lease it, and warned Messrs. Stern and Farrell not to get over the line. The defendants either knew, or were grossly negligent in not knowing, that the workings were at least close to the line, yet, although the line could have been easily and promptly established, it is now said that it was not fixed in the mine until after the injunction was issued. Anthony Monahan testified that on the 5th of November, 1916, Mr. Avery, of the defendant company, told him, "We are up to your line, your property line, and he says, 'We can't go no further if we don't get your coal.'" He told him they would not lease the property; that the heirs were opposed to a lease; and "I told him all we wanted him to do was to keep off our line." Francis Monahan testified that he heard that conversation. Mr. Avery denied it, but said that he understood they were from 75 to 100 feet from the line. Mr. Stern said the reason they were anxious to get the Monahan coal was "because it was very close to our property," and in reply to the question, "You knew it was very close to your workings in there?" he said, "Yes, sir." On cross-examination of Mr. Farrell, in reference to the lease, this appears:

"Q. The reason was that you were close to their coal, or on their coal? A. I didn't know it. Q. In a general way, isn't that the reason you tried to get this lease? A. The reason we tried to get a lease was because we wanted their coal. Q. Isn't that the reason, because you were up to it? A. Might have been it. Q. It was it? A. Well, yes."

Mr. Spear testified that he went with the defendant company about February 1, 1917, first as mine foreman and then as superintendent, and "just as soon as I got there I said to Mr. Stern that we should make some inquiry about the lines," and Mr. Stern employed Mr. Haverstick as engineer. This also appears in his evidence:

"Q. Did Mr. Stern tell you it was all right? A. No, sir, he didn't. He didn't say anything about it. He didn't know. I didn't know anything about it until the surveyors told us. Q. Did Mr. Haverstick ever tell you it was all right? A. As soon as Mr. Haverstick made his survey, he told me we would have to stop the left. Q. When was that? A. I couldn't tell just when; I couldn't remember the dates."

Mr. Matthias, a mining engineer, testified as to the distances the various headings were run beyond the line before the injunction was served. Two of them were run over the line 325 or more feet, one about 400 feet, one about 186 feet, three 150 or more feet, two about 125 feet, and four varying from 75 to 115 feet, although they were not all run at right angles to the line, as shown by the plat, and hence the end of the headings would not be as far beyond the boundary, in a straight line, in some instances as the above figures might suggest.

[3] The evidence was therefore ample to show negligence of a very decided character. It may be that no one actually knew that the defendant company was working beyond the line, but they at least knew that they were near it, and had been warned not to get over it. Why it would take from early in November until after the injunction was served, in March, to find out where the line was is not satisfactorily explained, especially as it was so soon ascertained after the injunction was served. It ought to have been a very simple matter for an engineer to locate a line such as this, about which there seems to be no real controversy. They knew that some time before the company commenced operations the former company was within from 75 to 100 feet of the line, and some of the officers of that company were officers of this one, yet several of these headings were run between three and four hundred feet beyond the line. The circumstances were such as to suggest the propriety, not to say necessity, of fixing the line in the mines definitely before any coal was taken out in that direction. Nothing said by Mr. Matthias excused the defendants, unless it be what he told them about the line at the point where the court below only required the company to pay the royalty of ten cents a ton for coal taken out, but he did not then know definitely where the line was, and the officers and agents of the defendant company had a much better opportunity to know it, as they had access to the mines at all times. The defendants knew he had not connected up the lines with their workings, but after the injunction was gotten out it only took a few days to find out that the defendants had taken out large quantities of the plaintiffs' coal. If the defendants' theory be adopted, all that would be necessary for a trespasser to do would be not to have the lines established until proceedings were taken against him, and then claim he did not know he was over. That will not do in a case such as this, where there was manifestly good reason to fix the line, if the defendant company was anxious to keep within its own boundaries.

[4] 2. The next and most important question is the measure of damages to be allowed. The rule in this state was definitely fixed prior to the act of 1894, which is now section 92 of article 75 of the Annotated Code. It may be that the decisions of this court are not in accord with some of those cited by the appellants from other jurisdictions, but the measure of damages fixed in Barton Coal Co. v. Cox, 39 Md. 1, 17 Am. Rep. 525, Franklin Coal Co. v. McMillan, 49 Md. 549, 38 Am. Rep. 280, and Blaen Avon Coal Co. v. McCulloh, 59 Md. 403, 43 Am. Rep. 560, has not only not been disturbed but has been recognized in Parker v. Wallis, 60 Md. 15, 45 Am. Rep. 703; Atlantic, etc., Coal Co. v. Md. Coal Co., 62 Md. 135, and Peters v. Tilgh- man, 111 Md. 227, 73 Atl. 726. In the Barton Coal Company Case the question was fully argued by some of the ablest attorneys in the state and heard by Chief Judge Bartol and Judges Bowie, Miller, Alvey, and Robinson. The court thoroughly reviewed the English decisions and other authorities, and sustained the third prayer of the plaintiffs, which, after referring to certain facts not necessary to repeat, concluded as follows:

"Then the plaintiffs are entitled to recover such sum per ton as the jury may find the said coal so mined was worth when first severed from its native bed, and before it was put upon mine cars, without deducting the expense of severing said coal from its native bed."

It further sustained a prayer to the effect that if the jury found that the defendant knew that the lands were not its own, the plaintiffs were entitled to exemplary damages. The court said that the rule prescribed in the plaintiffs' third prayer conformed in principle to that in Martin v. Porter, 5 M. & W. 351, Morgan v. Powell, 3 Ad. & El., N. S. 278, and Wild and Others v. Holt, 9 M. & W. 672. In Martin v. Porter, Baron Parke expressly ruled, as quoted in the Barton Coal Company Case, that the plaintiff "was entitled to the value of the coal as a chattel at the time when the defendant company began to take it away, that is, as soon as it existed as a chattel, which value would be its price at the pit's mouth, after deducting the expense of carrying the coals from the place in the mine where they were dug, to the pit's mouth."

Judge Robinson dissented in the Barton Coal Company Case, and when the case of the Franklin Coal Co. v. McMillan came before the court filed a vigorous dissent on the ground that in his opinion the Franklin Coal Company Case was distinguishable from that because the defendant contended that the coal was taken under a claim of title. He relied on the case of Wood v. Morewood, 3 Ad. & El. N. S. 440, and others cited by him, and he quoted from it to show that if there was fraud or negligence on the part of the defendant, damages could be given on the principle of Martin v. Porter, but in the absence of fraud or negligence the damages could be confined to the value of the coal in its native bed. We refer to Judge Robinson's opinion to show that the question was distinctly raised in the Franklin Coal Company Case, but the majority of the court refused to follow the view contended for, and the rule announced in the Barton Coal Company Case was followed. It will be noted that in Wood v. Morewood, Baron Parke said that if there was fraud or negligence the jury could give the damages settled in Martin v. Porter.

In the Blaen Avon Coal Company Case, this court again followed the rule adopted in the Barton Coal Company Case, and repeated in the Franklin Coal Company Case. In addition to the English cases cited the court referred to decisions in North Carolina, Maine, California, and Illinois which announced the same rule of compensation. Judge Ritchie, who delivered the opinion, called attention to the fact that in the Illinois cases, and in Martin v. Porter, and Morgan v. Powell:

"While the amount to be recovered is fixed by the worth of the coal when first dug, the mode of reaching the value is through the price of the coal after it arrived at the pit's mouth, and allowing a deduction for the cost of conveying it thither from the place where it was mined. This is said to be because it could have no value as a salable article without being taken from the pits, and that was the earliest moment at which the plaintiff could have repossessed himself of the coal. But, as Lord Denman, in Morgan v. Powell, says: 'Instances may be easily supposed where particular circumstances would vary this mode of calculating the damage.'"

Judge Ritchie then went on to show that, where the coal is actually carried away and sold—

"It does not seem material in a case like this whether the value of the coal at the mine's mouth be first ascertained and then an allowance be made for the bare expense incurred in its simple conveyance thither, or witnesses be asked to estimate directly its value just prior to its removal. The rule of compensation is practically observed in either case."

See, also, what he said on page 420 of 59 Md. It is not difficult to see why this is so. The plaintiff is entitled to recover the value of the coal per ton, after it is severed, without deducting the cost of severing it; that is to say, its value after it has become a chattel, which it has so become by the illegal act of the trespasser. If it be permitted to lie there without removing it, and the owner has no way to get it out, or did not know of it in time to take it out before the roof fell in, it might be difficult to establish the value beyond what it had in its native bed. But if, as was done in this case, it was removed by the trespasser, and at the mouth of the mine it had a value which is capable of being easily established, that would seem to be the fair and just way to do so. The trespasser surely has no right to complain of that mode being adopted. But the cases, including that of the Blaen Avon Coal Company, sufficiently show the reason for the rule to avoid the necessity of further discussion of that subject.

3. The three Maryland cases met nearly every question that was liable to be raised, but the further question now is the applicability vel non of the statute referred to. Section 92 of article 75. We have seen that the rule in Maryland when the statute was passed was that, even if the coal was taken under a bona fide claim of title, the measure of damages was as announced in the Barton Coal Company Case, while there was a line of cases in England and elsewhere that, in the absence of fraud or negligence, only the value of the coal in its native bed would be allowed. In the Franklin Coal Company Case Chief Judge Bartol said:

"Trespasses on the land of another, if not willful, always imply some degree of negligence. * * * As said in Maye et al. v. Yappen, 23 Cal. 306: 'Where a party has the means of ascertaining the dividing line, he is guilty of negligence in not ascertaining its location.'"

The first paragraph of the statute is:

"In the absence of fraud, negligence or willful trespass, the measure of damages for the wrongful working and abstracting of another's minerals is the value of the minerals in their native state, before severance, to the person from whose property they were taken at the time of the taking."

It could not be contended that under that alone the measure of damages has been changed, if there was fraud, negligence or willful trespass, but the statute proceeds with only a semicolon after the above, "but if one furtively or in bad faith works and abstracts minerals from the land of another, the party so offending may be charged with the whole value of the minerals taken and allowed no deduction in respect of his labor and expenses in getting them." The measure of damages provided in that paragraph is not materially different from the rule before the act of 1894, excepting the party would not be entitled to deduct the cost of removing the coal to the mouth of the mine, when that mode of ascertaining the value is adopted, if done furtively or in bad faith. It does not say "without deducting the cost of severing the coal," but is to be allowed "no deduction in respect of his labor and expenses in getting them." He might in addition to that be liable for exemplary damages, as the statute should not be construed to prohibit such damages if the circumstances justified them.

[5] It would seem to be clear that the rule in reference to minerals taken negligently was not changed. Why it was not, we have no means of knowing, unless it was simply that the Legislature would not make such a change, for reasons of public policy. The work is done underground, when ordinarily the owner of adjoining property has little, if any, means of knowing that his property is being encroached upon. Baron Parke, in referring to the rule laid down in Martin v. Porter said:

"Which is a very salutary one, because the parties must know—at least, they may know by proper dialing—that they are trespassing on their neighbor's property."

The measure of damages fixed by the first paragraph does not apply, if the party taking the coal was negligent, because it is only in the absence of fraud, negligence, or willful trespass that the rule applies. If "negligence," as used in the first paragraph, is not embraced in one of the terms "furtively or in bad faith," as used in the second paragraph—and it would scarcely be contended that it is—then there is no part of the statute applicable to a case where there was negligence, and, if it is included, then the appellant cannot complain of the measure of damages allowed, as it even got the benefit of the deduction for the cost of removing the coal to the mouth of the mines. But it is clear that the statute does not change the rule when the minerals are taken as the result of the negligence of the defendant. The fact is that the defendant company was not only getting over the line of the plaintiffs' property, but it was working the coal very close to the line between good faith and bad faith. It may be that the officers did not know they were over the line until so informed by the surveyor, after this bill was filed, but they did not know they were not over the line, and could have easily found out whether they were, as it was their duty to do. But it is not necessary to go further into the question whether the acts of omission and commission of the defendant company amounted to bad faith, within the meaning of that term as used in the statute, as we are satisfied that there was great, not to say gross, negligence, and that the statute does not relieve parties guilty of negligence from the measure of damages fixed by our decisions prior to its passage.

The quotation from the amended answer in the first part of this opinion would seem to indicate that the defendants then interpreted this statute as we have done. If the fact of its being negligently done does not take it out of this statute, or make it inapplicable, then why would the defendants have denied that the coal was worked or removed from the plaintiffs' land "fraudulently, negligently, or willfully"? Of course, we understand they were denying that it was so taken, but the inference would be that if taken negligently they could not ask for the measure of damages which they claimed to be applicable.

[6] 4. The appellants also contend that, inasmuch as the case is in equity, a different rule should be applied. There are several answers to that. In the first place the defendants agreed that:

"The court can pass upon the issues in this case the same as if it were a trial at law and the same as if the case was tried by the court sitting as a jury."

That would hardly leave room for the contention that there should be a difference between the amount allowed in this case and what might have been allowed if the case had been before a jury, or the court sitting as a jury. But beyond that our own decisions are clear on that point. In the Atlantic, etc., Coal Co. v. Maryland Coal Co., 62 Md. 135, 143, after speaking of cases where courts of equity would assess damages, it was said:

"In a case of trespass where no such relations exist, we are aware of no ground upon which a court of equity can set up any other rule of damages than that which prevails at law. The rule for trespass in mining coal is well settled in Maryland. * * * The owner of adjoining property is held to know the boundaries between him and his neighbor. If he has made a mistake bona fide as to his title or boundaries in mining coal, the lowest measure of damages applicable is the value of the coal immediately upon its conversion into a chat-tel without abatement of the cost of severance. If the trespass has been committed through negligence or design, punitive damages in addition may be recovered."

Then after citing the three leading cases in Maryland, the opinion continues:

"An unwitting trespasser, merely as such, could not change the amount of his liability by simply changing the forum. No lower measure of damages for trespasses not negligent nor willful could be substituted in equity for that fixed at law, on general principles, for such trespasses. If a lower measure could be there applied merely because the trespasser was honestly mistaken, all such trespassers would seek the courts of equity when sued, and thus evade the rule established as applicable to them in the foregoing authorities."

The appellants quoted an expression used in the Barton Coal Company Case, where, after affirming the rule adopted, the court said:

"The cases to the contrary are generally cases in equity, where greater latitude is assumed by the courts in controlling the rights of the parties"

—but in the case in 62 Md. 135, where a different rule was sought to be established in equity, this court announced its views in terms which leave no doubt on the subject, as will be seen by the quotation above.

[7] Again, the theory of the appellants for asking the court to adopt a different rule in this case, being in equity, is that the amount allowed is out of all proportion to the value of the land. That was urged in some of the English cases, and in each of the three principal cases in this state referred to above the amount recovered was far beyond the value of the land affected. But the recovery for the most part was not for the land, but for the value of the coal as a chattel. The amount of recovery in this case is large by reason of the unusual price of coal when it was taken. That could make no real difference, however, as by the rule adopted by the lower court the appellant company is only held for money belonging to the appellees, which was actually received by it. It is true that the higher the market value, the more there is to be returned, but whether small or large, it in justice and equity belongs to the owners of the land from which the coal was taken. Upon what principle, then, ought the court to change the rule for the measure of damages at the instance of the appellants? The company sold the appellees' coal, and actually got the money for it. Should a court of equity give a favorable hearing to a party who comes before it confessing that it took the plaintiffs' chattels, sold them for their market value (shown to have been $4.90 per ton, and not denied), and collected the money, but asks that it be relieved from paying any of it except 10 cents a ton, because that is all it was worth in its native bed? Assuming the very liberal allowance made by Judge Henderson for costs in severing and getting the coal to market, at the mouth of the mine, to be correct, namely $2.41, the appellant has or had in its treasury

$2.49 per ton profit, made on the sales of the appellees' coal, and yet asks the court to require the appellees to accept 10 cents a ton in full of all claims for the 4,508 tons and let it keep $2.39 per ton, or $10,774.12 profits made out of the coal which was admittedly unlawfully taken from the appellees by the appellants, although claimed to have been done in good faith. That does not seem to us to be equity, or to give the appellants any standing for relief in a court of equity, if any distinction could otherwise be made, because the parties are in a court of equity.

[8] No contest is made about the 912 tons taken under circumstances which excused the appellants, as held by the lower court, from paying more than 10 cents a ton, amounting to $91.20. The decree also allowed $1,000 damages to the remaining land. The rule for the latter is well settled in our decisions, and is not affected by the act of 1894. The only question that could possibly be raised is as to the amount, which seems to have been sufficiently proven in this case, and is much less than the appellees claimed. So the only actual loss that the appellant company has sustained is the cost of severance of the 4,508 tons which the lower court fixed at 63½ cents a ton, and in the aggregate is $2,862.58, and $1,000 to the remaining coal and land. Indeed in comparing the net results to the appellant company, if it had kept off the appellees' land, with what it is now held for, it would not be out of place to remember that, although the lower court only charged it with ten cents a ton for the 912 tons, it actually made a profit of $2.49 per ton on those 912 tons, equal to $2,270.88, thus leaving it a net profit of $2,179.68 on those tons. If that be deducted from the cost of severance of the 4,508 tons ($2,862.58), which we have said above is the net loss of the appellant company in the whole transaction, it in reality only loses $682.90, in addition to the $1,000 damages referred to. While in his application of the rule established by our decisions Judge Henderson did not charge the appellant company with that profit, it was undoubtedly made out of the appellees' coal. So although the decree is for a large sum of money, in reality nearly four-fifths of the portion of it allowed for coal negligently taken is to be paid with profits made out of appellees' coal, and if the profits made on the 912 tons be taken into consideration less than 5 per cent. of the amount allowed for coal negligently taken is in addition to the profits actually received by the appellant company. When those facts are considered, the supposed equities in favor of the appellant company seem to a great extent to disappear.

[9] We have not thought it necessary to discuss the authorities outside of this state, collected with the usual diligence of the attorneys for the appellants and presented, from their standpoint, with force and ability, because we are of the opinion that the decisions of this court are conclusive of most of the questions raised, and we cannot adopt the construction of the act of 1894 contended for. As late as 1909 this court, in Peters v. Tilghman, 111 Md. 227, 73 Atl. 726, applied the rule of the measure of damages laid down in the Barton Coal Company Case, and followed by others, to timber taken from another's lands. It would seem to be more important to have such a rule as to coal and other minerals as the owners cannot as well protect themselves against trespass, inasmuch as the minerals are underground. It is for the Legislature to determine the wisdom of such legislation as that of 1894; but, as it is contrary to a rule established after most thorough consideration, and is liable to encourage trespasses, if not properly guarded, it should not be extended beyond what was clearly the intention of the Legislature. We are satisfied, after a careful examination and consideration of the facts, the authorities and the act of 1894 (section 92, art. 75, Code) that the decree of the lower court should be affirmed.

Decree affirmed; the Mt. Savage George's Creek Coal Company to pay the costs.

FRANKO v. WILLIAM SCHOLLEHORN CO.
et al.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.
July 23, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §385(4) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—"Loss."

The word "loss," as used in Workmen's Compensation Act, pt. B, §§ 11, 12, as amended by Pub. Acts 1915, c. 288, providing for compensation in the case of certain named injuries resulting in the loss of a member or function, means deprivation; the compensation being to compensate employes for handicap of being without the lost member and not for impairment of earning power.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Loss.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §387—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Workmen's Compensation Act, pt. B, § 12, as amended by Pub. Acts 1915, c. 288, providing that compensation for named injuries shall be in "lieu of all other payments," refers to payments for the named injuries, and does not limit the award to compensation provided for the named injury.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §387—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—AMOUNT OF AWARD.

Where employe's finger was lacerated February 7th, totally incapacitating him from working until May 21st, when as a result of the injury two phalanges of the finger were amputated, the compensation awarded the employe for loss of the phalanges of the finger under Workmen's Compensation Act, pt. B, § 12, as amended by Pub. Acts 1915, c. 288, was not exclusive of compensation for total incapacity under section 11; the loss of the phalanges of the finger and the loss of the use of the finger being separate injuries for each of which compensation is awarded.

Case Reserved from Superior Court, New Haven County; William S. Case, Judge.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Mariano Franko against the William Schollhorn Company and another. Appeal by defendants from an award by the compensation commissioner of the Third district in favor of plaintiff, taken to the superior court for New Haven County and reserved for the advice of the Supreme Court of Errors upon all questions of law arising upon the record. Judgment advised dismissing appeal.

The claimant and respondent employer were subject to the provisions of part B, c. 138, of the Public Acts of 1913, as amended by chapter 288 of the Public Acts of 1915. The claimant on February 7, 1917, while in the employment of the respondent, suffered a laceration of the first finger of the right hand, which injury arose out of and in the course of his employment. The average weekly wage of the claimant, computed in accordance with the terms of the act, was $11. On March 13, 1917, there was approved a voluntary agreement to pay claimant on account of the said injury $5.50 per week beginning February 18th, and extending throughout the period of total incapacity. Compensation on account of said injury has been paid at the rate provided in this agreement for about 25½ weeks. Up to May 21st, the claimant was totally incapacitated as a result of this injury, and on said day on account of this injury it became necessary to amputate two phalanges of this finger. The claimant claimed: First, that he was totally incapacitated from February 7th until May 21st, and that during that time he was entitled to compensation under section 11 as amended, as "compensation for total incapacity." Second, that on May 21st two phalanges of the index finger were removed, and that from that date he was entitled to 25½ weeks additional compensation under section 12 as amended, as "compensation for partial incapacity." The respondent claimed that the compensation that could be awarded was that for 25½ weeks, on the ground that the compensation for the loss of the phalanges of the finger was exclusive of all other compensation. The commissioner sustained claimant's claim 2 and also 1 as to the period from February 18th, and overruled respondent's claim. The commissioner awarded the claimant as compensation on account of said injury $5.50 a week from February 18 to May 21, 1917, for total incapacity, and at a like rate for the loss of the two phalanges of the index finger beginning May 21st and extending for a period of 25½ weeks after making due allowance for payments heretofore made.

Eugene F. Farley and H. Frederick Day, both of New Haven, for plaintiff. Philip Pond, of New Haven, for defendants.

WHEELER, J. (after stating the facts as above). The question for decision is one of statutory construction. Compensation acts of other states differ as a rule from our act in those provisions which affect the question at issue. Comparison of these with those of our act will not aid us in the interpretation of our act, and the decisions under these acts will be of little help. The acts of some states contain no similar provisions; the acts of other states, such as Massachusetts and New Jersey, are so specific as to determine the point, while in many other states the question has not been the subject of decision.

The commissioner in his memorandum gives an interesting résumé of the decisions of the courts and the rulings of the commissioners in other jurisdictions. From these it appears that, in a majority of the jurisdictions where this question can arise, their compensation acts award compensation in cases such as this for the total incapacity suffered as well as for the loss of a member. New York and Michigan appear to hold the compensation awarded under their act is for disability, not for loss or impairment of earning power. Our own act, as we shall point out, is based upon a different theory. A review of these acts, decisions, and rulings would furnish little aid in solving our problem, nor is it necessary. As we read our act, sections 11 and 12, which alone concern this question, are reasonably clear.

Our act in its original form and in its amended forms of 1915 and 1917 (Pub. Acts 1917C, 368) provides compensation for both total and partial incapacity resulting from injuries which do not prove fatal. Section 11 relates to total incapacity, and provides that the loss of sight, the loss or paralysis of certain physical members, and incurable imbecility or insanity, resulting from the accident, shall be "considered as causing total incapacity." And these and all other injuries resulting in total incapacity to work shall be paid weekly during such incapacity compensation equal to half of his average weekly earnings at the time of the injury with a maximum and minimum limitation of the period of compensation. The obvious theory of this section is that the compensation is dependent upon the loss or impairment of earning power and is to be borne by the employer and employé. The total incapacity may be permanent or temporary, but while it lasts the suffering employé is entitled to compensation for the prescribed period and upon the named scale.

Section 12 provides that, in cases of injury resulting in partial incapacity, there shall be paid the injured employé a weekly compensation during such incapacity equal to half the difference between the average weekly earnings before the injury and the amount he is able to earn thereafter with a maximum and minimum limitation of compensation and a limitation of the period of compensation. The theory of this section is the same as that of section 11, that the compensation is based upon loss of earning power, and that this loss is to be shared by employer and employé. If these were the only injuries resulting in partial incapacity, it must follow that all such were included in its terms, and that permanent as well as temporary partial incapacity were included. Following this designation in this section is the provision that in certain specified injuries the compensation for the loss, "in lieu of all other payments," shall be half of the average weekly earnings of the injured employé prior to such injury for the term specified in each described injury, but in no case more than $10 nor less than $5 weekly. There is no other section of the act which relates to injuries resulting in partial incapacity. The specific instances in which the compensation is definitely fixed are instances falling under the head of partial incapacity. Both the terms and context indicate that the entire section relates to instances of injuries resulting in partial incapacity.

We cannot agree with the appellant that since the loss from February 18th to May 21st was of the use of the two phalanges, and from May 21st of the loss of the two phalanges, the injury was a single one. These two sections provide for compensation in the case of certain named injuries resulting in the loss of a member or function.

[1] The word "loss" is used in the sense of deprivation. It designates the handicap under which the employé will suffer in the future. Compensation is based upon this loss. It is not measured, as are the other injuries resulting in partial incapacity, by impairment of earning power. Each class of injuries results in partial incapacity, but the compensation for each is based upon a different theory. To support the respondent's claim, "loss" in some cases must be construed to mean disability, and in other cases disability plus deprivation. These two classes are distinct classes of partial incapacity. There is no reason why an injury under each class should not be compensated, and, if the injuries in question be as the respondent insists, the loss of the use of the two phalanges and the loss of the two phalanges, these are two independent injuries for each of which compensation is provided measured as to amount and duration. The loss of two phalanges carries a named compensation, and the loss of the use of two phalanges also carries a similar compensation. There is nothing in the act which prevents compensation for any number of the several injuries specifically provided for. Payment for one does not pay for any but the one injury. And if there has been a partial incapacity followed by the loss of a member, there is nothing in the act which forbids the award of compensation for each. And whether the loss of the member follows an injury to the member resulting in a loss of its use, or follows an injury to some other member, is quite immaterial; the injuries are equally distinct.

[2] The argument of the respondent relies, to a large extent, upon that part of section 11 which provides that the compensation for the named injuries shall be "in lieu of all other payments." This refers to payments for the named injuries. As to these the compensation designated is exclusive. But this does not limit the award to any one of the compensations provided for the named injuries; nor does it purport to be in lieu of payments made for injuries resulting in partial incapacity not among these named injuries. And since these are a distinct class of injuries resulting in partial incapacity, the compensation provided for these specific injuries cannot and does not cover them. It is exclusive of any other payment by way of compensation for the injuries specifically designated.

The commissioner has stated correctly, we think, the legislative purpose in fixing a definite compensation in these cases as an attempt to avoid unnecessary questions and hearings for the trier which would otherwise have resulted. If we look at the practical results of adherence to the respondent's interpretation of section 11, we shall see that its enforcement would result in the gravest injustice to the employé. The loss of some member may cause a total incapacity of far less duration than the period of compensation given by the statute. In a few weeks he will be ready for work, but his handicap is constant and for life. The handicap determines the loss. But when the loss of the member is preceded by a long incapacity while efforts are made to heal and cure the injury, the injured employé has suffered far more than from the mere loss of the member.

[3] Compensation for the loss of the member will not compensate him for the period of incapacity preceding the loss of the member. The just rule of compensation will give compensation for the period of total incapacity as well as for the loss of the member. Our act is uniformly fair in its theory of compensation. We cannot assume a legislative intent in these instances of partial incapacity at variance with this theory. Under the respondent's theory, if the payments for the total incapacity preceding the loss of the member exceeded that provided for the loss of the member, the employé must return the excess and go without compensation for the larger part of his loss. We do not need to multiply these instances. If the theory of these sections of our act be disability, as the respondent insists, it is impossible to justify awards for specific injury, which in many cases will be far less than the incapacity preceding the loss of a member. If the theory of compensation for the loss of a member is because of the handicap resulting from the loss, it is at once logical and understandable and in no wise conflicts with the award of compensation for incapacity antedating this loss.

Judgment advised, in accordance with foregoing opinion, dismissing the appeal. In this opinion the other Judges concurred.

OLMSTEAD v. LAMPHIER et al.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.
July 23, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §387—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Under the Workmen's Compensation Act, one receiving a distinct injury to the shoulder resulting in total incapacity, and in the same accident losing a leg resulting in partial incapacity, the injured employé was entitled to compensation for each injury; the award for the total incapacity to precede in payment that for the partial incapacity.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §393½—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—"SURGICAL AID."

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 7, as amended by Pub. Acts 1917, c. 368, requiring employer to furnish injured employés such medical and surgical aid as the physician shall deem reasonable and necessary, employés under the term "surgical aid" are entitled to splints, crutches, artificial legs, artificial eyes, etc.

Prentice, C. J., dissenting.

Case Reserved from Superior Court, Litchfield County; Joel H. Reed, Judge.

Proceedings by Ralph Olmstead against E. P. Lamphier and others, under the Workmen's Compensation Act (Pub. Acts 1913, c. 138), to obtain compensation for personal injury. There was an award by the Compensation Commissioner, and the defendant named appeals. Reserved by the superior court upon an agreed statement of facts for the advice of this court. Judgment advised dismissing appeal.

Harold J. Quinlan, of Hartford, for appellant. Wilson H. Pierce, of Waterbury, for appellee.

WHEELER, J. On September 26, 1916, the claimant suffered the injuries described below by being thrown from a horse. His left leg was so lacerated that it had to be amputated above the knee. His shoulder was so injured as to cause a partial incapacity equal to one-half total incapacity from the date of the injury to the time of the hearing, May 9, 1917, and it continued thereafter. The commissioner included in his award compensation at the rate of $7.50 a week for 182 weeks, credit to be taken for payments made, including a sum advanced for an artificial leg. Also, $3.75 a week for the partial incapacity resulting from an injury to the shoulder, to continue during such incapacity, not to exceed the time provided by law. Also, $115, being the price of an artificial leg. The respondent appealed from so much of the award as gave compensation for the partial incapacity to the shoulder and that for the price of an artificial leg.

The questions submitted on the reservation were the following: (1) Whether or not the Workmen's Compensation Act of the state of Connecticut imposes a legal duty upon the appellant to purchase for the appellee an artificial leg in accordance with the provisions of section 7B of that act, as amended in 1917, as a part of the surgical service and aid therein provided for. (2) Whether or not, under the provisions of said act, upon the foregoing facts, the appellant, respondent, is legally obliged to pay to appellee, claimant, compensation for partial incapacity arising from the injury to claimant's (appellee's) shoulder, in addition to the specific indemnity for the loss of the appellee's leg.

[1] In Franko v. Schollhorn Co., 104 Atl. 485, just decided, we construed section 11 of our act as providing one form of compensation during total incapacity and another for the permanent loss of a member of the body. The injury to the shoulder was a distinct injury, resulting in total incapacity; the loss of the leg was also a distinct injury, resulting in partial incapacity. For each injury, under our construction of this section, the injured employé was entitled to compensation. The fact that each injury resulted from one accident did not make of these a single injury. Nor did the act intend that compensation for the loss of a member should be in lieu of all compensation for other injuries resulting from one accident. The superior court in New Haven county, in Foley v. Demarest & Company, pointed out with great force that a contrary construction, carried to its logical conclusion, might limit the compensation in a case of total incapacity to practically nothing. For example: An injury attended with blood poisoning might incapacitate for an entire year, and the injured person would be entitled to compensation for that period, provided no amputation were necessary; but, if such injury was attended with the loss of a small toe of the phalanx of the fourth finger, compensation would be limited to from six to thirteen weeks. Our act does not permit double compensation, and hence the trial court was correct in making these awards consecutive; the award for the total incapacity to precede in payment that for the partial incapacity.

[2] The agreed facts on the reservation fall far short of those found by the commissioner. Who furnished the surgeon, or, if the employer, whether he found the artificial leg "reasonable or necessary," does not appear in the agreed facts. The commissioner found as a fact, upon evidence, that "surgical aid" included an artificial leg. There is no such finding in the agreed facts. We are left with the bald question whether surgical aid or service includes the furnishing of an artificial leg.

There is no specific provision for the furnishing of medicines or any material or apparatus required by the physician. Yet it is clear that all these are included in the term "medical aid or service." It must also be clear that all necessary bandages, materials, splints, and apparatus required by the surgeon in effecting cure are included under the term "surgical aid or service." The fact is that section 7, as amended by chapter 368 of the Public Acts of 1917, is general in its terms and purposely so. In the New York act (Consol. Laws, c. 87), there is a specification of various things to be furnished. We adopted a different course, and in our act used general terms intending, as we think, to include all things which might reasonably fall within its provisions. The employer is required to furnish the employé a physician, and, in addition, "such medical and surgical aid or hospital service as such physician shall deem reasonable or necessary." This language is broad and general. "Medical aid" is relief pertaining to the science of medicine. And "surgical aid" is relief pertaining to surgery or used in surgery. Webster's New International Dictionary. The term in its ordinary significance is not limited to the personal service of the surgeon, but includes all the means and instrumentalities used in surgery which will help effect a cure. Splints and crutches and apparatus for holding the limb manifestly are brought to the patient by the surgeon, adjusted by him, and usually paid for directly by the patient. It is part of the duty of the surgeon to prepare the stump of arm or leg for the artificial leg or arm. It is a part of his duty to adjust it. Why give the patient splints to hold the bones in place or crutches with which to walk, and regard these as used in surgery? Why supply a glass eye? Because it is the everyday duty of the surgeon to order these things for his patient, and they are included as of course under "surgical aid." There is no difference in principle between supplying these and the artificial limb. That pertains to surgery and is used in surgery. The stump must be prepared by the surgeon to receive the artificial limb, and that must be adjusted to the stump by the surgeon. The only difference between the crutch and the artificial limb is the latter costs more than the former.

Our act contemplates the furnishing of all the medical and surgical aid that is reasonable and necessary. The purpose of this provision is to restore the injured employé to a place in our industrial life as soon as possible by the use of all medical and surgical aid and hospital service which the ordinary usages of the modern science of medicine and surgery furnish. Humanity and economic necessity in this instance are in harmony in working for the accomplishment of the individual and of the public welfare. "Surgical aid" is a term of technical significance and has an established meaning in standard works on surgery. The duty of the surgeon does not end with the healing of the stump. "As soon as all sensitiveness has left the end of the bone, an artificial limb should be fitted and the patient urged to make efforts to use the extremity." Keen's Surgery, vol. 5, p. 951. The duty of the surgeon continues until the artificial limb is adjusted and the patient has learned how, with the help of the surgeon, to use it properly. It would not be questioned that the entire bill of the surgeon for his services would fall under the head "Surgical Aid." It would be difficult to justify this expenditure, as well as that for bandages or ointments or other material used by the surgeon in his treatment of the patient, and not make a like expenditure for the artificial leg in connection with which these things were used.

The commissioner notes that, as a rule, insurers and insurance companies furnish under compensation acts artificial teeth, eyes, and limbs when required. Undoubtedly, the common understanding revolted at the failure to provide the only means by which the injured employé could be restored to the ranks of industry; and perhaps those in interest also had in mind the small cost of an artificial limb and the fact that the compensation awarded by our act was much less than in many other jurisdictions—a fact due in some measure to the complete aid which the act gives to the cure of the injured.

Judgment is advised, in accordance with the foregoing opinion, dismissing the appeal. In this opinion the other Judges concurred, except PRENTICE, C. J., who dissented as to the artificial leg.

PRENTICE, C. J. (dissenting). I am unable to concur in that portion of the majority opinion which approves of the commissioner's allowance for an artificial leg as one justified by the provision of the statute requiring an employer to furnish an injured employé such surgical aid as the attending physician or surgeon shall deem reasonable. To my thinking the provision of artificial limbs for the improvement of physical efficiency following such repair of the consequences of injuries received as the circumstances will permit lies outside the sphere of the surgeon's professional activities as that sphere is commonly understood and established by actual practice. Such provision, as I understand it, partakes of the character of mechanical rather than surgical aid. I am further of the opinion that if it was the legislative intent to impose the burden of supplying such appliances upon the employer, more appropriate and certain language to that end would have been employed and some attempt made to assure the use of the money exacted of the employer for the purpose intended and to prevent its diversion to other purposes or squandered as the employé may prefer.

KRAMER v. SARGENT & CO.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut. July 23, 1918.)

MASTER AND SERVANT — §387 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—AMOUNT OF AWARD—LOSS OF PHALANX OF FINGER.

Where employé's finger was injured resulting in amputation of phalanx on day of injury, employé was not entitled to an award for total incapacity on account of the injury in addition to compensation for the loss of the phalanx; there being but one injury, inasmuch as incapacity immediately followed and resulted from the loss of the phalanx, and compensation therefor under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 12, being "in lieu of all other payments" for such injury.

Case Reserved from Superior Court, New Haven County; Edwin B. Gager, Judge.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Herman Kramer against Sargent & Co. Appeal by the defendant from a finding and award of the compensation commissioner of the Third district in favor of the plaintiff, taken to and reserved by the superior court for advice of the Supreme Court of Errors. Judgment advised sustaining the appeal.

Frederick H. Wiggin, of New Haven, for defendant.

WHEELER, J. The claimant, on December 4, 1917, suffered an injury to the terminal phalanx of the index finger of his left hand which resulted on the same day in the loss of this phalanx by amputation and in a total incapacity for all labor from the date of injury to the date of hearing, February 8, 1918, which total incapacity will continue for a period of undetermined extent. The claimant claimed one award for the loss of the phalanx and another award for the total incapacity resulting from such loss. The parties made a voluntary agreement, duly approved by the commissioner, for the payment of the medical, surgical, and hospital expenses and for the loss of the phalanx, and left open for future determination any question as to total incapacity on account of this injury. The commissioner confirmed the voluntary agreement and also made an award for the total incapacity on account of this injury.

The claimed errors of the commissioner are summed up by the respondent in one sentence:

"The commissioner erred in ruling, finding, and deciding that compensation for the loss of the phalanx was not exclusive of compensation for total incapacity which occurred after said loss and grew out of the injury to the phalanx."

In Franko v. Schollhorn Co., 104 Atl 485, just decided, there was a total incapacity preceding the loss and resulting from an injury and continuing during the period of the attempt to cure the injury to the finger. In Olmstead v. Lamphier, 104 Atl 488, just decided, the loss of the leg and the total incapacity resulting from the injury to the shoulder were independent injuries arising out of the one accident. In this case there is one injury and the incapacity follows immediately the loss of the phalanx and results from it. We reached the conclusion in Franko v. Schollhorn Co., supra, that under our act (Laws 1913, c. 138) there may be a total incapacity and a partial incapacity growing out of the same injury for each of which compensation may be awarded. But such an award is not, as we think, contemplated by our act in the case of a loss of a member.

All of the specified injuries in section 12, for which a specially named award is made, will ordinarily involve a period of incapacity of varying duration. And this is the reason the rate of the award in these cases is made the same as in the cases of total incapacity under section 11. The award was made larger because of the extent of the injury. In section 12, the rate of compensation for cases of partial incapacity resulting from injuries not specifically described is "half the difference between his average weekly earnings before the injury and the amount he is able to earn thereafter"; while, in the cases of partial incapacity resulting from injuries specifically described, the rate of compensation is half of the average weekly earnings of the injured employé. This increased scale of compensation was no doubt intended to cover the loss of the member and the handicap of the future through this loss, but it was also intended to cover all of the injuries resulting from the loss of the member. This compensation is made "in lieu of all other payments"; that is, it is exclusive of all other payments for this particular injury which is the loss of the member. This language is used in its ordinary significance. This is made clear by the amendment of section 12 in 1917 (Laws 1917, c. 363), by permitting the commissioner to award a sum proportionate to the amount set forth for total loss in lieu of all other compensation, thus carrying out the idea of the same language found in the section before amendment. The schedules of rates in the cases of the specified injuries described in section 12 are based upon a system of compensation graded to the injury. The employé knows definitely what compensation follows each described injury, and the employer knows the measure of his liability; and this appears to have been precisely the legislative intent.

Judgment advised sustaining the appeal. In this opinion the other Judges concurred.

ROBINSON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.
July 23, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §405(4) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—EVIDENCE.

Finding in proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act that injured employé, a highway foreman, was crossing the road at the time of the accident to engage in a conversation with a friend held warranted by evidence.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §403—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In proceeding under Workmen's Compensation Act, burden of proof is on the claimant to show that injury arose out of and in the course of the employment.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §375(1) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—"ARISING OUT OF AND IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT."

Where foreman of a repair gang on a much-traveled highway, whose work did not require his uninterrupted attention, was injured while crossing the road to speak to a friend who had driven up, the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment, within Workmen's Compensation Act.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; William S. Case, Judge.

Proceeding by Julia A. Robinson under the Workmen's Compensation Act, to obtain compensation for the death of her son, Alderbert Robinson, deceased, opposed by the State of Connecticut. The compensation commissioner disallowed the claim, and the superior court confirmed the award, and the claimant appeals. Error and cause remanded.

This is a proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act (Pub. Acts 1913, c. 133) by Julia A. Robinson, mother and dependent of Alderbert Robinson, deceased, against the highway department of the state. Robinson was an assistant foreman of the state highway department, and at the time of the injury which caused his death was employed as working foreman of a gang of workmen engaged in repairing the state highway between North Haven and Wallingford, by patching the same with broken stone and oil. He was at work on the easterly side of the middle of the roadway behind a dumpcart, which obstructed to some extent the view of travelers approaching from the north. While so engaged one Palmer drove an automobile delivery wagon in a southerly direction past the place where Robinson was at work, and waved his hand to him, calling "Hello, Dell." Palmer was an old friend of Robinson, knew that he was working somewhere along the road, and intended to have a talk with him, if opportunity occurred. For this purpose Palmer stopped his car on the extreme westerly edge of the road, looked back for an instant, and saw that Robinson was walking diagonally across the road toward him, moving quickly, with his head down. While so crossing the road Robinson was struck and killed by a touring car driven southerly along the highway. The commissioner dismissed the claim on the ground that the injury did not arise out of and in the course of Robinson's employment, and the superior court on appeal ratified and confirmed the commissioner's award. This appeal assigns as error the refusal of the superior court to correct the findings of the commissioner in certain respects, and that the court erred in confirming the award of the commissioner on the facts found.

Harrison Hewitt and Charles E. Clark, both of New Haven, for appellant. George E. Hinman, Atty. Gen., and Jacob P. Goodhart, of New Haven, for the State.

BEACH, J. [1] It is not necessary to discuss the motion to correct the commissioner's findings any further than to say that paragraph 12, which finds that Robinson's object in crossing the road was to converse with Palmer, is an inference of fact which is supported by the evidence. Paragraph 14 is a conclusion of law which is decisive of the case, and the motion to correct this paragraph attempts to raise the same questions of law which are raised by the first, second, and fifth assignments of error, namely, whether the court erred in holding that upon the facts found Robinson's injury did not arise in the course of his employment. Robinson was employed to supervise and inspect the work done by the rest of the gang, and also to assist in the work. If his injury arose out of and in the course of either branch of his work his dependent is entitled to compensation. There is nothing in the finding to indicate how long Robinson intended to talk with Palmer. We have only the bare fact that he started to cross the road, and the fair inference from the surrounding circumstances that his object was to engage in conversation with Palmer for some length of time, however short. The finding that Robinson also performed such physical labor on the road as was in his judgment necessary indicates that the due performance of his supervisory work did not require his continuous presence at any particular place on the roadway, and did not require his uninterrupted attention.

[2] The burden of proof was, of course, on the claimant to show that Robinson's injury arose out of and in the course of his employment. That it arose out of his employment is not denied; and in this respect the case at bar differs from Jacquemin v. Turner & Seymour Co., 92 Conn. 382, 103 Atl. 115, and from all the other cases cited, in which the injury did not arise from a risk incidental to the performance of the contract of employment.

The injury also happened at a place where Robinson might reasonably be, consistently with the due performance of his supervisory duties, and in this respect the case at bar differs from O'Toole's Case, 229 Mass. 165, 118 N. E. 303, and from Reed v. Great Western Ry. Co., L. R. App. Cas. 81, and from the numerous other cases where the injured employé was confined by the nature of his employment to some particular place or machine and had left that place or machine at the time of the injury.

Finally, Robinson's employment as foreman did not require his uninterrupted attention. No doubt he was expected to work on the road in the larger intervals of his supervisory employment, but he was necessarily a foreman at all times, and his conduct must be measured accordingly.

[3] Upon the findings of the commissioner the case turns on the question whether one employed as foreman of a repair gang on a much-traveled state highway does or does not step outside of his employment as matter of law, because he starts to cross the road, in response to a friendly salutation, for the purpose of conversation, when there is no evidence as to how long he intended to talk, and no evidence that his starting to cross the road did interfere, or that his intended conversation would have interfered, with the due performance of his work as foreman. We think this question must be answered in the negative.

There is error, and the case is remanded, with direction to set aside the judgment and to recommit the cause to the commissioner for an award in favor of the claimant. The other Judges concurred.

In re SMITH'S ESTATE (No. 1.)

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 25, 1918.)

1. TAXATION \S 895(1)—COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—DUTIES OF APPRAISER.

Under Collateral Inheritance Tax Acts, the appraiser, in determining value of realty, may consider the price which the property would bring at private as well as at public sale.

2. TAXATION \S 900(5)—COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—REVIEW.

Findings of fact by the orphans' court on appeal from a collateral inheritance tax appraisement will not be disturbed, in absence of clear error.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Delaware County.

In the matter of the estate of Margaretta Smith, deceased. On appeal from a collateral inheritance tax appraisement. Appraisement reduced, and Benjamin H. Smith, in his own right and as administrator of the estate, appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

Lewis Lawrence Smith, of Philadelphia, for appellant. J. C. Taylor, of Chester, and Francis Shunk Brown, Atty. Gen., and William M. Hargest, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellee.

FRAZER, J. Margaretta Smith died in 1915, intestate, survived only by collateral heirs. She left considerable personal property and also real estate consisting of undivided interests in farm lands. An appraiser was appointed, and the real estate appraised at $75,969.48. Benjamin H. Smith, as executor, and also as an heir of decedent, appealed to the orphans' court, alleging the appraisement was excessive, and considerably beyond the assessed valuation of decedent's interests in the several properties for general taxation.

After hearing evidence the orphans' court reduced the appraisement to $52,750, basing this valuation upon what it considered a fair and conscionable value of what the properties were actually worth, and in so doing took into consideration testimony as to both private and public sale values, allowing a specific reduction for the diminished value of the interests of decedent by reason of the fact of there being but fractional shares of the entire property, which would necessitate the expense and trouble incident to partition proceedings. Notwithstanding the reduction Smith was not satisfied, and appealed from the court's decree, and now contends the court erred in considering the private sale value of decedent's interest, and should have limited the appraisement to what the properties would sell for at public sale, thus adopting the standard applied in assessing real estate for general taxation.

[1] The act of April 22, 1905, P. L. 258, amending section 1 of the act of May 6, 1887, P. L. 79, relating to the assessment and collection of collateral inheritance taxes, imposed upon all estates a fixed tax on every hundred dollars "of the clear value of such estate or estates." Section 12 of the act of 1887 requires the register of wills to appoint an appraiser whose duty it shall be "to make a fair and conscionable appraisement of such estates." The acts contain no express provision as to the basis to be adopted for determining the "clear value" or as to the manner to be pursued by the appraiser in arriving at the sum he considers to be a fair and conscionable valuation. Plaintiff argues the appraiser should be permitted to consider only market value as represented by what the properties would bring at public sale after due notice, and that the court erred in considering testimony of the price, in the opinion of witnesses, the respective interests of decedent would bring at public sale. For instance, several of the experts called to testify to the worth of the properties stated the value at private sale was considerably higher than at public sale, while others thought there was little difference in the price obtainable by either method of disposal. With respect to the decrease in value because the interests of decedent were but a fractional part of the whole, one witness placed such decrease as high as two-thirds of the estimated market value, another one-half, another estimated the depreciation at 10 per cent. and another was of opinion no difference would result in the price realized. The court below considered all the testimony; took into consideration the fact that the sale was only a fractional interest in the properties in question, and that, consequently, an additional outlay must necessarily be incurred in reducing the interest to cash, such as the time and expense of partition proceedings, as well as disinclination of purchasers to bid on property likely to subject them to such charge and annoyance, and, because of the interest being fractional, allowed a deduction of 25 per cent. from the valuation, based upon the value of the properties as a whole.

[2] While the price property would bring at public sale is a proper criterion of value, it does not necessarily follow that such standard is the only evidence to be considered in determining the "clear value" for the purpose of assessment of collateral inheritance tax, nor is the appraiser prevented from taking into consideration other evidence tending to legitimately affect the value of the land. The act requires the "value" to be ascertained, not necessarily the public sale value, and whatever amount is likely to be obtained at either public or private sale is certainly some evidence affecting its value. If, for any reason, a private sale would result in a higher sum being realized than a public sale, such evidence may legitimately be considered by the appraiser. The allowance of 25 per cent. reduction by the court below for the reason decedent's interest in the property was a fractional one does not fix an arbitrary standard binding upon appraisers in all cases, but is merely a finding of fact based upon the testimony before the court in this case, and is subject to the rule that such finding, when supported by the evidence, will not be disturbed in the absence of clear error. Andrews' Estate, 251 Pa. 320, 96 Atl. 747.

On the whole, the conclusion reached by the court below seems to be just and equitable and based upon proper principles, and the decree is affirmed.

Appeal of COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 25, 1918.)

EVIDENCE \S 543(3) — EXPERTS — VALUE OF REAL ESTATE.

Experts may testify as to the value of fractional parts of real estate, though they did not know of sales of such fractional parts.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Delaware County.

In the matter of the estate of Margaretta Smith, deceased. Appeal from an appraisalment of the collateral inheritance tax. Appraisalment reduced, and the Commonwealth appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

J. C. Taylor, of Chester, and Francis Shunk Brown, Atty. Gen., and William M. Hargest, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth. Lewis Lawrence Smith, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. The commonwealth appeals from the decree of the court below discussed in the preceding opinion, and complains of the act of the court in reducing the value fixed by the appraiser on decedent's real estate. What was said in the preceding opinion with respect to the principles governing the determination of the question of values, and to the conclusiveness of the findings of the court below are equally applicable here. The objection to the qualification of two witnesses who were without experience in the sale of undivided interests in realty cannot be sustained. The witnesses in question were admittedly competent as experts on real estate values as a whole, and their opinions as to the value of fractional parts were competent, even though they had not made and did not know of such sales. Lewis v. Springfield Water Co., 176 Pa. 237, 35 Atl. 187; White v. Western Allegheny R. R. Co., 222 Pa. 584, 71 Atl. 1061. The fact of their not having previously bought or sold undivided interests in land went to their credibility, and was for the court below. As a matter of fact, the court gave no consideration to the testimony of these witnesses on the question of valuation of fractional interests, and, if there was error in the admission of the testimony, it did no harm.

A serious question arises as to the right of the commonwealth to appeal from the decision of the orphans' court under section 12 of the act of May 6, 1887, P. L. 79, 82, which provides that:

"Any person or persons, not satisfied with said appraisalment, shall have the right to appeal, within thirty days, to the orphans' court of the proper county or city on paying or giving security to pay all costs, together with whatever tax shall be fixed by said court; and, upon such appeal, said courts shall have jurisdiction to determine all questions of valuation and of the liability of the appraised estate for such tax, subject to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court as in other cases."

As there is no merit in the appeal, we deem a discussion and decision of this question unnecessary.

The appeal is dismissed.

COMMONWEALTH ex rel. LAFEAN, Com'r of Banking, v. SNYDER, Auditor
General et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 8, 1918.)

1. MANDAMUS \S 146—SALARY OF PUBLIC OFFICIAL—REFUSAL OF PAYMENT.

Under Act June 8, 1893 (P. L. 346) \S 4, mandamus is properly brought in the name of the commonwealth on relation of a banking commissioner against the auditor general and state treasurer to compel payment of the commissioner's salary.

2. MANDAMUS \S 77(1)—TITLE TO PUBLIC OFFICE—PAYMENT OF SALARY.

Title to public office can be inquired into in mandamus, where merely question of salary is involved which depends upon claimant's right to hold office.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW \S 14—CONSTRUCTION OF PROVISIONS.

Provisions of the Constitution are to be construed in the ordinary sense of the language used, and the consideration of the circumstances attending its formation, so as to give effect to the popular will.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW \S 73—POWERS OF COURT—INSTRUCTION OF GOVERNOR.

A court has no right to instruct the Governor as to matters involving his duties only and not his power.

5. STATES \S 46—POWERS OF GOVERNOR—REJECTION OF APPOINTMENT—REAPPOINTMENT OF REJECTED NOMINEE.

Where the Senate has rejected a nomination by the Governor to an office, he may, under Const. art. 2, \S 8, after adjournment of the Senate, appoint the rejected nominee until the end of the next session of the Senate, but not for the full or unexpired term without constitutional consent of the Senate.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 752—REVIEW—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

A question not raised in the assignments of error cannot be considered, though it appears in the statement of the questions involved.

Brown, C. J., and Potter and Moschzisker, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Dauphin County.

Petition by the Commonwealth, on relation of Daniel F. Lafean, Commissioner of Banking, against Charles A. Snyder, Auditor General, and others, for a writ of mandamus. Writ granted, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MES-TREZAT, POTTER, STEWART, MOSCH-
ZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Hampton L. Carson and Harry S. McDevitt, both of Philadelphia, C. P. Rogers, Jr., of Harrisburg, and Gabriel H. Moyer, of Palmyra, for appellants. Francis Shunk Brown, Atty. Gen., and Wm. H. Hargest and Wm. H. Keller, Deputy Attys. Gen., for appellee.

FRAZER, J. On April 24, 1917, Daniel F. Lafean, the relator, was appointed commissioner of banking to fill a vacancy occurring during a session of the state Senate, and subsequently the Governor forwarded the nomination for the regular term. The Senate rejected the nomination, and shortly after its adjournment the Governor reappointed him to fill the vacancy and to serve until the end of the next session of the Senate. The appointee entered upon the duties of his office, and subsequently filed with the auditor general a requisition for salary, which the latter refused to honor on the ground that claimant did not legally hold office. Lafean thereupon filed a petition for a mandamus against the auditor general and state treasurer to compel them to approve and pay the requisition for salary due him. An alternative writ was issued, and, upon argument, judgment was entered against defendants and peremptory writ awarded, from which defendants appealed.

Before entering into a discussion of the principal question in the case, to wit, the right of the Governor to appoint to fill a vacancy one whom the Senate has rejected for appointment for the regular term, we will consider and dispose of the questions of practice and procedure raised by appellants.

[1] The first assignment of error is to the conclusion of the court below that the commonwealth is a proper party plaintiff. Counsel for appellants have furnished no argument in support of this assignment, and apparently have little faith in the merits of their contention. The Mandamus Act of June 8, 1893 (P. L. 346) \S 4, provides:

"When the writ is sought to procure the enforcement of a public duty, the proceeding shall be prosecuted in the name of the commonwealth on the relation of the Attorney General: Provided, however, that said proceeding in proper cases shall be on the relation of the district attorney of the proper county: Provided further, that when said proceeding is sought to enforce a duty affecting a particular public interest of the state, it shall be on the relation of the officer intrusted with the management of such interest. In all other cases the party procuring the alternative writ shall be plaintiff, the party to whom said writ is directed shall be defendant."

There can be no doubt that the present proceeding is brought to enforce a public duty and also one affecting a public interest, namely, the banking department of the commonwealth, and therefore is properly brought in the name of the commonwealth on the relation of the commissioner of banking. While the relator has also a private interest in his salary, yet the payment of his compensation, as well as the payment of other expenses of his office, is a necessary incident to the administration of the affairs of the department, and, being paid out of public funds, is a matter of public concern; consequently, the duty of the officials having charge of such payment is a public duty. The case of Commonwealth ex rel. v. Mathues, 210 Pa. 372, 59 Atl. 961, a proceeding in the name of the commonwealth to compel the state treasurer to pay the salaries of certain common pleas and orphans' court judges, would seem to conclusively settle this question against appellants.

[2, 3] Appellants also contend relator's title to office can be inquired into in this proceeding. The conclusion of the court below to the effect that this case is an exception to the general rule, that the title to office cannot be determined in mandamus proceedings for the reason that there are no conflicting claimants to the office, but merely a question of right to salary, which in turn depends upon whether claimant properly holds office, was in accord with appellants' contention; therefore, a discussion of the question is unnecessary. Furthermore, the question is not raised in the assignments of error, and for that reason has no place in the statement of the questions involved. The second assignment complains of the refusal of the court below to sustain the objection that there was an adequate remedy at law. This assignment is not pressed in the argument, nor is the question included in the statement of questions involved. Its consideration, therefore, is unnecessary.

The main question in the case is whether the Governor had the power to appoint relative to fill the vacancy which existed after the Senate had rejected his nomination for the regular term. Section 2 of the act of February 11, 1895 (P. L. 4) provides:

"The chief officer of the banking department shall be denominated the commissioner of banking. He shall be appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold his office for the term of four years and until his successor is duly qualified."

Article 4, § 8, of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, provides that the Governor "shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of two-thirds of all the members of the Senate, appoint . . . such . . . officers of the commonwealth as he is or may be authorized by the Constitution or law, to appoint; he shall have power to fill all vacancies that may happen, in offices to which he may appoint, during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session; . . . if the vacancy shall happen during the session of the Senate, the Governor shall nominate to the Senate, before their final adjournment, a proper person to fill said vacancy." It thus appears the Governor is authorized to fill a vacancy temporarily until the end of the next session of the Senate, but not for a full or unexpired term without the advice and consent of the Senate. Appellants do not contend that the vacancy in question was one that had not "happened" during the recess of the Senate, though it in fact arose while the Senate was in session, but base their argument squarely on the contention that the Governor could not fill the vacancy, however or whenever arising, by appointing one whom the Senate had previously rejected for that office.

The constitutional provision places no express limitation upon the choice of the Governor in appointing to fill vacancies. He is accordingly the sole judge of the qualifications of the appointee, unless an implied restriction is placed upon this power by reason of the grant of power to the Senate to reject an appointee to fill a regular or unexpired term. Did the people, in adopting the constitutional provision in question, place an implied limitation upon the power of the Governor to fill vacancies by reason of also having provided that appointments for regular terms of service, or for unexpired terms, should require the approval of the Senate? Or, to state the question in a different form, does it follow that the people, in requiring the consent of the Senate to appointments for regular or unexpired terms of service, intended that a rejection by the Senate of an appointee necessarily eliminated him from the list of possible appointments for filling the temporary vacancy created by such rejection without express words to that effect? If this question be answered in the affirmative it is pertinent to inquire, How long must the disqualification of the rejected person continue? Is it for the succeeding vacancy only, or does it disqualify him and consequently limit the power of the Governor for all time? The existence of these further questions which would follow a construction in favor of appellants' contention, and the failure of the Constitution to provide an answer to them, must necessarily have a bearing on the interpretation of the intent of the people as indicated in the language of the provision in question.

[3] A constitution is to be construed in the popular and ordinary sense of the language used, and in the light of the circumstances attending its formation, so as to give effect to the intent of the framers and of the people in adopting it, and also with a view to carry out the general principles of government. Commonwealth v. Clark, 7 Watts & S. 127; Cronise v. Cronise, 54 Pa. 260; Commonwealth v. Bell, 145 Pa. 374, 22 Atl. 641, 644.

In construing particular clauses of the Constitution it is but reasonable to assume that in inserting such provisions the convention representing the people had before it similar provisions in earlier Constitutions, not only in our own state, but in other states which it used as a guide, and, in adding to, or subtracting from, the language of such other Constitutions the change was made deliberately, and was not merely accidental. A consideration of the earlier Constitutions of this state throws no light on the subject. The Constitution of 1790 gave the governor no power to fill vacancies, while the Constitution of 1838 contained a provision quite similar to that inserted in the present organic law. Turning to the Constitutions of other states for assistance, we find a majority of them, like our own, do not contain restrictions on the power to fill vacancies. On the other hand, the Constitutions of seven states, namely, Illinois, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, West Virginia, Nebraska and Texas have express provisions to the effect that the Governor shall not, during the same session of the Senate, appoint to fill a vacancy a person who has been rejected by the Senate, thus impliedly recognizing the necessity of such provision if power to make such appointment is to be withheld. No case has been cited which holds authoritatively that, in absence of such express restriction on the power of the Governor, he cannot appoint to fill a vacancy a person who has been rejected by the Senate. On the contrary, under article 2, § 2, cl. 3, of the federal Constitution, which gives the President power to fill "vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session," Congress recognized the power of the President to reappoint to fill a vacancy, after rejection of the appointee by the Senate, for a full term by adding to the army appropriation bill of February 9, 1863 (4 U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 3228) a clause that:

"No money shall be paid from the treasury, as salary, to any person appointed during the recess of the Senate, to fill a vacancy in any existing office, if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until such appointee has been confirmed by the Senate"

—the reason for this being, no doubt, as stated in the debate in the Senate, that while it may not be within the power of the Senate to prevent such appointment, it had the power to prevent payment of the salary incident to the office, which would probably put an end to the habit of making such appointments. In 1886 President Cleveland nominated a person for office in the District of Columbia, and, after his rejection by the Senate, appointed the same person to fill the vacancy, and in our own state Governor Pattison in 1891 reappointed two persons following their rejection by the Senate, which action was upheld by the then Attorney General of the commonwealth, Hon. William U. Hensel, as indicated in an opinion to Hon. Henry K. Boyer, state treasurer, as follows:

"I am in receipt of your favor of July 29th, inquiring whether you are authorized and justified in paying the salaries and expenses of the factory inspector and his appointees, and suggesting that the validity of such payments might be questioned because, you say, Robert Watchorn, the present factory inspector, was 'appointed by the Governor during the session of the Senate and rejected by that body and again appointed after its adjournment.' In reply I beg leave to say that, in my opinion, the appointment of Robert Watchorn as factory inspector by Gov. Pattison, was a valid appointment; that he holds and exercises said office rightfully; that his official acts are valid and binding, and certainly that the validity of his appointment cannot be questioned collaterally by you; and that you are justified and authorized in recognizing him and his warrants as those of a de facto and de jure officer."

That case is identical in all respects with the one now before us, and, while the opinion of the Attorney General is not binding upon this court, his interpretation of the question is strongly persuasive.

There are no Pennsylvania decisions which give material assistance with respect to the question before us. Lane v. Commonwealth, 103 Pa. 481, is cited by appellants. The question in that case was as to the power of the Governor to name an officer. No question of appointment was before the court, much less a question of appointment of a person who had been rejected by the Senate for a full term. In the course of the opinion of the court it is said, in discussing the respective powers and duties of the Governor and the Senate (103 Pa. page 485):

"As already shown, the Constitution declares in section 8 cited, the Governor shall nominate and he shall appoint. Before he completes the appointment the Senate shall consent to his appointing the person whom he has named. It may prevent an appointment by the Governor, but it cannot appoint. It may either consent or dissent. That is the extent of its power. There its action ends. It cannot suggest the name of another. If it dissent the Governor cannot appoint the person named. If it consent he may or may not, at his option, make the appointment. If for any reason his views as to the propriety of the proposed appointment change, he may decline to make it. That option is not subject to the will of the Senate. Until the Governor executes the commission, the appointment is not made. Prior to that time, at his mere will, he may supersede all action had in the case. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137 [2 L. Ed. 60]; Story's Con., § 1540."

The above statement that, "If it [the Senate] dissent the Governor cannot appoint the person named," viewed in the light of the question under discussion, undoubtedly referred to the regular or unexpired term for which the appointment was made. The question of the subsequent appointment of the rejected person was not before the court.

In Commonwealth v. Waller, 145 Pa. 235, 23 Atl. 382, also relied upon by appellants, the question was whether one whose appointment had been confirmed by the Senate had a right to hold office, though not commissioned previous to the expiration of the term of office of the Governor who appointed him. While it appeared the succeeding Governor appointed another person for the same office, and, upon his rejection by the Senate, reappointed him for the full term, the court said (145 Pa. 256, 23 Atl. 382):

"With the validity of the latter appointment we have nothing to do. Our inquiry is merely as to the right of the respondent to hold the office."

The lower court, in discussing the right of the subsequent appointee, said (145 Pa. 246, 23 Atl. 382):

"We have not been referred to any case which decides that the Governor has power to appoint one who has been rejected by the Senate, to the same office and for the same period for which he was nominated and rejected, or any part of such period; and, in the absence of authority we think the spirit and intent of the Constitution forbids this to be done."

The question was not discussed by the appellate court, and, furthermore, as the reappointment was for the full term, even the language of the lower court was in part dictum.

[4] Fritts v. Kuhl, 51 N. J. Law, 191, 17 Atl. 102, appears to be the only decision directly in point, although in that case the discussion in the opinion is based mainly on the meaning of the phrase, "vacancy happening during the recess of the Legislature." The Governor nominated a judge to fill a vacancy occurring while the Senate was in session. That body refused to confirm the nomination, and, subsequently, during the recess of the Legislature, the rejected person was appointed to fill the vacancy. In holding this appointment valid it was said (51 N. J. Law, 208, 17 Atl. 108):

"The propriety of the appointment of Mr. Kuhl, after his rejection by the Senate, was a question for the Governor alone. This court has no right to instruct the Governor as to matters which involve his duty only and not his power. We cannot know the circumstances which influenced his action, and must presume that he acted rightly."

[5] A careful consideration of the argument and authorities cited by counsel for appellants fails to convince us that in framing the Constitution it was intended to limit by implication the choice of the Governor in filling vacancies. It is of no avail to say that to permit the appointment of one who has been rejected for a full term would in effect enable the Governor to evade the constitutional requirements. We cannot assume a public official will abuse his trust (Lane v. Commonwealth, supra), or act with a view to evade the duties of his office. The presumption is to the contrary. Mansel v. Nicely, 175 Pa. 375, 34 Atl. 793. In Fritts v. Kuhl, supra, it is said (51 N. J. Law, 205, 17 Atl. 107):

"The argument of those who deny the power, that it will tend to deprive the Senate of their just participation in appointments to office, is not of controlling force. It is not logical to argue from an abuse of power to a negation of it. Every authority, however indispensable, may be the subject of abuse. Undoubtedly the Governor may abuse this, as he may any other power intrusted to him, but the argument is equally cogent that the Senate may arbitrarily refuse to consent to every nomination made by the Governor, and leave him powerless to execute the laws, unless he will accede to its demands. The consequences likely to flow from a denial of the Governor's power are much more to be deprecated than those that can result from conceding it."

On page 206 of 51 N. J. Law (17 Atl. 107), in the same opinion, the court further says:

"The possibility of abuse loses its significance the moment we distinguish between power and duty. The question of power alone can be considered by this court. For willful breach of official duty, or abuse of the power committed to him, the Governor is, like other civil officers, liable to impeachment, and must answer to the tribunal erected under the Constitution for the trial of such cases. Even though the Governor should be guilty of a breach of duty in refusing to send any nomination at all to the Senate, during its session, it would be none the less within his power and his duty after the adjournment, to fill the vacancy. In that case, the impeachable conduct would be his willful refusal to advise with the Senate, and not his act in filling the vacancy in the after recess."

Judgment is affirmed.

BROWN, C. J. (dissenting). (What the Constitution forbids may not be done, and its inhibitions need not always be expressed, for they are equally effective and not less to be regarded when they arise by necessary implication. Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 333, 95 Am. Dec. 272; Commonwealth ex rel. v. Heck, 251 Pa. 39, 95 Atl. 929; Storey on the Constitution, § 424. In construing a constitution its words are to receive their popular, natural and ordinary meaning. Commonwealth v. Bell, 145 Pa. 374, 22 Atl. 641, 644; Keller v. Scranton, 200 Pa. 130, 49 Atl. 781, 86 Am. St. Rep. 706; Raff v. Philadelphia et al., 256 Pa. 312, 100 Atl. 815. When these two propositions are borne in mind there is no escape, it seems to me, from the conclusion that the Governor's appointment of the appellee as commissioner of banking, to serve until the expiration of the next session of the Senate, after he had been rejected by that body at its late session, was in clear, palpable, and plain disregard and defiance of section 8, article 4, of the Constitution. The words of that article can have but one meaning to a layman, and, if this be so, how can a different one be given to them by the courts, whose duty it is to read them as they are popularly, naturally, and ordinarily understood?

During the session of the Senate the Governor could have appointed the appellee commissioner of banking only with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the members of that body. He sought such advice and consent by nominating him for the said office, but the nomination was rejected, and its rejection was, in effect, a declaration by the Senate that the nominee should not serve as commissioner of banking for the succeeding four years. This action of the Senate did not disqualify him generally for appointment as such commissioner, but meant merely that it would not consent to his appointment to serve for a certain period. In so acting the Senate exercised a power expressly conferred upon it by the Constitution as a check upon the appointing power, and yet immediately after it adjourned the Governor, in the face of its rejection of his nominee, appointed him to the office which it had just declared he should not then fill. If the Constitution may be thus circumvented, the executive may do indirectly what that instrument forbids his doing directly, for he can make appointments against the advice and consent of the Senate; and this is just what has been done in the present case. The average man, with the Constitution of his state before him couched in clear and plain terms, will hardly be able to understand how one whose name had been submitted by the Governor to the Senate, as required by the Constitution, for confirmation as his appointee to a certain office, and had been rejected by the Senate, can, as soon as that body adjourns, be constitutionally appointed to the same office, the vacancy therein having been caused by the rejection. If this can be done, a license will be given to every succeeding Governor to fill every appointive office for a full term, not only without the advice and consent of the Senate, but against them. The check upon his appointing power will be gone, for he may, at the two regular sessions of the Senate held during his term of office, do just what the present executive has done, and, by appointing rejected nominees after each adjournment of the Senate, the appointees would be given full terms of at least four years, for each appointment would extend to the end of the next session of the Senate. As to this, it was said by the very learned Judge Cadwalader, in speaking of the constitutional provision in the federal Constitution relating to appointments by the President:

"Thus he might, though the Senate were in session when the vacancy first occurred, or had sat since it thus occurred, appoint in the recess, an officer who would be objectionable to the Senate if in session, and might, in disregard or defiance of the Senate, continue him in office indefinitely." In re Attorney of the United States, 2 Cadwalader's Cases, U. S. District Ct. 138.

As the rejection of the appellee was for a full term of four years, it covered every portion of that term. "Majus dignum trahit ad se minus dignum."

None of our cases support the conclusion reached by the majority of the court, and it is so admitted. In Fritts v. Kuhl, 51 N. J. Law, 191, 17 Atl. 102, the case upon which reliance is placed in sustaining the action of the court below, the question involved in this case was not discussed either in the argument of counsel or in the opinion of the court. The sole question there was whether there had been an actual vacancy which had happened during a recess of the Legislature, and the discussion turned entirely upon what was meant by the words of the Constitution of New Jersey, "a vacancy happening during a recess of the Legislature."

While the question before this court in Lane v. Commonwealth, 103 Pa. 481, was the Governor's power of removal, we said, through Mr. Chief Justice Mercer:

"As already shown, the Constitution declares, in section 8 cited, the Governor shall nominate and he shall appoint. Before he completes the appointment the Senate shall consent to his appointing the person whom he has named. It may prevent an appointment by the Governor, but it cannot appoint. It may either consent or dissent. That is the extent of its power. There its action ends. It cannot suggest the name of another. If it dissents, the Governor cannot appoint the person named."

In Commonwealth v. Waller, 145 Pa. 235, 23 Atl. 382, one of the contentions of the commonwealth in the court below was that:

"After the senate adjourns, the Governor has undoubted right to commission the person rejected by the Senate."

In answer to this Hon. John W. Simon, late president judge of the Twelfth judicial district whose learning and ability are remembered and will not soon be forgotten, said:

"We have not been referred to any case which decides that the Governor has power to appoint one who had been rejected by the Senate, to the same office and for the same period to which he was nominated and rejected, or any part of such period; and, in the absence of authority, we think the spirit and intent of the Constitution forbid this to be done."

While these words may be regarded as obiter dicta, because not pertinent to the question then before the court, they are entitled to a very great weight as the unqualified view of an eminent jurist upon the precise question involved in this appeal. In my judgment they correctly state the law.

For the reasons stated, the writ of mandamus should have been refused, for, the appointment of the appellee was forbidden by clear, necessary implication, by section 8, article 41, of the Constitution. In this dissent, which I cannot withhold, from the contrary view entertained by a majority of the court, my Brothers POTTER and MOSCHISKER concur.

HUNTINGTON v. SUPREME COMMANDERY, UNITED ORDER OF THE GOLDEN CROSS OF THE WORLD.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶589—REVIEW—PAPER BOOK.

No questions, except those raised in statement of question involved, will be considered on appeal.

2. JUDGMENT ¶701—PERSONS CONCLUDED—CORPORATION AND MEMBERS.

Where Massachusetts beneficial society and society organized in Tennessee were consolidated, and the membership merged in latter, Tennessee judgment, based on service by publication on the Massachusetts society canceling the merger was not binding on a member of the Massachusetts society.

3. PROCESS ¶86—SERVICE OF PUBLICATION—NATURE OF ACTION.

Where the entire object of an action is to determine the personal rights and obligations of defendants who are nonresidents, service by publication is ineffectual.

4. COURTS ¶12(2)—JURISDICTION—NONRESIDENTS.

Process from the tribunals of one state cannot run into another state and summon parties there domiciled to leave its territory and to respond to proceedings against them.

5. PROCESS ¶71—SUBSTITUTED SERVICE—NATURE OF ACTION.

Process sent to a nonresident out of the state in an action to establish his personal liability is no more availing than service by publication.

6. INSURANCE ¶812—MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—ACTION ON POLICY.

Where plaintiff's husband was a member of a benefit society which was merged with defendant society, and a by-law of the original society provided for action on death of member within one year, but a by-law of the society with which it was merged provided for action within two years, an action so brought was within time.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Sarah Emma Huntington against the Supreme Commandery, United Order of the Golden Cross of the World. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHISKEER, and FRAZER, JJ.

Albert Morgan, for appellant. Benjamin O. Frick and Prichard, Saul, Bayard & Evans, all of Philadelphia, for appellee.

BROWN, C. J. In 1893 the Supreme Council of the Home Circle, a Massachusetts corporation, hereafter called the Home Circle, issued a beneficiary certificate to George F. Huntington, which provided for the payment of $2,000 to the appellee, his widow, upon "satisfactory evidence" of his death. In April, 1906, when the certificate was in full force, the Home Circle entered into an agreement with the Supreme Commandery, United Order of the Golden Cross of the World, a Tennessee corporation, hereafter called the Golden Cross, for the consolidation of the two orders by merging the entire membership of the former into the latter. In November of the same year a bill in equity was filed by a number of the members of the Golden Cross, in the chancery court of Knox county, Tenn., against the said order and the Home Circle, alleging that the Golden Cross had no right, under its charter or the laws of the state of Tennessee, to form the said merger or consolidation, and the prayer was for a decree declaring the agreement of merger null and void and ordering it to be canceled and set aside. The decree asked for was made and affirmed by the Supreme Court of the state in November, 1908. Knapp et al. v. Golden Cross, 121 Tenn. 212, 118 S. W. 390. The Home Circle was not served with process in the proceeding and did not appear. Notice was given to it by publication, in accordance with the Tennessee statute, and the decree entered against it was taken pro confesso. From August 1, 1906, to December, 1906, Huntington, who had been received as a member of the Golden Cross, paid, at the order's office in Philadelphia, all premiums or assessments due. After the Supreme Court of Tennessee had affirmed the decree of the chancery court, the Golden Cross notified him that it would receive no more premiums or assessments from him, and the last premium or assessment was returned to him by the local treasurer. He died May 29, 1911, and proof of his death was sent to and received by the appellant. Payment on the beneficiary certificate was refused, and this action was brought May 28, 1913.

[1] The defenses made were that, as the agreement of merger between the two orders had been declared null and void by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, the appellee had no claim against the appellant, and the action had not been instituted until after the expiration of the period within which, according to a by-law of the Home Circle, it ought to have been brought. A verdict for the plaintiff, followed by judgment on it, was directed by the trial judge, who did not pass upon the second defense set up, but held that the proceeding in the Tennessee court did not affect the right of the appellee to recover, because her husband had not been made a party thereto, and the Home Circle had not been served with process and had not appeared. The foregoing are all the facts material to a consideration of the two questions raised by counsel for the appellant in his statement of the questions involved. No other question raised in his brief will be considered. Bethlehem Steel Company v. Topliss, 249 Pa. 417, 94 Atl. 1099.

[2-5] The proceeding instituted against the Golden Cross and Home Circle in the Tennessee court was against them both in personam. Due legal service was had on the former, but the latter never was served and did not appear. The purpose of the bill was to deprive it and its members of rights which they claimed under the agreement of consolidation with the Golden Cross; but there could not be such deprivation, to be given effect by the courts of other states, in the absence of legal service upon the Home Circle or its voluntary appearance as a defendant. D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. 165, 13 L. Ed. 648; Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 3 Sup. Ct. 586, 28 L. Ed. 101.

"Substituted service by publication, or in any other authorized form, may be sufficient to inform parties of the object of proceedings taken, where property is once brought under the control of the court by seizure or some equivalent act. The law assumes that property is always in the possession of its owner, in person or by agent; and it proceeds upon the theory that its seizure will inform him, not only that it is taken into the custody of the court, but that he must look to any proceedings authorized by law upon such seizure for its condemnation and sale. Such service may also be sufficient in cases where the object of the action is to reach and dispose of property in the state, or of some interest therein, by enforcing a contract or a lien respecting the same, or to partition it among different owners, or, when the public is a party, to condemn and appropriate it for a public purpose. In other words, such service may answer in all actions which are substantially proceedings in rem. But where the entire object of the action is to determine the personal rights and obligations of the defendants—that is, where the suit is merely in personam—constructive service in this form upon a nonresident is ineffectual for any purpose. Process from the tribunals of one state cannot run into another state, and summon parties there domiciled to leave its territory and respond to proceedings against them. Publication of process or notice within the state where the tribunal sits cannot create any greater obligation upon the nonresident to appear. Process sent to him out of the state, and process published within it, are equally unavailing in proceedings to establish his personal liability." Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565.

"It is an elementary principle of jurisprudence, that a court of justice cannot acquire jurisdiction over the person of one who has no residence within its territorial jurisdiction, except by actual service of notice within the jurisdiction upon him or upon some one authorized to accept service in his behalf, or by his waiver, by general appearance or otherwise, of the want of due service. Whatever effect a constructive service may be allowed in the courts of the same government, it cannot be recognized as valid by the courts of any other government." Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 15 Sup. Ct. 559, 39 L. Ed. 517.

The precise question now under consideration was decided adversely to this appellant by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in Timberlake v. Golden Cross, 208 Mass. 411, 94 N. E. 685, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597. The situation of the plaintiffs there was exactly that of the plaintiff here, and in holding that they could recover the court said:

"The plaintiffs were not parties or privies to the action brought by Knapp and others against the defendant in Tennessee, and are in no way bound by the decision made therein. Rothrock v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 161 Mass. 423 [37 N. E. 206, 23 L. R. A. 863, 42 Am. St. Rep. 418]; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714 [24 L. Ed. 565]."

But it is urged that this is in conflict with what was held in Supreme Council, Royal Arcanum, v. Green, 237 U. S. 531, 35 Sup. Ct. 724, 59 L. Ed. 1089, L. R. A. 1916A, 771. There is no conflict between the two cases. The Royal Arcanum, a beneficial association, of which Green was a member, had, under its by-laws, changed the rates of assessments. The order was a Massachusetts corporation, and some of its members filed a bill in that state to vacate the raised rates. The Massachusetts court held that they were proper. Subsequently Green instituted a proceeding in New York state, upon the same ground, and upon the same facts, and what was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States was that the judgment in Massachusetts was binding on Green, for the reason that a fraternal and beneficial association is, for the purpose of controversies as to assessments, the representative of all its members. It was so held because the rights of members of a corporation of a fraternal or beneficial character have their source in the constitution and by-laws of the corporation, which are to be construed under the law of the state incorporating the order. In Knapp et al. v. Golden Cross the Supreme Court of Tennessee undertook to pass upon the validity of a contract between two corporations, one of which had not been served and had not appeared, and set aside the contract, annulling all rights of appellee's husband under it, though he had never even been named as a party to the proceeding. This was dam-natus inauditus. Whether the appellees would be bound by the decree of the Tennessee court if the Home Circle had appeared, and therefore ought to be regarded as representing her husband, is a question we need not decide, for it never appeared in pursuance of legal process or otherwise.

[6] When appellee's husband was received by the Golden Cross as one of its members under the agreement of consolidation, it did not issue a new certificate to him. It merely assumed the liability of the Home Circle, with a slight modification, which is of no importance in this issue. A by-law of the Home Circle, adopted June 13, 1896, provides that:

"No action at law or in equity in any court shall be brought or maintained in any cause or claim arising out of any membership, benefit certificate, or death of a member, unless such action is brought within one year from the time when such right of action accrues."

This action is based upon the certificate issued by the Home Circle and the agreement of consolidation, and the contention of the appellant is that there can be no recovery, because it was not brought until two years, less one day, after the death of the holder of the certificate. Even if the appellee was bound by the said by-law, passed five years subsequently to the issuing of the certificate to her husband, its requirement is that an action on the certificate must be brought within one year from the time the right to bring it had accrued. There was no right to bring it until proof of her husband's death had been furnished to the defendant, for the payment of $2,000 to her was to be made "upon satisfactory evidence" of his death. The certificate and the by-laws of the Home Circle are silent as to when proof of death was to be furnished. A by-law of the Golden Cross provides that:

"No action at law or in equity shall be brought or maintained in any court, for any cause or any claim arising out of membership in the order, or upon any benefit certificate, unless the same is commenced within two years from the time when such right of action accrues. Said right of action accrues when official notice of death is received by the supreme keeper of the records."

Notice of the death of Huntington was sent to and received by the appellant within two years, and, as this action was brought within the same period, the second defense cannot prevail. In support of it Ulman v. Golden Cross (this defendant) 220 Mass. 422, 107 N. E. 980, is cited. What was there decided is entirely consistent with our own view. Proof of the death of the holder of the beneficiary certificate was furnished to the Golden Cross April 11, 1906, and a cause of action then accrued; but suit was not brought until June 27, 1911, more than three years thereafter, and it was, of course, held that the disregard of the by-law of the Home Circle barred a recovery.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

In re MAXWELL'S ESTATE (two cases).

WILLS §551—CONSTRUCTION—TRUSTS.

Where testator devised his property to trustees for the benefit of his children, and directed on the death of his last child the proceeds should be distributed equally among the grandchildren per stirpes, the children and grandchildren were the sole objects of his bounty, and the succession of any child dying without issue passed to the survivors, to the exclusion of personal representatives.

Appeals from Superior Court.

In the matter of the estates of John Maxwell and of Elizabeth Maxwell. Exceptions to adjudications dismissed, and Charles T. Maxwell in each case appeals. Reversed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

Charles S. Wesley and J. W. McWilliams, both of Philadelphia, for appellant.

POTTER, J. We have here two appeals, involving the same question, taken from decrees of the Superior Court, dismissing appeals to that court, from the final decrees of the orphans' court of Philadelphia county, in the adjudication of the accounts of trustees under the will of Elizabeth Maxwell, deceased, and under the will of John Maxwell, deceased.

John Maxwell died July 28, 1907, leaving a will by which he gave his residuary estate to trustees, to pay the income thereof to his wife, Elizabeth Maxwell, for life, and provided as follows:

"And from and immediately after the death of my said wife, Elizabeth Maxwell, I order and direct my trustees hereinafter named, to keep and hold all my stock in the Wilton Hygiene Underwear Knitting Company, for and during the lifetime of my children and the survivor of them and to pay out of the dividends realized therefrom, the sum of six hundred dollars ($600.00) per annum to my daughter, Jessie May Maxwell, during her lifetime, and the balance of said dividends, if any, to divide equally among my other children, share and share alike, the issue of any deceased child to take its parent's share. And upon the death of my said daughter, Jessie May Maxwell, I order my said trustees to divide the entire dividends realized from my said stock equally among my children share and share alike until the death of my last surviving child. Upon the death of my last surviving child, I order and direct my trustees or their successors to sell my stock in the Wilton Hygiene Underwear Knitting Company, and divide the proceeds equally among my grandchildren per stirpes."

The testator left to survive him his widow and eight children and the child of a deceased son. The widow, Elizabeth Maxwell, died July 8, 1908, leaving a will containing the following provision:

"I give and bequeath all the stock that I own in the Wilton Hygiene Underwear Knitting Company to my executors and trustees hereinafter named, to keep and to hold for and during the lifetime of my children, and the survivor of them and to divide equally among my said children, share and share alike, the issue of any deceased child to take its parent's share, all dividends realized from said stock, and upon the death of my last surviving child, I order and direct my executors to sell my stock in the Wilton Hygiene Underwear Knitting Company and to divide the proceeds among my grandchildren per stirpes."

William G. Maxwell, one of the children of John and Elizabeth Maxwell, died May 15, 1915, intestate, unmarried and without issue. Thereafter the trustees under both wills filed accounts. Upon the audits, the question arose as to what disposition should be made of the share of the income which had been payable to William G. Maxwell, during his life, and which had accrued after his death. The auditing judge held that W. G. Maxwell had a vested estate in a one-ninth share of the income, accruing between the death of his mother and that of the last survivor of his brothers and sisters, and awarded the income already accrued since his death to his administrator. Exceptions to the adjudication were dismissed by the court in banc, and the finding of the auditing judge sustained. On appeal, the Superior Court affirmed the decrees of the orphans' court.

While there is no express gift over of any part of the income upon the death of one of testator's children before the arrival of the time fixed for final distribution of the principal, the will shows clearly an intention that the entire income shall be paid to testator's children and grandchildren, and to no other persons. It is to be divided equally "among my said children, share and share alike, the issue of any deceased child to take its parent's share." This language is very similar to that of the will construed in Rowland's Estate, 141 Pa. 553, 554, 21 Atl. 735, 736, which was: "The surplus of net income * * * I direct to be annually divided equally, per stirpes and not per capita, between my five children [naming them] and the issue of [naming them] deceased, and the issue of any other of said children that may at any time have died leaving issue."

In that case Mr. Justice Williams said that the intention of the testator was to give the income of his estate to "two classes, viz., living children of the testator, and living issue of deceased children taking in the right of the parent, or per stirpes." This excluded children who were not living when the right to distribution of the income accrued.

Again in Rowland's Estate, 151 Pa. 25, 24 Atl. 1091, a later case involving the construction of the same will, the former ruling was followed and reaffirmed; the case being cited in the opinion (151 Pa. 27, 24 Atl. 1092) as Bomeisler's Appeal, 141 Pa. 553, 21 Atl. 735. Mr. Justice Williams said (151 Pa. 29, 24 Atl. 1092):

"The objects of his [testator's] bounty are ranged in two classes, one of which, comprising his own children living at the time of the distribution, is a constantly decreasing class, upon the extinction of which, by the death of the last surviving child, the trust ends and the estate goes into final distribution. The other, comprising living issue of his deceased children, is a constantly increasing class, which must finally include all the beneficiaries under the will, and to the members of which the estate is to go in fee simple. This being settled, and the division being made per stirpes, we think all the distributees take the same estate in the income, viz. a life estate with remainder over to living issue, if any, and in default of issue of such decedent then over to surviving distributees, per stirpes."

The latest case involving a similar question, is Huddy's Estate, 257 Pa. 528, 101 Atl. 818, affirming the decision of the Superior Court at 63 Pa. Super. Ct. 34. There the trustee was directed, after the death of the life tenant, "to pay the said income in equal shares to her children; as above set forth and to the children of any of her said children who may be deceased, such children to take their parents' share, until the death of the last of my said niece's children." It was held that the case was ruled by Rowland's Estate. In the opinion of the Superior Court (63 Pa. Super. Ct. 38-40) the resemblance between the two cases is pointed out at length, and in this court it was said per curiam (257 Pa. 534, 101 Atl. 820):

"The clearly expressed intention of the testator confines the distribution of the income from the estate to the children of his deceased niece, Eliza M. Fagan, and their issue. This was the correct conclusion of the Superior Court. Huddy's Estate, 63 Pa. Super. Ct. 34. Helen Fagan Moore, a grandniece, having died without issue, her interest in the income terminated with her death. Rowland's Estate, 141 Pa. 553 [21 Atl. 735]."

In the present case, both the orphans' court and the Superior Court followed the decision in Little's Appeal, 81 Pa. 190, 192, where Mr. Justice Paxson said that the point in controversy, briefly stated, was this:

"The testator gives the entire income from his estate, consisting wholly of personalty, during the life of his daughter Elizabeth, or while she shall remain single, to his two daughters, Mrs. Martha J. Little and the said Elizabeth, the former to receive one-third and the latter two-thirds of the said income. Mrs. Little is now deceased, leaving a husband and children; Elizabeth is still living and unmarried. The principal * * * is not to be distributed until after Elizabeth marries or dies. In the meantime what is to become of the one-third of the income formerly paid to Mrs. Little?"

It was held that it was payable to the legal representatives of the deceased daughter, upon the ground that there was no gift over of the income on the death of Mrs. Little. We are clear, however, that the conclusion there reached is not a rule of law properly to be applied to the case in hand. This case is to be governed by the principle set forth in Rowland's Estate, and as applied in Huddy's Estate, supra. There is nothing in the wills now before us which indicates an intention to make any distinction between the children. It clearly appears that the children who died leaving issue were to have but a life estate. What is there in the wills to indicate that a child dying without issue should have any greater or other interest in the income than a child dying and leaving issue? Nothing that we can find; and yet such would be the effect of the decision by the orphans' court, and its affirmance by the Superior Court. Then again, admittedly, under the language of the wills, the interest of the last survivor of the children is an estate for life only, as upon such death the estate is to be distributed among the grandchildren per stirpes. What is there in the wills to warrant the award of any greater or other estate to any of the children than was bestowed upon the survivor of them? Technically, the gift was per autre vie; but to allow this consideration to determine the question in favor of vesting, in a child dying without issue, the share in the income to which it was entitled while living, would be to disappoint the intention and purpose of the testator and testatrix, to the extent, at least, that it would make the accumulation of interest on the share of one dying without issue a part of the estate of such a one, and therefore liable for his debts. In neither of the wills do we see that there was in contemplation any such result. It was evidently intended to confine the succession to the share of any dying without issue to the survivors. Only living children or their issue representing them could take. As Williams, J., said in Rowland's Estate, supra, the purpose was to deal with the beneficiaries in classes, and, upon the death of any one without issue, the class as to him failed, and his life estate fell in. Why should a mere fiction of the law be permitted to govern in such a case as this, when it is apparent that the testator intended her children and grandchildren to be the sole objects of her bounty? We adhere to the doctrine of the decision in Rowland's Estate.

The assignments of error in each of these appeals are sustained; the decrees of the Superior Court are reversed, as are also those of the orphans' court in each case; the costs of these appeals to be paid out of the respective funds for distribution. It is further ordered that the records be remitted for distribution in accordance with the view of the law as expressed in this opinion.

ROWAN v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 3, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR \Leftrightarrow 731(2) — ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

On appeal in a case tried by the court, assignments of error complaining of findings of fact and conclusions of law are defective, where they fail to show exceptions taken, or the action thereon, though exceptions were in fact filed and overruled.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §731(2) — ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

Where error is assigned to the findings and conclusions of the court below, the particular ones to which exceptions are taken should be quoted and the action of the court set forth together with the exceptions.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN §124—PARKS—RIGHTS OF ADJOINING LANDOWNER.

Under Acts May 30, 1893 (P. L. 183), March 19, 1903 (P. L. 37), April 7, 1905 (P. L. 117), and June 23, 1917 (P. L. 640), relating to acquisition of Valley Forge as a public park, not defining its limits, but authorizing the commissioners to do so, a person purchasing within its possible limits after the passage of the acts was not chargeable with notice that her land would be taken so as to preclude her from recovering the value of the property with improvements.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN §124—AWARD OF DAMAGES.

After Act April 7, 1905, permitting Washington's headquarters at Valley Forge to be included within a park to be established, property adjacent was purchased, considerable improvements being made, and thereafter the park commissioners included the land within the park, plaintiff could recover the value of the land and improvements at the time she was notified of the taking.

5. EMINENT DOMAIN §202(4) — AWARD OF DAMAGES—ELEMENTS.

Where park commissioners condemn land adjoining a park for purposes of its extension, the value of the premises taken and improvements made for purpose of serving refreshments and entertaining visitors should be considered on the question of damages.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas; Montgomery County.

Proceedings by the Commonwealth for condemnation of property of Mary L. Rowan. Exceptions to the findings of the trial judge were dismissed and judgment entered on the findings, and the Commonwealth appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

J. P. Hale Jenkins, of Norristown, Francis Shunk Brown, of Philadelphia, and Montgomery Evans, of Norristown, for the Commonwealth. J. Washington Logue and M. M. Gibson, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. The commonwealth, through the Valley Forge Park Commission, appropriated plaintiff's property for park purposes, and, being unable to agree with her as to the compensation to be paid, viewers were appointed, from whose award an appeal was taken and the case tried before the court below without a jury. From the decree of the court the commonwealth appealed. The principal questions raised are the proper measure of damages, and the time from which they are to be computed.

[1, 2] The paper book filed on behalf of the commonwealth contained flagrant violations of our rules. The statement of questions involved violates the rule as to length.

This error is attempted to be corrected by filing a typewritten statement, a practice not to be commended. Further, the assignments of error, four in number, are defective. Each alleges error in the findings or conclusions of law of the court below, but not one quotes a finding, nor do they show exceptions taken, or the action of the court thereon, although exceptions to the findings were, in fact, filed and argued and formally overruled. We have repeatedly said assignments of error are an essential part of the pleadings and on appeal must be complete in themselves without reference to other parts of the record. North Mountain Water Supply Co. v. Troxell, 223 Pa. 315, 72 Atl. 621; Burkhard v. Penna. Water Co., 243 Pa. 369, 90 Atl. 157. Where error is assigned to the findings and conclusions of the court below, the particular one to which exception is taken should be quoted, and the action of the court set forth, together with the exception, in order that the assignment shall show the complete transaction. Land Title & Trust Co. v. Shoemaker, 257 Pa. 213, 101 Atl. 335; Lehigh Valley Trust Co. v. Strauss, 258 Pa. 382, 101 Atl. 1047. The appeal might well be quashed because of the defects referred to.

[3, 4] We have examined the case on its merits, however, and find no error in the conclusion reached by the learned judge of the court below. The Act of May 30, 1893 (P. L. 183), relating to the acquisition of Valley Forge as a public park "for the purpose of perpetuating and preserving the site on which the Continental Army under which General George Washington was encamped in winter quarters at Valley Forge," provides, in section 1, that title to the grounds, "including Forts Washington and Huntingdon, and the entrenchments adjacent thereto, and the adjoining grounds, in all not exceeding two hundred and fifty acres, but not including therein the property known as Washington's headquarters, * * * the location and boundaries thereof to be fixed by the commissioners hereafter mentioned," should be "vested in the state of Pennsylvania" and laid out and maintained forever as a public park. Section 3 of the act provides for payment for the property taken and the fixing of the value of such property, in event of their failure to agree with the owners, by a jury to be appointed by the court of quarter sessions, with a further provision that:

"If the said commissioners shall delay petitioning, as aforesaid, for the period of sixty days after notice is given of their taking possession of said ground, then said jury shall be appointed upon the petition of any person whose property shall be so taken."

An amendment to section 1 of the act approved March 19, 1903 (P. L. 37), increased the maximum area of the park to 500 acres, and by Act of April 7, 1905 (P. L. 117), this limit was further augmented to 1,000 acres.

The last-named act also removed the exception appearing in the act of 1893, with reference to Washington's headquarters, thus formally including that property within the possible park area. By Act of June 23, 1917 (P. L. 640), the maximum area was still further increased to 1,500 acres. The amendatory acts preserved in the identical words the provision of the act of 1893 referring to location and boundaries. Plaintiff's property, consisting of a lot on which was erected a dwelling house and a small building used for the purpose of a shooting gallery and for serving refreshments and selling souvenir postal cards to persons visiting the park, adjoined Washington's headquarters on the south. Plaintiff purchased the property in 1908 from her husband, who had become the owner in 1906. They occupied the premises as a residence until 1916, and derived considerable revenue by serving refreshments and entertaining visitors to Washington's headquarters. At a meeting of the Valley Forge Park Commissioners, held June 5, 1916, a resolution was adopted fixing "the location and boundaries and area of the ground to be taken in addition to those heretofore acquired" so as to include plaintiff's premises, and on June 24, 1916, formal notice was given plaintiff that her "land had been appropriated and condemned by said commonwealth of Pennsylvania for public purposes."

The commonwealth contends plaintiff's land was taken and condemned by the act of 1893, and that the value of her property must, accordingly, be determined as of that date.

The statutory provisions quoted clearly indicated that the Legislature contemplated further steps to be taken by the commissioners to fix the location and boundaries of the 250-acre tract they were given power to appropriate. The maximum area merely was given, leaving to the commissioners to fix the exact boundaries; the only positive direction to them being to include the forts and adjacent trenches. Until after the commissioners had fixed the exact location and boundaries, owners of land not covered by these designated objects were without means of determining whether or not their property would be within the area required by the state. Upon the location and boundaries being fixed, section 3 of the act of 1893 contemplates giving notice to the owners, and petition for appraisal by a jury of view within 60 days thereafter. Manifestly, until these preliminary steps are taken by the commissioners, no right to ask for the appointment of a jury accrues to neighboring property owners, as their property may never be taken. This conclusion is strengthened by the subsequent legislation permitting the commissioners to increase the park tract. Surely property owners in the vicinity were not bound to foresee a gradual growth of the park and its extent, and improve their property at the risk of losing the cost of such improvements in the event the commissioners should at a future day decide to exercise their powers and include it within the then existing or subsequently enlarged maximum park area.

The commonwealth concedes the general rule that damages for taking or injury to land are to be determined as of the date of the actual taking or the doing of some unequivocal act by which the municipality or the state indicates the possession of the owner is about to be disturbed (Volkmar Street, Philadelphia, 124 Pa. 320, 16 Atl. 867; Whitaker v. Phoenixville Boro., 141 Pa. 327, 21 Atl. 604); but relies upon Philadelphia Parkway, 250 Pa. 257, 95 Atl. 429, as bringing this case within the exception to the rule. An examination of the opinion in that case shows the facts there clearly distinguish it from the present case. The court there recognizes the general rule referred to above, but bases the decision on the fact that the city had committed an unequivocal act showing an intention to open the parkway, and had followed its action by actual work covering a period of years; such proceedings the court holds are a sufficient substitute for the formal ordinance usual in street opening cases. It should be noted that in the parkway Case (250 Pa. 262, 264, 95 Atl. 429, 431) there was "a defined public way within specified and limited boundaries," and it is said:

"The termini of the boulevard are definitely fixed by city hall at one end and Fairmount Park at the other. The courses and distances are marked on the ground and at some points the parkway is open to public use. Buildings have been torn down at each end and a large amount of work done looking to final completion. As hereinbefore stated, the parkway must be regarded as one entire improvement. It is either this or nothing."

In the Parkway Case, exact boundaries of the highway were designated from the beginning, and property owners knew at that time whether their property was within or without the line of the improvement. The decision merely holds in effect that where such is the case, and the improvement is an entire one and cannot be carried out in part only and yet effectuate the purpose for which it was planned, the adoption of a formal ordinance is not a necessity, but the liability of the city for damages may be fixed by its act in taking physical possession of a portion of the property and beginning the work of improvement, thus indicating an unequivocal intention to take the whole for the purpose for which intended. That case must be confined to its own facts.

In the present case, we are met at the start with the fact that the boundaries of the 250-acre tract were not specified, but left to the discretion of the commissioners to be exercised at such time as they might see fit. No specific area or property, other than the forts and entrenchments named in the act, was necessary to carry out the purpose of the statute. The Legislature originally limited the park area to a maximum of 250 acres, even excluding Washington's headquarters, the most important part in point of interest, more than likely because the precise extent of the land used by Washington's army was unknown. Until the commissioners acted by definitely fixing the boundaries, there was no means of determining the property to be included within the tract the state proposed to acquire. The subsequent acts increasing the area were equally indefinite. On the whole, there is nothing to take the present case out of the general rule above stated, and the time of appropriation, must be considered as of the date when the commissioners formally concluded to take plaintiff's property and notified her of that fact.

[5] The remaining question is whether the court properly considered, in connection with the question of damages, the value of the premises for the purpose of serving refreshments and otherwise entertaining visitors to the park. The court based its findings on the market value of the premises "for any purpose that would induce persons to purchase it at the time it was taken." This is in accord with the general rule permitting consideration of any use to which the property may fairly be applied and adopted. Marine Coal Co. v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 246 Pa. 478, 92 Atl. 688; North Shore R. Co. v. Penna. Co., 251 Pa. 445, 96 Atl. 990. The amount fixed by the court below, in view of the testimony of the witnesses on both sides, is conservative, and, in fact, no fault is found with the sum awarded, except the single contention that the court improperly considered plaintiff's use of the property for business purposes as an item in estimating its market value.

The judgment is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH v. PUDER.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §48—VALIDITY OF STATUTE—POWER OF COURTS.

An act must be upheld, unless its provisions plainly violate a constitutional mandate.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §70(3)—DUTY OF COURTS.

The Legislature is the sole judge of the expediency of a statute, as well as the necessity for its enactment; and whether it be wise or necessary will not be considered, in determining its constitutionality.

3. STATUTES §81—SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Act June 17, 1915 (P. L. 1012), regulating the loaning of money in sums of $300 or less, prescribing penalties for its violation, is not objectionable as special legislation, in violation of Const. art. 3, § 7.

4. STATUTES §114(1)—TITLE OF ACT—SUFFICIENCY.

The title of Act June 17, 1915 (P. L. 1012), regulating the business of loaning money in sums of $300 or less, gives sufficient notice of the provisions of the act providing for criminal punishment of one who loans money without procuring a license.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §62 — BANK COMMISSIONER — GRANT OF LEGISLATIVE DISCRETION.

Act June 17, 1915 (P. L. 1012), regulating the loaning of money in small sums, and giving commissioner of banking discretion to grant license to applicants, is not unconstitutional as a grant of legislative discretion.

6. PAWNBROKERS §2—LICENSES—VALIDITY.

Act June 17, 1915 (P. L. 1012), regulating the loaning of money in small sums, and giving commissioner of banking discretion to grant license to applicant, held not invalid.

Appeal from Superior Court.

H. Matthias Puder was convicted of violating the statute relating to the loan of moneys in small sums, and appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

Owen J. Roberts and Charles H. Weston, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. Joseph H. Taulane, Asst. Dist. Atty., and Samuel P. Rotan, Dist. Atty., both of Philadelphia, for the Commonwealth.

FRAZER, J. Defendant appeals from the judgment of the Superior Court, affirming the court of quarter sessions of Philadelphia county, entered on a verdict of guilty on an indictment charging defendant with a misdemeanor in violating the act of June 17, 1915 (P. L. 1012), "regulating the business of loaning money in sums of three hundred ($300) dollars or less," and prescribing penalties for its violation. The principal contention is that the statute is unconstitutional as special legislation, though appellant also questions the sufficiency of the title and whether the act is an improper delegation of legislative power to the banking commissioner.

[1, 2] In view of the decision of this court in Commonwealth v. Young, 248 Pa. 458, 94 Atl. 141, relied upon by defendant, in which we held an act, in many respects similar to the one under discussion, approved June 5, 1913 (P. L. 429), to be unconstitutional as class legislation, a comparison of the provisions of that act with the present one is important, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is in fact such distinction between the two as to warrant a different conclusion in the present case—bearing in mind the rule that every presumption is in favor of the validity of the exercise of legislative power, and that the act must be upheld unless its provisions plainly violate a constitutional mandate. Sharpless et al. v. Mayor, etc., 21 Pa. 147, 164, 59 Am. Dec. 759; Commonwealth v. Butler, 90 Pa. 535, 540; Commonwealth v. Grossman, 248 Pa. 11, 14, 93 Atl. 781.

The act of 1913 referred to provided for the licensing of money lenders under the supervision of the court of quarter sessions; the relevant provisions for the purpose of this discussion being found in section 2, which reads as follows:

"Any person, copartnership, association, or corporation who shall obtain a license, in accordance with the provisions of section one of this act, shall be entitled to loan money at his, their, or its place of business, for which said license is issued, and to charge the borrowers thereof, for its use or loan, interest not to exceed the rate of six per centum per annum, and a brokerage fee of not more than one-tenth of the amount actually loaned. No charge, in addition to the said interest and brokerage fee shall be exacted, charged, or collected, excepting an examination fee of not more than one dollar on all loans not exceeding fifty dollars in amount."

The act of 1915, on the other hand, substitutes the discretion of the banking commissioner for the discretion of the court of quarter sessions, and, after regulating the procedure on application for a license and specifying the necessary qualifications of the applicant, provides further in section 2 that:

"Any person, persons, copartnership, association, or corporation who shall obtain a license, in accordance with the provisions of section one of this act, shall be entitled to loan money in sums of three hundred ($300) dollars or less, either with or without security, to individuals pressed for lack of funds to meet immediate necessities, at his, their, or its place of business, for which said license is issued, and to charge the borrowers thereof, for its use or loan, interest as follows: Upon loans not exceeding one hundred ($100) dollars in amount, not more than three (3) per centum per month; upon loans exceeding one hundred ($100) dollars in amount, and not exceeding three hundred ($300) dollars, not more than (2) per centum per month; and, in addition, in any case in which the loan is made for a period of not less than four (4) months, on sums not exceeding fifty ($50) dollars in amount, an examination fee of not more than one ($1) dollar; on sums exceeding fifty ($50) dollars, an examination fee of not more than two ($2) dollars, may be charged, for examining the security offered or the credit and responsibility of the borrower. No charge of any kind, in addition to interest, shall be made on a loan of less than fifteen ($15) dollars. No charge, in addition to the said interest and examination fee, shall be exacted, charged, or collected."

[3] The distinction between the classifications under the two acts, if any, must rest upon the construction of the provisions above quoted. In the act of 1913 there is no limit to the amount of the loans, nor is there a clearly defined class of borrowers. Under that act a person procuring a license was privileged to charge interest at the rate of 6 per cent. and a brokerage and examination fee not in excess of that provided for in the act, regardless of circumstances or amount of the loan. The statute being general in its scope, and no reason appearing on its face for classifying persons complying with its provisions, this court concluded it violated article 3, § 7, of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, forbidding the passage of any local or special law fixing the rate of interest. That this was the basis of the decision in Commonwealth v. Young, supra, appears from the following language in the opinion (248 Pa. 461, 94 Atl. 142):

"The general scheme of the act is to create into a class of persons absolutely undistinguishable from the entire body of citizenship by anything suggesting a differentiation with respect to rights, privileges, immunities, or peculiarities, whether arising out of personal or business relations, and then to invest such class with a privilege denied to all not within the class, namely, the right to collect on money loaned a rate of interest in excess of that to which all others are confined. So much is beyond all question."

On the other hand, the act of 1915 confines the class of loans to those not exceeding $300 and defines the class of borrowers as "individuals pressed by lack of funds to meet immediate necessities." It thus appears all persons are eliminated from taking the benefit of the act, except those who desire to make loans not exceeding $300 in amount. Commonwealth v. Young did not decide the Legislature might not pass a law regulating the business of loaning money in small sums. On the contrary, the opinion recognizes this right, if a proper basis of classification can be found as appears from the following language (248 Pa. 461, 94 Atl. 142):

"Whether such persons stand in need of further facilities of this character, or whether it is practicable by legislative action to afford the relief needed, are questions wholly aside. This one fact stands out with a distinctiveness that makes it unmistakable and indisputable—the necessary and only effect of this act must be, not to benefit such as are necessitous, but to advantage a class of persons who, however they may have qualified by showing that none in the class have ever been convicted of certain crimes and misdemeanors, are yet willing to pay for the privilege of exacting from those made dependent by their necessities, a rate of interest more than six times the rate borrowers with larger means can be compelled to pay. * * * In what we have said our purpose has been simply to show that the one certain effect of the act is to create a distinct class out of persons having in common, as between themselves, no peculiarities whether of person or business, or anything else, distinguishing them from any other class, and investing the class thus artificially created with special and exclusive privilege with respect to interest charges on money loaned. From our study of the act we see no escape from the conclusions above expressed."

It remains only to consider whether or not the basis of classification adopted in the act of 1915 is a proper one. In Ajars' App. Cal., 122 Pa. 266, 281, 16 Atl. 356, 363 (2 L. R. A. 577), it was held classification to be valid must be based upon "a necessity springing from manifest peculiarities, clearly distinguishing those [members] of one class from each of the other classes, and imperatively demanding legislation for each class, separately, that would be useless and detrimental to the others." Classification is a legislative question, subject to judicial revision only so far as to see it is founded on real, and not merely artificial, distinctions, and if the distinctions are genuine, the court cannot declare the classification void, though they may not consider the basis to be sound. The test is not wisdom, but good faith, in the classification. Seabolt v. Commissioners, 187 Pa. 318, 41 Atl. 22; Commonwealth v. Grossman, 248 Pa. 11, 93 Atl. 781. In construing a statute, the presumption is that it is a valid exercise of legislative power, and the burden is upon one who attacks its validity to show a clear violation of the constitutional provision. "The Legislature is the sole judge of the wisdom and expediency of a statute, as well as of the necessity for its enactment, and whether the legislation be wise, expedient, or necessary is without importance to the court in determining its constitutionality. In other words, the assembly has a free hand to legislate on every subject in such manner as it deems proper, unless there is a constitutional prohibition clearly expressed or necessarily implied." Commonwealth v. Grossman, supra. Applying the foregoing principles to the present case, the fundamental question is whether a necessity exists demanding legislation for the class of money lenders in sums of $300 or less to those of limited means who would otherwise be unable to procure needed funds, and whether classification adopted to meet such necessity is based on a real and not merely an artificial distinction. The subject-matter of the act has been before the public and under investigation and discussion for a number of years, not only in this jurisdiction, but in other states as well, and has resulted in the adopting of somewhat similar legislation in probably half the states of the Union. The attempt in recent years to eradicate the evils of the so-called "money loan sharks" by proceedings instituted in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh is a matter of general public knowledge, and those who have given the matter close investigation and thought concede that a prohibition of the business does not accomplish the desired result, and that the only practical method of dealing with the subject is by proper regulation. Our Legislature, in a preamble to the act of 1915, omitted from the Pamphlet Laws, but shown in the certified copy of the act from the office of the secretary of the commonwealth, recognizes the situation, and the impracticability of prohibiting the business of loaning money in small amounts, and the need of regulation and supervision by law, and also the fact that such loans are necessarily attended with greater risk than is ordinarily incident to lending money by banks, pawnbrokers, and others who loan only on approved collateral. The fact that loans of this nature rarely exceed the sum of $300 is admitted, and the adoption of the amount named as a limitation affords a proper criterion for a classification in so far as the peculiar nature and character of the business is concerned. The matter of fixing the maximum amount to be charged for the use of money rests primarily in the discretion of the Legislature and is within the police power of the state. Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S. 563, 31 Sup. Ct. 132, 54 L. Ed. 1151. Statutes passed at various times by our state Legislature recognize certain businesses to be in a separate class, and authorize as to them a departure from the regular rate of interest fixed by the general law. For example, building and loan associations are permitted to charge a premium on loans in excess of the legal rate. There exists in the present case both a necessity and a valid basis for classification of the business of loaning money in small amounts, with or without security, and the distinction between the present law and the act of 1913, which was declared unconstitutional in Commonwealth v. Young, supra, furnishes adequate support for the conclusion of the court below that the present act cannot be condemned on the ground of improper classification.

[4] Appellant also contends the title of the act is insufficient to give notice of the provision for criminal punishment of one who loans money without procuring a license. The title is:

"An act regulating the business of loaning money in sums of three hundred ($300) dollars or less, * * * fixing the rates of interest and charges therefor; requiring the licensing of lenders, and prescribing penalties for the violation of this act."

All the Constitution requires is that the title of an act shall fairly give notice of its subject-matter to reasonably direct the inquirer to the contents. Allegheny County Home's Case, 77 Pa. 77; Bridgewater Borough v. Big Beaver Bridge Co., 210 Pa. 105, 59 Atl. 697. Certainly the use of the word "penalties" should put the inquirer upon notice that a violation of the statute's provisions would be followed by either civil or criminal punishment, or both.

[5] Neither is there merit in the argument that the act is an improper delegation of legislative discretion to the banking commissioner, by whom the licenses are to be issued. As was stated by the Superior Court, the appeal is not from an act of the banking commissioner, or from his refusal to act, as it is conceded defendant did not apply for a license, or otherwise attempt to bring himself within the provisions of the statute. The mere fact of the commissioner being given power to grant a license to applicants, in his discretion, if satisfied the character and general fitness of the applicant is such as to warrant the conclusion that the business will be honestly conducted, is not a grant of legislative discretion, as the Legislature has fully described the conditions under which he is to act. There are various statutes on our books in which discretion is given to a public official or board to determine the qualifications of applicants for license to carry on a particular kind of business, among which we may refer to the act of March 19, 1909 (P. L. 46), relating to the qualification of osteopathic physicians the acts of June 19, 1911 (P. L. 1067), and May 15, 1915 (P. L. 534), creating a state board of censors of moving pictures (the latter were upheld in Buffalo Branch Mutual Film Corporation v. Brettinger, 250 Pa. 225, 95 Atl. 433), and Franklin Film Manufacturing Co., 253 Pa. 422, 98 Atl. 623), and the act of July 22, 1913 (P. L. 928), creating a live stock sanitary board, upheld in Commonwealth v. Falk, 59 Pa. Super. Ct. 217. In Engel v. O'Malley, 219 U. S. 128, 31 Sup. Ct. 190, 55 L. Ed. 128, the New York Private Bankers' Act, vesting the granting of licenses in the state controller was sustained.

The case of O'Neil et al. v. American Fire Insurance Co., 186 Pa. 72, 30 Atl. 943, 26 L. R. A. 715, 45 Am. St. Rep. 650, relied upon by defendant, is not controlling here; in that case, as we pointed out in Jermyn v. Scranton, 186 Pa. 595, 602, 40 Atl. 972, there was an attempt to delegate to a single individual the power to prescribe a compulsory form of contract between private parties, leaving to the official the full power to prescribe the form and enforce its use.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHEELER v. REMEDIAL LOAN CO. OF PHILADELPHIA.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

Appeal from Superior Court.

Action by William O. Wheeler against the Remedial Loan Company of Philadelphia. Judgment for defendant was affirmed in the Superior Court, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Edward A. Kelly, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Thos. Raeburn White, T. Henry Walnut, and Harry D. Wescott, all of Philadelphia, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. In this case plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendant in an action to recover the difference between the amount defendant charged plaintiff for a loan and the amount due with interest computed at the rate of 6 per cent. The question raised involves the constitutionality of the act of June 17, 1915 (P. L. 1012), and as that question is fully discussed and determined in Commonwealth v. Puder, 104 Atl. 505, nothing additional need be added here.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re WICKERSHAM'S ESTATE. (No. 1.)

Appeal of GOWEN.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. WILLS \S 740(4) — AGREEMENT BETWEEN LEGATEES—PERSONS AFFECTED.

Where testator left estate in trust to pay certain sums to his children if alive, and on their death leaving issue to pay the same sum to children appointed by will of their parents, and in default of appointment in equal shares, and children of testator agreed as to distribution of the income during their lives, agreement was valid as to them, but did not affect the grandchildren.

2. WILLS \S 523—CONSTRUCTION—CLASS—OR—AND.

A bequest to "children or grandchildren" held to be read as one to "children and grandchildren," and hence to a class, and not to individuals.

3. WILLS \S 524(6) — TIME OF ASCERTAINMENT OF CLASS.

A bequest to a daughter for life, and thereafter to her children or grandchildren her surviving, meant children and grandchildren living at death of life tenant.

4. PERPETUITIES \S 4(3)—VESTING—VALIDITY.

That life estates given by will might extend to a greater period than the period fixed by the rule against perpetuities does not affect their validity, if they vest within the time required by the rule.

5. WILLS \S 74—PARTIAL DISPOSITION OF ESTATE.

A testator may bequeath the income of his estate for a certain period without disposing of the principal, which in such event passes to his heirs at law.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Philadelphia County.

In the matter of the estate of Morris S. Wickersham. From a decree dismissing exceptions to adjudication, Morris W. Gowen appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Lester B. Johnson and Lewis H. Van Dusen, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. George J. Edwards, Jr., of Philadelphia, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This appeal involves the construction of certain provisions in the last will of the late Morris S. Wickersham, of Philadelphia, who died in September, 1883. By the will testator's entire estate, aside from some specific bequests, is given to his executors, in trust, for certain declared purposes; among others, it states:

"Fourth. To pay my daughter, Ive, during the term of her natural life the sum of eighty-three dollars and thirty-three cents on the first day of each and every month, and upon her death leaving issue surviving her then I direct that the said eighty-three dollars and thirty-three cents shall be paid monthly and in such amounts to such of her children as she may direct and appoint by her last will and testament or any writing in the nature of a last will and testament. In default of said appointment I direct that the said sum of eighty-three dollars and thirty-three cents shall be paid to her children share and share alike monthly during the term of their natural life. In case of the death of my daughter Ive without issue her surviving then I give devise and bequeath the said sum of eighty-three dollars and thirty-three cents to my hereinafter mentioned executors in trust for the uses and purposes following.

"Fifth. To pay all the income of my said residuary estate to my daughter Mary during her natural life, and upon her death leaving children or grandchildren her surviving then I direct that the said income from my residuary estate be paid to such of her children or grandchildren and in such proportions as she may direct and appoint by her last will and testament or any writing in the nature of a last will and testament. In default of such appointment I direct that the said income from my residuary estate be paid to her children or grandchildren share and share alike during the term of their natural life. The grandchildren to take but the share that their parent would be entitled to if living. In the event of the decease of my daughter Mary without children or grandchildren her surviving then I give and bequeath the whole of the income from my residuary estate to my executors hereinafter named, in trust for the uses and purposes hereinafter set forth.

"Item Sixth. In the event of my said daughter Mary dying without children or grandchildren her surviving I give and bequeath the income of my residuary estate in equal moieties or half parts to my brother Samuel M. Wickersham and my son-in-law the Marquis Louis Carlo Taffini d'Acceglio their heirs and assigns forever. I make this devise moreover it being my desire that an intestacy should never occur as to any part or portion of my estate."

Besides the two daughters, testator left a son, to whom he gave a life annuity. The son died in 1901, Mary in 1911, and Ive in 1916. In December, 1883, an agreement was made, to which the three children were parties, by which they renounced their respective rights under the will and agreed to share equally in the income from the estate during life, and thereafter for a like division of the estate among their children. This agreement, which left the estate in the hands of the trustees, was faithfully carried out until the death of testator's children. Ive left one child, the appellant, Morris W. Gowen; and Mary left as her only child Kate Nassall-Rocca, and no issue of a deceased child. Ive left a writing in the nature of a last will, which says:

"I do give, devise and bequeath all my property, real, personal or mixed, of whatsoever kind and wherever situated, of which I may die possessed or over which I may have any power of appointment under the will of my father, Morris S. Wickersham, deceased or otherwise, unto my son, Morris W. Gowen."

Mary died intestate, without exercising the power of appointment conferred by her father's will. Ive's son and Mary's daughter were born before the death of their grandfather and are mentioned by name as legatees in his will. They and the three children of testator's son now constitute the heirs at law of said Morris S. Wickersham, deceased.

[1] In the adjudication by the court below, the trust created by testator's will is sustained, and it is held, in effect, that thereunder Morris W. Gowen is entitled for life to the $83½ per month and Kate Nassali-Rocca to the balance of the income of said residuary estate; and that the time for the distribution of the principal has not arrived. The adjudication seems well-founded; for, while the agreement may have been valid as to testator's children, it does not affect grandchildren, who were not parties thereto, and who take under their grandfather's will, directly or by virtue of a power of appointment therein given. Ive's execution of the power was by testamentary writing and in favor of her son; but, in our opinion, whether valid or invalid, the result would be the same, for Morris W. Gowen as Ive's only child, would take the life annuity under the plain terms of the original will, and that is all he could take under the power of appointment, for, taking together the entire provision for Ive's children, it only extends "during the term of their natural life." And in either event the annuity vested in him on the death of his mother, so as to that the rule against perpetuities has no application.

[2-4] But it is strenuously urged that the bequest to Mary's children or grandchildren violates the rule against perpetuities and is invalid. That depends upon the time of the vesting of the bequest. If that be within the life or lives in being and 21 years thereafter, the gift is good, although its enjoyment be deferred or continued beyond that time. See Edwards's Estate, 255 Pa. 358, 90 Atl. 1010; Lawrence's Estate, 136 Pa. 354, 20 Atl. 521, 11 L. R. A. 85, 20 Am. St. Rep. 925; Rhodes' Estate, 147 Pa. 227, 23 Atl. 553. We here construe the word "or" in the bequest as "and," so it will read "children and grandchildren," thus forming a class. Then the rule applies that a gift to a class upon the termination of a life estate includes members of the class born after the testator's death. Edwards's Estate, supra. This would embrace all of Mary's surviving children and grandchildren, subject to the provision that the grandchildren take but the share their parent would be entitled to if living—that is, if living at Mary's death. It is then that the income of the residuary estate vests in her children and grandchildren, and that is the time to ascertain the members of the class. "If living" means if living at Mary's death, and not at some remote period. Had the bequest to such children and grandchildren been presently payable at testator's death, it would have included only such as were then in existence; but, being payable or vesting at the death of the first taker, it embraces those born meantime. However, only the income for life is given Mary's children and grandchildren, and that having passed to those in existence at her death, there is no reason for construing the will so as to include grandchildren thereafter born or whose parents thereafter die. A life estate vesting in a surviving child under the will, as a member of the class, becomes extinct at his death, and does not pass on to his children.

Taking the will as a whole, in our opinion it includes only such of Mary's grandchildren as might at her death stand in the place of a deceased child. So construed it does not transgress the rule against perpetuities; for, the life estate having vested in the children and grandchildren within the time, the fact that it might extend beyond is immaterial. The rule is tested by the possible, not actual, events, and, when so considered, if the bequest offends as to any member of a class it is void as to all. Coggins' Appeal, 124 Pa. 10, 16 Atl. 579, 10 Am. St. Rep. 565. The presumption is that a testator does not intend to violate the rule against perpetuities, and that is a strong reason for a construction that will not. Rhodes' Estate, supra. If, in connection with a certain devise, a testator expresses a desire to avoid an intestacy as to any part or portion of his estate that does not enlarge, to a fee, estates given to others for life in former clauses of the will; nor does the expression of such desire indicate an intention of transgressing the rule against perpetuities.

This will was before Judge Ashman in the orphans' court shortly after Mr. Wickersham's death, and the final conclusion then was that it did not violate the rule against perpetuities, but created an intestacy. The decree of distribution there made, however, was based upon the agreement above mentioned. For that reason, and because the parties now before the court were not then represented, nor parties to the agreement, and because there is a different fund now for distribution, the rights of these litigants are not concluded by that adjudication. See Kellerman's Estate, 242 Pa. 3, 88 Atl. 865. In our opinion it is not necessary here to invoke the rule established by Whitman's Estate, 248 Pa. 285, 93 Atl. 1062, and other cases that life estates will not be disturbed because ultimate limitations may transgress the rule against perpetuities. The gift of the income, unlimited in duration and with no gift over, will carry the principal; but that rule cannot apply here, as the income is given only for the natural life of the beneficiaries, except as to the alternative bequest which can never take effect.

[5] A testator may bequeath the income of his estate for a certain period without disposing of the principal, which in such event passes to his heirs at law; and that is this case. Morris W. Gowen is entitled to his life annuity, and Kate Nassali-Rocca is entitled to the balance of the income of the residuary estate during her life; then in our opinion the estate will pass to the heirs of Morris S. Wickersham, deceased, under the intestate laws.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the decree is affirmed, at the costs of appellant.

In re WICKERSHAM'S ESTATE. (No. 2.)Appeal of NASSALI-ROCCA.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Philadelphia County.

In the matter of the estate of Morris S. Wickersham. From the decree dismissing exceptions to adjudication, Kate Nassali-Rocca appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

George J. Edwards, Jr., of Philadelphia, for appellant. Lester B. Johnson and Lewis H. Van Dusen, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

WALLING, J. In the opinion filed herewith on the appeal of Morris W. Gowen, from the same decree (In re Wickersham's Estate, 104 Atl. 506), we have considered the questions here raised, and, for reasons there given, this appeal is dismissed, at the costs of the appellant.

AHRENS et al. v. CITY OF READING.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 8, 1918.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §874(6) — CONTRACT FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT—DECISION OF ENGINEER—CONCLUSIVENESS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

A provision in a contract with a city for a public improvement that the decision of the city engineer shall be final in all disputes between the parties, and that he shall determine the amount or quantity of the several kinds of work which are to be paid for and the compensation, will not prevent submission of an action to recover for extra work to the jury, where the issue as to whether the engineer acted within the authority conferred on him by the contract was involved.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Berks County.

Action by H. E. Ahrens and W. B. Ahrens, trading as H. E. Ahrens Company, against the City of Reading. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Jefferson Snyder and Wellington M. Ber-tolet, both of Reading, for appellant. Isaac Hlester and John B. Stevens, both of Reading, for appellees.

MOSCHZISKER, J. The plaintiffs sued to recover on a written contract with the city of Reading for the construction of filter beds, claiming $23,780.00. They obtained a verdict for $15,831.02, upon which judgment was entered, and defendant has appealed.

About three-fourths of the amount sued for represents the contract price of additional work and material furnished by plaintiffs, which entered into the construction of foundations and flooring of the filter beds; and the remaining one-fourth, the stipulated price of additional concrete used by plaintiffs in erecting the roofs of these beds. We shall consider the two items of claim separately and in the order named.

As to the first item, the contract in question provides, inter alia:

"Wherever excavations are carried on beyond the lines and grades furnished by the engineer, the contractor shall, at his own expense, refill such places with concrete or other material selected by the engineer. Wherever materials are encountered which are not suitable for supporting the structures, the excavation shall be carried to such additional depth as may be specified by the engineer. Excavation and concrete necessary for such additional depth will be paid for [by the city] at the prices bid [by the contractor] for excavation and concrete masonry."

At the trial, plaintiffs claimed and gave evidence to prove that, during the course of preparing the grounds for construction of the beds, defendant's engineer in many instances determined that rock material "encountered" was not suitable "for supporting the structures," and, for that reason, directed the excavations be carried to additional depths specified by him; that, in obedience to and in accordance with these directions, they (the plaintiffs) were obliged to make additional excavations to the extent claimed for in this suit. On the other hand, the defendant contended and presented evidence to prove that, whenever its engineer decided that materials encountered were not suitable for support, and ordered additional excavations, these were allowed and paid for; that as a matter of fact the particular additional excavating here in question was necessitated by the negligence of plaintiffs in blasting out rock, and was not in any sense caused by "encountering" unsuitable "material."

Thus clear issues of fact arose, which were tersely and properly submitted to the jury. The defendant contends, however, that no evidence should have been received on these issues, and that they ought not to have been submitted to the jury, because of two clauses contained in the written contract: (1) A provision to the effect that "the decision of the engineer shall be final and conclusive in all disputes and disagreements which may arise between the parties to this agreement." (2) A stipulation that "the engineer shall in all cases determine the amount or quantity of the several kinds of work which are to be paid for * * * and the * * * compensation to be paid," and certify accordingly.

In receiving testimony and charging the jury, the learned trial judge properly acted upon the theory that the engineer, when rendering his decisions, was "bound to * * * give due effect to the terms of the contract and not * * * to depart from them or substitute something else in their place"; and therefore, wherever additional excavations were made because materials were encountered which were not suitable for supporting the structures, and these excavations were carried to depths specified by the engineer, the latter, under the terms of the contract, was obliged to make allowances of extra compensation to plaintiffs, at the prices named in the agreement, citing Drhew & Beel v. Altoona, 121 Pa. 401, 15 Atl. 636; Coryell v. Dubois Boro., 226 Pa. 103, 75 Atl. 25. Again, in refusing judgment n. o. v. the court below properly sustained the theory upon which the case had been tried, and correctly held that the "disputes" involved were really between the contractors and the engineer, as to whether or not the latter had specified the additional depths in question and concerning his stated reasons for so doing, if done; and since there was no denial as to the execution of the work in question or as to the prices to be paid therefor, if any, the court below did not err in applying the principle laid down in Smith v. Cunningham Piano Co., 239 Pa. 496, 501, 86 Atl. 1067, and the authorities there cited, governing cases of this kind.

The syllabus of the Smith Case states the rule thus:

"Where * * * the controversy is mainly as to the conduct of the architect himself, there being evidence tending to show that he was capricious and unreasonable in refusing to approve of work that had been done in strict accordance with his directions, the question is for the jury, and the latter is properly instructed that the arbitration clause in the * * * contract referred to questions arising between the contractor and owner, and not to questions that concerned the performance of duties by the architect himself."

Here, if as a matter of fact the excavations claimed for were made on and in accordance with the order of the city engineer, following his decisions that materials had been encountered which were "not suitable for supporting the structures" (and the jury has so found), it follows as a matter of law that plaintiffs would be entitled to payment; and a refusal of the engineer so to certify would not be the exercise of arbitral jurisdiction, but simply a capricious attempt to deprive plaintiffs of their contractual rights. Hence, notwithstanding the arbitration and certificate clauses contained in the written agreement, the case was for the jury, to determine the beforementioned facts regarding the conduct of defendant's engineer.

In view of the conclusion just stated, it becomes unnecessary to consider the other point discussed in the paper books, as to whether or not, since the contract contains a provision that the engineer's payment certificates shall be subject to review and correction by a board representing the defendant city, the arbitration and other clauses above referred to could, under any circumstances, interfere with the right to trial by jury.

On the second branch of the case, concerning plaintiffs' claim for additional concrete entering into the construction of the filter-bed roofs, the written agreement provides, inter alia, that concrete shall be "wetted and mixed to form a stiff paste"; but plaintiffs claim defendant's engineer compelled them to mix it in a loose, liquid state, that the prescribed molds for holding the substance were not adapted to this fluid condition, and hence that the use of a greater quantity of concrete became necessary. The contract stipulates, where quantities shall be increased from any cause which may enhance the expense of construction, "such increase shall be paid for at the rates herein provided."

In disposing of the claim in hand, the court below well says that the charge explicitly limits the jury's allowances on this account to occasions where the necessity for increasing the quantity of concrete arose purely from a change in the consistency thereof ordered by the city's engineer, and forbids allowances where the use of additional material was traceable to any shortcomings or omissions on the part of plaintiffs themselves; and President Judge Endlich adds:

"It is by no means clear, from the size of the verdict rendered, that the jury allowed plaintiffs anything on this item of their demand; but, if they did, the allowance must be presumed to have been made in accordance with these instructions."

As stated by the court below, the verdict strongly indicates that the jury made no allowance to plaintiffs on account of the present item of claim; but, be this as it may, after carefully reading all the testimony, we are not convinced of the inapplicability to this branch of the case of the principles already stated in our consideration of the subject of the additional excavations, or that harmful error was committed in submitting the issues involved to the jury.

The assignments are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

WEBBER et al. v. McAVOY.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Aug. 21, 1918.)

1. TROVER AND CONVERSION ¶16—CONVERSION OF LOGS—GIST OF ACTION.

In action of trover for conversion of logs cut from plaintiffs' land, plaintiffs, to maintain action, must show that, at time of alleged conversion they had either actual or constructive possession of the premises; the gist of the action being the invasion of plaintiffs' possession.

2. TROVER AND CONVERSION ¶40(8)—TITLE—PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiffs claimed title to land under a mortgage with full covenants of warranty which had been foreclosed and title under which by reason of certain assignments and other mesne conveyance had passed to plaintiffs, the warranty deed and deraignment of title thereunder are prima facie evidence of title and seizure.

3. TROVER AND CONVERSION ¶16—PRIMA FACIE TITLE.

Prima facie evidence of title entitles plaintiff to recover in trover for cutting timber against a mere trespasser or one who cannot prove better title.

4. PROPERTY ¶9—EVIDENCE OF TITLE—QUITCLAIM DEED.

Where plaintiff claims title under foreclosure of mortgage, a quitclaim deed from mortgagee to mortgagor, of the same date as the mortgage and to which reference is made in the mortgage, does not prove that there is no title in plaintiff.

5. MORTGAGES ¶127—QUITCLAIM DEED—REFERENCE TO MORTGAGE.

Reference in a mortgage to quitclaim deed from mortgagee to mortgagor, dated same day as mortgage, was merely assistance to determine the source of title, and not intended to determine the quality or quantity of title.

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION ¶112—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of proof of title by adverse possession is upon him who alleges it.

7. ADVERSE POSSESSION ¶44—CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION—CUTTING TIMBER.

Cutting timber from wild land and selling stumpage therefrom held insufficient to establish title by adverse possession, where there were intervals of a number of years between every act relied upon; such acts, though open and notorious, being more in nature of acts of trespass long separated in time, and failing to show that continuity of possession or occupation which is required by the common law or which comports with ordinary management of a farm.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, at Law.

Action by Charles P. Webber and others against Richard McAvoy. Case reported. Judgment for plaintiff.

Argued before SPEAR, BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Ryder & Simpson, of Bangor, for plaintiffs. Bertram L. Smith, of Patten, and E. A. Atherton, of Sherman Station, for defendant.

BIRD, J. On report. An action of trover for the recovery of damages for the conversion of certain logs cut from the locus described below in the years 1909 and 1910.

"It is admitted that the alleged conversion was of lumber cut upon the 66 acres lying next easterly of a 100-acre lot located in the southwestern portion of Benedicta or the west corner of lot No. 1, according to Caleb Leavitt's plan."

[1] As the right to the logs depends upon the possession of the locus from which they were cut, the plaintiffs, to maintain the action, must show that, at the time of the alleged conversion, they had either actual or constructive possession of the premises. If they did not have the title, they must show actual possession; the gist of the action being the invasion of the plaintiff's possession. This is familiar law. Thurston v. McMillan, 108 Me. 67, 68, 78 Atl. 1122; Stevens v. Gordon, 87 Me. 564, 566, 567, 83 Atl. 27; 3 Wash. Real Prop. § 1945.

[2, 3] The plaintiffs claim title and possession under a mortgage with full covenants of warranty given by Fayette Shaw and others to the Bishop of the Diocese of Portland. This deed of mortgage, in terms, includes the locus or 60-acre lot. The mortgage has been foreclosed, and the title thereunder, by reason of certain assignments and other mesne conveyances, is in the plaintiffs. Such being the case, the warranty deed and deraignment of title thereunder are prima facie evidence of title and seizure and entitle the plaintiffs to recover against a mere trespasser or against one who cannot prove better title or that the mortgagor had no title. Thurston v. McMillan, 108 Me. 67, 71, 72, 78 Atl. 1122; Smith v. Sawyer, 108 Me. 485, 487, 81 Atl. 868; May v. Labbe, 112 Me. 209, 210, 91 Atl. 929; Smith v. Booth Bros., etc., Co., 112 Me. 297, 306, 92 Atl. 103. See, also, Chandler v. Wilson, 77 Me. 76, 82.

[4, 5] The defendant in disparagement of the plaintiffs' title offers the quitclaim deed of the Bishop of the Diocese of Portland to Fayette Shaw and others, of the same date as the mortgage given by the latter and already referred to, and to which reference is made in the mortgage, of all the right, title, and interest of the grantor in the same property described in the mortgage given by the grantees to the grantor. This deed falls far short of proving no title in plaintiff or a title inferior to that of defendant, whose claim of title is considered later. The deed conveys, it is true, only the grantor's right, title, and interest; but it by no means follows that the grantor did not possess a complete and impregnable title. If the fact be otherwise, the defendant must proceed further with his proof. See Jones v. Webster Woolen Co., 85 Me. 210, 27 Atl. 105. The situation of the plaintiff is not that of the defendant in Thurston v. McMillan, 108 Me. 67, 72, 78 Atl. 1122. Nor do we find the reference, in the deed of mortgage to the deed of Shaw et al. to the Bishop of Portland, aught but assistance to determine the source of title, not an intention to determine the quality or quantity of title. Perry v. Buswell, 113 Me. 402, 94 Atl. 483.

The defendant shows no title by deed, but claims title by adverse possession and that the 60-acre lot or locus was and is a part of a lot originally laid out as a 160-acre lot, the other 100 acres constituting the remainder of the 160-acre lot, lying westerly of the 60-acre lot. The evidence does not satisfy the court that the 160 acres in question were laid out in one lot, but rather that they constituted two lots; one of 100 acres and another of 60, or more, acres.

The evidence tends to show that the grandfather of defendant settled upon the 100-acre lot in the southwest corner of Benedicta, cleared and cultivated about 40 acres of land upon its westerly side, and that at his death in 1853 there had been built upon it a log house, a barn, and other outbuildings, all of which had disappeared at the time the case was reported. The easterly line of the 100-acre lot does not appear to have been indicated or established upon the face of the earth, nor do we find the contention of the defendant that the easterly line of the 60-acre lot was so established sustained by a preponderance of the evidence. Neither the 100-acre lot nor the 60-acre lot were inclosed by fences, and both were wild and uncultivated lands, except the westerly 40 acres of the former which are now partly grown up to trees or bushes. Upon the death of the grandfather, his son, Thomas McAvoy, Second, took possession of and occupied the 100-acre lot until his death in 1896. Since the latter date the defendant, son of Thomas McAvoy, Second, appears to have occupied and used the 100-acre lot as his own, or, quoting his own language, has "worked it off and on all his lifetime," claiming title by gift from his father, and not only to the 100-acre lot, but also to the alleged 60-acre lot adjoining. Martin v. M. C. R. R. Co., 83 Me. 100, 103, 21 Atl. 740. The plaintiffs make no claims to the 100 acres.

Upon the 60-acre lot there is evidence of a witness, then 10 years old, that in 1862 the father of defendant cut "quite a large amount of pine." There is also evidence tending to prove that in 1878 the defendant, then a boy of 14, helped his father to haul cedar therefrom, the operation consuming a week's time; that in 1890 the defendant sold the stumpage for bark from the whole of the 160 acres; that in 1895 the defendant sold the stumpage of juniper knees upon the whole 160 acres (but there is no evidence that any bark or knees were removed from the 60-acre lot, under these permits or licenses); that in 1902 the defendant cut cedar from the southeasterly corner of the 60-acre lot and thence westerly to the westerly line of the 100-acre lot, cutting along the south line of the town. Defendant testifies that in his occupation of the premises he always worked up to the east line of the 60-acre lot. These are the only acts done by the father and defendant upon the locus, relied upon by defendant in his counsel's brief.

[8, 7] The burden of proof of title by adverse possession is upon him who alleges it. Batchelder v. Robbins, 95 Me. 59, 67, 49 Atl. 210; Brown v. King, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 173, 180; Lawrence v. Doe, etc., 144 Ala. 524, 527, 41 South. 612. Assuming the acts done upon the so-called 60-acre lot to have been adverse (Alden v. Gilmore, 18 Me. 178, 182; Morse v. Williams, 62 Me. 445, 446), and that all were open and notorious, we think there is a failure to show that continuity of possession or occupation which is required by the common law or which comports with the ordinary management of a farm. In the mind of the court they appear rather to be acts of trespass long separated in time and fugitive in nature. Rangleley v. Snowman, 115 Me. 412, 416, 99 Atl. 41. See Little v. Megquier, 2 Me. (2 Greenl.) 176, 178; Tilton v. Hunter, 24 Me. 29, 33, 34; Proprietors, etc., v. Laboree, 2 Me. (2 Greenl.) 275, 283, 11 Am. Dec. 79; Worcester v. Lord, 56 Me. 265, 269, 96 Am. Dec. 456; Fleming v. Paper Co., 93 Me. 110, 113, 44 Atl. 378; Hill v. Coburn, 105 Me. 437, 446, 447, 75 Atl. 67; Smith v. Sawyer, 108 Me. 485, 486, 81 Atl. 868; Smith v. Booth Brothers, 112 Me. 297, 306, 92 Atl. 103; Rollins v. Blackden, 112 Me. 459, 464, 465, 92 Atl. 521, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 875; Daly v. Children's Home, 113 Me. 526, 528, 95 Atl. 219. See, also, Roberts v. Richards, 84 Me. 1, 9, 10, 24 Atl. 425; Adams v. Clapp, 87 Me. 316, 322, 32 Atl. 911. The law does not undertake to specify the particular acts of occupation by which alone a title by adverse possession can be acquired. Id. The following cases indicate what have not been considered such acts: Frye v. Gragg, 35 Me. 29, 32; Chandler v. Wilson, 77 Me. 76, 83; Hudson v. Coe, 79 Me. 83, 93, 8 Atl. 249, 1 Am. St. Rep. 288; Roberts v. Richards, 84 Me. 1, 10, 24 Atl. 425; Smith v. Sawyer, 108 Me. 485, 486, 81 Atl. 485.

The localities of the various acts of alleged occupation are not shown. Equally barren is the case of evidence that any one or more of such acts were upon the same locality. See Proprietors of Kennebec Purchase v. Springer, 4 Mass. 416, 418, 3 Am. Dec. 227.

The conclusion is that the defendant has not sustained the burden of proof imposed upon him.

Judgment for plaintiff for the sum of $125, as agreed by the parties.

THATCHER et al. v. THATCHER et al.
(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Aug. 28, 1918.)

1. WILLS §439—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

In the construction of a will, the intention of the testator must govern.

2. WILLS §441—CONSTRUCTION—PRECEDENCE.

Where the terms of the will do not expressly or impliedly indicate the testator's intention, the court must be governed by such rules of law as have been established to meet the circumstances of the case.

3. WILLS §684(3)—LIFE TENANTS AND REMAINDERMEN—RIGHT TO STOCK DIVIDENDS.

Under a will giving a residue in trust, to pay the income equally to a widow and to two children for a certain time, and one-third of the remainder to the widow for life, and two-thirds over to the children, the survivor, or his or her heirs, stock dividends on the trust estate would be a part of the capital or corpus; the income alone being payable to the life tenant.

4. EQUITY §54—RULES—APPLICATION.

All rules of equity must necessarily be sufficiently elastic to do equity in a given case; but equity will not adhere to and apply rules which manifestly and clearly will not result in doing equity.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, in Equity.

Bill for instructions by Charlotte W. Thatcher and others, trustees under the will of Benjamin B. Thatcher, against Charlotte W. Thatcher and others. Case reported upon bill and answer. Decree rendered.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and BIRD, HANSON, and PHILBROOK, JJ.

Charles H. Bartlett, of Bangor, for plaintiffs. Charlotte W. Thatcher, pro se. George T. Thatcher, pro se. Charlotte M. Thatcher, pro se.

BIRD, J. In equity. The plaintiffs are trustees under the last will and testament of Benjamin B. Thatcher, deceased. The will was executed March 26, 1906. After sundry bequests the residue and remainder are given in trust to the plaintiffs, who, after the payment of certain annuities therefrom, are directed to pay the balance of the income in equal shares to Charlotte W. Thatcher, wife of the testator, George T. Thatcher, his son and Charlotte M. Thatcher, his daughter. The will further provides that the trust for these last-named beneficiaries shall cease on the 1st day of January, 1920, if any of them live so long, and, if not, upon the death of the last survivor, and upon the determination of the trust "as a whole" the remainder is disposed of by giving the widow one-third for life discharged of the trust, and the other two-thirds outright to the said son and said daughter, or to the survivor, or his or her heirs outright, in case either should die without lineal descendants.

Of the three annuitants, one is already dead, and the two surviving are unaffected by the solution of the question presented.

The plaintiff trustees received from the testator as part of the trust estate, and are owners of 150 shares of the capital stock of the Orono Pulp & Paper Company. On the 16th day of November, 1916, the directors of that company declared from earnings a stock dividend of 33½ per cent. and 50 shares of its capital stock, representing that percentage, have been delivered to the trustees. The trustees, expressing doubt as to the disposition of this stock dividend as between life tenants and remaindermen, ask the instructions of this court. Such, briefly, are the allegations and prayer of the bill of complaint. The defendants by their joint and several answer admit the allegations of the bill of complaint and join in its prayer. The case is reported to this court upon bill and answer.

[1, 2] As in other cases, the intention of the testator must govern. Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 559; 10 Sup. Ct. 1057, 34 L. Ed. 525.

But we find in the will no indication of the intention of the testator, either express or implied from any of its terms.

Under such circumstances, the court must be governed by such rules of law as have been established to meet the circumstances of the case. Unfortunately the courts are not in agreement. But it would be unwise, in the face of such disagreement, for this court to endeavor to declare a new rule or discover a new method of dealing with the situation. We conceive our duty to be to ascertain the rule supported by the most authoritative decisions and best supported by reason.

[3] Three so-called rules have been evolved to meet the situation—the Kentucky rule, the Pennsylvania rule, and the Federal or Massachusetts rule. Roughly, the Kentucky rule gives to the life tenant all dividends accruing from earnings, whenever made and in whatever form declared, while the Pennsylvania rule makes the same disposition of such dividends, except those accruing from earnings made before the death of the testator, when apportionment is made. The third rule, known as the Massachusetts rule, holds that ordinarily cash or money dividends are the property of the life tenant, and that stock dividends belong to the remainderman. Minot v. Paine, 99 Mass. (1868) 101, 96 Am. Dec. 705; Rand v. Hubbell, 115 Mass. 461, 475, 15 Am. Rep. 121. In this rule, the courts of Connecticut, Rhode Island, Illinois, Ohio, the Supreme Court of the United States, and the English courts concur. Brinley v. Grou, 50 Conn. (1882) 66, 76, 47 Am. Rep. 618; Mills v. Britton, 64 Conn. (1894) 4, 12, 29 Atl. 281, 24 L. R. A. 536; Smith v. Dana, 77 Conn. (1905) 548, 550, 60 Atl. 117, 69 L. R. A. 76, 107 Am. St. Rep. 51; Boardman v. Boardman, 78 Conn. (1905) 451, 455, 62 Atl. 389, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779; Board-

In Richardson v. Richardson 75 Me. (1884) 570, 574, 46 Am. Rep. 428, Peters, C. J., states that the decided preponderance of authority probably concedes the point that dividends of stock go to the capital under all ordinary circumstances. If the decided preponderance of authority probably conceded this point in 1884, in the opinion of the learned Chief Justice, we think we are justified in saying now that we believe the Massachusetts rule is supported by the weight of authority, and we need not say of the most respectable and highest character.

These so-called rules have been the subject of many decisions of the courts, and have received treatment at the hands of numerous text-writers and authors of legal literature. To analyze those opposing the Massachusetts rule, and give the reasons upon which they are based, would be of little profit and far exceed the limits of an opinion of the court. To give the reasons for the adoption of the Massachusetts rule would be a work of supererogation. They are found and fully discussed in the cases above cited, and this court feels that it needs to do no more than to call attention to them. It is our conclusion that the Massachusetts rule is sustained by reason as well as by authority.

[4] Attention has been called to the case of Gilkey v. Paine, 80 Me. 319, 14 Atl. 205. This was a proceeding in equity by a life tenant under a trust created by will, in which the life tenant claimed certain shares of stock in the hands of the trustee under a pro rata distribution by a corporation of sundry shares of its own stock. The court held that the shares were purchased by the corporation by an issue of its interest-bearing bonds, and that these shares were therefore no part of the net annual income to which plaintiff was entitled under the will, and dismissed the bill. The court refers to the Massachusetts rule as a very elastic rule in the state of its origin, and cites a departure therefrom in that state. But all rules in equity must necessarily be sufficiently elastic to do equity in the case which may be under consideration. There are few rules that have no exceptions and equity will not adhere to and apply a rule or principle which manifestly and clearly will not result in doing equity (Daland v. Williams, 101 Mass. 571, 573), especially when it is necessary to determine the true character of a transaction (Leland v. Hayden, 102 Mass. 542). See, also, Gifford v. Thompson, 115 Mass. 478, 480. Gilkey v. Paine, supra, while citing Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. 570, 46 Am. Rep. 428, already referred to, does not overrule it, and the expressions in the opinion relied upon as weakening its authority we regard as obiter dicta merely. Neither case decides the point at issue in this case.

The income of a corporation is one thing; that of a trust estate another.

In answer to the request of the plaintiffs for instructions, it is the opinion of the court that the 50 shares of stock issued by the corporation are to be held by the trustees as part of the corpus or capital of the trust estate in their hands, the income thereof alone to be paid to the life tenants.

Decree accordingly.

LE CLAIR v. WHITE, Sheriff.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Aug. 28, 1918.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \Leftrightarrow 2(2) — APPLICABILITY OF UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION TO STATE COURTS.

Const. U. S. Amend. 5, conferring right to prosecution by indictment in case of infamous crimes, is obligatory only on the federal government, and does not apply to the courts of the several states.

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \Leftrightarrow 3—"INFAMOUS CRIMES."

The liability to punishment upon conviction for the commission of crime, rather than the punishment actually inflicted, is the criterion which, as a general rule, renders the offenders infamous at common law.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Infamous Crime.]

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \Leftrightarrow 3—INFAMOUS CRIMES.

Violation of Rev. St. c. 127, § 27, as amended by St. 1917, c. 291, imposing as penalty for its violation a fine of $100 to $500, plus costs of prosecution, and imprisonment for not less than two months and not more than six months, with supplementary imprisonment for six months more in the event of omission of payment of fine and costs, measured by standard of liability to Rev. St. c. 137, § 3, providing that all imprisonments for one year or more shall be executed in state prison, is not an infamous crime, within Const. art. 1, § 7.

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ¶265—"DUE PROCESS OF LAW"—PROSECUTION—INDICTMENT. "Due process of law," as the expression is used in Const. U. S. Amend. 14, does not necessarily require that a state shall prosecute, even for felony, by presentment or indictment by grand jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Due Process of Law.]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ¶251—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—MODE OF PROCEDURE.

The words "due process of law," as used in Const. U. S. Amend. 14, shield the citizen's rights to life, liberty, and property from the exercise of arbitrary governmental power, but do not restrict the state to any particular mode of procedure.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ¶258—INTOXICATING LIQUORS ¶17—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—LIBERTY AND JUSTICE.

Rev. St. c. 127, § 27, as amended by St. 1917, c. 291, forbidding any person to deposit intoxicating liquor or to have it in his possession with intent on his part to sell it in the state in violation of law, and prescribing penalty for so doing, held to violate none of the fundamental elements of liberty and justice underlying our civil and political institutions.

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ¶257—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

A person convicted of violation of Rev. St. c. 127, § 27, as amended by St. 1917, c. 291, after having notice in due form of nature and cause of accusation against her, and after being given adequate opportunity for hearing and defense, and after a trial in accordance with recognized procedure and rules of evidence, was afforded the "due process of law" protection provided for by Const. U. S. Amend. 14.

8. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ¶251—DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Law, regularly administered through courts of justice, is due process, and satisfies the constitutional requisition, under Const. U. S. Amend. 14.

9. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ¶250—EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS.

Rev. St. c. 127, § 27, as amended by St. 1917, c. 291, forbidding any person to deposit intoxicating liquor or to have it in his possession with intent to sell it in state in violation of law, and prescribing penalty for so doing, fits alike the case of every person violating its inhibitions, and does not deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County.

Petition for writ of habeas corpus by Ida Le Clair against T. Herbert White, Sheriff. Petition denied, and petitioner excepts. Exceptions overruled.

Argued before BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Thomas F. Gallagher and O'Connor & Conquest, all of Bangor, for petitioner. Albert L. Blanchard, Ca. Atty., of Bangor, for defendant.

DUNN, J. A statute forbids any person to deposit intoxicating liquor, or to have it in his possession, with intent on his part to sell it, in this state in violation of law. The penalty is a fine within the inclusive limitations of $100 and $500, plus costs of prosecution, and imprisonment for not less than 2 months and not more than 6 months, with supplementary imprisonment, in the event of omission of payment of the fine and costs, for 6 months more. R. S. c. 127, § 27, as amended by St. 1917, c. 291. Municipal and other subordinate courts have jurisdiction; original and concurrent with the Supreme Judicial and superior courts, to try and punish offenders. R. S. c. 127, § 40.

On the 31st day of December in the year of 1917, on proceedings instituted against her by written complaint, Ida Le Clair, of Bangor, was convicted in the municipal court in that city of violation of the legislative enactment. She was sentenced to pay a fine of $200 and costs, to be imprisoned in the county jail for the term of 60 days, and, should she default payment of the fine and costs, to be imprisoned as aforesaid for 6 months additionally. This sentence was vacated by appeal. For noncompliance with an order of the court of first instance to recognize for the prosecution of her appeal before the appellate tribunal, and to abide its judgment thereon, the respondent was committed to jail. In April, 1918, at a Penobscot session of this court, she petitioned for writ of habeas corpus, which petition was denied. In argument of exceptions the petitioner contends that the punishment provided for violation of the statute on which the proceedings against her were founded authorizes the equivalent of sentence to absolute imprisonment for one year; and for as much as the Legislature has commanded, subject to an exception unnecessary to be particularly stated here, that all imprisonments for one year or more shall be executed in the state prison (R. S. c. 137, § 3), therefore the transgression whereof she was accused is a felony (R. S. c. 133, § 11). Expressed somewhat differently, she insists that, within the meaning of the Fifth of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and of a similar provision in the Declaration of Rights in the Constitution of the state of Maine (Const. Me. art. 1, § 7), the crime charged against her is an infamous one, for which she should be held to answer on presentment or indictment of a grand jury, and not otherwise.

[1] The assignment of inconsistency with the provision of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is based on a misapprehension. That amendment is obligatory only on the federal government, and does not apply to the courts of the several states. Hunter v. City of Pittsburgh, 207 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 40, 52 L. Ed. 151; Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, 20 Sup. Ct. 77, 44 L. Ed. 119; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 22 Sup. Ct. 120, 46 L. Ed. 171; Ohio v. Dollison, 194 U. S. 445, 24 Sup. Ct. 708, 48 L. Ed. 1062.

[2, 3] On this branch of the case, the crucial query is whether, in view of the guaranty of the supreme organic law of the state of Maine, the prosecution should have been begun by or before a grand jury, instead of by complaint to the municipal court. The liability to punishment upon conviction for the commission of crime, rather than the punishment actually inflicted, is the criterion which, as a general rule, renders the offenders infamous at common law. Butler v. Wentworth, 84 Me. 25, 33, 24 Atl. 456, 17 L. R. A. 764. Is the crime, measured by the standard of liability to punishment for its commission, an infamous one? Was the petitioner accused of misconduct for which the statute empowers the court to impose a sentence to be fulfilled in no other manner than by the incarceration of the convict in a penal institution for one year? If the answer shall be in the affirmative, then no court had jurisdiction to try and punish her, unless upon presentment or indictment by a grand jury. It is easy to discern that if a criminal were sentenced to the maximum term of imprisonment, and, that punishment endured, he should be detained in jail 6 months beyond, for failure to pay his fine, he would be debarred from personal liberty for one whole year. But no judge in any court prerogative has to say, when he pronounces sentence in such case, that the culprit shall stay one year in jail or prison, unconditionally, positively, and absolutely. There is the test. Detention of a condemned person in jail for failure to pay a fine is only a means provided for the enforcement of the pecuniary penalty imposed by the sentence. Actual payment of the fine itself is the punishment. Imprisonment for default of payment is a mere incident of the fine. It is within the common-law authority of the court to order a sentenced respondent to stand committed pending payment of an imposed fine. The statute fixes the duration of such imprisonment. This "imprisonment" is not a part of the punishment by imprisonment authorized as a penalty for the commission of the crime. Payment of the fine, and imprisonment for not paying it, cannot exist at the same time. Of his own elective preference the convict may remain in jail for nonpayment of the fine. In effect the statute is that, if the malefactor fails or neglects to pay the fine and costs, then, after the expiration of the sentence to unconditional imprisonment, he shall continue imprisoned until payment shall be made, but not longer than 6 months, when he shall go quit. He can sooner discharge himself by paying the fine. At the expiration of the sentence to absolute imprisonment, which at most cannot be prolonged more than 6 months, if the convict should have paid, or if any time within 6 months afterwards he shall pay, the fine and costs, he will find the prison door ready to swing open to his touch. So the answer is obvious. The crime is not an infamous one. The statute does not presume to authorize unconditional imprisonment for the term of one year.

[4-§] Nor is the statute, as the petitioner further claims, inconsistent with the interdiction of those clauses of the Fourteenth Article of Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which are in these words:

"Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

"Due process of law," as that expression is used in the Fourteenth Amendment, does not necessarily require that a state shall prosecute even for felony by presentment or indictment of a grand jury. Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 292, 23 L. Ed. 232. Those words shield the citizen's rights to life, liberty, and property from the exercise of arbitrary governmental power, but do not restrict the state to any particular mode of procedure. They afford protection which the proceedings against the present petitioner fully respected. The statute which creates the offense, and provides for the prosecution of offenders and their punishment, derives its authority from the reserved powers of the state, and violates none of the fundamental elements of liberty and justice which underlie our civil and political institutions. With reasonable certainty it defines what shall constitute infraction of the law. The nature and cause of the accusation against the petitioner as a respondent appear to have been effectively set forth in due form; the respondent has notice thereof, and knew for what she was to be tried. Adequate opportunity was afforded for her hearing and defense. Her trial proceeded in accordance with recognized procedure, agreeably to the rules of evidence. She was convicted by the decision of a competent court, and sentenced to a punishment sanctioned by law. Law, regularly administered through courts of justice, is due process, and satisfies the constitutional requisition. 2 Kent, Com. 13; Hurtado v. California, supra; Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309-326, 35 Sup. Ct. 582, 59 L. Ed. 969.

[§] The statute is not arbitrary. It is not partial. It deals to each his proper share, and fits alike the case of every person within the extent of its authority, who, since the enactment, has violated or may violate its inhibitions. It does not deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 U. S. 101, 18 Sup. Ct. 805, 43 L. Ed. 91.

The petitioner took nothing by her exceptions.

Exceptions overruled.

GOODWIN v. NEDJIP et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Aug. 30, 1918.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS ~~§~~86(1) — VICTUALER'S BOND—VIOLATION.

Victualer's bond, provided for by Rev. St. c. 31, § 2, stipulating victualer should not violate any law relating to intoxicating liquors, was violated where victualer had been convicted of single sale of intoxicants, subsequent to bond, though not at his inn.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, York County, at Law.

Action by Ernest A. Goodwin against Hassan Nedjip and others. On defendants' exceptions from the Supreme Judicial Court. Exceptions overruled, and judgment ordered for plaintiff.

Argued before SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Leroy Haley, of Biddeford, for plaintiff. Clarence Webber and Robert B. Seidel, both of Biddeford, for defendants.

HANSON, J. Action of debt upon a victualer's bond, before the court upon the following bill of exceptions:

"This was an action of debt upon a victualer's bond, for which provision is made in chapter 31, § 2, of the Revised Statutes. The defendants appeared severally, and jointly cravedoyer of the declaration and the conditions of the bond. The conditions of the bond were recited in defendants' plea. Thereupon defendants pleaded performance of such conditions. The plaintiff replied, assigning as a breach of such conditions that the principal in the bond had been convicted of the offense of a single sale of intoxicating liquor subsequent to the date of the bond and prior to the date of the writ. Defendants rejoined as follows:

"The said defendants, as to the said replication to their said plea say that he, the said Hassan Nedjip, has not, at any time since the execution of the writing obligatory declared on in the plaintiff's writ, violated any law of this state relating to intoxicating liquors in, about, or around the premises mentioned in said writing obligatory, or any of the appurtenances thereof, and this they are ready to verify."

"To which rejoinder plaintiff demurred, and the demurrer was joined by defendants. The presiding justice sustained the demurrer, to which ruling the said defendants except, and pray that their exceptions may be allowed."

The condition of the bond is that:

"Whereas, the above-bounden Hassan Nedjip has been duly licensed as a common victualer at No. 1 Main street, within said city [Biddeford], until the day succeeding the first Monday of May next: Now, if in all respects he shall conform to the provisions of law relating to the business for which he is licensed, and to the rules and regulations as provided by the licensing board in reference thereto, and shall not violate any law of the state relating to intoxicating liquors, then this obligation shall be void; otherwise, shall remain in full force."

The contention here is over the following clause in the condition of the bond: "And shall not violate any law of the state relating to intoxicating liquors." And but one question is raised: Does the bond apply to the place licensed, only? The defendants claim that such clause is to be interpreted as meaning "in, about, or around the premises licensed," and cite and rely upon Clements v. Smith, 128 App. Div. 859, 113 N. Y. Supp. 55, where action was brought against the principal and the Federal Surety Company under a bond issued by the latter under the provisions of the Liquor Tax Law. The bond was in the usual form, and, after reciting the purpose and location of the business, provides:

"That if the said liquor tax certificate applied for is given unto the said principal, and the said principal will not, while the business for which such liquor tax certificate is given shall be carried on, suffer or permit any gambling to be done in the place designated by the liquor tax certificate in which the traffic in liquors is to be carried on, or in any yard, booth, garden, or any other place appertaining thereto or connected therewith, or suffer or permit such premises to become disorderly, and will not violate any of the provisions of the liquor tax law, then the above obligation to be void; otherwise, to remain in full force and virtue."

The trial court directed a verdict for the defendant, and the decision of the appellate court sustained the action of the lower court, upon the ground that:

"Any other ruling would tend to defeat the very purpose of the Liquor Tax Law as a revenue measure, by making it practically impossible for any man to get sureties. The bond clearly related and was confined in its operations to the premises for which the liquor tax certificate was issued. This was the fair contract of the surety company. It undertook to guarantee that, as to the premises which were to be licensed for the traffic, there should be no gambling and no disorderly conduct, and generally that there should be no violations of the conditions of the license."

We have stated enough of that opinion to demonstrate that the cases are not similar in fact or principle. The difference in the wording of the bond, and the decided difference in public policy, in the two jurisdictions, touching sources of state revenue, makes clear the distinction drawn by us that, while that ruling has the support of the case quoted, we cannot so hold it to be the law governing the case at bar. We are in agreement with the finding that the clause in the bond in that case, which reads, "and will not violate any of the provisions of the liquor tax law," was one of the conditions of the license, and a condition of the bond. So we must hold here. The like clause in the bond in suit was one of the conditions of the bond, and was violated by the defendant by the sale of intoxicating liquors at another place within the state. The permission to conduct an inn is not granted to all who may apply for a license; it is not a right to be exercised by one at will, but a privilege to be exercised when granted by municipal officers. The last-named officers may not at will grant such license; their duty is defined by statute, and they may issue licenses to such persons only as are of good moral character. The licensee must possess such character to be entitled to a license. To maintain such license, he must continue to be of good moral character. If during the term of the license he engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquor in this state, then he violated his license; there was a breach of the bond for which both principal and sureties are liable. Our conclusion proceeds from different premises; not revenue, but the safety and security of the public. Good moral character is a prerequisite; the defendant could receive no license without it. He must be presumed to have been of good moral character at the date of the bond. In any event, the condition of the bond relating to intoxicating liquors was known to the sureties, as it was to the principal. It was in the bond, and related to the contract he was making with the public, that during the period of his license he would conform to the law relating to the business of an innholder, and to the rules and regulations as provided by the licensing board in reference thereto, and "shall not violate any law of the state relating to intoxicating liquors."

If the Legislature did not intend to include territory beyond the confines of the inn, and the only purpose was to guard the integrity of the license, then the language used was wholly unnecessary, for other provisions of the statute would serve that purpose as effectually. We cannot read into the bond in suit the words written in Clements v. Smith, supra, and say that the bond related to the inn alone. The words are of broader scope, and can mean only that the defendant will sell no liquor anywhere in Maine during the term of his license. The bondsmen agreed to this, and all the parties are bound by the rule that, when persons under no disability enter into a contract on a sufficient consideration, an action will lie for its breach. This doctrine is applicable to bonds equally with other contracts. 4 R. C. L. 55; Carey v. McKay, 82 Me. 516, 20 Atl. 84, 9 L. R. A. 113, 17 Am. St. Rep. 500. See Dexter v. Blackden, 93 Me. 473, 45 Atl. 525.

The entry will be: Exceptions overruled. In accordance with the stipulation in the exceptions:

STATE v. BUCKWALD.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Aug. 30, 1918.)

1. PROSTITUTION. §4 — ACCEPTING MONEY FROM PROSTITUTE—REPUTATION—STATUTE.

In a trial on an indictment under Rev. St. c. 128, § 16, for accepting money from a prostitute, evidence that the reputation of the house where the woman stayed during a period of about six months was that of a disorderly house was admissible under section 20.

2. CRIMINAL LAW. §371(9) — ACCEPTING MONEY FROM PROSTITUTE—EVIDENCE—SIMILAR ACTS.

In a trial on an indictment under Rev. St. c. 128, § 16, for accepting money from a prostitute, her testimony that within six months from the day alleged in the indictment she had paid over other money to defendant was admissible in proof of the intent.

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION. §110(51) — STATUTORY LANGUAGE—ACCEPTING MONEY FROM PROSTITUTE—"THEN AND THERE."

An indictment for accepting money from a prostitute, in exact words of Rev. St. c. 128, § 16, not expressly stating that money was from earnings as a prostitute, but which began and concluded with the words "then and there," meant that the money was from earnings as a prostitute while engaged in prostitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Then and There.]

Exceptions from Superior Court, Cumberland County, at Law.

Benjamin Buckwald was convicted of accepting money from a prostitute, and he excepts. Exceptions overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Carroll L. Beedy, Co. Atty., and Jasper H. Hone, Asst. Co. Atty., both of Portland, for the State. Wm. C. Eaton, W. C. Whelden, and Henry N. Taylor, all of Portland, for respondent.

HANSON, J. This was an indictment for accepting money from a prostitute, contrary to the provisions of R. S. c. 128, § 16. The case was tried before a jury at the May term, 1917, of the superior court for the county of Cumberland, a verdict of guilty was returned, and the case is before the court on exceptions.

The indictment follows:

"The grand jurors for said state upon their oath present that Benjamin Buckwald of said Portland, on the 15th day of June, A. D. 1915, at said Portland, feloniously did accept, receive, levy, and appropriate, without consideration, from the proceeds of the earnings of Sadie Cohen, of said Portland, a woman then and there engaged in prostitution, money, to wit, certain gold, silver, nickel, and copper coins and divers national bank bills, United States treasury notes and certificates, current as money in the United States of America, a more particular description and the value and amount of which is to your grand jurors unknown, the said Buckwald then and there knowing that said money was from the earnings of the said Sadie Cohen, and that she was a woman then and there engaged in prostitution, against the peace of said state and contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided."

The first exception was to the admission of the following question and answer:

"Q. What was the reputation of 63 Commercial street with reference to purposes of prostitution during the summer of 1915, between the 1st of May and last day of November? Answer. It is a disorderly house."

Second. Sadie Cohen, named in the indictment, was allowed to testify against objection that on the day of her arrival, May 1 or 2, 1915, she engaged in prostitution (before the day alleged in the indictment), and that after May 15th, on various occasions she engaged in prostitution at the place above named, which place was occupied by the defendant and herself, and that she paid over one-half the proceeds thereof to the defendant. Other witnesses testified to similar acts on the part of Sadie Cohen subsequent to the day alleged in the indictment, and the payment by her of money to the defendant. Third: After verdict of guilty and before judgment the defendant filed a motion in arrest of judgment upon the ground that:

"Said indictment is bad, in that it does not set out any offense against the common law or any statute of this state."

[1] As to the first exception: Section 20 of the act provides:

"In any prosecution under the six preceding sections evidence of the general reputation or common fame of a house or place shall be admissible for the purpose of proving that the house or place is one of ill fame, prostitution or assignation."

The language used needs no construction by us to show the intention of the Legislature. Various offenses are mentioned in the "six preceding sections," in any one and all of which section 20 applies; its clear purpose being to make use of, and make admissible, such reputation of ill repute, in the highest interest of society, to the end that such practices as are here in question, and kindred offenses, shall be stamped out. The testimony was properly admitted, and the respondent takes nothing from this exception.

[2] As to the second exception: The respondent claimed as matter of law that the offense charged in the indictment was a single and not a continuing offense, and that while the state was not bound by the date laid in the indictment, but could introduce evidence tending to prove the commission of the offense on any date within six years prior to the finding of the indictment, having introduced evidence tending to prove the commission of the alleged offense on a particular occasion, further testimony relative to separate and subsequent alleged commissions of the offense was not admissible. The cases do not so hold, and such has not been the practice in similar cases. Here the presiding justice ruled, if he ruled at all, as follows:

"My ruling would be that the state may show any similar acts at or about the time alleged in proof of the intent."

Following this, counsel for the respondent asked:

"Within a period of six months; that is the question here, from May 1st to November 1st."

And the court replied:

"Within that period, yes."

The rule is universal that such testimony is admissible for the purpose offered. Moreover, it appears that the presiding justice was very careful to so limit the testimony, which, with all the other testimony and circumstances in the case, were submitted to the jury, and properly so. We find nothing in the case to show error prejudicial to the respondent, and he can take nothing by this exception. State v. Acheson, 91 Me. 240, 39 Atl. 570; State v. Bennett, 117 Me. 113, 102 Atl. 974.

[3] The third exception calls in question the validity of the law itself, and counsel says that it "does not set out any offense against the common law or any statute of the state." His reasoning is that the indictment, which is in the exact words of the statute, does not state definitely that the money claimed to have been paid was, within the meaning of the law, money actually received from the proceeds of the earnings of Sadie Cohen as a prostitute; that, while she may have earned money as a prostitute, she might possess other money from legitimate sources from which she could have paid the respondent, and, if so, the construction of the statute justifies his claim under this exception, because the indictment nowhere states that such money was earned by prostitution. The indictment follows the statute, and at the beginning, and again at the conclusion, uses the words "then and there," which can have but one meaning, and in our criminal proceedings have had but one meaning for a century. As used in the indictment, no doubt can arise in the mind of any person as to the exact meaning of the words being that the money in question was from the earnings of a prostitute while engaged in prostitution.

It is held in State of Washington, Respondent, v. Felix Orane, Appellant (1915) 88 Wash. 210, 152 Pac. 989, the only case before us dealing with a like question under a similar statute, that:

"An information charging, in the language of the statute, the accused with accepting the earnings of one G. B., she then and there being a common prostitute, sufficiently charges the offense of accepting the earnings of a prostitute; it not being necessary to specify that the earnings so given were unlawful earnings accepted for an unlawful purpose, or to state specifically what was received."

The motion was properly overruled. The entry will be:

Exceptions overruled.

PREST v. INHABITANTS OF TOWN OF FARMINGTON.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Sept. 11, 1918.)

1. TOWNS ~~§~~79—SEWER CONTRACT—ACTION FOR EXTRAS—EVIDENCE.

In action for extras for labor and materials furnished under a contract with a town for the construction of a sewer, evidence held to show that the contractor agreed to construct the sewers for the amount of the town's appropriation.

2. FRAUD ~~§~~11(1)—MATTERS OF OPINION.

Where the whole subject in fact rests in the opinion of the parties, and cannot reasonably be understood otherwise, false expressions on either hand do not generally constitute fraud in law.

3. WORK AND LABOR \Leftrightarrow 29(2)—FRAUD—RECOVERY—ASSUMPSIT.

Where a party agrees to do work at a specified sum under a fraudulent representation, he can recover, in an action of indebitatus assumpsit only according to the terms of the contract.

4. FRAUD \Leftrightarrow 31—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—ACTION FOR DECEIT.

A party, agreeing to do work at a specified sum under a fraudulent representation, on discovery of the fraud, may repudiate the contract and sue for deceit.

5. CONTRACTS \Leftrightarrow 168—IMPLIED PROMISE.

Where the parties have made a contract for themselves covering the whole subject-matter, no promise is implied by law.

6. ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF \Leftrightarrow 8—DAMAGES FOR TORT.

The duty to pay damages for a tort does not imply a promise to pay them upon which assumpsit can be maintained.

7. WORK AND LABOR \Leftrightarrow 14(1)—EXCAVATION CONTRACT—FRAUD—RECOVERY FOR WORK AND MATERIAL.

A contractor for excavation work, who early discovered the false representations as to the character of the work, might then have repudiated his contract and have recovered the fair value of the work done and material furnished.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS \Leftrightarrow 747—MISREPRESENTATION BY AGENT—LIABILITY.

A municipality may be made responsible for misrepresentations made by its agent to induce one to enter into a contract with it.

9. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON \Leftrightarrow 2—CONTRACT—DAMAGES ARISING FROM FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.

An action in indebitatus assumpsit upon an account annexed, to recover damages arising from false representations as to the subject-matter of a contract which has not been repudiated, cannot be maintained.

10. TOWNS \Leftrightarrow 79—CONTRACT—LIABILITY FOR ADDITIONAL WORK—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a contractor for the construction of town sewers for an item of extra work, evidence held not to sustain the inclusion of the extra work in the verdict.

11. TOWNS \Leftrightarrow 79—CONTRACT FOR SEWER CONSTRUCTION—EXTRA WORK.

In an action by contractor for sewer construction, evidence held to sustain the allowance of an extra charge for constructing a sewer within and along a street for 200 feet to make a connection.

12. TOWNS \Leftrightarrow 79—CONTRACT—EXTRA WORK AND MATERIAL—EVIDENCE.

In an action by one contracting with a town to construct a pier point, evidence held to require a finding in the contractor's favor for $143.60 for extra work and material.

13. APPEAL AND ERROR \Leftrightarrow 932(1)—PRESUMPTIONS—ITEMS ALLOWED BY JURY.

Where, in a suit for balance due on contract for repairs, a contractor's claim for an extra charge of $25 for keeping a bridge open to travelers during repairs appeared reasonable, it might be assumed, the evidence being conflicting, that the general verdict for $1,347.88 included such item.

On motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Sagadahoc County, at Law.

Action by Charles A. Prest against the Inhabitants of the Town of Farmington. General verdict for plaintiff, and defendants move to set aside the verdict. Motion sustained, unless plaintiff, within 30 days, remit a part of the verdict; in which case, motion overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

McGillcuddy & Morey, of Lewiston, for plaintiff. S. P. Mills and F. W. Butler, both of Farmington, for defendants.

MORRILL, J. This action is brought to recover a balance of $2,241.61 alleged to be due the plaintiff under three independent contracts between plaintiff and defendants, and for extra labor and materials on each piece of work. The aggregate of the contract prices was $4,425; this is agreed to by both parties. The plaintiff gives credit for items aggregating $4,383.70; the defendant claims credit for items aggregating $4,457.20, and it is admitted that the latter amount is correct. In the account annexed to the writ the amounts claimed for extra work and materials on each job are stated in lump sums. It appears, however, from reading the record, that a bill of particulars was prepared and used at the trial before the jury; but it was not made part of the record, and no copy has come to the possession of the court. The jury found a general verdict for $1,347.88, which the defendants now move to set aside, insisting, as stated in their brief statement filed under the general issue, "that no further liability was incurred by them in regard to either piece of work than the contract price." The contracts were not reduced to writing. It is therefore necessary, in passing upon the contentions of the parties, to ascertain from the evidence what were the actual terms of the contracts for each piece of work.

[1] 1. The Sewer Contract.—At the annual town meeting in March, 1913, the inhabitants of the town of Farmington appropriated $3,500 for the construction of certain lines of sewers. In July of that year the plaintiff came to Farmington "to look up the job—to learn what they wanted done." At that interview the selectmen told him "something about what they had to do, just about the same knowledge that I had before I went there," as the plaintiff says in his testimony. At that time the selectmen and the road commissioner showed him over the proposed line. At that visit of the plaintiff to Farmington, or a short time later (the exact date does not appear), the plaintiff made a contract with the defendants to construct an 8-inch, 10-inch, and 12-inch sewer in Front street and Broadway, and from a point at Main street and Broadway southerly to the Exchange Hotel; also to construct a 6-inch sewer from an existing 8-inch sewer in High street extension, along the north and west side of the Old Tannery brook to Perham street. The contract price was to be $3,500, the amount appropriated by the town for that work. Both parties agree that such a contract was made. The part relating to the extension southerly in Main street was modified by mutual agreement. No claim for extra work and materials is made on account thereof, and that charged does not enter into this case. When the first interview was had, the lines of the sewers had not been surveyed and Mr. Prest agreed to obtain an engineer and to throw in his time in assisting the engineer. He accordingly engaged Mr. Pierce, of the Sanders Engineering Company, to run out the lines. At some time a contract for the work was drafted, but never signed. In offering this paper in evidence plaintiff's counsel said:

"This paper I offer, not for the purpose of a contract, because they never agreed. There are some things left out, but as far as establishing the course, it is in here, and there is an admission that the parties were together. That makes the courses admissible. Upon that point there is no disagreement. I offer it for that purpose and no other."

It is to be noticed that counsel said "they never agreed," yet he brings his action to recover an amount due upon a contract price of $3,500. What, then, were the terms of the contract upon which plaintiff now sues? What were the specifications of that contract, which determine the line between work under the contract and alleged extra work?

If the unsigned contract is evidence only of the courses of the proposed sewers, for which purpose only it was offered, there is no evidence whatever of any details or specifications of the contract as made, save only in the particular that the contractor was to connect up existing sewers with the new lines. It does not appear what agreement, if any, the parties arrived at as to the grades, depth, depth of covering, location of manholes, or exact location of intercepted sewers—no specification of location of the sewer as to the water pipes which were known to be in the ground. The conclusion is irresistible that after looking over the ground, with the knowledge which he had when he first came to Farmington, Mr. Prest agreed to construct the proposed sewers for the amount of the appropriation. In fact, he substantially says as much. On page 55 of the record he testifies:

"Q. When did you make your trade with them? A. I don't remember the date. Q. Now, what was your trade? What trade did you finally make with the selectmen? A. Well, I agreed to lay those two sewer lines for $3,500."

This is likewise the version of the selectmen. Mr. Prest's actions are consistent therewith; he offered to procure for the town an engineer to run the lines, and to give his own time as an assistant; he thus had the opportunity to make all tests and to obtain all knowledge of the location which would enable him to do the work properly and profitably to himself. He now brings suit to recover under the account annexed the contract price. In addition to the item for the contract price, he claims in the account annexed the following items:

To extra on 8-inch, 10-inch and 12-inch line, Front and Broadway street to High street.....$386.95
Plus 15 per cent. profit on $386.95.... 50.50

[2] An examination of this claim as tabulated in the brief of plaintiff's counsel shows that it is all for labor of men and teams along and within the limits of lines of sewers covered by the special contract. Recovery is claimed upon the ground that certain representations as to the character of the excavation were made to him by the selectmen, that these representations were material and were false, and that in this form of action he is entitled to recover for the extra cost occasioned thereby. It may well be doubted whether the alleged misrepresentations, if made, were anything more than honest expressions of opinion, or honest statements of fact not purporting to be of knowledge. Holbrook v. Connor, 60 Me. 578, 11 Am. Rep. 212; Gordon v. Parmelee, 2 Allen (Mass.) 212. "Where the whole subject, in fact, rests in the opinion of the parties, and cannot reasonably be understood otherwise, false expressions on either hand do not generally constitute fraud in law." Thompson v. Insurance Co., 75 Me. 55, 61, 46 Am. Rep. 357. It may well be claimed that the plaintiff did not rely, and had no right to rely, upon the alleged misrepresentations, because they related to facts of which he had equal or better means of knowledge than the selectmen had under the circumstances of this case. Patton v. Field, 108 Me. 299, 81 Atl. 77; Savage v. Stevens, 126 Mass. 207. See cases cited in Long v. Athol, 196 Mass. 503, 504, 82 N. E. 665, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 96.

However that may be, and we express no opinion in relation thereto, upon the plaintiff's claim he cannot recover in this form of action.

[3, 4] Where a party agrees to do work at a specified sum under a fraudulent representation, he can only recover, in an action of indebitatus assumpsit, according to the terms of the contract, although, when he discovered the fraud, he might have repudiated the contract and sued for deceit. Selway v. Fogg, 5 M. & W. 83.

So, when a party purchases goods on credit, fraudulently intending at the time of the contract not to pay for them, and the vendor brings assumpsit for the goods sold before the time of credit has expired, the action cannot be maintained, although the vendor might have treated the contract as void and have sued the vendee immediately in trover to recover the value of the goods. By bringing the action in assumpsit, the plaintiff affirmed the contract. Ferguson v. Carrington, 9 B. & Cr. 59.

[5] Where the parties have made a contract for themselves, covering the whole subject-matter, no promise is implied by law. Phelps v. Sheldon, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 52, 23 Am. Dec. 659; Whiting v. Sullivan, 7 Mass. 107; Steam Mill Co. v. Westervelt, 67 Me. 446, 449.

[6] The duty to pay damages for a tort does not imply a promise to pay them, upon which assumpsit can be maintained. Cooper v. Cooper, 147 Mass. 370, 17 N. E. 892, 9 Am. St. Rep. 721.

The evidence fails to show any attitude or action on the part of the selectmen recognizing, or undertaking to pay, the charges for so-called extra work on the sewers, except in relation to an old well and an extension in Perham street, of which we shall speak later. The items appear to have been kept by the plaintiff as showing his loss on account of the alleged misrepresentation. The right of action arises, not on a failure to keep and perform a promise, but upon a false representation. Why, then, should an action of assumpsit be brought? See Noyes v. Loring, 55 Me. 408, 411.

[7, 8] Mr. Prest discovered the true character of the excavation at an early stage of the work, and, if his present contention is true, he might then have repudiated the contract and recovered the fair value of the work done and materials furnished. Selway v. Fogg, supra; Long v. Athol, 196 Mass. 497, 82 N. E. 685, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 96. And it has been held that a municipality may be charged with responsibility for misrepresentations which have been made by its agent to induce a person to enter into a contract with it. Sharp v. Mayor, etc., of New York, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 256.

[9] But an action in indebitatus assumpsit upon an account annexed, to recover damages arising from false representations as to the subject-matter of a contract, which has not been repudiated, is beyond the "furthest venture" noted in Tukey v. Gerry, 63 Me. 151, 153. See Brown v. Starbird, 98 Me. 292, 56 Atl. 902; Gilmore v. Bradford, 82 Me. 547, 20 Atl. 92.

Included in this charge of $336.95 are certain items amounting to $28.59 for labor and materials in filling up an old well or reservoir which was found in the line of the sewer on Broadway. There is some evidence that the selectmen directed the plaintiff to fill this well, and in the absence of any testimony on the point from the selectmen, we think that the jury would have been warranted in finding a promise to pay for that work.

Also, in addition to the item for the contract price, the plaintiff claims in the account annexed, the following items:

To extra work on sewer through the hill from station 4 to station 9, B line, and extra around the hill, station 9, O line, to station 9, B line, and to Perham street, 200 feet of 6-inch pipe.....	$1,062.63
To 15 per cent. profit on the $1,062.63	159.30

[10, 11] Reference to the tabulation in the brief of plaintiff's counsel shows that this item of $1,062.63 is made up of three parts:

(a) Charges for labor of men and for material on 6-inch sewer line through clay hill, August 5 to August 15, 1913, $568.75.

This work was unquestionably a part of the work which was to be done under the contract for $3,500. The line of sewer through the clay hill from station 4 to station 9, B line, was on the course first laid out by Mr. Pierce. The plaintiff bases his claim for this item upon the alleged misrepresentations before considered. It must be rejected.

(b) Charges for labor of men and for material on 6-inch sewer line around the hill, station 9, O line, to station 9, B line, August 18 to August 26, 1913, $272.80.

The plaintiff claims that the original line through the hill, called line B, was changed by order of the selectmen to the line around the hill, called line O, and he gives this item of $272.80 as the cost of laying the sewer for the additional distance. Mr. Prest says that the course of the sewer was changed by the selectmen on account of the depth, and the consequent difficulty and expense of repair, if the sewer should become obstructed. This contention rests on his testimony alone; it is contradicted by three selectmen, and is not supported by the foreman, Mr. Lowery, or the engineer on the work, Mr. Fish. The claim is highly improbable, in that the depth of the sewer on the original B line was known to the selectmen when the work was first laid out. Without discussing it in detail, we may say that the evidence falls far short of sustaining the reason given by plaintiff for the change, and overwhelmingly preponderates against any liability on the part of the town for the additional expense. The difficulty of the digging furnishes the far more probable reason for the change of course. We think that the jury were not justified in including this amount of $272.80 in their verdict, if they did include it.

(c) Charges for constructing the 6-inch sewer within and along Perham street, a distance of 200 feet, $221.08.

The jury was warranted in allowing this item. The northerly end of the 6-inch sewer was given to Mr. Prest as at Perham street. It is true that he was to connect up all the sewers in the Tannery Brook section; but it appears by the testimony of Mr. Titcomb that none of the selectmen knew the exact location of the sewers. To connect with the sewer on Perham street it was necessary to lay the 6-inch pipe for a distance of 200 feet in the street. We think that Mr. Prest should have compensation for that work; the witnesses agree that $1 per lineal foot was a fair price, and the charge does not greatly exceed that estimate.

[12] 2. The Pier Point on Center Bridge.—There was a sharp conflict of testimony as to this piece of work. Mr. Prest claims that the selectmen agreed to pay him $500 to put in a concrete pier point after his own design, and that later Mr. Marble, the selectman who had the oversight of this particular piece of work, directed him to enlarge the structure, substantially increasing the amount of labor and material. Mr. Marble claims that the pier point was to be constructed of specified dimensions; that Mr. Prest began to build a smaller pier than he had agreed to build and, upon complaint being made, voluntarily extended the point upstream. Upon this controverted issue the jury would have been warranted in finding for Mr. Prest; but, while they might so find, there seems to be no reliable basis for estimating the amount of extra work and material, because neither the jury nor the court has any definite knowledge of the size of the pier point which Mr. Prest proposed to build. The only method of arriving at the amount of extra work with approximate accuracy is to take Mr. Prest's estimate of 80 cubic yards for the entire work, and his estimate of the cost at $8.045 per cubic yard. The total cost would then be $643.60, of which $143.60 would be for extra work and material in excess of the contract. This, we believe, would be a liberal finding. Mr. Prest's estimate of cost per cubic yard includes his own time at $10 per day; and his estimate of cubic contents is substantially the same as given by Mr. Mallett, a witness for the defendants, and 20 cubic yards in excess of the estimate given by Mr. Fish, who was in the plaintiff's employment.

[13] 3. Fairbanks Bridge Job.—Here again it is only necessary to say that there was a sharp conflict of testimony, and the jury would be warranted in sustaining the plaintiff's contention. The item includes a charge of $25 for keeping the bridge open to travelers during the repairs, which appears reasonable. We may assume, therefore, that the jury allowed this entire item.

Thus stating the account, it stands:

Sewer job—contract.....	$3,500.00
Extra, Perham street.....	221.08
Filling old well.....	28.59
Pier point job—contract.....	500.00
Extra	143.60
Fairbanks bridge—contract.....	425.00
Extra	220.86
	<hr/>
	$5,039.12
Admitted credits.....	4,457.20
	$ 581.92

To this amount should be added interest from the date when the work was completed, in the winter of 1913-14, to the date of the verdict, substantially 4 years and 2 months, $145.48, making a total of $727.40. Giving the verdict of the jury the full consideration to which it is entitled, the verdict should not have exceeded above amount. The entry will therefore be:

Motion sustained unless, within 30 days after notice of this decision is received by the clerk of courts for Sagadahoc county, the plaintiff remits all of said verdict in excess of $727.40; in which case, motion overruled.

STATE v. CROUSE

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine, Sept. 18, 1918.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \S 71—DESCRIPTION OF OFFENSE—CERTAINTY.

Under Const. art. 1, \S 6, declaring accused shall have right to demand nature and cause of accusation, defendant can insist that facts alleged to constitute crime be stated with certainty and precision requisite to enable him to meet exact charge, and to plead judgment in bar of later prosecution.

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \S 110(3)—STATUTORY OFFENSE.

Generally, indictment for statutory crime is sufficient where it charges in words of statute, but only where statute itself sufficiently describes offense.

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \S 110(4)—STATUTORY OFFENSE.

Indictment for statutory offense in addition to statutory words of general description must, in some cases, set forth such further statement of facts and circumstances as may be essential to identify the particular doing.

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \S 110(7)—ARSON—STATUTE AND CONSTITUTION—"BUILDING."

Indictment for violation of Rev. St. c. 121, \S 1-3, punishing willful and malicious burning of a "building" of another, reading that defendant feloniously, willfully, and maliciously did burn a "building," the property of another, etc., was insufficient to inform defendant of accusation against her, as required by Const. art. 1, \S 6; "building" comprising any edifice erected by man of natural materials.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Building.]

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Knox County, at Law.

Alice Crouse was convicted of arson, and moves in arrest of judgment, alleging exceptions. Exceptions sustained, and judgment arrested.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Henry L. Withee, Co. Atty., of Rockland, for the State. Philip Howard, of Rockland, for respondent.

DUNN, J. "Arson" and kindred crimes are defined by sections 1, 2, and 3 of chapter 121 of the Revised Statutes, the section last mentioned reading:

"Whoever willfully and maliciously burns any building of another not mentioned in the preceding section, * * * shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one, nor more than ten years."

Having been convicted upon an indictment, containing a single count, wherein it is charged "that Alice Crouse, of Rockland, in the county of Knox, aforesaid, on the first day of April, A. D. 1918, at Rockland, feloniously, willfully, and maliciously did burn a certain building the property of Lucy Farnsworth, said building being then and there situate on Pleasant street, in said Rockland," with conclusion in usual form, the defendant moves in arrest of judgment, for the assigned reasons that the indictment does not name or describe the kind or nature of the building alleged to have been burned, and because no judgment can be lawfully rendered on said record.

[1] The memorable and time-honored declaration that, in all criminal proceedings, the accused shall have a right to demand the nature and cause of the accusation (Con. of Maine, art. 1, § 6) entitles him to insist that the facts alleged to constitute a crime shall be stated in the indictment with that certainty and precision of designation requisite to enable him to meet the exact charge, and to plead the judgment, either of acquittal or conviction, which may be rendered upon it, in bar of a later prosecution for the same offense. State v. Moran, 40 Me. 129; State v. Learned, 47 Me. 426; State v. Mace, 76 Me. 64; State v. Doran, 99 Me. 329, 59 Atl. 440, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278. He is of right entitled in the beginning to know, and in after time to point out, if he shall so desire, without going beyond the written record, the distinct crimination. The description of the offense must be certain, positive, and complete.

[2, 3] Speaking broadly, an indictment for a statutory crime is sufficient where it charges in the words of the statute. But this applies only in cases where in the statute itself there is a sufficient description of the offense intended to be created by the Legislature. With admirable accuracy it is stated in Commonwealth v. Welsh, 7 Gray (Mass.) 324:

"A charge in an indictment may be made in the words of the statute, without a particular statement of facts and circumstances, when, by using those words, the act in which an offense consists is fully, directly, and expressly alleged, without any uncertainty or ambiguity."

Mr. Bishop, in his work on Criminal Procedure (volume 1, § 98), says:

"Under every sort of Constitution known among us an indictment which does not substantially set down, at least in general terms, all the elements of the offense—everything which the law has made essential to the punishment it imposes—is void; and, besides this, under most of our Constitutions the allegation must descend far enough into the particulars and be sufficiently certain in its form of words to give the defendant reasonable notice of what is meant."

"Where," as this court said in State v. Doran, 99 Me. 329, 59 Atl. 440, 105 Am. St. Rep. 278, "a mere general or generic term is used, or the statute does not sufficiently set forth the crime, the use of the statutory language is not sufficient."

The rule is that, in some instances, in addition to the statutory words of general description, it is necessary to set forth such further statement of facts and circumstances as may be essential to identify the particular doing. There must be such a description of the crime that the defendant may know just what it is he is called upon to answer; that the jury may be warranted in its finding, and the court, looking at the record after conviction, may impose the punishment which the law prescribed.

[4] Does the indictment in this case meet the requirements that it must, either in the language of the statute or other apt words, so identify the offense as to comply with the Declaration of Rights in the Constitution? It is our opinion that the indictment does not sufficiently inform the accused of the nature and cause of the accusation against her, and that there is legal ground for an arrest of judgment. "The word 'building' is not the distinctive name of a particular structure. It is a comprehensive term. It comprises any edifice erected by the hand of man of natural materials, as wood or stone, brick or marble. As commonly understood, a building is a house for residence, business, or public use, or for shelter of animals or storage of goods. A structure of considerable size intended to be permanent, or at least to endure for a considerable time." 9 Corpus Juris, 683; Bouvier, Law Dict. Any permanent building or edifice, usually occupied by any person by lodging therein at night, is a dwelling house. R. S. c. 121, § 8. A building may constitute an entire block, consisting of separate and independent tenements, one of which may be occupied for a dwelling house and another for a store. State v. Spencer, 38 Me. 32. The gravamen of the indictment is that the respondent feloniously, willfully, and maliciously did burn a building, situate on Pleasant street in Rockland, and owned by Lucy Farnsworth. The accused well may be in doubt, from a reading of the indictment, as to the precise act against which she is called to defend herself; whether, ineffectively, for arson as that crime is defined in section 1; or for having set fire, feloniously, willfully, and maliciously, to any of the buildings told off one after another in the next succeeding section of the chapter, or for likewise burning "any building of another not mentioned in the preceding section." If, as the case is argued, it was the intention to indict the respondent for a violation of the third section of the chapter, then, having reference to the manner in which the crime is defined in and by the statute, a more particular statement of facts than there is contained becomes necessary to bring the defendant precisely within the inhibition of the law. All substantive allegations should be specifically and definitively set out. A description of what was burned is essential to fix the identity of the offense. Com. v. Smith, 151 Mass. 491, 24 N. E. 677.

Exceptions sustained. Judgment arrested.

BOYNTON et al. v. REMSON et al.
(No. 21.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 19, 1918.)

1. USURY §80—EFFECT—MORTGAGE.

Usury does not invalidate a mortgage or affect the power of sale contained therein.

2. MORTGAGES §25(5)—CONSIDERATION.

Mortgagee cannot be deprived of mortgage lien merely because mortgagor did not use the money deposited to his account and stated to a subsequent mortgagee that the prior mortgage would be released because he had not then received the fund to which it referred.

3. MORTGAGES §526(6)—SALES—INADEQUACY OF PRICE.

On exceptions to mortgage sale, evidence held to show that land was sold at an inadequate price.

4. MORTGAGES §528 — SALES — INADEQUACY OF PRICE—WAIVER.

A mortgagor, who consented to the advertisement of his property under a first mortgage, after he found that a third mortgage was being foreclosed, did not thereby waive any valid objection as to inadequacy of the purchase price by reason of conflict and confusion resulting.

Three Appeals in One Record, Consolidated, from the Circuit Court for Anne Arundel County, in Equity; Wm. H. Thomas, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Foreclosure proceedings by Etta L. Boynton and others against Charles E. Remson and others. There were two sales by different mortgagees, and various parties excepted. From a decree ratifying the sales, three appeals are taken. Affirmed in part and reversed in part, and cause remanded.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, PATTISON, URNER, and STOOKBRIDGE, JJ.

Daniel R. Randall, of Baltimore, and Arthur Peter and Fred. B. Rhodes, both of Washington, D. C., for appellants. Charles Clagett, of Baltimore, and Ridgely P. Melvin, of Annapolis, for appellees.

URNER, J. The farm of Charles E. Remson, containing about 300 acres of land and situated near Annapolis was subject, in 1915, to a mortgage for $25,000. Interest on the mortgage debt and taxes on the property being in arrears to the amount of about $1,500, Mr. Remson borrowed the money to meet those charges from Mr. G. Clifton Sunderland, of Annapolis. In order to obtain the sum required Mr. Remson gave his promissory note to Mr. Sunderland for $2,500, secured by a second mortgage on the farm, and the note and mortgage were used by Mr. Sunderland as collateral security for a loan to himself of the same amount from the Annapolis Banking & Trust Company, the proceeds of which he deposited to Mr. Remson's credit in that institution. As previously agreed, Mr. Remson at once paid $1,000 out of the fund to Mr. Sunderland for providing the sum of $1,500 thus left available for the use to which it was intended to be applied. Mr. Sunderland paid one-half of the $1,000 bonus to Mr. George T. Melvin, who as president of the Annapolis Banking & Trust Company had received and submitted to the board of directors the application for the loan, and had individually agreed, for an equal share of the bonus, to bear an equal part in financing the purchase of the property in case a foreclosure became necessary. These transactions were completed on December 1, 1915. On the same day a check for $1,500, signed by Mr. Remson, was mailed from the bank to the representative of the first mortgagee, to be used for the payment of interest and taxes, but it was returned to the bank, with the statement that it would not be accepted. The check thereafter remained at the bank subject to Mr. Remson's disposal. It was not until March 2, 1917, however, that he had the check canceled and made other use of the fund against which it was drawn.

After declining to receive the check referred to, the first mortgagee made an effort to exercise the power of sale in his mortgage, but this was restrained by preliminary injunction, and the mortgage was shortly afterwards paid out of the proceeds of a new mortgage loan of $80,000, which Mr. Remson obtained from Mr. J. Henry Strohmeyer, of Baltimore, by paying therefor a commission or bonus of $3,000 in addition to $895 interest in advance for six months. A further mortgage loan of $8,559.40, for which Mr. Remson appears to have paid a bonus of $1,000 to the lender, was then procured from Mrs. Etta L. Boynton, of the city of Washington. The proceeds of this loan were applied to the payment of judgments and taxes amounting to over $5,300, unsecured debts of about $200, an attorney's fee of $750, and other expenses incident to the two mortgage transactions just mentioned, both of which were conducted for Mr. Remson by his counsel, Mr. Frederick B. Rhodes. As a result of the payment of the $25,000 mortgage, and the existing judgment indebtedness, out of the funds realized from the Strohmeyer and Boynton loans, the Sunderland mortgage became the first lien on the Remson farm. The two subsequent mortgage loans were effected by Mr. Rhodes in the belief that a release of the Sunderland mortgage could be obtained on the ground that the object for which it was given had failed and the fund it produced for Mr. Remson had not as yet been utilized for any purpose. Efforts were accordingly made by Mr. Rhodes, as counsel for Mr. Remson, to accomplish that result; but, while an understanding was reached with Mr. Ridgely

P. Melvin, as attorney for Mr. Sunderland and the bank, that the mortgage would be released upon terms which appear to have been quite moderate, yet the sum agreed upon was not paid, and eventually, as already stated, the $1,500 fund derived from the mortgage loan was appropriated by Mr. Remson to his own use. All of the mortgages had then matured and were in default. An extension of time on the Strohmeyer mortgage was secured, but proceedings were begun for the exercise of the power of sale in the Boynton mortgage by Mr. Rhodes, as attorney, therein named for that purpose; his professional relations with Mr. Remson having previously terminated. In the advertisement of the sale thus undertaken no reference was made to the Sunderland mortgage, but it was stated that the property would be sold subject to a prior mortgage of $30,000. The sale was advertised to be held at the courthouse door in Annapolis at 12 o'clock m. on April 8, 1917. When Mr. Sunderland learned of this proceeding he consulted his counsel, Mr. Ridgely P. Melvin, who represented also the bank, which held the Sunderland mortgage by assignment as collateral security for the $2,500 loan, and, with the consent of Mr. Remson, it was determined to exercise the power of sale in that mortgage so as to anticipate the Boynton sale by which the first mortgage was apparently to be ignored. The Sunderland mortgage was thereupon assigned by the bank to Mr. Melvin as its attorney, who, after filing his bond as required by law, advertised the mortgaged property for sale at the courthouse door in Annapolis on April 8, 1917, at 10:30 o'clock a. m. A suit was brought by Mrs. Boynton to restrain the sale under the first mortgage on the ground that it was invalid, but at a hearing on bill and answer, shortly before the day of the sale, a preliminary injunction was refused. At the Sunderland sale the property was sold for $40,000, and at the Boynton sale, an hour and a half later, it was bought by the same purchaser for $11,000, subject, in terms, to the $30,000 mortgage held by Mr. Strohmeyer. Announcement was made at the Sunderland sale, by an attorney for Mrs. Boynton, that a purchaser at that sale would not obtain a good title, while at the Boynton sale it was publicly stated by Mr. Melvin, representing the first mortgagee, that the property had already been sold.

Exceptions to both sales were filed by Mr. Remson on the ground that, because of the confusion arising from the conflicting sales and announcements to which we have referred, his property was sold in both instances at a substantial sacrifice of its real value. Mrs. Boynton excepted to the ratification of the first mortgage sale upon grounds which will be presently stated and considered. Mr. Melvin, as assignee of the Sunderland mortgage, excepted to the Boynton sale, but the question raised by his exceptions need not be determined. The purchaser also filed exceptions seeking a decision upon the validity of the first mortgage and the ratification of the sale under which it might be found that he would obtain a good title. Testimony was taken in support of the various exceptions, and by agreement the same evidence was treated as being available in the injunction suit relating to the Sunderland mortgage; that case and the exceptions to the sales being brought to final hearing at the same time.

[1] The grounds of objection urged against the sale under the Sunderland mortgage, apart from the question as to the adequacy of the price, are that the consideration mentioned in the mortgage is usurious and fictitious, and that the third mortgage loan was made upon the assurance by the mortgagor that he had received no part of the loan secured by the first mortgage, and that it would be released. In disposing of these objections in the court below, Judge Thomas held that the Sunderland mortgage was not rendered invalid by the fact that the mortgagor was charged $1,000 for the loan, or by the circumstance that the $1,500 fund which the mortgage produced was not used for the purpose for which it was borrowed, and was not actually drawn upon by the mortgagor until long after the second and third mortgages were executed. In this conclusion we fully concur. As Judge Thomas said in his opinion:

"The law is well settled in this state that usury does not invalidate a mortgage or affect the power of sale contained therein. In the case of Md. Fern. Land & Bldg. Soc. v. Smith, 41 Md. 518, the court said that the question of usury 'can only arise upon the statement of the final account by the auditor, and cannot be urged as an objection to the sale,' and in the case of Powell v. Hopkins, 38 Md. 1, we find the same rule stated in the following language: 'The exaction of usurious or illegal interest (if proved by the evidence) does not invalidate the mortgage or affect the power to sell.' * * * The court of equity in which the sale is to be ratified, and the proceeds distributed, has full authority and jurisdiction to adjust the question of interest between the parties.' See, also, Miller's Eq. Proc. p. 563, and cases cited in the note, and Chipman v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank, 121 Md. 343 [88 Atl. 151]."

[2] There was no evidence in the case that the Boynton loan was induced by any statement by Mr. Sunderland or the Annapolis Banking & Trust Company that the first mortgage would be released or that the consideration it recites had not been paid. It clearly appears from the testimony that the bank had in fact loaned to Mr. Sunderland, and the latter had paid to Mr. Remson, the amount of the loan which the mortgage was intended to secure. The fact that the money could not be applied to the objects first proposed, but remained in bank subject to Mr. Remson's order, could not affect the rights of the original holder, or of the assignee of the mortgage, whose money had been actually and unconditionally appropriated to the loan.

They could certainly not be deprived of the security of the mortgage lien merely because of Mr. Remson's statement to the third mortgagee that the Sunderland mortgage would be released because he had not then received the fund to which it referred.

[3] The court below concluded also that the objection to the first mortgage sale on the ground of inadequacy of price could not properly be sustained. With this view we have been unable to agree.

In our opinion the evidence is sufficient to support the contention that the conditions surrounding the sale not only tended to prevent the disposition of the property for an adequate price, but in fact produced that injurious result. It was almost inevitable that the efforts of two mortgagees to sell the same property at rival auctions held on the same day would cause a state of conflict and confusion by which both sales would be seriously prejudiced. In addition to being hampered by the mere fact of such competition, each of the sales was further embarrassed by a public warning against its validity by a representative of the opposing interest. It would be really remarkable if the fair market value of the farm had been realized under such adverse conditions.

The price of $40,000 for which the property was sold under the first mortgage was said by several witnesses to represent, in their judgment, its full value. There was testimony, however, that some years ago the owner had received from separate sources offers of $55,000 and $65,000 for the farm, which he declined. A county assessor testified that the property is worth $50,000 for farming purposes alone, and two other witnesses estimated its value, respectively, at $55,000 and $75,000. It was proven that a prospective bidder, who had visited the property, and had come from the city of Washington to attend the first mortgage sale, even though he had been told by his counsel that the United States government had offered $75,000 for the farm, remained away from the sale after he learned that a second sale was to be made under another mortgage, because he did not wish to become involved in the litigation which would be expected to result from such a conflict of interests. By the advertisements for both of the sales, as well as by the evidence, emphasis was laid upon the fact that this 300-acre farm is exceptionally valuable, not only because of its fertility and improvements, and its availability and actual use for the purposes of an extensive dairy enterprise, but also because of its large water frontage, its adaptability to profitable subdivision, its proximity to Annapolis and the Naval Academy, and its adjacency to the Government Experimental Station and other public property in process of extensive development.

[4] Our review of the case has brought us to the conclusion that the mortgagor's interests have suffered material injury as a result of the concurrent exercise of the powers of sale contained in the first and third mortgages, and of the effort of each of the vendors to discourage bidding at the sale conducted by his competitor. While Mr. Remson consented to the advertisement of his property under the first mortgage, after he found that the third mortgage was being foreclosed, we do not think he should be held to have thereby waived in advance any valid objection he might otherwise be entitled to raise as to the inadequacy of the purchase price reported. In consenting to such a proceeding he probably did not anticipate that the validity of the sale would be publicly contested at the time it was attempted to be made, and he certainly did not agree that his property should be sold for less than it was really worth. According to our conception of the case, a serious loss may result to the mortgagor from the ratification of either of the reported sales, but we are confident that no injustice would be done to any interest in the case if a resale is ordered. The third mortgagee, whose claim will be partly lost if the first sale is confirmed, might be very materially benefited if the farm is resold, and the first mortgagee is amply protected by priority of lien and cannot be injured by a resale of the property under conditions which will admit of its fair market value being realized. The second mortgagee appears to be well secured, and is taking no part in the litigation. The purchaser would apparently lose the benefit of an attractive bargain if neither sale is sustained, but it is not unjust to him to hold that he is not entitled to retain the accidental benefit resulting from the extraordinary and adverse conditions under which both sales occurred.

The conclusion we have reached upon the exceptional facts of this case does not disregard, and is not inconsistent with, the general rule relating to objections to sales on the ground of inadequacy of price as applied in previous decisions of this court. McCarthy v. Hamburger, 112 Md. 40, 75 Atl. 964; Edgecombe Park Co. v. Finney, 121 Md. 326, 88 Atl. 143; Hunter v. Highland Co., 123 Md. 647, 91 Atl. 697; Vollum v. Beall, 117 Md. 620, 83 Atl. 1095, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 16; Carroll v. Hutton, 91 Md. 380, 46 Atl. 967; Shaw v. Smith, 107 Md. 526, 69 Atl. 116.

If Mr. Remson should be unable to refund his existing mortgage indebtedness, and a resale cannot be thus avoided, it should be made alone under the power of sale in the first mortgage, so that the title may be sold clear of all liens and under conditions favorable to a sale that will be advantageous to all parties concerned.

The decree of the court below will be affirmed in so far as it dismissed the bill for an injunction against a sale under the first mortgage and sustained the exceptions to the sale reported under the third mortgage, but, with respect to the ratification of the sale under the first mortgage, it will be reversed.

Decree affirmed in part and reversed in part, and cause remanded, the costs to be equally paid by the first and third mortgagees.

(132 Md. 577)

KERNAN v. CARTER et al. (No. 57.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. April 4, 1918.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE §15(1) — INSANITY OF WIFE—SEPARATE CONVEYANCE BY HUSBAND—VALIDITY.

Where wife was adjudged insane in 1887, an absolute conveyance in 1911 by husband of realty, acquired after inquisition, to a corporation for shares of its stock, although husband was a director or president, could not be set aside in suit by wife's next friend, in view of Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 45, § 13, as to conveyance of property acquired after inquisition.

2. CORPORATIONS §104—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY.

The next friend of wife, whose husband conveyed realty alleged to be worth $1,400,000 to a corporation for 5,997 shares of stock, each a par value of $100, is in no position to complain, there being no fraud, that transfer was not in compliance with Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 23, § 35, as to issuing stock for property, in view of section 36, providing that acceptance by stockholders of property shall be conclusive, in absence of fraud.

3. PLEADING §8(15)—CONCLUSIONS—FRAUD.

While it is unnecessary to set out in the bill all the evidence a plaintiff may have knowledge of, there must be something more than plaintiff's conclusion that a transaction is fraudulent.

4. WILLS §790—RENUNCIATION FOR INSANE WIFE.

Under Code Pub. Civ. Laws, art. 93, §§ 301, 302, as to renunciation by wife of provisions of will within six months after first grant of administration, where husband, who was appointed committee of insane wife, died having made a bequest to her, and will was admitted to probate, a court of equity cannot, three years and nine months thereafter at instance of next friend of wife, make a renunciation for wife, where every one of near relatives were beneficiaries under will, and knew everything necessary to enable proceedings to be taken, in view of section 342 as to will not being subject to objection three years after probate.

5. EQUITY §267—AMENDMENT.

Refusal to grant leave to amend amended bill was in discretion of court.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR §959(1)—REFUSAL TO ALLOW AMENDMENT—DISCRETION.

Refusal to grant leave to amend amended bill being discretionary, there is no appeal from it.

Appeal from Circuit Court No. 2 of Baltimore City; Henry Duffy, Judge.

Suit by Eugenia L. Kernan, by her next friend, against Shirley Carter and others. From an order sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing an amended bill, and from an order refusing to grant leave to amend said amended bill, plaintiff appeals. Appeal from order refusing leave to amend dismissed, and order sustaining demurrer and dismissing bill affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Walter D. Elseman and Isaac Lobe Straus, both of Baltimore, for appellant. Shirley Carter and Thos. Foley Hisky, both of Baltimore (Bernard Carter & Sons, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellees.

BOYD, C. J. This case is before us on an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing an amended bill filed by the appellant, and on another appeal from an order refusing to grant the appellant leave to amend that amended bill. The plaintiff, Eugenia L. Kernan, is the widow of James L. Kernan, who died on the 14th of December, 1912, leaving surviving him his widow and two sons and a daughter. In 1887 the plaintiff was upon an inquisition adjudicated a lunatic upon the petition of her husband, who was appointed by the circuit court of Baltimore city the committee of her person and estate. The finding still remains in force and she is confined in Mt. Hope Retreat, where she has been for many years. The bill alleges that for many years prior to and ever since the death of her husband she "has been and is non compos mentis and incapable of acting for and in her own behalf with respect to any business matters, property rights, or interests whatsoever, and incapable and disabled at all times, both at and since the death of her said husband, from making any election with respect to accepting or renouncing the provisions made for her in his last will and testament," and that "she was and had been and is still disabled and incapacitated from taking any steps whatsoever, from instituting any proceedings, or causing any steps to be taken or proceedings to be instituted, to question or deny the validity of" a deed of trust, a deed of assignment, or a deed of conveyance, which will be later referred to in this opinion. That paragraph of the bill concludes, "and that her disability and incapacity in all the respects aforesaid have been caused by the fact that she has been at all times bereft of her reason and of all understanding of her rights, interests, and matters aforesaid."

On the 20th of April, 1911, James L. Kernan executed a "deed of conveyance" to the James L. Kernan Company of Baltimore City, Incorporated, for a property which is therein described. The lot fronts partly on Howard street and partly on Franklin street, and is improved by a hotel and theater. The property is described as being in fee simple, except a portion of it which is subject to an annual rent of $64. That deed also included personal property, the businesses, franchises, good will, etc. The consideration is stated to be 5,000 shares of preferred stock of the James L. Kernan Company of the par value of $100 each, and 997 shares of the common stock of that company of the same par value, all of which stock is said in the deed to have been issued and certificates thereof delivered to said Kernan, in accordance with a resolution of the stockholders duly passed at a meeting held in Baltimore on the 15th of April, 1911, in compliance with the provisions of section 35 of article 23 of the Code. The deed also refers to a decree of the circuit court of Baltimore city, dated January 28, 1887, being the proceeding in which the plaintiff was adjudicated a lunatic, and to section 13 of article 45 of the Code, for the right of the grantor to sell and convey the real estate.

On the 20th of April, 1911, being the same day the deed of conveyance was made, a "deed of trust" was made by said Kernan, as party of the first part, to Frederick C. Schanberger and Shirley Carter, parties of the second part, in which it is recited that whereas the party of the first part had granted and assigned to the parties of, the second part, upon the trusts therein set out, the 5,000 shares of preferred stock, and he was about to cause the same to be transferred to them on the books of the company, and desired to have the trust upon which they were granted and assigned fully set out in that instrument of writing, so that the same might be recorded, therefore, in consideration of the premises and of the sum of $10, he granted, bargained and sold, assigned, transferred, and confirmed unto the parties of the second part, and the survivor of them, and the successors of the survivor of them, as therein provided for, the 5,000 shares of preferred stock in trust for the purposes therein set forth. They were to hold the said shares of stock, collect the dividends and income, and pay over the net dividends and income therefrom to the said Kernan during his life, and after his death to hold said shares for the following purposes: To collect and pay over the net dividends and income from 3,400 shares of that stock to the James Lawrence Kernan Hospital and Industrial School of Maryland for Crippled Children, during the joint lives of the trustees, and upon the death of either of them the survivor to transfer and assign the said 3,400 shares to said Hospital and Industrial School. It was then provided that of the remaining 1,600 shares of preferred stock they were to hold 534 shares for each of his two sons and 532 shares for his daughter. The provisions of the trusts for each of them are set out at length, and under certain contingencies the share left to a son or daughter was to go to St. Agnes Hospital.

On the 22d of April, 1911, he made what is spoken of as a "deed of assignment," in which he stated that he had assigned to Frederick C. Schanberger 385 shares of the common stock of the James L. Kernan Company, absolutely, and to Shirley Carter 165 shares of said stock, absolutely, and to himself 447 shares for life, with remainder as to 315 of them to said Schanberger, and as to 132 shares to said Carter, and he desired to have said transactions evidenced by that deed so that it could be duly recorded. The deed then, in consideration of $5; assigned and transferred said stock according to what was stated in the preamble. All of the deeds were promptly put on record.

On the 24th of June, 1911, James L. Kernan executed his last will and testament, by which he gave to Bernard Carter and Shirley Carter, and to the survivor of them, $20,000 in trust to invest and reinvest the same from time to time, to collect the income therefrom, and apply the net income, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, to the proper maintenance and support of his wife for and during the term of her natural life, and from and after the death of his wife, and after the payment of her funeral expenses, to divide the corpus of said $20,000 and any accrued income therefrom into two equal shares, and to pay one share absolutely to St. Agnes Hospital and the other to the Institute of Mission Helpers of Baltimore City, to be applied by it to the education and care of the deaf and dumb or otherwise afflicted children under its care. He then left $3,000 to each of his two sons, and said he did not make a bequest to his daughter because he had his life insured and held the policy for her benefit. He made the James L. Kernan Company of Baltimore city his residuary legatee and devisee. He appointed Messrs. Bernard Carter and Shirley Carter, and the survivor of them, executors of his will, which was probated on December 18, 1912, and letters testamentary were granted to Shirley Carter, the survivor.

[1] The bill asks the court: (1) To renounce the provision made for the plaintiff in the will, and elect to take and receive, in lieu thereof, the share allowed her by law in the personal property of the estate, belonging to her husband at the time of his death; (2) to decree and declare that said Kernan died seized of all the real estate mentioned in the deed of conveyance of April 20, 1911, and that she is entitled to dower therein; (3) that the three deeds be declared null and void, and that the plaintiff be declared and decreed to be entitled to one-third of the personal estate and her dower rights in all real property of which her husband died seized; (4) that the bequests and gifts in the residuary clause of the will be declared null and void; (5) that the executor be required to pay over to a trustee to be appointed her legal share, interest, and portion of all the personal estate of which her husband died possessed; (6) that the court direct such further proceedings as may be proper and necessary to assign the plaintiff her dower; (7) that there be an accounting with the defendants who have received profits, revenues, income, or interest to which she was entitled; and (8) for general relief.

Section 13 of article 45 provides that:

"Where any married man or married woman is a lunatic or insane, and has been so found upon inquisition and the said finding remains in force, or where any married man or married woman has been absent or unheard of for seven years, the husband or wife of such lunatic or insane or absent person may grant and convey by his or her separate deed, whether the same be absolute or by way of lease or mortgage, as fully as if he or she were unmarried, any real estate which he or she may have acquired since the finding of such inquisition or since the beginning of such absence."

Mr. Kernan unquestionably had the power to convey the real estate included in the deed of conveyance of April 20, 1911, by virtue of that provision of the Code—having acquired it after the finding of the inquisition. There is no reservation whatever in the deed in his favor, but it was an absolute deed for a valuable consideration. Under the decisions in this state a husband can dispose of his personal property during his life, even if it be done with an intent to defraud his wife of any interest in it, provided he reserves no right to himself. Hays v. Henry, 1 Md. Ch. 337; Dunnock v. Dunnock, 3 Md. Ch. 140; Rabbitt v. Gaither, 67 Md. 94, 8 Atl. 744; Brown v. Fidelity Trust Co., 126 Md. 175, 94 Atl. 523; Poole v. Poole, 129 Md. 387, 99 Atl. 551. There would seem to be no doubt that a husband has equal, if not more, power as to real estate, by virtue of that statute. It is said, however, on the part of the appellant, that by this transaction Mr. Kernan simply attempted to convert his real estate into stock of the corporation for the purpose of more readily depriving his wife of her interest by putting it in the shape of stock which could be easily transferred. That allegation seems to us to be contradicted by the exhibits filed with the bill, and nothing is alleged to overcome them but the mere allegations of fraud without stating or suggesting that there is any evidence of it outside of the instruments themselves. The same day he received the certificates of stock he made the deed of trust, by which he transferred all of the preferred stock to the trustees for the trusts referred to above, and he assigned 550 shares of the common stock to Messrs. Schanberger and Carter, absolutely, in the proportions mentioned above, and 447 shares to himself for life, with remainder to those parties, absolutely, and did not reserve the right to assign or sell the interests of the remaindermen in the 447 shares. We will speak later of the transfer of the stock, but the deed of the real estate was in our judgment beyond the attack of the plaintiff, as it was an absolute sale without any reservation or control over that property. The controlling interest in the company was in the hands of others, and if he was a director, or even president, such a position would not give him the control of the property for his own benefit. His duty was to the company, and we find nothing in this bill and exhibits which would justify us in holding that he was not authorized to make the deed under the statute quoted.

[2] We have not overlooked the point made by the appellant that section 35 of article 23 of the Code was not complied with, but we think that has no merit. In the first place, the appellant could not object to that, if there is any irregularity about it. The object of the statute is to prevent a corporation from paying in stock an exorbitant price for the property, in short, from issuing watered stock. It would be impossible in many, perhaps most, cases, to pay for stock in property if no one in any way interested in the person proposing to sell property for stock could take part as a stockholder. The statute says that "no stock shall be counted whose owner or holder is interested in such services or property." Section 36 of article 23 provides:

"That the valuation placed by the stockholders upon such services or property at the meeting duly warned, as aforesaid, and the propriety of their action accepting the same and issuing the agreed number of shares therefor, shall in the absence of actual fraud be conclusive against and binding upon any and all creditors of the corporation."

Surely the appellant is in no better position than creditors would be to raise any question about it. The "actual fraud" spoken of in the statute means of course the fraud in issuing the stock for services or property. If the bill is anything like correct in stating the value of the property conveyed for the stock to be worth about $1,400,000, no one interested in the corporation can complain of the stockholders who took part in that transaction giving 5,000 shares of preferred stock and 997 shares of common stock, each of the par value of $100, in all a par value of $596,700.

[3] The bill is replete with charges of fraud, based on the theory that all of these transactions were with the deliberate intent to defraud the unfortunate plaintiff of what the bill asserts were her marital rights. While it is not necessary to set out in the bill all the evidence a plaintiff may have knowledge of, there must be something more than the plaintiff's conclusion as to the purpose and intent of a party in making written instruments brought before the court, and the plaintiff calling them fraudulent or characterizing the plan as a scheme to perpetrate a fraud on a helpless lunatic does not make it so.

It would be difficult to find a record in which there are a bill in equity and exhibits where the exhibits themselves, when given fair and unprejudiced consideration, meet so many of the allegations of fraud in the bill more clearly than those in this case do. There is no concealment; on the contrary, there was an open book from beginning to end. Those exhibits do not in our opinion furnish ground for the charge of fraud that is made. In the first place, what possible motive could Mr. Kernan have had in defrauding his unfortunate wife of her rights in his property after his death? He must have been a very unusual and very peculiar man if, in order to give one-half of his property to such a worthy charity as a hospital and industrial school for crippled children, he would purposely and intentionally go to work to defraud his insane wife. If any one wanted to make provision for such charities and other objects, and had such an estate as he had—theater and hotel properties—the reasonable and natural thing for him to do was just what Mr. Kernan did do. If the statement in the bill as to the value of the property is correct, then the shares of stock he left to each of his children were worth considerably over $100,000, and he certainly had the right to say how much of his estate should go to each of them. He could not well have made suitable provisions for the crippled children without organizing a corporation, and probably could not have arranged for as much income out of the portion of his estate he wanted to give to that institution in any way other than the one he adopted. If he had simply made a will—directed a sale of his property and left such portion to the different persons and objects he had in view—it would have been next to impossible to have realized as much out of his properties as he could by the plan he adopted. Or if he had devised this property to trustees for the benefit of the hospital for crippled children and others, it could not have been done as well as by the plan he adopted. So far as the realty is concerned, we are not prepared to hold that even if a husband conveyed his real property and put it in the shape of stock or other personal property, partly because of the mental condition of his wife, and his knowledge of the fact that in case of his death before her his real estate would be incumbered by her dower in it, he could not do so under section 13 of article 45 of the Code, and convey a good title, free and clear of her interest in the property, or in the language of the statute, “as fully as if he were unmarried.” These papers were executed and Mr. Kernan died prior to the act of 1916, chapter 325, and hence there is no question as to its effect on his property. She could not have had more than a third interest for life in the real estate, while in his personalty she would be entitled to the third absolutely. The consequences might be very serious in some case where a husband or wife is a hopeless lunatic, if the other spouse could not sell the real estate and invest the proceeds in personal property, so as to avoid complications in regard to the real property. So, although there is nothing in any of the deeds, or in the will to suggest that the plan worked out was adopted for the purpose of depriving the widow of any of her rights, even if Mr. Kernan was in any way influenced to pursue the course he did in order that the real estate should be free from his wife's dower, it was not, under the circumstances, fraudulent or prohibited, especially as the stock was placed in such shape that he could not dispose of it, and it could be readily reached by any one interested in the wife's welfare.

We will therefore determine what rights she had, if any, in the personal property left by the testator. It is only fair to say that we cannot in considering this case merely compare the provision made by the testator (the income on $20,000) with the large estate the bill alleges he left, as to simply state the figures is misleading. When these papers were executed Mrs. Kernan had been an adjudicated lunatic for 24 years. There is nothing in the bill to indicate that there was the least probability of her recovery, or decided improvement, although we are not told whether she is violent, or what her precise condition is, beyond what we have stated above. While there is a suggestion in the bill that more might be used for her comfort and benefit than the income on $20,000, it is stated that the trustee only spends $10 a week for her maintenance and care. It is only fair to assume that the testator carefully considered what it had cost in the past and would likely cost in the future to provide for her. Mt. Hope Retreat is an old and well-known institution for such persons. Cases before us in this court and in the circuits have given us information as to how it is conducted, the standing of physicians connected with it, and the care given the patients by those in charge. The condition of this unfortunate lady may be such that the income from the sum placed in trust for her benefit may be more than ample, and apparently the trustee is of that opinion, as he pays, according to the bill, less than 3 per cent. on the amount in trust. If more is necessary, and the trustee has it, we know of no reason why it could not be required to be paid.

[4] Coming, then, to the question whether it is now too late to renounce the will, and whether the court can renounce for her, an insane widow. By section 301 of article 93 it is provided that:

“Every devise of land or any estate therein, or bequest of personal estate to the wife of the testator shall be construed to be intended in bar of her dower in lands or share of the personal estate, respectively, unless it be otherwise expressed in the will.”

Section 302 is:

“A widow shall be barred of her right of dower in land or share in the personal estate by any such devise or bequest, unless within six months after the first grant of administration upon her husband's estate she shall deliver or transmit to the court or register of wills where administration has been granted a written renunciation in the following form, or to the following effect.”

The form provided then follows. This will was admitted to probate and letters issued December 18, 1912, and the original bill was filed October 5, 1916. It is clear that it was too late to file a renunciation of the bequest, unless there be some principle which enables a court of equity to act for one unable to act for herself at any time, regardless of the statute. It will be well to say here that we can see no force in the argument, much relied on by the appellant, that Mr. Kernan was the committee of his wife. There was no occasion to renounce until after the grant of administration upon his estate, and, of course, he was then dead, and was no longer a committee. What ought to have been done, if it was desired to file a renunciation, or test the right to file one, was to have a new committee appointed; or a bill could have been filed by the next friend within the 6 months, just as well as within 3 years and 9 months after the letters testamentary were issued. The deeds had been on record for over 19 months before the testator died. This is not like a case in which a proceeding had not been commenced earlier because of the insanity of the widow, and she afterwards recovers and then seeks relief. She is still insane, and probably will be until her death. There is no valid excuse offered in the bill for not proceeding sooner. Section 342 of article 93 provides that "no will, testament, codicil or other testamentary paper shall be subject to caveat or other objection to its validity, after the expiration of three years from its probate;" but notwithstanding that, this will is attacked in the name of Mrs. Kernan, but by her son as next friend, who could have done so as well within 6 months as now. We cannot be unmindful of the fact that if the proceeding is successful the next friend, his brother, and the children of his deceased sister are the real parties who would profit by it, for unless the widow should recover, from which it is not suggested there is any hope, whatever is recovered in her name will eventually go to them. There is therefore not only a delay for which no excuse is offered, but an attack in the name of one who, so far as we can gather from the bill, is not in such a mental condition as to be conscious that her dead husband—the father of her next friend—is accused of perpetrating a fraud on her.

Whatever other courts may have said, the case of Collins v. Carman, 5 Md. 503, decided by our predecessors, is conclusive of the question, unless we overrule it. There an insane widow, to whom devises and bequests had been left by her husband's will, not to renounce as required by the statute. After her death her administrator filed in the orphans' court a renunciation of the will, and then filed a bill in equity for the purpose of obtaining a decree declaring the renunciation effective and sufficient, or if for any cause it should be deemed informal or imperfect the complainant prayed that he might be considered as revoking, by his bill, the renunciation. There, as here, the widow had received the benefits of the will for several years. The case was argued by some of the most distinguished attorneys who were ever at the Maryland bar—Thomas S. Alexander and William Schley for the appellant, and T.

P. Scott and John V. L. McMahon for the appellee. The court held that the administrator could not make the renunciation, or claim anything beyond what was given by the will. It said that it intimated no opinion on the question whether a court or equity could make an election or renunciation for an insane widow, during her life and in proper time. After quoting from the Act of 1798, chapter 101, first and second sections of subchapter 18, which are now sections 301 and 302 of article 93, excepting there is a change in the time from 90 days to 6 months, the court said:

"Every valid devise or bequest is therefore made an effectual bar, unless it be removed by renunciation. And until that is made the bar remains. The law admits of no excuse for a failure to renounce. If she make no election within the time prescribed, the law makes it, without stopping to inquire why or for what reason she made none."

Judge Eccleston then went on to show that the act of 1798 had changed the common law, and that:

"When a man dies leaving a will, making valid gifts of real and personal estate to his wife, she has not, as she had at common law, a vested right to dower in his land, or to a legal share of his personality, but her vested rights are under the will by virtue of the statute law."

He said:

"And to effect the husband's object the wife need not declare her assent; if, however, she desires to defeat it, she must manifest her intention to do so by an express dissent. And such dissent is an act, which by the very terms of the law must precede her becoming entitled to or vested with those rights which she might have claimed but for the will. * * * Whether from design, neglect, or from other cause, the widow fails to make such renunciation, the result is the same."

Again it is said:

"The language of the statute is quite comprehensive enough to include every widow, whatever may be her age, or mental condition, there being no exception in favor of infants or insane persons. * * * When the law directs an act to be done, or a condition to be performed for the purpose of conferring a right, that right cannot be acquired if the act is left undone, or the condition is not performed. And if no exception is made in favor of insane persons, courts of justice have no more power to decree to them the allowance of such rights, because of their mental incapacity to comply with the requisites of the law, than they have to decree in favor of sane persons failing to comply. If the law makes no exception the courts can make none, whether they be courts of law or equity; for where the construction of a statute is before them the rules of construction are the same in both courts."

The court referred to many cases, amongst others Demarest v. Wynkoop, 3 John. Ch. (N. Y.) 142, 8 Am. Dec. 467, where Chancellor Kent considered at length the doctrine in regard to any inherent equity creating an exception as to any disability where the statute of limitations creates none, and said the doctrine had been long and uniformly exploded. That case was approved in Hertle et al. v. Schwartz et al., 3 Md. 333, and Du- gan v. Gittings, 3 Gill, 161, 43 Am. Dec. 306. Judge Eccleston added:

"If these are the rules which apply to the statute of limitations, it is difficult to perceive why they should not be equally applicable to other statutes."

The conclusion of the court, as to whether the statute applied to an insane widow was:

"With these principles before us, sanctioned by such authority, we cannot but believe the present case is embraced within the broad and explicit language of the act of 1798, and that without a renunciation the widow had no right to dower, or to her common-law share of the personality."

The court then considered the question whether the renunciation of the administrator availed anything, and held that it did not for several reasons. A number of cases were cited to show that the administrator could not renounce, amongst others Boone v. Boone, 3 Har. & McH. 95, where Stephen Boone died leaving a widow to whom he bequeathed a part of his personal estate. The widow died before the expiration of 40 days (the time then fixed by the statute), and did not file a renunciation. It was held that her representatives did not have the privilege of renouncing the bequest "being intended entirely for her benefit and personal privilege."

Although it was urged by the learned attorneys for the appellant that that case does not apply, we are unable to concur with them. The principles there announced have never before been questioned in this state, and while in individual cases some hardships may result, it would be vastly more disastrous if settlements of estates are to be kept in uncertainty for years, probably throughout the lives of insane widows and husbands, under the present law, by the contrary views. As that case expressly left open the question whether a court of equity can make the election, or renunciation, "during her life and in proper time," which manifestly means within the time fixed by the statute, it does not preclude an application to a court of equity within that time and as this bill was filed over 3 years beyond that time, it would be useless to discuss that, further than to say that if it can be done at all by a court of equity it must be within the time fixed by the statute certainly where, as here, every one of the near relatives was a beneficiary under the will, and knew, or must under the circumstances be treated as knowing, everything which was necessary to enable proceedings to be taken. That was the view taken in the dissenting opinion filed in Wright v. West, 2 Lea (70 Tenn.) 78, 31 Am. Rep. 586, a case relied on by appellant, which seems to us to be the safest and proper rule, if a court of equity can elect or renounce for an insane widow. We have the right to assume that the next friend and other relations took under this very will, as we are not told in the bill that they did not, and this next friend not only accepted the will himself, but permitted the trustee to provide for his mother under it, and made no move in court until nearly 4 years after his father's death. He would be effectually barred if he attempted to attack the will, and would not be heard in a court of equity, by reason of his laches, to attack the other instruments, unless there was some ground other than what is in this bill; yet it is contended that he can in the name of his insane mother accomplish indirectly what he could not do in his own name. It is far better that there be some risk of an occasional injustice to an insane widow, as much as that is to be regretted, than that a court of equity be in the position of being required to grant relief indirectly to one who would have no standing in court, if he asked relief in his own name. We are not told how many, if any, crippled children have been receiving help from the 3,400 shares of preferred stock, although probably some were during the years between the death of Mr. Kernan and the filing of the original bill, but if there are any, and the prayers of the bill must be granted, it may well be that if this unfortunate plaintiff could have her reason restored sufficiently to take in the situation, she might deeply regret this proceeding.

In the case of Garrison v. Hill, 81 Md. 551, 82 Atl. 191, what is now section 342 of article 93, above quoted, was involved. One of the reasons for contending that the statute was invalid was that there was no saving clause to those under disability to sue. We said in reference to that:

"So far as the omission to insert a saving clause in favor of those under disability to sue is concerned, it might be said the appellant is not in a position to complain. She is now in this court by her next friend, and could have so proceeded at any time since the will of Mrs. Johnson was probated. But the law cannot be said to be unconstitutional merely because it fails to extend the time in favor of those under disability, such as coverture, infancy, etc. It is discretionary with the Legislature whether or not they shall be exempted from the operation of the statute of limitations, and unless that statute does so exempt them they are governed by the same law that others are."

As this opinion is already of unusual length, we will not cite other cases on the subject except to refer to Collier v. Smaltz, 149 Iowa, 230, 128 N. W. 396, which is also reported in Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1007, where there is a note citing a great many cases. That note begins with the statement that:

"There is no dissent from the proposition announced in the reported case that where a statement of limitations contains no exception in favor of persons non compos mentis, the statute runs against an insane person."

As we are of the opinion that Collins v. Carman, supra, is applicable, and we are not willing to overrule it, but, on the contrary, believe that it announced the correct rule under such statutes as we have, it would be useless to discuss the authorities to the contrary cited by the appellant.

[5, 6] It is only necessary to say in reference to the refusal of the lower court to allow the plaintiff to again amend the bill that it was in the discretion of that court and there is no appeal from it. Miller's Eq. Proc. 231, § 182. The court doubtless thought that amendment could make no difference in its conclusion. The appeal from the order refusing to give leave to amend will be dismissed, and the order sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the bill will be affirmed.

Appeal from the order refusing leave to amend dismissed. Order sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the bill affirmed, the next friend to pay the costs.

MAYOR AND CITY COUNCIL OF BALTIMORE v. GORDON et al. (No. 25.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 20, 1918.)

1. DEDICATION §1-ESSENTIALS.

To sustain a city's claim that an alley had been dedicated, it must be found that there was a clearly manifest intent to dedicate to public use on the part of the owner, and that the same was accepted by the city.

2. DEDICATION §15-INTENT-PLAT.

Intent requisite to constitute a dedication cannot be inferred from a plat by placing on it names which import a private use as readily as a public use.

3. DEDICATION §16(1)-OFFICIAL PLAT.

The laying out of a street, without consent of owners, upon a plat by commissioners, authorized by statute to prepare a plan of a city, did not operate as a dedication.

4. DEDICATION §16(1)-PARTITION PROCEEDING.

The leaving of a strip behind lots in a partition proceeding for the mutual accommodation of the lots as an alley did not constitute a dedication, especially where the alley had only one outlet.

5. DEDICATION §37-ACCEPTANCE.

That public may for many years have used a way over private property is not alone sufficient to authorize presumption that same has been accepted by public authorities as a public way.

6. DEDICATION §35(1)-ACCEPTANCE.

A notice from health department of a city to remove manure on a certain way did not show an acceptance by the city of such way as a public alley, where it did not appear whether or not health department acted in performance of its duty to cause the removal of nuisances, an act which might be performed in regard to private as well as public property.

Appeal from Circuit Court of Baltimore City; H. Arthur Stump, Judge.

Bill by Louis Gordon and John C. Toland, to enjoin the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, a municipal corporation, from closing an alleged alley. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Alexander Preston, Deputy City Sol., of Baltimore (S. S. Field, City Sol., of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellant. Jacob J. H. Mitnick and Hiram J. Weiskopf, both of Baltimore (Simon E. Sobeloff, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellees.

STOCKBRIDGE, J. When Harry Dorsey Gough died in 1808 he was seised in fee, among other property, of a lot on the west side of Front street in Baltimore city, having a front of 140 feet, and extending back westerly an approximate depth of 150 feet to Jones Falls. This lot lay just to the south of Billingsgate street, as it was then called, now known as Low street. Proceedings for a partition of Mr. Gough's real estate were begun in the High Court of Chancery in 1817, and the return of the commissioners was filed about 18 months later. By it there was allotted to James Carroll, Jr., a portion of the Front street property, fronting 46 feet 1 inch on Front street, "by a depth of 125 feet to an alley 25 feet wide left on Jones Falls for the mutual accommodation of this and adjoining lots." By the same return there was allotted to Charles R. Carroll a house and lot on Front street, immediately adjoining that allotted to James Carroll, Jr., and which had a front on Front street of 98 feet 11 inches, with a depth of 125 feet "to a 25 foot alley left on Jones Falls for the mutual accommodation of this and the adjoining lot." These two lots taken together thus exhausted the entire amount of real estate of Mr. Gough's on Front street. The space referred to as an alley in the allotment remained an open space along the side of the Falls, which could be entered from Low street, but was closed at the other end by property adjoining to the south, which ran through from Front street to the Falls.

The present litigation grows out of an attempt by the mayor and city council of Baltimore, through the passage of an ordinance, to close this space as being a public alley, which is resisted by the abutting owners, who claim title in themselves by virtue of various mesne conveyances from James Carroll, Jr., and Charles R. Carroll. A bill was filed by the plaintiffs as owners, asking an injunction, which by the decree of the circuit court of Baltimore city was granted, enjoining the mayor and city council from proceeding under the ordinance. The question thus is one of dedication to the public, and the acceptance by the municipal authorities of such dedication of this strip of ground, referred to as an alley, as a public highway.

[1] To sustain the city's claim and contention it must be found that there was an intent to dedicate to public use on the part of the owner of the property, and that such intent was clearly manifested, and that the same was accepted by the city. "There is no such thing as a dedication between the owner and individuals, the public must be a party to every dedication. It is the essence of a dedication to public use that it shall be for the use of the public at large. There may be a dedication of land for special uses, but it shall be for the benefit of the public and not for any particular part of it. * * * The grant by the owner of a private right of way over his land to buyers of different parcels of the same to furnish them with convenient access to the street is no dedication to public use." 8 R. C. L. 888, 889; Thomas v. Ford, 63 Md. 346, 52 Am. Rep. 518.

[2] The intent requisite to constitute a dedication cannot be inferred from a plat, by placing on it names which import a private use, as readily as a public use. Pella v. Scholte, 24 Iowa, 283, 95 Am. Dec. 729. And what the character of the evidence of the intent must be was clearly stated by Judge Miller, in Pitts v. Baltimore, 73 Md. 326, 21 Atl. 52, when he said:

"It has been decided by this court in a number of cases that in order to make out a dedication, an intent on the part of the owner to dedicate his land to the particular use alleged is absolutely essential, and unless such intention is clearly proved by the facts and circumstances of the particular case, no dedication exists."

And for this he cites the cases of White v. Flannigan, 1 Md. 539, 54 Am. Dec. 668; Moale v. Baltimore, 5 Md. 314, 61 Am. Dec. 276; McCormick v. Baltimore, 45 Md. 512; Tinges v. Baltimore, 51 Md. 600; Hall v. Baltimore, 56 Md. 187; Baltimore v. White, 62 Md. 362; and Glenn v. Baltimore, 67 Md. 390, 10 Atl. 70.

To support the contention of the city reliance is placed upon two facts, which will be considered in the light of the rules of law applicable to such cases. These are: First. The description in the return of the commissioners, which called for a depth of 125 feet to an alley 25 feet wide; and second, "Poppleton's Plat."

[3] Taking these up in inverse order, the effect to be given to Poppleton's plat has been passed upon by this court in Baltimore v. Bouldin, 23 Md. 828, and Baltimore v. Hook, 62 Md. 371, under which it was distinctly held that the laying down of a street upon that plat was not sufficient to avoid condemnation proceedings, in cases where there had been no dedication. But apart from these positive adjudications the situation is this: The appointment of a commission to make the partition of Mr. Gough's estate, and the act of the Legislature giving authority to John E. Howard and others as commissioners to have a plan of the city prepared, both took place in the same year. The return of the commissioners for the partition was some years earlier than the filing of Poppleton's plat. There do not appear from the record to have been any legislative acts with reference to the plat subsequent to the time of its being filed; nor could the laying out of a street upon that plat operate as a dedication, without the consent of the owner or owners, where there had been no prior dedication of the land.

[4] With regard to a dedication resulting from the description in the partition proceedings, that can stand in no better position. It is perfectly true that the call is for a depth of 125 feet to a 25-foot alley, but it is equally true that by the very terms of that call the alley was one left, not for the use of the public generally, but was specially restricted to the use of the lot or lots carved out of the land of Mr. Gough which should bound thereon. Thus instead of a clearly proved intent to dedicate this alley to public use, it is limited to the use of the owners of the abutting land of which Mr. Gough died seised.

There is another circumstance which in many of the adjudicated cases has been regarded as negating the purpose to dedicate. The alley called for in the partition proceedings had no outlet to the south, and thus formed a cul-de-sac, as it is commonly called. As early as 1813 Lord Chief Justice Mansfield, in the case of Woodyear v. Hadden, 5 Taunt. 126, had a similar situation presented. It differed from the present case, in that 19 houses were erected on the land having an outlet on the cul-de-sac, which was watched, paved, cleaned, and lighted at the public expense, and yet in that case it was said that there had been no such dedication as was requisite to constitute a public highway. This was followed some years later by the case of Barraclough v. Johnson, 8 Ad. & El. 99, in which the court followed the same rule, and clearly distinguishes a use, which is properly to be designated as a license, from a dedication. This rule of the English courts has been adopted in a number of cases in this country. Gillilan v. Shattuck, 142 Cal. 27, 75 Pac. 646; People v. Johnson, 237 Ill. 237, 86 N. E. 676. These cases all differ radically from the case of Beale v. Takoma Park, 130 Md. 306, 100 Atl. 379, in which there was an express dedication.

[5, 6] Nor is there any sufficient evidence in this case to show any acceptance whatever upon the part of the municipal authorities. The mere fact that the public may for many years have used a way over private property is not sufficient to authorize the presumption that the same has been accepted by the public authorities as a public way. James v. Kent, 83 Md. 377, 35 Atl. 62, 33 L. R. A. 291.

The evidence in this case with regard to acceptance is all one way. This alley space has never, up to the present time, been paved at all, what grading has been done was done by and at the expense of the owners of abutting property. The sole act testified to of any interference on the part of the municipal authorities is that upon one occasion during the administration of Mayor Hooper, notice was sent to the owners of the property to remove or clean certain manure pits located on this alleyway. No copy of this notice was offered in evidence, but from the statements of the witnesses this seems to have emanated from the health department of the city government, in the performance of its duty to cause the removal of or remove nuisances, an act which might just as well be performed with regard to private as with regard to public property, and this falls far short of any positive action which can by inference be regarded as an acceptance.

Reference is made in support of the city's case to Ordinance No. 2, approved June 14, 1906. But that ordinance by its very terms is without application in this case, since it attempts to deal, and only to deal, with "streets, avenues, lanes and alleys which have been heretofore unconditionally dedicated as highways"; and, since in the present case that dedication did not exist by virtue of any deed or plat made with the sanction of the owner, there are no acts disclosed by the evidence from which an "unconditional dedication" can be properly deduced.

The decree appealed from will accordingly be affirmed.

Decree affirmed, with costs.

EMERSON et al. v. TAYLOR. (No. 83.)
(Court of Appeals of Maryland. June 20, 1918.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⇨209(4)—INJURY TO HUSBAND—WIFE'S RIGHT OF ACTION—COMMON LAW.

For a personal injury to a husband no right of action arose in favor of the wife at common law.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⇨209(4)—INJURY TO HUSBAND—WIFE'S RIGHT OF ACTION—LOSS OF CONSORTIUM.

A wife cannot recover damages for personal injury to her husband, whereby she sustains loss of support and of consortium, and is compelled to care for him while sick.

Appeal from Baltimore City Court; Carroll T. Bond, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Rachel Taylor against Isaac E. Emerson, trading as the Emersonian Apartments, and Charles F. W. Berndt. Demurrer to declaration overruled, and judgment against defendants by default, and they appeal. Reversed, without a new trial.

See, also, 103 Atl. 423.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, THOMAS, URNER, and STOCKBRIDGE, JJ.

Aubrey Pearre, Jr., of Baltimore, for appellants. Augustus C. Binswanger, of Baltimore (Louis Samuels, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellee.

STOCKBRIDGE, J. This suit is an action by a married woman to recover damages for the loss of consortium, resulting from an injury to the husband occasioned by the negligence, as alleged, of the defendants. No other element of damage to the plaintiff is claimed. She suffered no physical injury.

The husband, a hod carrier by occupation, was employed as one of the hands in the building of an apartment house under construction by the appellants. An elevator which ran from the sixth to the first floor became beyond control, as the result of which the plaintiff's husband was thrown down, suffered severe contusions, the breaking of his right leg, and was confined to a hospital for a period of four months. For the injury suffered, if due to the negligence of the defendants, he had a right of action. Whether he did as matter of fact present any claim for these injuries, and, if so, what was the ultimate disposition of it, does not appear from the record, but any claim of this character for the injury suffered was a claim of his, and not of his wife. The sole basis for her claim rests in the loss of consortium consequent upon the injury.

A demurrer was filed to the declaration, which was overruled. The defendants declined to plead, a judgment by default for lack of a plea was entered against them, and an inquisition found in favor of the wife, upon which a judgment for $50 was entered. Such is the case presented in this court by the record. The appeal, therefore, calls in question only the ruling of the Baltimore city court upon the demurrer to the declaration, and this presents but a single question of law.

[1, 2] It was well settled at common law that for personal injuries to a husband no right of action arose in favor of the wife; but with the advance of the law in the direction of according greater rights to married women, and more nearly placing her upon a footing of equality with her husband, and especially since the adoption in many of the states of this country of the so-called "Married Women's Act," the claim is made that a change has taken place in the right of a married woman to sue and recover separately from her husband for damages which she may suffer. The case has been presented with much fullness of research into the adjudications, and large numbers of the cases were referred to in the argument and cited upon the briefs. The present accepted rule of law will be found accurately and concisely stated in 13 R. C. L. 1443, where many of the cases are referred to. It is sometimes said that there is great conflict of opinion in the conclusions reached in the various cases.

A close examination of the adjudications discloses that these group themselves under several distinct heads; the differences of opinion arising, as was held in the case of Wolf v. Frank, 92 Md. 138, 48 Atl. 132, 52 L. R. A. 102, from the source from which the married woman acquires the right, rather than whether the right existed at all. In the case just mentioned the suit was brought by a married woman to recover damages for the alienation of the affections of her husband, and this court held that the law cannot make redress in such cases otherwise than to the married woman solely, apart from all others, and especially her husband. In such cases the injury to the woman is direct, and hence of legal necessity the damages must be to her solely, and therefore the suit can be maintained in her own name.

In some of the cases of this description, the basis upon which the recovery is allowed is that an injury of this character involves the legal idea of malice, even if there be no actual malice; that the husband cannot be said to have been damaged, or have recovery therefor, and that, therefore, a suit by a married woman alone, in cases of alienation of affections, enticement, or seduction of the husband, are held to give the wife the right of action. This right of action, sustained in Wolf v. Frank, supra, is said in some of the cases to have been a right existing at common law, as well as under married women's statutes; but, however this may be, in this class of cases it is a rule which has been adopted quite generally, of which the following cases are examples: Bassett v. Bassett, 20 Ill. App. 548; Tucker v. Tucker, 74 Miss. 98, 19 South. 955, 32 L. R. A. 623; Hodgkinson v. Hodgkinson, 43 Neb. 269, 61 N. W. 577, 27 L. R. A. 120, 47 Am. St. Rep. 759; Gerner v. Gerner, 185 Pa. 233, 39 Atl. 884, 40 L. R. A. 549, 64 Am. St. Rep. 646; Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 621, 32 Am. Rep. 397; Jaynes v. Jaynes, 39 Hun. 40; Logan v. Logan, 77 Ind. 558, contra; Duffies v. Duffies, 76 Wis. 374, 45 N. W. 522, 8 L. R. A. 420, 20 Am. St. Rep. 79; Lonstorf v. Lonstorf, 118 Wis. 159, 95 N. W. 961; Jacobson v. Siddal, 12 Or. 280, 7 Pac. 108, 53 Am. St. Rep. 360, Crim. Conv.; Seaver v. Adams, 66 N. H. 142, 19 Atl. 776, 49 Am. St. Rep. 597; Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 23 N. E. 17, 6 L. R. A. 553; Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 123, 50 N. W. 842, 14 L. R. A. 545; Clow v. Chapman, 125 Mo. 101, 28 S. W. 328, 26 L. R. A. 412, 46 Am. St. Rep. 468; Nolin v. Pearson, 191 Mass. 283, 77 N. E. 890, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 643, 114 Am. St. Rep. 606, 6 Ann. Cas. 658; Work v. Campbell, 164 Cal. 581, 128 Pac. 943, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 581; Rott v. Goehring, 33 N. D. 413, 157 N. W. 294, L. R. A. 1916E, 1086, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 643; Wolf v. Frank, 92 Md.

There is another class of cases upon which reliance has been placed by the appellee, namely, where in the suit of a married woman against a third party for loss of the consortium of her husband the cause of the damage was the sale to the husband of liquor or noxious drugs. In some of these cases, the sales, as testified to, were in direct violation of state statutes; in others, the right to maintain such an action has been based upon special laws, generally described as civil damage acts; and in still a third class of cases, it has been held that sale of such liquors or drugs, particularly when made after due notice and caution to the dealer, involves an element of malice, for which no right of action subsists in the husband; that the damage to the wife is direct, not indirect, and as such a recovery by her in an independent suit can be maintained. See Flandermeyer v. Cooper, 85 Ohio St. 327, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 360, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 983; Moberg v. Scott, 38 S. D. 422, 161 N. W. 998, L. R. A. 1917D, 782. In many of the cases cited in the argument the suits were actions brought by the husband for the loss of the consortium of the wife, and from these it has been argued that since the adoption of the Married Women's Act there was the establishment of a complete parity of right upon the part of both husband and wife. The suits in which the Married Women's Act has been considered, as affecting the right of action, are, in part, So. Railway v. Crowder, 135 Ala. 417, 33 South. 335; Clark v. Hill, 69 Mo. App. 541; Blair v. Seitzer, 181 Mich. 304, 151 N. W. 724, L. R. A. 1915D, 524, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 882; Marri v. Stamford Ry., 84 Conn. 9, 78 Atl. 582, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1042, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1120; Guevin v. Manchester Ry., 78 N. H. 289, 99 Atl. 298, L. R. A. 1917C, 410.

The most satisfactory discussion of this phase of the case will be found in Kosciolek v. Portland R., L. & P. Co., 81 Or. 517, 160 Pac. 132. The line of demarcation is there clearly drawn between cases such as find their origin in alienation of affection and those which result from an act of negligence of a third party. The rule with regard to these latter is clearly stated in the section in 13 R. C. L. already referred to, and is expressed by Mr. Cooley in the first volume of his work on Torts (3d Ed., p. 474), as follows:

"A wife cannot recover damages on account of personal injury to her husband, whereby she sustains loss of support and of consortium, and is compelled to care for him while sick."

See, also, Stewart on Husband and Wife, § 429.

The statements of these authors are fully borne out by the following adjudicated cases: Goldman v. Cohen, 30 Misc. Rep. 336, 63 N. Y. Supp. 459; Feneff v. N. Y. Cent. Ry., 203 Mass. 278, 89 N. E. 436, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024, 133 Am. St. Rep. 291; Bolger v. Boston Elev. Ry., 205 Mass. 420, 91 N. E. 389; Whitcomb v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. Ry. Co., 215 Mass. 440, 102 N. E. 663; Gearing v. Berkson, 223 Mass. 257, 111 N. E. 785, L. R. A. 1916D, 1006; Blaechinska v. Howard Mission, 130 N. Y. 497, 29 N. E. 755, 15 L. R. A. 215, reversing 56 Hun. 322, 9 N. Y. Supp. 679; Stout v. Kansas City F. R. R., 172 Mo. App. 113, 157 S. W. 1019; Gambino v. Coal Co., 175 Mo. App. 653, 158 S. W. 77; Patelski v. Snyder, 179 Ill. App. 24; Smith v. Nicholas Bldg. Co., 93 Ohio St. 101, 112 N. E. 204, L. R. A. 1916E, 700; Brown v. Kistelman, 177 Ind. 692, 98 N. E. 631, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 236. To quote at length from the opinions in the various adjudicated cases would protract this opinion to an unreasonable length, nor has it seemed worth while even to refer to the class of cases where actions have been brought in the joint names of husband and wife, or to suits for damages in cases where an assault has been committed upon the woman, and she has brought an independent suit for the injury sustained. Cases of these several characters are without bearing or influence upon the question now under consideration.

It will be apparent from what has been said that the court below was in error in its ruling upon the demurrer, and the judgment appealed from must therefore be reversed, without a new trial.

Judgment reversed, with costs to the appellants.

MCGRAW v. MERRYMAN, County Treasurer.
(No. 36.)

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. July 30, 1918.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW § 70(3)—POWER OF COURT—WISDOM OF LEGISLATION.

If the Legislature had power to pass an act extending the limits of Baltimore city without a referendum, and in the form it was passed, the Court of Appeals has no right to question the wisdom or even the justice of the act.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS § 65—EXTENSION OF LIMITS—REFERENDUM—DECISION OF LEGISLATURE.

In absence of constitutional prohibition, it is for Legislature to say whether or not there shall be a referendum in reference to the extension of the limits of a city or town.

3. COURTS § 92—DECISION OF COURT OF APPEALS.

All that is necessary to render a decision of the Court of Appeals authoritative on any point is to show there was an application of the judicial mind to the precise question.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS § 108 — ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—REFERENDUM—STATUTE.

Acts 1918, c. 82, extending limits of Baltimore city by including parts of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties, though not providing for referendum, is not violative of Const. art. 13, § 1.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS § 29(4) — EXTENSION OF TERRITORY.

There is no statute or constitutional provision in Maryland limiting an extension of the boundaries of a city to contiguous territory, though some part of the new territory should be contiguous.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS § 108 — ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—STATUTE—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Acts 1918, c. 82, extending limits of Baltimore city by including parts of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties, is not violative of Const. art. 16, on the referendum, as undertaking to affect taxes levied prior to June 1st, when act, under such article, took effect, as it attempts only to affect the proportion of taxes from January 1, 1919, to end of pending fiscal year.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS § 86(4) — EXTENSION OF TERRITORY—STATUTE—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Acts 1918, c. 82, extending limits of Baltimore city by including parts of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties, is not violative of Declaration of Rights, art. 15, on account of its provisions in reference to taxation.

8. STATUTES § 64(4)—PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

If taxation provisions of Acts 1918, c. 82, extending Baltimore city by including parts of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties, were violative of Declaration of Rights, art. 15, whole act would not be invalidated thereby.

9. STATUTES § 64(4)—PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

Any invalidity of saving clause of Acts 1918, c. 82, extending Baltimore city by including parts of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties, as to certain officers resident within annexed territory, cannot affect rest of act.

10. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW § 278(2)—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS § 29(1)—DUE PROCESS—ACT EXTENDING BALTIMORE CITY.

Acts 1918, c. 82, extending Baltimore city by including parts of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties, is not unconstitutional as taking property without due process of law, though Baltimore county owns a number of properties, within the annexed district, purchased by it under tax sales.

11. EMINENT DOMAIN § 70—ACT EXTENDING BALTIMORE CITY—VALIDITY.

Acts 1918, c. 82, extending Baltimore city by including parts of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties, is not unconstitutional as taking property without just compensation, though Baltimore county owns a number of properties within the annexed district purchased by it under tax sales.

12. STATUTES § 64(4)—PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

If Acts 1918, c. 82, extending Baltimore city by including parts of Baltimore and Anne Arundel counties, makes no proper provision for property owned by either of the counties in addition to that held and used for governmental purposes, fact does not require portion of act providing for annexation to be set aside.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Baltimore County; Allan McLane, Judge.

Suit for mandamus by John F. McGraw against N. Bosley Merryman, Treasurer of Baltimore County, heard with certain other cases involving the validity of Acts 1918, c.

82. From an order denying relief, plaintiff appeals. Order reversed, and cause remanded in order that mandamus may issue as prayed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, BURKE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Henry H. Dinneen, of Baltimore (W. Stuart Symington, Jr., of Baltimore, and John F. Thomas, of Rochester, N. Y., on the brief), for appellant. Shirley Carter and W. Irvine Cross, both of Baltimore, and T. Scott Offutt, of Towson (Edward H. Burke, of Towson, and Carville D. Benson, of Baltimore, on the brief), for appellee. Ridgely P. Melvin, of Annapolis, Stevenson A. Williams, of Bel Air, and Isaac Lobe Straus, of Baltimore (Venable, Baetjer & Howard, of Baltimore, on the brief), for Anne Arundel county commissioners. Benjamin A. Richmond, of Cumberland, and S. S. Field, of Baltimore (Henry D. Harlan, W. Calvin Chesnut, and Daniel R. Randall, all of Baltimore, on the briefs), for mayor and city council of Baltimore.

BOYD, C. J. At the last session of the General Assembly of Maryland there was passed "An act to extend the limits of Baltimore city by including therein parts of Baltimore county and Anne Arundel county," it being chapter 82 of the Acts of 1918. The validity of the act has been attacked on several grounds; the principal one being that there is no referendum in it, as the appellees contend section 1 of article 13 of our state Constitution requires. Although there are five appeals from orders and decrees passed by the circuit court for Baltimore county and one from a decree of the circuit court for Anne Arundel county, the main questions are involved in all of them. The cases were at the request of the attorneys for the respective parties advanced by us, and were heard together. As no question was raised in any of them as to the procedure adopted, it will be unnecessary to make further reference to that.

[1] Much stress was laid by the attorneys for the appellees upon the alleged injustice of this act, but no one will challenge the rule by which we must be guided in our consideration of these appeals, that if the Legislature had the power to pass the act before us without a referendum, and in the form it was passed, this court has no right to call in question the wisdom or even justice of it. As said by Judge Grason in Groff v. Mayor, etc., of Frederick, 44 Md. 67, in a case involving the validity of an act extending the limits of Frederick city, after referring to the power of the Legislature to create municipal corporations, to amend their charters, enlarge or diminish their powers, extend or limit their boundaries, etc.:

"The Legislature having this constitutional power, the exercise of it is wholly within its discretion, and it can in no wise be controlled by the courts."

He concluded that opinion by saying:

"Whether the power was wisely or unwisely bestowed, or the mode in which it has been exercised is just or unjust, and burdensome upon the citizen, are questions with which the courts have no right to deal, but are within the exclusive control of the Legislature."

But the rule is too universally adopted by this and other courts to require other citations of authorities, and we will proceed at once to the consideration of such questions as should be passed on by us.

The one that first presents itself, and is of the gravest importance, is the scope and effect of the decision in Daly v. Morgan, 69 Md. 460, 16 Atl. 287, 1 L. R. A. 757. In that case the constitutionality of chapter 98 of the Acts of 1888, which was entitled "An act to extend the limits of Baltimore city by including therein parts of Baltimore county," was before the court. There was a referendum in that act, and the question of annexation was submitted to the respective voters of the three parts of Baltimore county proposed to be annexed to Baltimore city. In two of them a majority was declared to be in favor of annexation, and in the other it was against it. In article 13 of our state Constitution, entitled "New Counties," section 1, which was then in force and still is, authorizes the Legislature to provide by law for organizing new counties, locating and removing county seats, and changing county lines, and contains this provision:

"Nor shall the lines of any county be changed without the consent of a majority of the legal voters residing within the district, which, under said proposed change, would form a part of a county different from that to which it belonged prior to said change."

It is contended by the appellees that that provision applies here, as it is proposed to change the lines of the two counties, although the district affected is to form a part of Baltimore city, while the appellants contend that it only applies to a change of lines of a county which would transfer the district to another "county," and that it does not apply when the district, under the proposed change, would form a part of "Baltimore city." But we must first determine whether this court decided that question in Daly v. Morgan, and, if so, are we bound by it as a controlling authority? The bill of complaint in that case, in speaking of the act of 1888, alleged that:

"The act aforesaid is null and void, because the Constitution of Maryland gives no power to the Legislature of Maryland to annex any of the territory of a county to the city of Baltimore, nor does it empower said Legislature to make the annexation of said territory depend upon the majority of the votes cast at an election provided for by legislative enactment," etc.

The answer of the mayor and city council of Baltimore alleged that the act was a constitutional and valid exercise of the legislative authority of the state, and that of the treasurer of Baltimore county averred that the act was wholly and utterly void, etc. The argument of Col. McIntosh and of Mr. Mitchell, solicitors for appellant in that case, as shown by their briefs, was that section 1 of article 13 was the only provision in the Constitution which authorized a change of the lines of a county, and that only authorized such change when the district proposed to be changed would "form part of a county different from that to which it belonged prior to said change," and that that was not synonymous with and in ordinary parlance did not mean "form part of a 'city or Baltimore city' different from," etc. They argued that there was therefore no power in the Legislature to change the lines of the county to annex it to Baltimore city. They also contended that the act of 1888 did not conform to the requirements of section 1 of article 13, if held to be applicable, because the latter required the consent of the majority of the legal voters "residing" within the district, while they claimed that the act only required a majority of the votes "cast." We find in the records of this court that there are bound with the briefs for the appellant (Daly) opinions of Col. Marshall, Judge Fisher, and Mr. S. Teackle Wallis, presumably with the consent of the court, which are mostly on the validity of section 19 of act of 1888 providing for taxation. There are, however, some expressions of views on the necessity of a referendum. Judge Fisher's opinion, which was addressed to the attorney for the county commissioners of Baltimore county, shows that one of the questions submitted to him was:

"Can the limits of the city be extended by legislative enactment without submission to the voters in the territory to be annexed?"

And apparently the same question was asked Mr. Wallis. Both of them answered in the negative, but the latter said it was "extremely doubtful" whether it was competent for the Legislature to annex the territory of Baltimore county, constitutionally, to Baltimore city in any way. The brief of the city was for the most part confined to a discussion of section 19 of the act. It concluded by saying that there was appended to it the legal opinions given before the election by Messrs. Steele, Gwynn, and Findlay, "which furnish additional arguments to those we have presented in favor of the constitutionality of the City Extension Act, and which we respectfully commend to the consideration of the court." Those of Messrs. Steele, and Gwynn were confined to the validity of section 19, which seems to have been understood by the city to be the principal ground of objection to the act, but that of Mr. Findlay very clearly and emphatically took the position that article 13 did not apply to the city, and that the Belt could have been annexed by a legislative act without a popular vote. He dwelt on that at some length, and made the prediction that, if annexation was voted down, it would be the last time that it would be submitted to the voters, as such an act could be passed without a referendum.

We have thus referred to the briefs, and opinions of prominent attorneys, filed with them by the respective parties, to show how far the attention of the court was directed by them to the question whether it was necessary to have a referendum. As we have seen, another of the grounds relied on by the appellant for the act being invalid was that it did not comply with the requirements of section 1 of article 13 in reference to the submission of the question of annexation. It may be that a sufficient answer to that might have been the decision in Walker v. Oswald, 68 Md. 146, 11 Atl. 711, although Col. McIntosh sought to distinguish the two cases; but if the constitutional provision did not apply, and it was not necessary to submit the question to the people, there could not well have been a more complete answer to the contention and to the allegation in the bill that it was not submitted as required by that provision than to hold that an act for annexation to the city could be passed with or without the consent of the people, for if that be so, and the Legislature chose to submit it, it could determine the terms, etc., of the submission, and hence it was immaterial whether the act of 1888 complied with section 1 of article 13.

But let us see just what the court did decide, and what the judges thought they were called upon to decide. Seven judges sat in that case. Judge Robinson delivered the opinion of the court, and Judges Stone, Miller, Irving, and McSherry concurred in it. Judges Alvey and Bryan concurred in the affirmance of the order appealed from, but differed in some of the conclusions reached by the majority, of which we will speak later. The court, through Judge Robinson, said:

"The power of the Legislature to extend the limits of a city, by including therein parts of the county adjoining, when the city itself is a part of the county, is not and cannot be questioned. It is contended, however, that Baltimore city being a separate and independent territorial division of the state, and not a part of Baltimore county, the Legislature has no power to change the lines of the county by annexing part of its territory to the city. And in support of this contention, the appellant relies entirely upon section 1 of article 13 of the Constitution."

The part of that section which we have quoted above was then set out in the opinion, which calls attention to the fact that:

"It does not say, as has been argued, that the lines of a county shall not be changed except it be for the purpose of annexing parts of one county to another county. It merely provides that, when the lines of a county are to be changed for this purpose, it must be done with the consent of a majority of the voters residing within the district to be annexed."

The court then uses this emphatic language, which can leave no doubt as to its construction of section 1 of article 13:

"The object, and sole object, of this provision of section 1, was to provide for the annexation of parts of one county to another. The entire section in fact, and the article in which it is to be found, deals exclusively with the organization of 'new counties,' 'the location of county seats,' and the mode by which parts of one county may be annexed to another county, and the limitation imposed upon the legislative power is in respect to these matters and these only." (Last italics ours.)

The opinion then pointed out some of the distinctions between counties and towns and cities, and in speaking of the latter said:

"They are chartered by the Legislature, and their boundaries are fixed by it, and the power to extend them, whenever in its judgment the public interests require it, has been exercised by the legislature from the earliest days of the colony."

It then concludes the discussion of that question by saying:

"No one knew better than the framers of the Constitution of 1867 that the time must come, and that not far distant, when the extension of the limits of a great city like Baltimore would be absolutely necessary to its proper growth and development. And if they meant to deny the exercise of this power by the Legislature, and to say that its limits as then defined by its charter should for all time remain the same, it is but reasonable to presume that this intention would have been declared in plain and explicit terms. So far from being expressly declared, there is nothing either in the language or terms of this section from which such an intention can be inferred. The Legislature has therefore, in our opinion, the same power now which it has always exercised, to extend the limits of Baltimore city by including therein parts of Baltimore county, and this, too, with or without the consent of the majority of the voters residing within the districts annexed."

[2] The appellees make special objection to the latter expression, but that was manifestly the necessary result of what had already been clearly and definitely settled in the opinion, as shown above. In the absence of a constitutional prohibition, there can be no doubt under the authorities that it is for the Legislature to say whether or not there shall be a referendum in reference to the extension of the limits of a city or town.

"Not only may the Legislature originally fix the limits of the corporation, but it may, unless specially restrained in the Constitution, subsequently annex, or authorize the annexation of, contiguous or other territory, and this without the consent, and even against the remonstrance, of the majority of the persons residing in the corporation or on the annexed territory. * * * The power to enlarge the boundaries of a municipality by the annexation of contiguous territory is an incident to the legislative power to create and abolish municipalities at pleasure." 1 Dillon on Mun. Corp. (5th Ed.) § 855.

See, also, 1 McQuillin on Mun. Corp. § 265, where many authorities are cited; Johnson v. Luers, 129 Md. 521, 530, 99 Atl. 710; In re Pittsburg, 217 Pa. 227, 66 Atl. 348, 120 Am. St. Rep. 845, affirmed in Hunter v. Pittsburgh, 207 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 40, 52 L. Ed. 151.

The court having held that section 1 of article 13 did not apply, and there being no other restriction in the Constitution, that conclusion would necessarily have meant that the Legislature could act "with or without the consent" of the majority of the voters, even if that expression had been omitted from the opinion, unless the court had placed itself in conflict with the practically unanimous decisions of other courts and our own. How then can it be said that the expression objected to was an obiter dictum, or that the question is not res adjudicata? Judge Bryan filed an opinion in which he concurred in the conclusion reached by the five judges, but differed with them as to whether it was necessary to have the consent of the voters. He did not suggest that it was an obiter dictum, but based his opinion on what he deemed to be the proper construction of section 1 of article 13. The reason he thought that the act of 1888 would have been unconstitutional, had it not required the consent of a majority of the legal voters, was that under his construction of that section it was applicable to Baltimore city, which, in construing the section, was to be considered and treated as a county. That is precisely contrary to what the majority of the court held. He did not intimate that he thought the use of the expression referred to was unwarranted or even unnecessary, if the construction of section 1 of article 13 by the majority was correct. So in Judge Alvey's opinion on that subject. The most of his opinion was devoted to a discussion of section 19 of the act, but he also concluded that section 1 of article 13 was applicable, and of course under his construction of that section he thought "the popular election was an indispensable condition."

It will be noticed that the two dissenting opinions were filed the same day the case was decided (November 23, 1888), which indicates that the majority not only had the views of the dissenting judges but their written opinions before them, in which the attention of the majority was expressly directed to the question of the necessity for the consent of the voters. If it had been simply a passing remark by the learned judge who wrote the opinion, without due consideration having been previously given to it by all the members of the court, and it was not thought proper that it should be mentioned in the opinion, it is impossible to conceive that such men as then constituted this court would not have avoided any question about it, by striking out that sentence; but all of them must have known that, whether the expression criticized was in or out of the opinion, it was unquestionably the necessary result of the construction placed on section 1 of article 13 by the majority.

[3, 4] In view of what we have said, we do not deem it necessary to quote at length from the decisions of this court as to what should be deemed binding in later cases; but in Alexander v. Worthington, 5 Md. 471, 489, the question was discussed at length in an opinion delivered by Chief Judge Le Grand, and he concisely stated the rule to be that:

"All that is necessary, in Maryland, to render the decision of the Court of Appeals authoritative on any point decided, is to show that there was an application of the judicial mind to the precise question adjudged; and this we apprehend is the rule elsewhere."

That was approved in C. O. & L. Co. v. Sherman, 20 Md. 117, 131; Michael v. Morey, 26 Md. 239, 261, 90 Am. Dec. 106; State v. Cowen, 94 Md. 487, 495, 51 Atl. 171; Carsstairs v. Cochran, 95 Md. 488, 52 Atl. 601; and other cases. That rule is not only applicable here, but in our judgment the decision of the question as to a referendum was directly involved in what was necessarily decided. We are therefore of opinion that Daly v. Morgan is a binding authority upon us, and we cannot properly decline to follow it.

We do not deem it necessary or proper to again construe section 1 of article 18 of the Constitution. If we did so, there would be as much, if not more, ground for the contention that our decision was obiter dictum, than there is for what was said in Daly v. Morgan. We certainly would not be justified in overruling that decision, as much of the argument for the appellees was directed to having us do, even if we differed with the majority, which, we will only add, must not be inferred by reason of our declining to construe section 1 of article 18.

But it was argued that the decision in Daly v. Morgan was limited to Baltimore county, and hence is not applicable to this case. We find nothing in that opinion to sustain the position that parts of Baltimore county could be annexed to Baltimore city, but no part of any other county could be. In that case the extensions were into Baltimore county, and that county alone was the one then being considered. The statement in the opinion referred to by the appellees that "the Legislature has therefore, in our opinion, the same power now which it has always exercised, to extend the limits of Baltimore city by including therein parts of Baltimore county," cannot properly be said to have been intended to limit the right to extend the boundaries of Baltimore city into that county. It is said in the brief of the city that its limits had been extended into that county by ten different acts, all of them being while the city was still in Baltimore county. We have not thought it necessary to examine all of the acts referred to, but we know from the records of this court that the limits had been extended, more than once, into Baltimore county, the last time prior to the act of 1888 having been in 1816, and no inference can be drawn, from the statement in the opinion quoted above, that they could not be extended so as to include part of some other county; but it meant, what it in effect said, that the Legislature had the same power to extend the limits "now"—that is to say, in 1888, when the present Constitution was in force—as it had when the city was a part of the county.

[8] It was also argued that, as Anne Arundel county is separated from the city by a part of Baltimore county and is not contiguous to the city, this act for that reason cannot be sustained, even if full effect be given to Daly v. Morgan. Baltimore city is, for a considerable distance, on the opposite shore of the Patapsco river from the lands of Anne Arundel county, and it was decided in Raab v. State, 7 Md. 483, that the Act of 1816, c. 209, extending the boundaries of that city, limited its lines to the north side of the river, thus leaving the portion of the river between the north shore line and the current (to which the Anne Arundel county line extended) in Baltimore county. Although it was intimated in West, Md. T. R. Co. v. Baltimore City, 106 Md. 561, 68 Atl. 6, that but for that decision we might have held the contrary, we expressly declined to overrule it. But treating the boundaries of Baltimore county as inclusive of the space in the river between the Anne Arundel county line, in the current of the river, and that of the city, this act cannot be held to be invalid for that reason. The lines of the proposed extension include all of that part of Baltimore county between the Anne Arundel lines and those of the city, and there is no intervening space. There is no statute or constitutional provision in this state limiting an extension of the boundaries of a city to contiguous territory, as there is in some states, although it may be conceded that some part of the newly acquired territory should be contiguous. As will be seen from the cases collected in the notes to Morgan Park v. Chicago (255 Ill. 190, 90 N. E. 388), in Ann. Cas. 1913D, 390:

"The annexation of outlying territory to a municipality is commonly conditioned, by the statute authorizing the proceeding, on the situation of the territory to be annexed; it being required to be adjacent or contiguous to the municipality."

But proper limitations of the rule are given in that note, where it is said that:

"While the general rule is that land cannot be annexed to a city or town unless it is contiguous thereto, it is not necessary that each and every tract of land sought to be annexed shall be contiguous to the municipality. If all of the tracts are contiguous to each other, and one of them is contiguous to or adjoins a city, that is sufficient."

For that statement a number of cases are cited, and the same rule is stated in 19 R. C. L. 734, § 40, and other authorities; but, if we had found none on the subject, we could have no doubt that such should be the rule.

Having reached the conclusion, as all of us have, after attentively listening to the able and thorough arguments of the attorneys, and after having given to them and the questions involved such consideration, thought, and study as their importance demands, that Daly v. Morgan is a binding and authoritative decision, and that it was there determined by this court, as then constituted, that section 1 of article 18 of the Constitution did not apply to an extension of the limits of the city of Baltimore, and there being no other constitutional or statutory provision affecting it, there can be no valid ground for holding that an extension which affects the lines of the two counties cannot be permitted. As it was there held that the provision as to the change of lines of the county did not apply to a change for the purpose of extending the limits of Baltimore city, it can make no possible difference that parts of two counties are affected, instead of only one. It was even suggested at the argument that such a conclusion would authorize an annexation to Baltimore of some part of a remote county; but we cannot think that such a suggestion would be made on more serious reflection, and, if it should ever be attempted, nothing that we have said can be relied on to sustain it. In this act there are well-defined lines which include additional territory on each side of and immediately adjoining the former boundaries of the city—the most of which was in Baltimore county, and the rest in Anne Arundel county, which adjoins Baltimore county—and the whole, together with the territory included in the city prior to the passage of this act, constitute one body.

It was also urged upon us that we should not feel bound to follow Daly v. Morgan because of the great injustice that will be done the two counties and the people within the annexed territory. But as we have already stated, for whatever injury the two counties or the people in the annexed territory may sustain, the responsibility rests upon the Legislature, and not upon this court. If this court should reverse one of its prior decisions which was so deliberately rendered, on a question of such vast importance as to demand of every judge who sat his fullest consideration and best judgment, as we have endeavored to show was done in Daly v. Morgan, because we felt that it worked a great hardship and possible injustice, not only would the principle of stare decisis have to be ignored, but it would have a tendency to cause decisions of courts to be regarded as unstable and vacillating—depending upon the individual views of the judges who happened to constitute the court when such questions arose.

[8] It is also suggested that the act is in conflict with article 16 of the Constitution (the article on referendum), because it undertakes to affect taxes levied prior to June 1st, when the act under that provision of the Constitution took effect, but it only attempts to affect the proportion of taxes from January 1, 1919, to the end of the pending fiscal year, and does not seem to require further comment.

[7, 8] We will not discuss at length the objections made to the act on account of the provisions in reference to taxation. Most of the argument on that subject is met by the decision in Daly v. Morgan. That case has been cited over and over again in cases involving taxation under chapter 98 of the Act of 1888, and subsequent acts in reference to taxation of property within the Belt. It is there held that the principle of equality in taxation was fully gratified by making local taxation equal and uniform as to all property within the limits of the taxing district, and hence the fifteenth article of our Declaration of Rights was not violated by the Act of 1888. Judge Alvey dissented, but the other six judges who sat were of the opinion that the act was valid. Chief Judge McSherry said in Sindall v. Baltimore City, 98 Md. 526, 49 Atl. 645:

"It must be borne in mind that at the date of the adoption of the Annexation Act a large part of the added territory was unimproved, outlying, rural land. It would have been manifestly unjust to have subjected such property to the same valuation and to the same rate of taxation as then obtained in the city with respect to distinctively urban property."

In Baltimore City v. Gail, 106 Md. 684, 68 Atl. 282, Judge Burke quoted from Judge Robinson's opinion in Daly v. Morgan and from Chief Judge McSherry's in the above case to the same effect. In Miller v. Wicomico County, 107 Md. 438, 69 Atl. 118, Judge Briscoe referred to Daly v. Morgan, and said:

"The same power which authorizes the Legislature to make one taxing district of an entire city equally authorizes it to make two or more taxing districts, if in its judgment the public interest require it."

(But as it would seem clear that, even if the position taken by the appellees on the question of taxation be conceded to be correct, it would not invalidate the whole act, it is unnecessary to continue the discussion of the subject. Not only did Judge Alvey take that position in his dissenting opinion in Daly v. Morgan, but Judge Robinson in speaking for the majority also in effect did. The case of Steenken v. State, 88 Md. 708, 42 Atl. 212, cited that case, amongst others, on that question. If that be correct in a case where the question had been submitted to the people, there is all the more reason why it should be so in this case where it was not submitted.)

[9-11] The question in reference to the part of the act, which has a saving clause as to certain officers who reside within the annexed territory, certainly cannot affect the rest of the act. Nor do we find anything in the act to justify the contention that it is taking property without just compensation or without due process of law. It is said that Baltimore county owns a number of properties within the annexed district which it had purchased under tax sales. But the provisions for Baltimore city taking over the public property cannot be construed to mean such property as that. It only means such as is held for public purposes, and not any property that either county may own that does not come in that class.

The rule is thus stated in 1 Dillon on Mun. Cor. (5th Ed.) § 360:

"Upon the annexation of part to another corporation, the Legislature may provide for an equitable apportionment or division of the property, and impose upon the new corporation, or upon the people and territory, thus disannexed, the obligation to pay an equitable proportion of the corporate debts. But there is usually no constitutional requirement that the Legislature shall make such provision, and in the absence of such requirement it may provide for the annexation of territory to a municipality and the transfer to it of such public property as may be within the territory annexed, without imposing upon the municipality any obligation either to pay for the property so transferred or to assume and pay for any portion of the unpaid debts contracted in the acquisition or erection of buildings and other property transferred."

As will be seen from sections 358, 359, and the rest of 360 of that volume, it is generally held that, in the absence of a constitutional provision, the Legislature makes the disposition of public property.

[12] In Hunter v. Pittsburgh, 207 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 40, 52 L. Ed. 151, which affirmed in re Pittsburgh, 217 Pa. 227, 66 Atl. 348, 120 Am. St. Rep. 845, the question is considered at some length in reference to property held and used for governmental purposes. But if there be any property owned by either of the counties, in addition to that held and used for governmental purposes, for which it can be said proper provision has not been made, that would not require the portion of the act providing for the annexation to be set aside. Without attempting to refer to other points which have been raised, we are of the opinion that all of the cases before us must be reversed.

Order reversed and cause remanded, in order that a mandamus issue as prayed; the costs to be paid by the county commissioners of Baltimore county.

ELK NATURAL GAS CO. v. RIDGWAY LIGHT & HEAT CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

MINES AND MINERALS §—55(3)—SALE OF GAS —CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

Where contract for sale of gas provided that vendor should sell all surplus natural gas in a named district, excepting such as desired for customers or used in drilling wells, it was not material that vendor had gas from other sources with which it could have supplied such customers, whereby there would have been a surplus for the vendee.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Elk County.

Bill by the Elk Natural Gas Company against the Ridgway Light & Heat Company. From a decree refusing an injunction, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The facts appear in the following opinion of Bouton, P. J., in the common pleas, sur defendant's eighth request for conclusions of law:

"Eighth. That the complainant's bill in this case must be dismissed. Answer: We affirm this request."

Notwithstanding the numerous requests filed on the part of the plaintiff for findings of fact, the material question upon which this case hinges is the construction of the contract between the parties; and it seems to us that the gas which the first party contracted to sell to the second party is so clearly defined in the contract that no controversy whatever ought to have arisen over it. It appears that the party of the first part to the contract, having developed a considerable quantity of gas in what is known as the Beaver Meadow district and already having large quantities of gas from other sources, was willing to sell to the second party such gas from the Beaver Meadow district as they did not desire for use to supply their customers or for the drillings of wells, and the second party was anxious to purchase the gas.

The contract was made solely for such gas from the Beaver Meadow district that the party of the first part did not desire to supply to its customers, and it appears in the contract "that the words 'surplus natural gas' are construed and shall be taken to mean all the natural gas which is not desired by the first party for supply to its customers, and except gas used in the drilling of wells in said district either by the party of the first part or other persons." The contract provides further: "It is expressly declared and understood that the purpose of this contract is the sale by the first party and the purchase by the second party of all surplus natural gas which is produced by the first party in the so-called Beaver Meadow district above mentioned, which it desires to sell as above provided."

Under this contract, there was nothing to prevent the Ridgway Light & Heat Company from using all of the gas produced from the Beaver Meadow district for supplying its customers, if it so desired; and it had the right to do with the gas from its other fields whatever it saw fit. It could have sold its wells in these other districts absolutely, or it could have sold every foot of gas from these other fields to whomever it saw fit, and supply its retail customers from the Beaver Meadow district. There was no intent in the contract in any way to restrict the Ridgway Light & Heat Company from doing as it pleased with all gas produced from its fields other than the Beaver Meadow district. It does not occur to us that further discussion is necessary.

It further appeared that defendant was using all the gas from the Beaver Meadow district for its own customers.

Argued before BROWN, O. J., and POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

Geo. F. Whitmer, of Clarion, Reed, Smith, Shaw & Beal and H. O. Evans, all of Pittsburgh, and D. J. Driscoll, of St. Mary's, for appellant. E. H. Baird and John G. Whitmore, both of Ridgway, and W. E. Rice, of Warren, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is dismissed, at appellant's costs, on so much of the opinion of the learned court below as follows the answer to defendant's eighth request for a conclusion of law.

CHRIST et al. v. DUBOSKY.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1913.)

1. COURTS \S 116(1)—AMENDMENT OF RECORD—POWER.

Every court of record has power to direct the amendment of its records, to conform to what the court finds to be a true state of facts.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS \S 180—MOTION TO STRIKE.

Where, in proceeding to strike off mechanic's lien for matter of record, the docket showed the lien filed July 7, 1913, and notice filed August 18th, but the trial court found that the return of service had actually been filed July 18th, it was error to discharge the rule without correcting the record.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Schuylkill County.

Bill by C. E. Christ and others, trading as the Tamaqua Construction Company against Anthony Dubosky. From decree refusing to strike off a mechanic's lien, defendant appealed. Record remitted for amendment.

Bechtel, P. J., filed the following opinion in the common pleas:

This case comes before us on a rule upon the plaintiff to show cause why the mechanic's lien should not be stricken from the record for matters appearing of record, to wit: Said mechanic's lien was filed on the 7th day of July, 1913, and entered in Mechanic's Lien Docket No. 15, page 70. Notice to the owner defendant and affidavit of service thereof upon him was not filed of record within one month of the time within which said lien was filed, namely, July 7, 1913; said notice and affidavit of service having been filed, as appears of record, on August 18, 1913. To this rule an answer was filed alleging, inter alia, that the notice of filing was served on the defendant on July 16, 1913, and sworn return of said notice was filed in the office of the prothonotary on July 18, 1913, and that the date of filing of said return of service appearing thereon, namely, August 18, 1913, was mistakenly or erroneously placed thereon by the prothonotary. Upon this rule and answer depositions were taken during which the testimony of the prothonotary, R. J. Graeff (the attorney who filed the return of service of the notice), and two experts, were taken. The filing indorsed on the return of service was made by rubber stamp with movable date, and it is claimed that in the use of this stamp the word "August" slipped around and was imprinted on the paper, where it should have been "July," making the date of filing read August 18th, instead of July 18th. The prothonotary testified that it is his belief that this occurred, and that the date of filing is erroneous. The attorney testifies that he placed the return of service in an envelope addressed to the prothonotary, which was mailed by himself, or under his direction, on the 17th of July. The return was not accompanied by any letter.

It is manifestly impossible that any one could testify absolutely that the date was an error, because, had the error been discovered, it would have, in all probability, been corrected. The expert called in behalf of the plaintiff testifies that the person using the stamp exerted the greatest pressure on the top thereof, and that he is of the opinion that this pressure resulted in the gradual drawing of the word "August" into the face of the stamp and testifies to some measurements that he made relevant thereto. An investigation of this matter disclosed that there were three writs filed in the prothonotary's office Nos. 10, 11, and 12, September term, 1913, which were marked filed with the same stamp, August 18, 1913, and that this filing is a mistake. It is admitted that the date should have been July 18, 1913. An inspection of the stamps on these three writs, together with the impression upon the writ involved in the case at bar, discloses the fact that the word "August" and the figure "1" is not in alignment with the rest of the stamp, being considerably below the line. It seems to us very persuasive evidence that these impressions were made at the same time, as it would be almost impossible that this month and figure should be out of alignment in almost exactly the same way one month later as it was on the date the impression was made on the first three writs.

[1, 2] It is contended that the evidence in the case should be at least clear, precise, and indubitable, as its purpose is to reform a written instrument. We cannot agree with this contention. This is not a case in which a written instrument is sought to be reformed, but a case in which the court is asked to reform the date of filing of a record to conform to the truth, and it seems to us the measure of proof is quite different. In City v. Gault, 8 Wkly. Notes Cas. 14, it is said: "The question is only as to the power of the court to amend its records. Of this there can be no doubt, and as it is quite clear from the record that a judgment was rendered which the clerk neglected to enter upon the appearance docket, it is a proper case for the exercise of the power of amendment." In Sheip & Co. v. Price, Page & Co., 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 1, it is said: "Every court of record is the guardian and judge of its own records. It is clothed with full power to control and inquire into them, and to set them right if incorrect."

* * * It is much to be deplored that an interlineation, an alteration, or an erasure should ever appear upon a judicial record; but it would be intolerable to hold that a party in no way responsible for the keeping of the records must explain it or be deprived of the rights which the record was intended to give him." In Rice v. Constein, 89 Pa. 477, it is held: "The error of a prothonotary of the common pleas, who was also the prothonotary of the district court, in filing in the latter a report of viewers and an appeal therefrom, required to be filed in the common pleas, will not deprive a party of his right of trial by jury upon complying with the requirements of the law on his part."

There can be no question of the right of the court to direct the amendment of this record to conform to what the court finds to be the true state of facts relative to the filing of this notice. A careful review of the testimony and the exhibits in the case has led us to the conclusion that the date of filing, as indorsed upon this notice, is an error, and that the true date should have been July 18, 1913. This being so, we feel constrained to dismiss the rule granted in this issue.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

John B. McGurl, of Minersville, for appellant. Arthur L. Shay and R. J. Graeff, both of Pottsville, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. The learned court did not err in finding that the true date of the filing of the notice of service that the mechanic's lien had been filed was July 18, 1913, but, before discharging the rule to show cause, the record ought to have been properly amended. If it had been so amended, this appeal would be dismissed.

And now, May 6, 1918, it is ordered that the entire record be remitted to the court below, that it may amend its record as indicated, and, when so amended, the rule to show cause will be properly discharged.

SCOUTON v. STONY BROOK LUMBER CO.
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS §—426(10)—NOTE IRREGULARLY ISSUED—ACCEPTANCE OF BENEFITS.

A corporation, which has received the benefit of a note irregularly issued, cannot escape liability by showing that it was not executed by the proper officer.

2. CORPORATIONS §—510(2)—MONEY ADVANCED—EVIDENCE—NOTE IRREGULARLY EXECUTED.

Where, in an action against a corporation to recover on a note, defendant's obligation arose from the receipt of the money for which the note was issued, the note, though not executed by the proper officers, was properly admitted in evidence.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Sullivan County.

Action by John G. Scouton against the Stony Brook Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

C. D. Coughlin and G. J. Clark, both of Wilkes-Barre, for appellants. E. J. Mullen, of La Porte, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This is an action of assumpsit for money loaned. The defendant company was incorporated in 1910, with an authorized capital stock of $200,000, divided into shares of $100 each. It owned a tract of 2,200 acres of timber land in Sullivan county, where it was engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber. Prior to August, 1915, 1,500 shares of its capital stock had been issued, of which 1,100 share were owned or controlled by John Hughes Blackman and the remaining 400 shares by C. F. Carter. The latter manufactured the lumber for the corporation, and the former looked after its business affairs. In the spring of 1915 Carter secured from Blackman an option for the purchase of his stock. Blackman was president of the corporation, and insisted that, in connection with the sale of his stock, all the company's direct and collateral liabilities, amounting to about $41,000, must be paid. The agreed price for his stock was in round numbers $50,000, making the amount necessary to consummate the transaction $91,000. Carter employed plaintiff, who was an attorney, to assist him in securing this money, which was obtained largely by loans from banks and individuals. The option as drawn expired July 15th of that year, but was extended. The parties in interest met at a bank in Pittston on July 31st, also on August 2d, and again on August 4th, when the matter was finally consummated, and Carter became the owner of practically all the stock of the corporation. At the same time the company was reorganized, and the number of directors increased from three to five, which included Carter, his two sons, plaintiff, and H. W. Ruggles. A share of stock was transferred to each of the two latter to qualify them to act as such. Mr. Carter became president, his son, Bruce A. Carter, secretary, and Mr. Ruggles, treasurer.

Some of the notes given by Carter to raise the money were indorsed by plaintiff, who also furnished $5,000 of his own, which amount, with the balance of the $91,000, was turned over to Blackman at the meeting on August 4th. So far as appears, Mr. Blackman paid all the debts and liabilities of the old company and retained the balance as the price of his stock. The only question involved in this suit is whether the $5,000 was a loan to Carter or to the corporation; plaintiff says to the corporation. The $41,000 indebtedness included $6,500 owing to Blackman for salary. On the day last mentioned there was a meeting of the new board of directors, at which four were present; and the evidence for plaintiff tends to show that it was then agreed and understood that his $5,000 was a loan to the corporation and to be used in payment of Blackman's salary. In corroboration of this a three-months note for that amount, drawn payable to plaintiff and executed by the new president and secretary in the corporate name, was put in evidence. The note was not signed by the treasurer as the by-laws provide; but plaintiff's evidence is to the effect that the treasurer was present, consented to the transaction, and said he would sign the note, if necessary. This is denied by the treasurer, who testifies, in effect, that it was a loan to Carter, and not to the company, and that the question of treating it as a loan from plaintiff to the company was broached at the meeting on August 2d, when he (the treasurer) refused to so consider it, or to sign the note, and that later, after a private conversation between Carter and plaintiff, they stated that other arrangements had been made as to the $5,000, and further that he had no knowledge of said note until long afterwards, and never consented thereto.

As we understand the facts none of the funds turned over to Blackman, passed through the hands of the treasurer. The minutes of the corporate meeting held that day contain no reference to this loan. Ruggles seems to have been interested in this suit as the holder of a large block of the company's stock as collateral for a loan to Carter, who died in November, 1915, apparently insolvent. The note was admitted in evidence in support of plaintiff's contention. As the court below says, there was a sharp conflict in the evidence. Each side was supported to some extent by more than one witness, and the case became largely one of fact; as such it was submitted to the jury with adequate instructions. The verdict was in favor of the plaintiff, and the lower court, after careful consideration, directed judgment to be entered thereon, from which defendant appealed.

[1] We find no error in the record. Some of the funds turned over to Blackman were for his stock, and the balance for corporate indebtedness. The jury found this $5,000 was a part of the latter; that being so, the corporation received the benefit of the loan. Conceding that the president and secretary were not authorized to execute the note, yet the company got the money, which it cannot retain and repudiate the agency by which it was secured. Upon this question we adopt the following from the opinion of the court below:

"If plaintiff's money was loaned and used for such purpose, it is of no consequence that the election of officers was irregular, or that one of them was absent at the time of such loan, or that the treasurer did not execute the note. Such irregularities give way to the principle that a party cannot avail himself of the benefit of his agent's act and repudiate his authority, in the application of which it is held that a corporation which has received the benefit of a note irregularly issued cannot escape liability thereon by showing it was not executed by the proper officers. Hartzell v. Ebbvale Mining Co., 239 Pa. 602, 86 Atl. 1093; Pannebaker v. Tuscarora Valley R. R. Co., 219 Pa. 60, 67 Atl. 923; Presbyterian Board v. Gilbee, 212 Pa. 810, 61 Atl. 925; Penn Natural Gas Co. v. Cook, 128 Pa. 170, 18 Atl. 762; MacGeorge v. Chemical Mfg. Co., 141 Pa. 575, 21 Atl. 671. And a director of a company, suing, is not denied the application of such rule. Kendall v. Klapperthal Co., 202 Pa. 596, 52 Atl. 92."

[2] The defendant's obligation arises from the receipt of the money by it, and the note, although defectively executed, is evidence as tending to establish the loan. See Wojciechowski v. Johnkowski, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 444. A corporation may lawfully borrow money to pay its indebtedness, and when used for that purpose the obligation to repay is undoubted. The fact that the loan in question did not pass through the hands of the treasurer is not controlling, nor is the absence of any reference thereto in the corporate minutes.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

KERK v. PETERS.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

HIGHWAYS §184(3)—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for death of plaintiff's husband, struck by defendant's automobile on a highway, the questions of defendant's negligence and plaintiff's contributory negligence were for the jury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Northampton County.

Action by Katherine B. Kerk, administratrix of Samuel H. Kerk, deceased, against Arthur E. Peters. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

W. H. Kirkpatrick, of Easton, for appellant. Calvin F. Smith, of Easton, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The husband of the appellee, when crossing a public highway, was struck by an automobile driven by the appellant, and death resulted from the injuries he sustained. On this appeal from the judgment on a verdict against the appellant his contention is that there was no evidence of negligence on his part in driving the automobile, while the contributory negligence of the deceased was clear, and the court below should have so held by directing a verdict for the defendant or entering judgment in his favor non obstante verdicto.

To have taken the case from the jury on either ground would have been error. The appellant admitted in his testimony that he saw appellee's husband on the road about 60 feet ahead of him; that he blew his horn and could have stopped his machine before he struck the deceased. Edwin H. Kelper, who was in the automobile with the appellant at the time of the collision, called as a witness for him, testified that when the horn was blown the deceased seemed bewildered, and in a minute the automobile struck him. He was struck with such force that, according to an eyewitness, he "went through the air." The defendant undertook to pass on the right-hand side of the road, where there was considerably less room to pass than on the other side, to the left of the deceased. It seems from the testimony that on that side there was a clear width of more than 20 feet. With the admission of the defendant that he could have stopped his automobile before he struck the deceased, who was standing in the road bewildered, according to the testimony of two witnesses called for the defense, the correct conclusion of the learned court below in denying defendant's motion for judgment was that his negligence was a question of fact for the jury.

The deceased was lawfully on the highway, and he was not guilty of any negligence in attempting to cross it. The blowing of the horn and the approach of the automobile dazed him, and the law did not exact from him in his bewilderment the degree of care which he would have been bound to observe, if he had not been suddenly confronted with unexpected peril through the act of the defendant. It was manifestly for this reason that the learned trial judge refused to affirm defendant's fifth point, which embodied a correct general rule. As a fair inference to be drawn from the testimony was that the deceased was not, under the circumstances, guilty of contributory negligence, that question was for the jury. Cohen v. Philadelphia & Reading Railway Co., 211 Pa. 227, 60 Atl. 729; Clark v. William M. Lloyd Co., 254 Pa. 168, 98 Atl. 866.

Nothing is to be found in any of the assignments of error calling for a disturbance of the judgment, and it is accordingly affirmed.

NORTHWESTERN CONSOL. MILLING CO.
v. YOUNG.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF — AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE.

In assumpsit for money had and received to plaintiff's use, where defendant had been employed as a salesman and collector, affidavit of defense that defendant had paid the money by applying it to other accounts owing by plaintiff was insufficient, where there was no averment of authority to so apply it.

2. ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF — AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE—SUFFICIENCY.

In assumpsit for money had and received by salesman and collector for plaintiff, affidavit of defense held insufficient, where it did not appear that transactions alleged to be a defense to the claim were ever acquiesced in by plaintiff, or that he ever had knowledge of the same, or that the manager under whom defendant was acting had knowledge of such transaction or authority to agree to it for the plaintiff.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Schuylkill County.

Action by the Northwestern Consolidated Milling Company against George D. Young. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The following is the opinion of Bechtel, P. J., in the common pleas:

This case comes before us on a rule on the defendant to show cause why judgment should not be entered in favor of the plaintiff, notwithstanding the affidavit of defense to a portion of the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff maintains a branch office and warehouse at Shenandoah, in this county, for the carrying on of its business in that vicinity and the defendant, George D. Young, was employed by it and acted as salesman and collector for it at the said place. Acting in such capacity, the affidavit of defense admits that the defendant received * * * amounts of money from certain customers.

[1] He claims, however, that he should not be charged with these amounts by reason of the fact that he paid them to the plaintiff by applying them to other accounts; that is, the credits were given to people other than those who actually paid the amounts. Where he received the authority to do this, or whether or not it was done with the knowledge of the plaintiff or the parties whose money was so credited, does not appear in the affidavit of defense. We do not see by what right this defendant collected the money from one man and credited it on the account of another, and we do not feel that this would be a valid defense in the trial of the case. We therefore grant judgment for this amount, $2,805.97.

The declaration claims from the defendant the sum of $6,166.64 for flour under the defendant's control and in his possession while he was employed as salesman and collector, and which he caused to be charged on the books of the plaintiff as having been sold to certain persons; * * * whereas, in truth and fact the flour to the amount above named was never received by said parties, but was disposed of and delivered by the said defendant to other parties and he has received payment for the same and declined to make payment to the plaintiff. The affidavit of defense, replying thereto, sets forth that the defendant was under the orders and direction of F. D. Watts, assistant manager for Eastern Pennsylvania, Philadelphia branch of the plaintiff company, and that the said F. D. Watts would call on defendant for money and insist on having advances without delay. Whereupon the deponent would make sales of flour to different customers and others to realize money quickly, and in order to do so, and to induce immediate purchases, so as to provide for the demands of the said F. D. Watts, defendant sold, to the different persons named, flour at less than the prevailing or market price, but, on the books of the company the persons purchasing at reduced price were charged the prevailing or market price of flour, and this course of dealing was carried on for a considerable time, and in that way balances against the customers, being the difference between what they actually paid for the flour and the market price, increased from time to time. He alleges that all moneys received from the customers at less than market price were paid by the defendant to the milling company from time to time, and that the balances against such customers, as appear in the fourth paragraph hereinabove set forth, defendant never received, and was not and is not personally responsible to the company for the amounts.

[2] There nowhere appears in the affidavit of defense any averment that this arrangement was ever acquiesced in by the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff had any knowledge of the same, nor does it appear that F. D. Watts, assistant manager for Eastern Pennsylvania, had any knowledge of it, or acquiesced in it, nor does it appear that the said F. D. Watts had the authority to make any such arrangement for the plaintiff company.

In view of these facts, we do not think that the affidavit of defense is sufficient as to these items.

The court entered judgment for plaintiff for want of sufficient affidavit of defense, for $8,877.16 with interest from August 14, 1916. Defendant appealed.

Error assigned was in entering judgment for plaintiff for want of sufficient affidavit of defense.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

John F. Whalen and George Ellis, both of Pottsville, for appellant. J. F. Mahoney and James B. Reilly, both of Pottsville, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The court below was fully justified in entering judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense in this case for the amount for which judgment was claimed. There was no sufficient denial of the claim of plaintiff that the defendant collected upon its account, and failed to pay over to it, the sums of money in question. The judgment is affirmed.

JONES et al. v. WYOMISSING CLUB et al.
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

INJUNCTION §118(2)—PAROL BUILDING RESTRICTION—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

A bill to restrain violation of a parol building restriction entered into between remote predecessors in title of plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, was demurrable, where it did not allege that defendants or any of their predecessors in title, except the one who made the agreement, had notice thereof.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Berks County.

Bill by Margaret E. McCarty Jones and husband against the Wyomissing Club and another. From a decree sustaining demurrer and dismissing the bill, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Endlich, P. J., filed the following opinion in the common pleas sur defendants' demurrer to the bill:

Mrs. Jones, the principal plaintiff, and the Wyomissing Club, the principal defendant, are the owners of adjoining properties in the city of Reading fronting on Fifth street, the plaintiff deriving title through successive holders from one Sallade, and the defendant similarly from one Dunn. On plaintiffs' property there is a house (plaintiffs' residence), and on defendant's property there was one until recently, when it was demolished to make room for a new building. The purpose of this action is to inhibit the defendant, in the erection of the new structure, from building 8½ feet west of a certain line which, it is stated in the bill as now amended in the fourth paragraph, was in 1848 agreed upon as a building line by the then owners of the respective properties, and subsequently by Sallade, when he became the owner of and built upon plaintiffs' property; the former also constructing the north wall of his house (the side towards plaintiffs' property) as a party wall, which, however, is not alleged to have been utilized by Sallade.

Defendant has demurred to the bill, specifying a number of grounds, of which, since the amendment of the bill, the significant ones are the seventh and eighth, to the effect that the bill avers neither the appearance of any such agreement and restriction in the title of the property to be affected thereby, nor any notice of the same to defendant or any of its predecessors in title under Dunn. The portions of the bill, as amended, which are important for present purposes, are as follows:

"4. That on or about August 30, 1848, James L. Dunn, Esq., erected the building on the corner of Fifth and Walnut streets, which the defendant club building is now succeeding. He and the then owner of the adjoining property fronting on Fifth street, now owned by the plaintiffs, made an agreement whereby they established a line 20 feet east of the street line for the location of all future buildings to be erected upon these premises. Pursuant thereto the said James L. Dunn erected a building 20 feet back from the street line, and erected a party wall between him and the adjoining owner, the western end of which was 20 feet back from the Fifth street line. That subsequently, to wit, on or about April 1, 1850, Andrew M. Sallade, Esq., who succeeded to the title of the premises now owned by the plaintiffs, pursuant to and in compliance with the said agreement, built upon the line established, as aforesaid, observing the said building line and restriction for the purpose of mutually increasing the value and comfortable enjoyment of their respective premises; each party observing and confirming the servitude or easement established by agreement as aforesaid in favor of the estate of the other, for their mutual advantage and benefit.

"5. That notwithstanding the restriction and servitude thus imposed upon the lot of the defendants, they have commenced the erection of a building on said Fifth street to extend 3½ feet west of said covenant building line (being the line of plaintiffs' residence), established by the predecessors in title of the parties to this action more than 60 years ago and maintained continuously and uninterruptedly in good faith and mutual understanding ever since.

"6. That the said plaintiffs, and the prior owners of 206 North Fifth street have enjoyed, since said buildings were erected, an open area and unobstructed space in front of said buildings to the west, with the attendant comforts of light and air; and the owners of the property north of the Dunn property, in subsequently building, followed the covenant line thus established for future buildings, as appears by the marks upon the ground, covering the seven buildings now thereon erected."

In a bill in equity, every fact essential to the right to the relief prayed for must be averred. Thompson's Appeal, 126 Pa. 367, 17 Atl. 643; P. S. V. R. R. Co. v. P. & R. R. Co., 160 Pa. 277, 23 Atl. 784; Finletter v. Appleton, 195 Pa. 349, 45 Atl. 1063; Luther v. Luther, 216 Pa. 1, 64 Atl. 868; Rittenhouse v. Newhard, 232 Pa. 433, 81 Atl. 445; Spangler Brewing Co. v. McHenry, 242 Pa. 522, 89 Atl. 665. And a demurrer admits only what is adequately stated in the bill, not conclusions of law, or argumentative or doubtful inferences from facts detailed. Com. v. Allegheny Com'rs, 37 Pa. 277, 279; Getty v. Pa. Inst. for Blind, 194 Pa. 571, 575, 45 Atl. 333; Bussier v. Weekey, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 69, 72. A right of the kind here asserted over another's land must, save in exceptional conditions not found in this case, rest upon express agreement (Rennyson's Appeal, 94 Pa. 147, 153, 39 Am. Rep. 777; and see Haverstick v. Sipe, 33 Pa. 365), which, in order to avail against succeeding owners, must clearly and positively appear to have been intended, not only to bind the immediate parties to it, but permanently to control the situation (Hubbell v. Warren, 8 Allen [Mass.] 173, 178). Nor is it or can it be disputed, or required to be demonstrated by the citation of authorities, that subsequent purchasers cannot be affected by such agreement unless they have notice, actual or constructive, of the restriction created thereby; and that notice must have reached every one in the line of the title of the party against whom the right is asserted, for, if any one purchased without notice, that party, though himself visited with notice, is protected by the equity of the unnotified purchaser. Filby v. Miller, 25 Pa. 264. Of course, the fact of notice is one which is bound to appear affirmatively on the face of the bill (Finletter v. Appleton, 195 Pa. 349, 353, 45 Atl. 1063; Gilkeason v. Thompson, 210 Pa. 355, 358, 359, 59 Atl. 1114), either by express and formal averment or by deduction from facts explicitly stated which admit of no other conclusions, so that from them the inference of notice must necessarily follow (Id.).

There seems to be in this bill no express averment of notice of the alleged agreement or restriction to defendant or any of its predecessors in title under Dunn; nothing to suggest such notice beyond what may be argued to have been conveyed to them by the facts that the houses already spoken of and several others occupying the remainder of the original tract north of the Dunn property stood a uniform distance back of the city building line and that the first one was built with a party wall on the north side. Neither of these circumstances, however, can be regarded as conclusive in the sense above pointed out. It is virtually decided by Judge King in Scott v. Burton, 2 Ashm. 312, 329, 330, that the mere location of the houses is not ordinarily notice to a purchaser of any restrictive agreement such as is here contended for; and the same doctrine may fairly be gathered from Haverstick v. Sipe, 33 Pa. 368, 371, and Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80. As ordinarily, so in the present instance, that location, so far as regards anything to be indicated by it, may have been a mere matter of neighborly accommodation, of personal convenience, of individual taste, without any contractual basis or possibly of an agreement intended to hold only the immediate parties to it. On the other hand, the existence of the party wall, apparently unused by the adjoiner, affords no reason for believing that the latter might not build out further—no more than for treating it as evidencing an agreement not to build higher. The object in putting it up may well have been simply to serve the then present convenience of the first builder, and perhaps the supposed future convenience of the adjoiner as far as the wall went. Besides, its erection being the act of one party, not followed by any act of the other making it his also, it can hardly be deemed evidence or notice of an agreement between them. To both of the matters in question, the rule appears applicable that a fact or facts equally consistent with two contrary inferences cannot be accepted as the sole basis for either. Breckmann v. Twibill, 89 Pa. 58, 59; Mead v. Conroe, 113 Pa. 220, 228, 8 Atl. 374; Alexander v. Penna. Water Co., 201 Pa. 252, 256, 50 Atl. 991. If the facts averred clearly involved the inference of notice of a restrictive agreement designed to be perpetual, there would be no need for an express allegation of such notice. But in view of their inconclusiveness, the allegation is essential to the completeness of the bill, and it lacks ground for demurrer under the authorities above cited.

No doubt the averments of this bill state the plaintiffs' case as strongly for her side as it can be stated. It can only be adjudged that in the particulars discussed, it falls short of what is needful to warrant a decree granting the relief prayed. Hence there is no alternative but to consider the demurrer in those particulars to be good.

Argued before BROWN, O. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WAILING, JJ.

J. Milton Miller and C. H. Ruhl, both of Reading, for appellants. Snyder, Zieher & Snyder, of Reading, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. The agreement upon which the appellants base their right to an injunction was in parol, and there is no express averment in their bill that the Wyoming Club, or any of its predecessors in title under Dunn, had notice of it. The demurrer was therefore properly sustained, and the decree dismissing the bill is affirmed, at appellants' costs.

TRACTION MATERIALS CO. v. PITTSBURGH, M. & W. RY. CO. (No. 1.)
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. RECEIVERS §98—LIABILITIES—MISAPPLICATION OF FUNDS.

Funds allowed receiver of insolvent corporation for necessary improvements and current expenses cannot be diverted by him to the payment of unsecured creditors of the corporation, and if he does so he is liable to a surcharge for the amount paid.

2. RECEIVERS §98—LIABILITIES—MISAPPLICATION OF FUNDS.

Where a receiver paid for personal property turned over to the insolvent by a bondholder's committee, and the property was not worth the price paid, and the payment covered the property and also a balance due the committee, the receiver was properly surcharged with the difference between the value of the property and the amount paid.

3. RECEIVERS §99(3)—PAYMENT OF STATE TAX.

Where receiver paid state tax assessed prior to his appointment against the insolvent corporation and prior to Act June 15, 1911 (P. L. 955) dispensing with necessity of filing a lien for taxes against the property of a corporation, and the assessment had not been filed, the receiver was chargeable with such payment.

4. RECEIVERS §98—LIABILITIES—EXTENSION OF ROAD.

Where, before appointment of receiver of a street railroad company, contract had been made with another company for extension of its lines, and receiver made extension by leave of court, which extension passed to purchaser at receiver's sale, receiver was not chargeable with amount expended for making such connection.

5. RECEIVERS §202—EXCEPTIONS TO REPORT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where specified exceptions are filed to certain credits claimed by the receiver, burden is on him to support same by evidence.

6. RECEIVERS §123—CERTIFICATES—SALE BY RECEIVER—PAYMENT OF COMMISSION.

Where receiver was authorized to sell certificates at not less than 90 per cent. of the par value, and an agent sold them for 94 per cent., and kept 4 per cent. as commission, the receiver was not liable for the amount of such commission.

7. RECEIVERS §196—COMPENSATION.

Where receivership extends over term of years, a single act of misfeasance, by which receiver does not profit, will not deprive him of all compensation.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR §955—COMPENSATION OF RECEIVER—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

Appellate court will only interfere with allowance of compensation to receiver in order to correct abuse of discretion.

9. RECEIVERS §196—COMPENSATION—MISAPPLICATION OF FUNDS.

Where receivership lasts four years, contention that receiver should not be allowed any compensation, because he paid a bondholder's committee more than the fair value of certain property, was without merit, where he made no profit personally.

10. RECEIVERS §155—OPERATING EXPENSES—IMPROVEMENTS.

As a general rule, the court appointing a receiver for a street railway corporation may allow for operating expenses and necessary improvements out of the corpus of the estate, even against the mortgage lien creditors.

11. RECEIVERS §155—PREFERRED CLAIMS.

Where court directed its receiver to continue trolley road as going concern, and road was sold by receiver divested of liens, expenses in connection with running thereof, in addition to certificates issued by order of court, were preferred claims.

12. RECEIVERS §154(1)—COSTS.

Where receiver kept honest accounts, and his surcharge exceeded his commission, the court properly ordered the costs paid out of the fund.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Allegheny County.

Bill by the Traction Materials Company against the Pittsburgh, McKeesport & Westmoreland Railway Company for the appointment of a receiver. Exceptions to report of auditor were sustained in part, and the Union Trust Company of New Jersey, the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of West Newton, Pa., and James G. Hasking and the Union Trust Company of Pittsburgh, trustees, appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHIZSKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

M. W. Acheson, Jr., and Sterrett & Acheson, all of Pittsburgh, for appellants. W. Clyde Grubbs and W. B. Secrist, both of Pittsburgh, for appellee.

WALLING, J. These three appeals raise the same questions and will be considered together. They are from the decree of the court below disposing of exceptions to the auditor's report and making distribution of the balance in the hands of the receiver. In November, 1911, the appellee, James B. Secrist, was appointed receiver of the Pittsburgh, McKeesport & Westmoreland Railway Company, which owned and operated an electric street railway, about nine miles long and extending from McKeesport, Allegheny county, to Irwin, Westmoreland county. The appointment was made in above case on a creditors' bill alleging the defendant's insolvency. The company was a financial failure, and had outstanding first mortgage bonds to the par value of $442,000, on which no interest had been paid since 1905. About three months prior to the appointment of the receiver, a bondholders' committee had been organized, to whom was transferred $424,000 par value of said bonds. The committee practically had charge of the road during those three months, and among other things secured a loan of $15,000 from the Columbia Knickerbocker Trust Company of New York, for which it pledged bonds of the company as collateral. Some of this money was used to pay for two new car bodies, which the company had ordered, but could not obtain for lack of funds, and the balance was expended for other necessities of the road. The committee had turned the car bodies over to the company on a lease at the price of $7,900.

[1, 2] Soon after his appointment, the receiver applied to court for an order authorizing him to issue receiver's certificates to the amount of $20,500 for the purpose, inter alia, of paying $15,000 for the two car bodies. The order was made and certificates to the last-named amount were turned over to the committee, ostensibly to pay for the car bodies, but, as it appears, in reality to pay, not only for the car bodies, but also for the balance which the committee had expended for the road. While the receiver made the payment in this way, under the advice of counsel, he knew the car bodies were not worth the $15,000. The auditor characterizes this transaction as an exhibition of gross carelessness and bad faith on part of the receiver, and a legal fraud, and surcharges him with the difference between the $15,000 and the real value of the car bodies as stated in the lease. This was approved by the court below. The receiver gained nothing personally by the transaction, and possibly intended no wrong; but, in the most favorable aspect of the case, he used the balance of the $15,000 to pay a pre-existing indebtedness of the company to the committee, which he could not lawfully do. So the surcharge was right. Funds allowed the receiver of an insolvent corporation for necessary improvements and current expenses cannot be diverted by him to the payment of certain unsecured creditors of the corporation, thus giving them an unlawful preference, whether it be done directly or indirectly. Knowingly or negligently paying a fictitious value for property would result in a surcharge of the receiver, and he is not relieved because the excess is applied to a pre-existing indebtedness which he had no authority to pay.

[3] The receiver paid a state tax of $961.74, which had been assessed against the corporation prior to his appointment, but had not been filed of record, so as to become a lien; this being prior to the act of June 15, 1911 (P. L. 955), dispensing with such filing. The court below properly sustained the auditor in surcharging the receiver with the amount of that payment, for under such circumstances the claim of the commonwealth was postponed to that of lien creditors. Wm. Wilson, etc., Co.'s Estate, 150 Pa. 285, 24 Atl. 636; Goodwin Gas Stove & Meter Co.'s Estate, 166 Pa. 296, 31 Atl. 91.

[4] The Pittsburgh Railways Company had tracks on Fifth avenue, McKeesport, while the road of the defendant company ended at a suburb about one-half mile therefrom. It was deemed desirable to extend the road, so as to form a connection with the railway in the avenue and thereby run cars to the center of the city. For that purpose the defendant company in 1910 made an agreement with the railways company for such connection, and the city also gave municipal consent conditioned on bonds being given to complete the connection and protect the city from damages in the operation of the road. Before the extension was made the company went into the hands of the receiver, who obtained leave of court for that purpose and proceeded with the project, expending thereon $3,948.50. However, he was unable to furnish the stipulated bonds and never used the connection. The above-mentioned agreement for the connection had expired before it was actually constructed, and at that time the receiver had only a verbal arrangement relating thereto with the railways company; but that seemed satisfactory to the latter, as it did the work of making the connection for the receiver, but insisted upon an indemnifying bond. The auditor surcharged the receiver with that expense, but we agree with the court below, who allowed it. Greater prudence might have suggested securing the bonds before doing the work; but the receiver was acting in good faith, under the advice of counsel, and as authorized by the court, and making a long-contemplated and seemingly necessary improvement, of some value to the company, as the court below finds, and which passed to the purchaser of the road. Under such circumstances he should not be held personally liable.

[5, 6] The receiver was authorized to and did issue additional certificates to the face value of $30,000, which he was authorized to sell at not less than 90 per cent. of the par value, and he accounts for them at that amount. One Manning Stires had been connected with the company in various capacities, and also represented the bondholders' committee, and later was in some matters associated with the receiver, who intrusted him with the sale of the $30,000 issue of certificates. Mr. Stires sold them at 94 per cent., of which he kept 4 per cent., and turned over the balance to the receiver, who is found to have acted in good faith in the matter, and without knowledge of what Stires received for the certificates. We see no reason to differ from the auditor and court below, who held the receiver blameless in that transaction. Where specific exceptions are filed to certain credits claimed in the account of a receiver or other trustee the burden is cast upon him of supporting the same by proof, and where he fails to do so the exceptions will be sustained.

[7-9] The receivership lasted four years, and the auditor allowed the receiver $5,000 for his services, which the court increased to $8,000. The appellants, as bondholders and creditors, strenuously urge that the receiver should not be allowed any compensation, largely on account of the transaction relating to the car bodies. As the presidents of two of the appellant banks were members of the bondholders' committee to whom the excess was paid, their objection does not appeal strongly to our sense of fairness. Aside from that, while the finding of bad faith was warranted, yet it was more a matter of bad faith in law than in fact, for which the payment of $7,180.53 by the receiver out of his own pocket is a sufficient penalty. Where a receivership extends over a term of years, a single act of misfeasance, by which he profits nothing, will not necessarily deprive the receiver of all compensation. The allowance to a receiver for services is largely a matter for the court, whose officer he is, and with which an appellate court will only interfere to correct an abuse of discretion. Hillard v. Sterlingworth Railway Supply Co., 236 Pa. 82, 83, 84 Atl. 680, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1115; Covington v. Hawes-Law Anna Co., 245 Pa. 73, 79, 91 Atl. 514, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1254; Schwartz v. Keystone Oil Co., 153 Pa. 283, 286, 25 Atl. 1018. Such a finding will not be reversed by an appellate court, except on clear proof of error. York Trust Co. v. Pullman Mfg. Co., 237 Pa. 261, 85 Atl. 143.

It is also urged that he unnecessarily prolonged the receivership. That criticism is not without force, yet appellants took no steps to hasten its termination. There is nothing in the compensation allowed the receiver, or in the $5,000 allowed for counsel fees, that calls for our interference. See McDowell's Appeal, 4 Pennypacker, 384.

[10, 11] The court directed the receiver to continue the road as a going concern. This was in the interest of all parties, as it saved the franchise, tended to conserve the property, and promoted public convenience. By some arrangement the road was sold in 1915 at receiver's sale divested of liens. Its operation had resulted in a loss, and some expense connected therewith in addition to the certificates was allowed as a preferred claim. The general rule undoubtedly is that the court, who appoints a receiver for a public service corporation, may allow for operating expenses and necessary improvements out of the corpus of the estate and as preferred claims, even against mortgage lien creditors. 34 Cyc. 353; Kneeland v. American Loan & Trust Co., 136 U. S. 89, 10 Sup. Ct. 950, 34 L. Ed. 379; Union Trust Co. v. Illinois Midland Ry. Co., 117 U. S. 434, 6 Sup. Ct. 809, 29 L. Ed. 963. To the same effect is a per curiam decision of Judge Sharswood, at nisi prius, in Patterson v. Hempfield R. R. Co., 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. 127. This is a power, however, to be exercised sparingly and with great caution. We cannot say that the giving of such preference in this case was error.

[12] The receiver kept honest, but not expert, accounts, and, as the case was decided by the court below, his surcharge exceeds his commissions; so we see no ground for disturbing the finding that the costs should be paid out of the fund for distribution.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the decree is affirmed, at the costs of the appellants.

TRACTION MATERIALS CO. v. PITTSBURGH, M. & W. RY. CO. (No. 2.)

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Allegheny County.

Bill by the Traction Materials Company against the Pittsburgh, McKeesport & Westmoreland Railway Company. From a decree dismissing exceptions to the auditor's report, James B. Secrist, receiver, appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

W. Clyde Grubbs and William B. Secrist, both of Pittsburgh, for appellant. M. W. Acheson, Jr., and Starrett & Acheson, all of Pittsburgh, for appellee.

WALLING, J. In the opinion filed herewith on the appeals of Union Trust Company of New Jersey et al. from the same decree (Traction Materials Co. v. Pittsburgh, McK. & W. Ry. Co., 104 Atl. 552), we have considered the questions raised by the receiver on this appeal; and, for reasons there stated, the assignments of error in this case are overruled, and the appeal dismissed, at the costs of appellant.

IN RE REISHER'S ESTATE.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. WILLS §476—CODICIL—RESTRICTIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where codicil refers to restrictions in the body of the will, such reference is to be given the same effect in construing the gift in the codicil as if the restrictions had been set out immediately following it.

2. WILLS §597(2)—CONSTRUCTION—LIFE ESTATE—"RESTRICTIONS."

Where testator devised realty in equal shares to his sons for life, one-half in remainder to the youngest daughter of the first son, and the other half to the children of the second son, and by codicil revoked the devise to the first son and devised the property to his wife for life, with remainder to his second son under "restrictions" in the body of the will, held, that testator had reference to provision by which he gave to the children of the second son upon their father's death a remainder in fee in one-half of the property, so that the second son took a life estate only, and his children took by implication a remainder estate in fee.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Restriction.]

3. WILLS §478—IMPLIED DISPOSITIONS.

A devise may be implied, where necessary to carry out, and not to contradict, the expressed intention of the testator.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Franklin County.

In the matter of partition proceedings in the estate of Samuel Reisher. From a decree dismissing exceptions to the sheriff's inquisition, Metta C. Reisher and others appeal. Reversed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Walter K. Sharpe, William S. Hoerner, T. Z. Minehart, and Irvin C. Elder, all of Chambersburg, for appellants. J. R. Ruthrauff, A. J. W. Hutton, O. C. Bowers, and W. O. Nicklas, all of Chambersburg, for appellees.

STEWART, J. The point at issue here can be understood only as we have before us the main features of the will and codicil, which together give rise to the dispute. The will of the testator, Samuel Reisher, late of Chambersburg, dated July 6, 1892, contains the following devise:

"The Smith property on Main street adjoining Wm. M. Wallace's estate on the south, and Adam Christ on the north, I give, devise and bequeath to my two sons, Daniel S. and Jacob Sener, they to receive the rents, issues and profits thereof during their lives, to be divided equally between them, after all taxes, repairs and insurance is deducted off. Daniel S. to manage said property, and to account to Jacob S., for his share, and in event they can not agree, upon petition to the judge of the orphans' court by either, I authorize said court to appoint a trustee to manage the same. At the death of either Daniel S. or Jacob S., I give, devise and bequeath the said property to the youngest daughter of Daniel S. and to the children of Jacob S., their heirs, or assigns, they to take their father's share."

By codicil dated February 5, 1893, testator directs as follows:

"The whole bequest in my will to my son, Daniel S. Reisher and at his death to his youngest daughter is hereby revoked. The house in which I live not being fully sufficient for the support of my wife, I devise and bequeath the $\frac{1}{2}$ of the Smith property to the said Nancy during her natural life, and at her death the said $\frac{1}{2}$ (one-half) devised to wife is given to my son, Jacob S. Reisher under the same restrictions as I have given him the other half in the body of my will, and further I appoint H. Gehr, trustee to manage said property."

A proceeding in partition was begun with respect to the Smith property by the children of Daniel S., who meanwhile had died intestate, claiming that an undivided half interest in the Smith property had vested at the death of the testator in Daniel S. Reisher and Jacob S. Reisher as residuary devisees, there being no gift over of the fee in said one-half, and that upon the death of Daniel S. and Jacob Sener, the said fee in the one-half descended under the intestate laws to their children and heirs at law. Inquisition was awarded, and, upon return made, exceptions were filed on behalf of appellants, children of Jacob Sener, who claimed that under the will one-half interest in the property had been given to their father, and that under the codicil the other half which in the will had been given to Daniel S. was devised to testator's widow and his son Jacob Sener for life, and upon the death of the widow the entire life estate in said one-half and the fee was devised to the children of Jacob Sener; that, both these life tenants being now deceased, the exceptants as owners of the fee in the entire property are entitled to the possession; and that therefore, the petitioners being without interest or title in the premises, the proceedings should be dismissed. The view advanced by the petitioners as to the true constructions of the will and codicil prevailed in the lower court, and the return to the inquest was accordingly confirmed. The appeal is from the decree of confirmation.

[1] In searching for the intention of the testator, which, of course, when ascertained, must govern, whatever difficulty is encountered arises because of the inapt. way in which he devises upon the death of the widow the remainder interest in the one-half of the Smith property to the son Jacob S. The language of the codicil is:

"And at her death the said one-half devised to wife is given to my son Jacob S. under the same restrictions as I have given him the other one-half in the body of my will."

This reference by the testator to the restrictions in the body of the will is to be given the same force and effect as though the restrictions had been set out in totidem verbis immediately following the gift itself, since will and codicil constitute but one instrument and are to be construed together. The question therefore is: What are the "restrictions" in the body of the will to which the gift to Jacob was subjected? Answer to that question can be returned only as we first ascertain what the testator understood by the word "restrictions," as he here employed it. We may dismiss all idea that he used it in a technical sense, for it has none. In its popular sense it means limitation or qualification of something said, and to give it any effect in the connection here used it must be so understood and applied, and even then with more or less liberality of construction. Turning to the will proper, as distinguished from the codicil, what is there appearing there that testator could have understood as a restriction on the interest given to his son Jacob S. in the Smith property? Were it not for the fact that by the very codicil whose provisions we are now considering the devise to Daniel S. and at his death to his youngest daughter of a half interest in the Smith property had been expressly revoked, it might with no little force be argued that what the testator had in mind was to subject the half interest given under the codicil to Jacob S. to the management and control of the property to Daniel S., as provided in the body of the will with respect to the cotenancy there established. But with the elimination of Daniel and his daughter from all connection with or interest in the Smith property, as shown by the revocation of the devise to him and her, and the appointment of Mr. Gehr to do just what Daniel S. was appointed by the will to do, these considerations make it impossible to accept any such explanation.

[2] What, then, remains in the will that the testator could have understood as a restriction? Absolutely nothing, unless we find it in what follows immediately after the provision with respect to the management of the property during the continuance of the life estate of Daniel S. and Jacob S., which is as follows:

"At the death of either Daniel S. or Jacob S., my sons, I give, devise and bequeath the said property to the youngest daughter of Daniel S. [revoked by codicil] and to the children of Jacob S., their heirs or assigns, they to take their father's share."

Nowhere by express words in the will is the estate given to Daniel S. and Jacob S. as a life estate in each. To the educated mind there could be no doubt, however, that no greater estate was intended; but to the mind unskilled in such matters it might very well seem that the gift over was a "restriction," which made certain that which had not been adequately expressed in connection with the preceding gift. However that may be, and independent of it, we think it reasonably certain that the testator, in subjecting the gift to the same "restrictions" as he had imposed in the will, had reference to the provision by which he gave over to the children of Jacob S. a remainder in fee in the one-half of the property. Certain it is that, except for this construction, there is nothing to which the provision could apply, and it is otherwise meaningless. If we are correct in this construction of the will, what results with respect to the fee in the one-half given to Jacob S. for life? It is nowhere disposed of in express words, except as we discover it included in the gift over to the children of Jacob S. contained in the will, and accept that as one of the "restrictions" under which Jacob S. was to enjoy his gift under the codicil. It is the contention of the appellee that, for the lack of any express disposition of this fee, it falls into the residuary estate in which, under the will, Daniel and Jacob S. are to share equally. As against this there is the conclusion expressed above, which we need not discuss further, that the one "restriction" testator had in mind to impose on the gift to Jacob S., when he published his codicil, was that which in the will limited the gift to a life estate. The gift contained in the codicil was "under the same restrictions" as that expressed in the body of the will with respect to the gift there made. That "restriction" in the will proper expressly stated that the gift over was to the children of Jacob S. still there is in the codicil no express gift of the fee to the children of Jacob S.; but it is not necessary that there should be, if we have succeeded in ascertaining the true intention of the testator.

[3] A devise, although not formally expressed in the will, may be implied, where it is needed in order to carry out the intentions of the testator. Beilstein v. Beilstein, 194 Pa. 152, 45 Atl. 73, 75 Am. St. Rep. 692. True, such implication never arises where it contradicts some expression of intention, and only when it affords such a strong probability that an intention to the contrary cannot be supposed. Rupp v. Eberly, 79 Pa. 141. Here the implication contradicts nothing in the will and affords such strong probability that it correctly gives effect to the real meaning and purpose of the testator that a contrary purpose cannot be supposed.

We are of the opinion that under the provisions of the codicil the children of Jacob Sener Reisher took by implication an estate in fee in the whole of the Smith property.

This being our conclusion, the decree of the court below in confirming the report of the inquisition must be reversed, and the partition proceedings be dismissed, at the costs of the appellee. It is now so ordered.

KUHN v. LIGONIER VALLEY R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §1050(1) — HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where witnesses testified to particular facts without objection, that another witness was improperly permitted to testify to the same facts was not ground for reversal.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §274(9)—ACTION FOR INJURIES—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In action by conductor for injuries from collision, evidence offered by plaintiff that the running of a coach in front of the engine was a customary act in regard to his train was admissible to counteract any inference of contributory negligence in so operating the train.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §296(13) — EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTION — SUBMISSION OF ISSUES.

In action for injury to a conductor by a collision between two trains, where clerk of defendant testified that plaintiff had been notified verbally to hold his train until the train which collided with him arrived, and plaintiff denied having received the order, a point for charge, presenting question whether plaintiff had received that order, should have been given.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT §293(20)—INJURY TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in action for injuries to plaintiff, a conductor, by collision of his train with another, an instruction that jury must find whether defendant's clerk gave plaintiff an order to hold his train until the other train arrived in a proper manner was error, as implying that the order should have been given in writing, and that giving it verbally was error.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Westmoreland County.

Action by Charles H. Kuhn against the Ligonier Valley Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Argued before BROWN, O. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

James S. Moorhead, Edward E. Robbins, A. M. Wyant, and Robert W. Smith, all of Greensburg, for appellant. Charles E. Whitten, Paul H. Gaither, John S. Lightcap, and Eugene Warden, all of Greensburg, for appellee.

BROWN, O. J. This case has been tried twice; each trial having resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff. The judgment on the first verdict was reversed, and a new trial awarded, for error in the admission of testimony. Kuhn v. Ligonier Valley R. R. Co., 255 Pa. 445, 100 Atl. 142.

Plaintiff was a passenger conductor on the road of the defendant company. He had charge of a train running from Latrobe, one terminus of the road, to Ligonier, the other. When his train reached Ligonier, it became his duty to take charge of another, which ran over a branch to Wilpen, a mining town about five miles from Ligonier. On July 5, 1912, a freight train started from Wilpen for Ligonier shortly after 3 p. m. The passenger train of the defendant, under the charge of the plaintiff, started from Ligonier for Wilpen at 3:22 p. m., two minutes after schedule time, and collided with the freight train on a curve a short distance from Ligonier. The plaintiff was seriously injured in the collision, and, charging his injuries to the negligence of his employer, the railroad company, in failing to notify him that the freight train was on the track over which his train was to run, he brought this suit for the recovery of damages.

Russell S. Minnich, who was a clerk in the office of the defendant at Ligonier, testified that, in pursuance of orders from the superintendent, he notified the plaintiff verbally to hold his passenger train for Wilpen until the freight train from that place arrived at Ligonier. The plaintiff denied having received such order, and testified that Minnich told him he could go "as soon as Naugle was out of the road." Naugle was a conductor waiting for the freight train from Wilpen to take it from Ligonier to Latrobe. According to the testimony of the plaintiff, he saw that Naugle was out of the road, and, with no knowledge that the freight train was on the track ahead of him, he started, and the collision resulted. On each trial the jury credited his testimony in passing upon the facts of the case, which was as to the order given by Minnich. As to this we said on the former appeal:

"If the order to wait until the freight train had arrived from Wilpen was given to plaintiff, as defendant's three witnesses testified, the accident was due to plaintiff's negligence, and he had no right to recover. If no such order was given to him, then defendant was negligent. The issue was plain and simple."

On this appeal from the judgment entered on the second verdict against defendant it assigns two errors—one to the admission of testimony, and the other to the answer of the trial judge to one of its points.

[1, 2] The train in charge of plaintiff at the time of the collision consisted of an engine and a combination baggage and passenger coach, which was ahead of the engine; in other words, the engine was pushing the coach, instead of pulling it. After two witnesses had testified, without objection, that for a period of two years that particular train had sometimes run with the engine ahead and at other times behind, pushing the passenger coach, an offer was made to prove the same fact by a third witness. On objection to it, the purpose was said to be to rebut "any possible inference of negligence on the part of the plaintiff as conductor on account of the coach being ahead of the engine on the day of the accident." The admission of the testimony of this third witness is the subject of the first assignment of error.

Even if this testimony had been objectionable, its allowance would be no cause for reversal, for it was substantially the same as that of the two other witnesses, which had been received without objection. Vide cases cited in 38 Ency. of Law and Procedure, 1418. But it was not objectionable. The plaintiff was bound to present a case free from contributory negligence, and as trains are ordinarily operated with the locomotive ahead, instead of behind, the cars, the jury might have drawn an inference that the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence in making up his train with the passenger coach ahead of the engine. If this had been permissible for some time by the defendant company, no such inference could have been fairly drawn, and as the manifest purpose of the testimony was to show that the method of operating the train at the time of the collision had been permissible by the company, it was properly admitted. The first assignment of error is dismissed.

[3] The other error assigned is to the refusal of the trial judge to affirm defendant's first point, which was as follows:

"The important and controlling issue of fact in this case, upon which the liability or non-liability of the defendant depends, is: Did Russell Minnich direct the plaintiff to hold his passenger train until the freight train reached Ligonier from Wilpen? Whether or not the passenger train might have been stopped by the witness Noel, or others, after it was in motion; whether or not the operation of the Wilpen train on the day of the accident with the coach in advance of the engine contributed to the injury of the plaintiff; or whether or not the presence of signals, telephone or telegraph service, along the track between Ligonier and the point of collision, might have averted the accident—are questions which are not for your consideration in ascertaining whether the defendant is or is not liable in this case. The defendant, if liable at all, is liable only in the event you should find from the testimony in this case that Minnich failed to communicate the orders he received from Superintendent Senft to the plaintiff Kuhn, and that the plaintiff did not contribute to his own injury."

This point stated exactly what the narrow issue was and the undoubted law relating to it. If the plaintiff received the order which Minnich says he gave to him, to hold his engine until the freight train had arrived from Wilpen, he was not entitled to recover. If such order was not given to him, he was entitled to recover. This single issue in the case was plain and simple; nothing else was for the jury's consideration in passing upon the question of the defendant's negligence, and, as this is what the court was asked to say to them by the defendant's first point, it should have been unqualifiedly affirmed. Citizens' Passenger Railway Co. v. Ketcham, 122 Pa. 228, 15 Atl. 733; Lingle v. Scranton Railway Co., 214 Pa. 500, 63 Atl. 890; McNees v. Sims, 231 Pa. 386, 80 Atl. 866.

[4] After declining to affirm the point, the learned trial judge proceeded to answer it at some length, and in doing so fell into manifest error. He first said:

"The manner of discharging the duty that was owing from the defendant company to its employé is an important matter, and whether that duty was discharged in the manner in which it was said this communication took place, as the defendant's witnesses give it—whether or not that manner of communicating it to Kuhn was a proper discharge of that duty—we think the jury ought to pass on. This [defendant's first point] would limit it to the communication having been made, regardless of the circumstance of the manner of making."

Whether the manner in which Minnich communicated the order to the plaintiff was a proper one was not a question in the case; but, under the court's answer to defendant's point, the jury might have found that the order ought to have been given in writing, and therefore there was negligence in giving it verbally. We do not quite understand what the learned trial judge meant to say by the following words:

"What was reasonably to be expected from the defendant company is something that the jury, under the testimony in this case, we think should pass upon—not simply and baldly that there was a communication. But what was that communication, and did it inform the employé that he would be placed in peril by its not reaching his knowledge?"

A fair inference to be drawn from these words by the jury would have been that the defendant had been negligent in not having informed the plaintiff of the self-evident proposition that, if he disobeyed the order given him, he might be in peril of a collision between his train, going toward Wilpen, and the freight train coming from that point over the same track. There was some testimony that Frank Noel, an employé of the defendant, had made an effort to stop plaintiff's train after it had started, and as to this the trial judge said:

"Whether the passenger train might have been stopped by the witness Noel is perhaps not the most vital thing; it is only one of the circumstances in the case bearing on whether or not the duty that devolved on the representatives of the company, and who, for all practical purposes, were the company on that occasion—whether the efforts made to discharge their duty were carefully performed, or performed with reasonable care or not—it is only one circumstance bearing upon that question."

What Noel may have done or omitted to do was utterly irrelevant to the single question before the jury, but they might well have thought, from what was said to them by the trial judge in the words just quoted, that Noel was guilty of negligence for which his employer, the defendant company, was answerable to the plaintiff. In refusing defendant's request, made in the hearing of the jury, that they be instructed that whether or not the operation of the Wilpen train on the day of the accident, with the coach in advance of the engine, contributed to the injury of the plaintiff, or whether or not the presence of signals, telephones or telegraph service, along the track between Lagonier and the point of collision, might have averted the accident, were not questions for their consideration, they were given a license to conclude otherwise, and to return a verdict against the defendant by answering these two questions, or one of them, adversely to it. An unqualified affirmance of defendant's first point, which ought to have been given, would have saved the jury from what may have been confusion.

The second assignment of error is sustained, and the judgment is reversed, with a venire facias de novo.

CLOTHIER et al. v. HOFFMAN CO., Inc., et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 3, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §1010(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT.

Findings of fact will not be reversed when based upon competent evidence, although there is sufficient evidence upon which the lower court might have reached a different conclusion.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §1010(1)—EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIVENESS—REVIEW.

In a suit by an owner of a building to enjoin an adjacent owner from using a party wall until it had paid plaintiff the appraised value of its new use of the wall, a finding on abundant evidence in accordance with plaintiff's contentions was conclusive on appeal.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Bill to compel payment of part of cost of party wall by Isaac H. Clothier, Jr., and others against the Hoffman Company, Incorporated, and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

Julius C. Levi, of Philadelphia, for appellants. Henry C. Thompson, Jr., and Edwin S. Dixon, both of Philadelphia, for appellees.

FRAZER, J. Blauner's Incorporated and the Fleischmann Construction Company, two of the defendants, appeal from a decree in equity ordering them to pay to plaintiffs a portion of the cost of constructing a party wall. The bill was dismissed as to the other defendants.

Plaintiffs and defendants own adjoining premises in the city of Philadelphia known as Nos. 831 and 833 Market street, respectively. On plaintiffs' property was erected a hotel, and on defendants' a brick building three stories in front with a two-story addition in the rear; the two properties being separated by a party wall. In 1903 plaintiffs razed their hotel building and erected in its place a five-story structure. At that time the building inspector, after an examination of the party wall, which the plaintiffs for the first time proposed to use, decided that, although adequate for defendants' property, it was not sufficient to support plaintiffs' building, and ordered the wall taken down and a more substantial one erected in accordance with municipal requirements. In 1916 defendants began the construction of a four-story building to extend the entire depth of their lot, and proceeded to make use of the party wall erected by plaintiffs in 1903 by cutting openings in which to insert joists and timbers necessary in the construction of their new building. The parties having failed to agree upon the sum defendants should pay plaintiffs for such use, and defendants having refused to accept the figures of the official measurer, who appraised the value of the new use at $4,007.63, based on one-half of the cost of a wall of the character required by defendants' building, to which was added measuring charges, making a total of $4,150.04, plaintiffs brought this bill to restrain defendants from using the division wall until payment for the use is made. The court below, after hearing, adopted the figures of the appraiser as fairly representing the value of the new use made of the wall by defendants, and directed that the sum found due be paid with costs, less a payment previously made.

The contention of defendants is that, instead of being chargeable with one-half of what a new wall would have cost them in 1916, they are liable for only one-half the cost of the difference between the cubical contents of a new wall built at that time and the cubical contents of the wall which existed in 1903. This contention is based on the theory that the old wall was not entirely removed, but merely reconstructed, and that the cost of such reconstruction represented the maximum outlay properly chargeable to them. The act of February 24, 1721 (1 Smith's Laws, p. 125) requires the first builder to be reimbursed for one-half of the cost of constructing a party wall, "or for so much thereof as the next builder shall have occasion to make use of, before such next builder shall in any way use or break into the said wall. The charge or value thereof to be set by the said regulators." The act of May 5, 1899 (P. L. 193, § 24), makes it the duty of the building inspectors to examine party or division walls, and, if defective, out of repair, insufficient, or unfit for the purpose of the existing building, or any new building about to be erected, such wall "shall be repaired or made good or taken down by the parties building, as the inspector's decision may be," and further provides that the cost of repair, removal, or a new wall, as the case may be, shall be borne by the adjoining owner "in proportion to the amount of such wall or walls which is or shall be respectively used by their said buildings," and that where such walls are "sufficient only for the purpose of the new building," the entire expense is to be borne by the party erecting the new building.

In support of their claim defendants point to section 25 of the act of 1899, which provides that, where there are existing walls "whose thickness at the time of their erection was in accordance with the requirements of the then existing laws, but which are not in accordance with the requirements of this act, may be used, if in good condition, for the ordinary use of party walls: Provided, the height of the same be not increased. In case it is desired to increase the height of the existing party or independent walls, which walls are less in thickness than required under this act, the same may be done with a lining of brickwork to form a combined thickness with the old walls of not less than four inches more than the thickness required for a new wall, corresponding with the total height of the wall when so increased in height." Under this section defendants assert that as the reinforcing of the walls in existence in 1903 with a lining, and reconstructed to the height necessary to support their present building, was practicable, they should be charged only with this portion of the expense.

[1, 2] A serious difficulty in the way of adopting this theory is the finding of the court below that the old wall was in fact taken down and a new one erected in its place. No exception was taken to this finding. Defendants, however, refer to the application made by them to the court below to allow exceptions to be filed nunc pro tunc after appeal was taken, and have assigned as error the refusal to permit such exceptions to be filed. Assuming the question to be properly before us, it would not materially help defendants' case. The act of 1899 permits the inspector, in his discretion, to order an old wall to be repaired or taken down entirely and replaced. The inspector was called as a witness, and there was offered in evidence, in connection with his testimony, his reports to the chief of the bureau of building inspection, which show he concluded the existing party wall was unfit for the new building about to be erected by plaintiffs on No. 831, and that he had "ordered same to be taken down and a legal party wall built." He further testified that while the existing wall was ample for the requirements of the building then on defendants' premises, it was not suitable for the new building plaintiffs proposed to erect, and "therefore it was condemned as provided for in the act of assembly as insufficient for the purpose of the new building, and was torn down and a new party wall built." He also said that at the time the building No. 831 was erected the division wall was an old one, and had been standing for a period of from 50 to 100 years, which would probably account for his conclusion that it should be taken down. In contradiction of this testimony, and in support of their exception to the finding of the trial judge that the old wall was removed, defendants called the architect who prepared the plans for the building erected in 1916, and who testified that an examination of the party wall showed its greater part had been reconstructed, and that "from an architectural point of view" a part of the old wall was "embodied in the wall constructed" by plaintiffs in 1903. The witness admitted, however, he had not seen the building previous to 1916, 13 years after its reconstruction, and based his conclusion upon an examination of the wall from an architectural point of view, and on the presumption that the wall existing in 1903 was sufficiently strong to carry at least the three-story building. The question for us is not whether we might have taken the same view of the evidence as the trial judge, but whether there is evidence in the case to sustain the conclusion reached by him. The evidence that the old wall was remodeled rather than reconstructed is not so clear and conclusive as to warrant a reversal of the finding of the court below. Hull v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 255 Pa. 233, 99 Atl. 740; Scranton v. Scranton Coal Co., 256 Pa. 322, 100 Atl. 813.

The above disposes of substantially the entire question involved, there being no serious dispute as to the liability of defendants to reimburse plaintiffs to the extent of one-half the cost of so much of the wall as defendants had occasion to use, less deductions provided by statute. In this case we are clearly of the opinion such share was properly represented by one-half of the cost of constructing a wall of the character defendants would have been obliged to build in 1916 (Bailey's Appeal [Supreme Court] 1 W. N. C. 350), as found by the court below. This rule is not inconsistent with the principles laid down in Hoffstot v. Voight, 146 Pa. 632, 23 Atl. 351, German National Bank v. Mellor, 238 Pa. 415, 86 Atl. 467, and Stevenson v. Mellor, 246 Pa. 596, 92 Atl. 713, cited and relied upon by defendants.

The judgment is affirmed.

LONGBOTTOM v. EMERY et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. BANKRUPTCY \Leftrightarrow 143(11)—LIFE INSURANCE—ASSIGNMENT OF POLICY—PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS.

That a husband paid premiums on his life insurance policy, assigned to his wife, does not affect her title to the policy as against her husband's trustee in bankruptcy.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE \Leftrightarrow 133(1)—PROPERTY CLAIMED BY WIFE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where a wife claims, as against her husband's creditors, property acquired during coverture, though the proof must be clear and satisfactory, a mere doubt will not defeat the wife's claim.

3. BANKRUPTCY \Leftrightarrow 303(3)—CLAIMS OF WIFE—EVIDENCE.

Suit by trustee in bankruptcy against bankrupt's wife, to whom insurance had been assigned, was properly dismissed, where there was nothing to show that at time of assignment defendant was insolvent, or that any of his creditors at the time of the bankruptcy were creditors at the time of the assignment.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Bill by Albert S. Longbottom, trustee in bankruptcy, against John W. Emery and others. From a decree dismissing the bill, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed, and appeal dismissed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHIZKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

Wm. Potter Davis, Jr., Samuel W. Cooper, Robert J. Byron, and Stanley Williamson, all of Philadelphia, for appellant. J. Washington Logue, of Philadelphia, for appellee Ida W. Emery. O. Stanley Huribut, of Philadelphia, for appellee John W. Emery. George Douglas Hay and Thomas De Witt Cuyler, both of Philadelphia, for appellee Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of the United States.

POTTER, J. This bill in equity was filed by the trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of John W. Emery, against John W. Emery, Ida W. Emery and the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States. It is averred in the bill that the defendant John W. Emery has been adjudicated a voluntary bankrupt, and that plaintiff was duly appointed his trustee; that the bankrupt included in the schedule of his liabilities and assets a policy of insurance on his life, issued March 3, 1901, by the defendant society, which was assigned June 22, 1901, by him to his wife, the defendant Ida W. Emery, and which now has a cash surrender value of $3,530. This policy was originally made payable to Emery's executors, administrators, and assigns, was indorsed over by him to his wife as stated, was indorsed back on November 29, 1909, to his executors, administrators, and assigns, and was again indorsed, on March 28, 1912, to his wife, if living, and, if not, then to his executors, administrators, and assigns. The policy contained a provision giving the assured the power at any time to change the beneficiary by filing with the society a written request to that effect and complying with certain other requirements. Plaintiff denied that Ida W. Emery was the owner of or had any interest in the policy, and averred that he had demanded from the bankrupt the delivery of the policy or the payment of the amount of its cash surrender value; but the bankrupt refused to comply with his demand contending that the policy, with all its rights belonged to his wife.

Plaintiff prayed for a mandatory injunction commanding the defendants John W. Emery and Ida W. Emery to turn over to him the policy of insurance, and requiring the defendant society, which held the policy as collateral security for a premium loan, to turn over to plaintiff the policy, or its cash surrender value. He also prayed that defendants be enjoined from assigning the policy or receiving or paying its cash surrender value.

The answers of defendants set up that Ida W. Emery held the policy as security for a loan of $10,000, made by her in 1901 to her husband, and that it was her sole and separate property, and her husband had no interest whatever in it. The court below dismissed the bill, and plaintiff has appealed. His counsel have filed 111 assignments of error, most of them to the dismissal of exceptions to the adjudication. The eighth and ninth assignments are to the final decree, and, as the questions raised by this appeal may be considered under these assignments, it is unnecessary to consider the others in detail.

The issues involved are essentially questions of fact. The substance of the findings of fact by the trial judge is stated by him as follows:

"Ida W. Emery was the wife of John W. Emery, and was the owner of real estate in Atlantic City, N. J. There is no testimony that this real estate was derived from her husband. In May, 1901, John W. Emery borrowed from Ida W. Emery the sum of $9,000, or a little less, and this policy of $10,000 was issued to John W. Emery, and on the 22d of June, 1901, the policy was indorsed as payable to Ida W. Emery, wife of the assured, if living; if not, then to the assured's executors, administrators, or assigns. Ida W. Emery mortgaged her real estate in Atlantic City for the sum of $9,000, less charges, and the money was handed over to John W. Emery. Subsequently the policy of insurance was reassigned by Ida W. Emery to John W. Emery, that he might use it as collateral security; and, subsequently thereto, the policy was released and the assignment returned to her, and on March 28, 1912, the policy was indorsed in compliance with the written request of the assured, duly acknowledged, and 'it is hereby declared that the amount due at the death of the assured shall be payable, not to the beneficiaries hereunto designated, but to the assured's wife, Ida W. Emery, if living, and, if not, then to the assured's executors, administrators or assigns; the other conditions and requirements remaining unchanged. And immediately thereafter the policy was handed back to Ida W. Emery, and remained in her control until after John W. Emery was adjudicated a bankrupt. The petition in bankruptcy filed by John W. Emery was under date of March 27, 1915."

These findings of fact are supported by the evidence. It appears, therefore, that as Mrs. Emery gave a valuable consideration for the policy her title to it is good, and her husband's trustee in bankruptcy has no valid claim upon it. The fact that on two occasions she loaned the policy to her husband for the purpose of raising money can make no difference, for in 1912, three years before the adjudication in bankruptcy, it was re-assigned to her.

[1] The payment of premiums by her husband would not affect Mrs. Emery's title to the policy. Malone's Appeal, 38 Leg. Int. 303, affirming Malone's Estate, 13 Phila. 313, 8 Wkly. Notes Cas. 179. In that case, Penrose, J., in an opinion adopted by this court said (page 318):

"It is immaterial therefore that the premiums were in some instances paid by the [husband's] firm. Such payments could only make the firm a creditor to the amount advanced and would give no interest in the policy itself."

[2, 3] In the present case there was no evidence whatever to show that John W. Emery was insolvent, either when his wife acquired the Atlantic City property, or in 1901, when she mortgaged it for his benefit, and he made her the beneficiary of the insurance policy on his life. Nor does it appear that any of his creditors at the date of his bankruptcy in 1912 were creditors in 1901 or prior thereto. The cases cited by counsel for appellant in their argument, to the effect that, where a married woman claims property acquired by her during coverture, the burden is upon her, as against her husband's creditors, to substantiate her claim by proof that is clear, full, and satisfactory, relate only to creditors whose rights had accrued at the time she acquired title, and not to those whose rights accrued many years thereafter. In the latest of the cases cited, Helges v. Pifer, 224 Pa. 628, 629, 73 Atl. 950, 951, it was said per curiam:

"It is an established rule of evidence that a wife, claiming property acquired during coverture against her husband's creditors, is required to substantiate her claim by proof sufficient to repel all adverse presumptions. But the law does not require proof of such a character as to relieve from every doubt, but only proof that is clear and satisfactory. A mere doubt will not operate to defeat the wife's claim."

In the present case, evidence that there was a lapse of some 14 years between the time when Mrs. Emery acquired title to the insurance policy and the adjudication in bankruptcy, is strongly persuasive of the validity of her claim.

The assignments of error are overruled, the decree of the court below is affirmed, and this appeal is dismissed, at the cost of appellant.

COMMONWEALTH, to Use of COLONIAL TRUST CO. OF READING et al. v.

GREGORY et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 3, 1918.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶29(2) —NONRESIDENT EXECUTOR — FAILURE TO TAKE BONDS.

Under Act March 15, 1832 (P. L. 142) § 27, providing that letters to a nonresident executor without a bond shall be void, such letters are void only when judicially so declared.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶29(1) —DE FACTO EXECUTOR.

After letters testamentary are granted, even though improperly, the person named is a de facto executor, answerable to the orphans' court until duly discharged.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶544 —IMPROPER GRANT OF LETTERS—LIABILITY TO ACTION.

While Act March 15, 1832 (P. L. 142), provides that a person to whom letters are improperly granted shall be sued and treated as an executor of his own wrong, such person is liable, not only to citation from the orphans' court, but also to suit at law as an executor de son tort.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶461 —PAYMENT TO EXECUTOR—REVOCAION OF LETTER—ACCOUNTING.

Payment to one to whom letters testamentary have been granted, though subsequently revoked, are lawful acts for which the person named as executor may be cited to settle the accounts.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶519(1) —DEFAULT OF NONRESIDENT EXECUTOR—LIABILITY OF DOMICILIARY EXECUTOR.

Where a nonresident executor is guilty of culpable omission, resulting in loss to the estate, he and the domiciliary executor are jointly responsible.

6. JUDGES ¶37—LIABILITY OF REGISTER ON BOND.

Where a register of wills grants letters to a nonresident executor without obtaining bond required by Act March 15, 1832 (P. L. 142) § 27, and the executor defaulted and the resident executor died insolvent, register is liable on his official bond.

7. JUDGES ¶37—LIABILITY OF REGISTER ON BOND.

Where a decree was entered against a nonresident and a local executor, before the death of the latter, after a devastavit, such decree is conclusive against the register and his sureties to the extent of their obligation.

8. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶427 —RIGHTS OF ACTION—REPRESENTATIVE OR INDIVIDUAL CAPACITY.

Where resident executor was a joint tortfeasor with a nonresident executor for misappropriation of funds of the estate, that the resident executor appeared as a use plaintiff in a representative capacity in action against the register was no ground for objection, as he and the nonresident were answerable in their individual capacity.

9. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ¶519(1) —SUIT ON BOND OF REGISTER—DEATH OF PLAINTIFF—SUBSTITUTION OF USE PLAINTIFF.

Where resident executor died after bringing suit on the register's bond, and a use plaintiff was appointed to continue the suit, he may collect and remit the money to the domiciliary executor in state in which decedent died.

10. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §522
—DEVASTAVIT—RECOVERY FROM REGISTER—
DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS.

Where through maladministration of an ancillary executor losses occurred in Pennsylvania, and the court of the state determined the amounts due and ordered devastavit made good when the fund is realized, the Pennsylvania creditors will be first paid, and the balance then remitted to the domicile of the decedent.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Berks County.

Action by the Commonwealth, to the use of the Colonial Trust Company of Reading, as administrator de bonis non of Joseph Middleby, deceased, and others, against George R. Gregory and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Joseph R. Dickinson and Fred A. Marx, both of Reading, for appellants. W. K. Stevens and W. B. Bechtel, both of Reading, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. This suit is against a register of wills and the surety on his bond; the plaintiff recovered a verdict, upon which judgment was entered, and defendants have appealed.

The following facts were established: At the time in question George R. Gregory was the duly elected register of wills of Berks county, and the Berks County Trust Company was the surety on his official bond. Joseph Middleby, domiciled in Massachusetts, but doing business at Reading, Pa., died testate May 20, 1911. He appointed as executors Jere J. McCarthy and Milton A. Gherst, the first a nonresident and the other a resident of this state. The will of Mr. Middleby was duly probated in Massachusetts and letters testamentary issued to McCarthy and Gherst. June 10, 1911, ancillary letters were granted to the same persons by Gregory, without exacting a bond from McCarthy, the nonresident executor, as required by section 27 of our act of March 15, 1832 (P. L. 185, 142 [session of 1831-32]). In due course, the orphans' court of Berks county found a devastavit in the decedent's estate, and, Mr. McCarthy having been dismissed as ancillary executor on January 11, 1913, a decree was entered October 30, 1915, directing M. A. Gherst and Jere J. McCarthy to pay over to "M. A. Gherst, accountant," the remaining ancillary executor, $49,678.66. Nothing in fact having been done to fulfill the requirements of this decree, and no other substantial recovery being possible in this jurisdiction, December 31, 1915, the present suit, on the official bond of the register, was instituted in the name of the commonwealth "for the use of M. A. Gherst, one of the executors of Joseph Middleby, deceased," and certain designated creditors. Subsequently Mr. Gherst died, insolvent. April 25, 1916, the Colonial Trust Company of Reading was duly appointed ancillary administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. of Joseph Middleby, deceased, and substituted as a use plaintiff upon the present record. The last-mentioned plaintiff elected to try its case separately from those of the other use plaintiffs, and the trial proceeded accordingly.

Most of the material facts involved were established by averments in the statement of claim, admitted or not sufficiently denied in the affidavit of defense, and the others were duly proved; but the defendants raise a number of interesting issues of law, all of which were decided against them by the court below. We shall briefly discuss and determine these issues in the order which seems most suitable to the case as a whole.

Section 27 of the act of 1832, supra, provides:

"If any register shall grant letters testamentary to any person, not being an inhabitant of this commonwealth, * * * without having * * * taken a bond and sureties in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, such letters shall be void, and every person acting under them shall be deemed, and may be sued, and in all respects treated, as an executor of his own wrong, and the register granting the same, and his sureties, shall be liable to pay all damages which shall accrue to any person by reason thereof."

The form of bond is prescribed in section 24 of the act, which provides, inter alia, that the principal in the obligation must agree to file an account of his administration in the orphans' court of the proper county and pay the awards made by that tribunal.

[1] Appellants contend that under the above-quoted section of the Act of 1832, supra, Jere J. McCarthy, not having entered a bond, was simply an executor de son tort, and hence the orphans' court had no jurisdiction to find a devastavit against him or order payment thereof. We cannot sustain these contentions. In the first place, it is to be observed the act does not state that letters granted to a nonresident without the entry of a bond shall, for all purposes, be ipso facto void; while the word "void" is used, evidently the legislative intention was to provide that letters thus improperly granted shall be void when judicially so declared by a proper tribunal, and that they must be thus adjudged upon showing the nonentry of a bond. Huff's Estate, 15 Serg. & R. 39, 41, 42, contains some relevant general principles, by Tilghman, C. J., which it will be helpful to repeat here. It is there said:

"An executor to whom probate has been granted, differs from an executor de son tort. The former has acted under letters testamentary, from an officer who had jurisdiction in the case; the latter has never acted but under a usurped authority. * * * The granting of probate by the register of wills is a judicial act, and, while it remains in force, it cannot be contradicted; * * * the probate, until annulled, being conclusive evidence. * * * A debtor * * * is therefore justified in making payment to the person who appears to be executor."

We there decided that payments made by one to whom letters testamentary had been granted while such letters were in force, even though subsequently revoked, were lawful acts, in consequences of which the person named therein as executor might be cited by the orphans' court to settle an account.

[2-4] When we read as a whole the statutory provision now before us, and apply thereto the legal principles just quoted from Tilghman, O. J., two things are clear: (1) After letters testamentary are granted, even though improperly, the person named therein is a de facto executor, answerable for his deeds to the orphans' court, until duly discharged by the revocation of his prima facie right to act. (2) While the statute here in question provides that a person to whom letters are improperly granted shall be deemed and "may be sued and in all respects treated as an executor of his own wrong," yet it does not require that he must be so sued and treated; the manifest intent being that such a person shall be liable, not only to citation from the orphans' court, but also to suit at law as an executor de son tort—in other words, that he shall be liable to the strict accountability to which one occupying that position is subject. Furthermore, in the case at bar, as stated by the court below, not only did McCarthy act on the letters granted to him, which would tend to make him liable to account to the orphans' court (Delbert's Appeal, No. 2, '83 Pa. 468, 474), but he appealed to this court from the decree of that tribunal discharging him from his office as ancillary executor (McCarthy's Appeal, 242 Pa. 39, 42, 88 Atl. 778), and we then said that, "for the purpose of the estate," McCarthy was "within the jurisdiction of the [orphans'] court."

[5] Appellants claim, however, that, even though it be conceded the orphans' court had jurisdiction to settle the devastavit and order payment of the amount involved, the present defendants not being parties to the record in that proceeding, there can be no recovery against them here, because the damages alleged to have been sustained by such devastavit were not again proved in this case; in brief, that the finding of the orphans' court as to the amount of the devastavit is not binding against these defendants. We see no merit in this contention. McCarthy was guilty of the misconduct of decedent's business which caused the surcharge by the orphans' court; yet, because of culpable acts of omission on the part of Gherst, his colleague, both of them were properly held to be jointly responsible for the resulting losses. Irwin's Appeal, 85 Pa. 294, 296. Had the register obtained a bond with proper sureties, the latter, upon McCarthy's default, would have been obliged to pay these losses, and, in an action on this bond, the degree following the audit would be conclusive against such sureties, even though they were not parties to the proceedings in the orphans' court. Garber v. Com., 7 Pa. 265, 266; Hartzell v. Com., 42 Pa. 453, 461; Yung's Estate, 190 Pa. 35, 40, 48 Atl. 692; Com. v. Ruhl, 190 Pa. 40, 44, 48 Atl. 905.

[6] We think no error was committed in treating the decree of that tribunal as equally conclusive against the present appellant and his sureties; for, otherwise, the common pleas would be obliged, in effect, to go into, review and determine the question of the proper settlement of the decedent's estate, after all the issues involved had been determined by the orphans' court, as shown by the record thereof, which was properly admitted in evidence at the trial below.

To continue our consideration of this branch of the case, the register failed in his obligation to secure a bond from McCarthy; but the former, himself, was under bond for the proper discharge of his official duties. On the facts at bar, what is the liability of the sureties upon this latter bond? Section 27 of the act of 1832, supra, provides that any register of wills who grants letters testamentary to a nonresident without taking a bond, with sureties (stipulating that the person to whom the letters are issued shall, inter alia, duly pay the awards of the orphans' court upon the settlement of the estate committed to his care), "shall be liable to pay all damages which shall accrue to any person by reason" of the failure to exact such a bond. Here, no matter whose name appears as representing the estate of Joseph Middleby, deceased, that estate is, and at all times was, the real use plaintiff, and, had the register performed his duty and obtained a bond from McCarthy, on the latter's default, it would presumably have been made whole by the sureties on this bond; but, "by reason of" no bond having been given, damages have "accrued" to the Middleby estate in the amount it would have recovered from such sureties, had the obligation in question been entered as required by law.

[7] The orphans' court was the tribunal vested with authority to determine the fact and amount of the devastavit, its adjudication in that regard is binding upon the register, and it follows, under the circumstances of this case, that he is liable for all damages resulting from such devastavit. Finally, the sum sued for being less than the losses determined by the orphans' court, and the register's sureties having undertaken that he should "faithfully execute the duties of his office," they must answer to the amount of the verdict rendered—that is to say, when the defendant Gregory failed in his duty to obtain a bond with sureties from McCarthy, he, as register, thereby became liable under the statute to answer for any damage that might follow as a natural and logical result of his default in this respect, which, under the facts at bar, so far as the binding effect of the adjudication of the orphans' court is concerned, places him, and hence his sureties, in practically the same position as sureties on McCarthy's bond, had such an obligation been entered.

[8] Again, appellants assert that to permit Gherst, originally named as a use plaintiff, to recover in this action, would, in effect, recognize in him a right of action against McCarthy, who was a joint tort-feasor with the former, and, they say, this cannot be done. The contention has no merit, for it disregards the fact that Gherst appeared, as use plaintiff, in a representative capacity, i. e., for the estate of Middleby, deceased; whereas, he and McCarthy were answerable in their individual capacities for the devastavit. The fact that the decree of the orphans' court which orders payment calls them "executors" has no controlling significance. The addition of this title is surplusage and may be disregarded. Hare v. O'Brien, 283 Pa. 880, 837, 82 Atl. 475, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 430, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 624.

[9] Possibly it would have been better practice to dismiss Gherst, as well as McCarthy, from his office as ancillary executor, than to appoint a successor, make an award of the amount of the surcharge against Gherst and McCarthy to such successor, and employ the name of the latter as a use plaintiff in the present suit; but, since Gherst died after the beginning of this action, and the present use plaintiff was appointed, before judgment, to continue the suit, this successor is in a position to collect and remit the money to the domiciliary executor in Massachusetts for distribution, as directed by the decree of the orphans' court, and no harm is done by the course of practice actually followed.

[10] Finally; appellants contend that, when the devastavit was found against Gherst and McCarthy, decedent's domiciliary executors in Massachusetts became entitled to the amount of the surcharge, and, as the domiciliary and ancillary executors happen to be the same person, a presumption arises that the money in question has been paid to the former, which presumption must prevail, at least till these executors have failed to account for the fund in the proper tribunal of the domicile. To sustain this contention, they cite Stokely's Estate, 19 Pa. 476, 482, Com. v. Messinger, 237 Pa. 1, 85 Atl. 26, and Skeer's Estate (No. 1) 249 Pa. 298, 95 Atl. 96. In the first of these cases we said that, where the same person is acting as domiciliary and ancillary executor, there is a presumption that he has done his duty, and "when he comes to settle his account in the state where [final] distribution is to be made, he cannot deny that he has received what the foreign administrator, if he had been a different person, would have been compelled to pay, and what he would have been bound in duty to demand and get"; but there the evidence showed that the person involved admitted actual receipt of the fund in question, offering no good reason for his refusal to account therefor. In the other two cases the evidence shows what in fact amounts to payment of the fund in controversy to the fiduciary ultimately liable to account therefor; whereas, at bar, as stated by the court below, "the money Gherst and McCarthy received and the estate they mismanaged was in their capacity as ancillary executors, * * * and * * * it is admitted by the pleadings * * * that this money has never actually been paid to [the Middleby estate] by the two ancillary executors," nor, we may add, has it been paid by any one else. In other words, as the court below says, any "presumption of payment is rebutted by the admitted fact of nonpayment."

Moreover, where, through the maladministration of an ancillary trust, losses occur in Pennsylvania, and the proper tribunals here adjudge the questions involved, determine the amount due, and order the devastavit made good, when the order has in fact not been complied with, it will not do to say that, through a fiction, our courts have so far lost control of the matter that they cannot enforce their own decrees. On the contrary, the dignity of our tribunals and the proper administration of the law demand that in every such instance the losses occurring in this state shall, when possible, be made good here; and, when the fund is realized, after Pennsylvania creditors are paid, the balance may then be remitted to the domicile of the decedent. Perhaps in this particular case the surviving domiciliary executor and his sureties can be held liable in Massachusetts for so much of the present devastavit as may not be recovered in Pennsylvania; but this is not a matter for our determination.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

DUPUY v. JOHNS et al.

(261 Pa. 40)

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 25, 1913.)

1. TAXATION \S 120—CORPORATIONS—TAX ON CAPITAL STOCK.

Tax levied under Act June 17, 1913 (P. L. 507) against corporations on capital stock is in effect a tax on the property represented by the capital in question.

2. TAXATION \S 238—EXEMPTION OF MANUFACTURING COMPANIES.

It is the public policy of the state to exempt from taxation corporate bodies doing a manufacturing business in the state to the extent that their capital is invested in the state.

3. TAXATION \S 169 — TAX ON CORPORATE STOCK.

A tax on stock of a foreign corporation in the hands of resident stockholders is not a tax on the capital of the corporation, but is a personal levy against the shareholder.

4. TAXATION — 239—STOCK OF FOREIGN CORPORATION—EXEMPTION.

Under Act June 17, 1913 (P. L. 507) § 1, shares of stock of a foreign corporation having assets within and without the state, part of whose capital in the state is employed in manufacturing, are exempt from taxation in the hands of resident stockholders.

5. TAXATION — 169—CORPORATE STOCK.

Stockholders in Pennsylvania of corporations doing no business and paying no capital stock tax in the state must pay a tax on stock held by them.

6. TAXATION — 239—CAPITAL STOCK.

Capital stock in manufacturing corporations engaged in business in Pennsylvania which report to the auditor general and are liable to the state tax on capital stock or relieved therefrom by statute, is exempt in the hands of resident stockholders from taxation.

7. TAXATION — 194—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—EXEMPTIONS.

Act June 17, 1913 (P. L. 507) § 1, relating to exemption from taxation of foreign manufacturing corporations, held not to violate Const. art. 9, §§ 1, 2, requiring taxation to be uniform on the same class of subjects.

8. TAXATION — 493(1)—REVIEW OF TAX ASSESSMENT.

The proper manner to review a tax assessment is by appeal from the board of revision of taxes to a court of common pleas and, if desired, from that tribunal to the appropriate higher court, under Act June 28, 1901 (P. L. 601), Act June 13, 1911 (P. L. 892), and Act June 17, 1913 (P. L. 511) § 5.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Allegheny County.

Bill for injunction by Herbert Dupuy against David B. Johns and others. Injunction granted, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

R. W. Martin, Lee C. Beatty, and Rose & Eichenauer, all of Pittsburgh, for appellants. George E. Shaw, of Pittsburgh, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. This is an appeal from a decree of the common pleas, striking off an assessment and restraining the collection of a personal property tax.

The plaintiff is a resident of Pittsburgh. In his return for the year 1916 he failed to include certain shares of the preferred stock of the Crucible Steel Company of America, then owned by him. The concern in question is a New Jersey corporation, engaged in making steel and products thereof, the value of its total capital stock being approximately $75,000,000. Of this amount, $14,000,000 is employed in Pennsylvania, and all except $29,000 exclusively in manufacturing. The company is licensed to do business in this state, and in 1916 it paid a capital stock tax on the before mentioned $29,000, amounting to $169.17.

Plaintiff, claiming that, under section 1 of the act of June 17, 1913 (P. L. 507), his shares were exempt, refused to designate them for taxation; nevertheless, the board made an assessment against him in the sum of $1,153,800, being the value of 12,820 shares at $90 each, with a penalty of 50 per cent. added, as provided by law, for failure to make the return, totaling, in all, $1,730,700. At the time this assessment was levied, the stock had a market value of $110 per share; but, since $14/75$ of the capital of the company in question was employed in Pennsylvania, on which it was either liable to the payment of a state tax or exempt as a manufacturing corporation, the board assessed plaintiff's holdings on only $61/75$ of their value, which explains the rate of $90 per share. Thereupon a bill in equity was filed, praying that the entire assessment be declared illegal and void and the collection of a tax based thereon restrained. After hearing, the court below granted the desired relief, and defendants have appealed.

Section 1 of the act of 1913 (P. L. 507, 508), supra, makes taxable for county purposes, at the rate of four mills on each dollar of the value thereof, inter alia, shares of stock in both domestic and foreign corporations, "except shares . . . in any . . . corporation . . . that may be liable to a tax on its shares or its capital stock for state purposes under the laws of this commonwealth, or relieved from the payment of tax on its shares or capital stock for state purposes by the laws of the commonwealth."

The contention of appellants is that the exception just quoted was inserted in the statute for the sole purpose of preventing double taxation, and must be read accordingly; that, when the act is so construed, appellee's shares are exempt thereunder from tax on "only such a proportionate part of their value as the capital stock of the corporation employed within the state and on which a capital stock tax is paid or which is relieved from taxation by reason of its being employed exclusively in manufacturing, bears to the total capital stock of the company. In other words, since only $14/75$ of the capital stock of the company is employed in this state, then only $14/75$ of the value of the shares of such company is exempt under the exception in section 1 of said act."

The position taken by appellee is that, under the express terms of the exception contained in the act of 1913, supra, his shares of stock are absolutely exempt from taxation; and, in appellants' printed argument, the latter admit that this construction may be warranted by the strict letter of the law, as written in the statute, but they contend (a) that, to construe the provision in question literally would be "narrow and technical," and leaves out of view what they allege to be its sole purpose, i. e., to avoid double taxation; (b) that, if read according to its letter, the provision would be void because violative of sections 1 and 2, article 9, of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, requiring uniformity of taxation upon the same class of subjects; and (c) that, if the provision be literally interpreted, that it relieves from taxation only shares of stock in corporations which are liable to the payment of a Pennsylvania state tax on their whole capital stock or whose entire capital stock is duly exempt from such a levy by the laws of the commonwealth, citing Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, 5 Sup. Ct. 1014, 29 L. Ed. 240.

We shall discuss appellants' several contentions under designations corresponding with those just used; but, before taking up their direct consideration, it seems best to state some relevant propositions generally accepted as established, which should prove helpful in reaching a correct solution of the problems now presented for determination.

[1] The Pennsylvania tax levied directly against corporations on capital stock is, in effect, a tax on the property represented by the capital in question (Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 101 Pa. 119, 145; Commonwealth v. N. Y., Pa. & O. R. R. Co., 188 Pa. 169, 189, 41 Atl. 594; Commonwealth v. Curtis Publishing Co., 237 Pa. 333, 335, 85 Atl. 360); and, in making the assessment of such tax, assets outside of the state cannot be considered (Commonwealth v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., 251 Pa. 12, 14, 95 Atl. 807), for no property so situated can be taxed, either directly or indirectly, by the commonwealth or any of its political subdivisions.

[2] It is the public policy of the commonwealth (Commonwealth v. Westinghouse Co., 251 Pa. 12, 14, 95 Atl. 807), declared by statute (Act of June 7, 1879, P. L. 112, 116, § 6, 2d proviso; Act June 1, 1889, P. L. 420, 431, § 21; Act June 8, 1891, P. L. 229, 238, § 5; Act June 8, 1893, P. L. 353, 355; Act June 7, 1911, P. L. 673, 675; Act July 22, 1913, P. L. 903, 905), to exempt from taxation corporate bodies, domestic and foreign, doing business in Pennsylvania, to the extent their capital is invested in manufacturing within this state; also, in order to make the exemption effective and avoid the semblance of an indirect tax, we relieve the shares of such manufacturing corporations from taxation in the hands of resident stockholders, the purpose of this policy being to build up and encourage these industries within our borders so as to gain substantial benefits therefrom.

[3] The tax on stock of a foreign corporation, eo nomine, in the hands of resident shareholders, is not a tax on the property represented by the capital of the corporation, but is a personal levy against the shareholder in question, based on the value of his stock, without any intent to reach the property that gives the latter its value (McKeen

v. Northampton County, 49 Pa. 519, 88 Am. Dec. 515; Whitesell v. Northampton County, 49 Pa. 526; see, also, note to Commonwealth v. Westinghouse Airbrake Co., 151 Pa. 276, 281, 24 Atl. 1111, 1113), and this is the sole ground upon which such a tax is sustainable.

[4] (a) As a matter of fact, in all probability the foregoing reasons, principles, and announced public policy influenced the draftsman of the act of 1913, supra; and we must assume that they were in the minds of the lawmakers when the statute was passed. The Legislature might have entirely abandoned the state policy of exemption, so far as the stockholders of foreign manufacturing companies are concerned, and authorized assessments upon resident owners of the shares of such corporations, had it seen fit to do so; but evidently the lawmakers, considering the indirect benefits to be derived, preferred to relinquish the revenue which might be obtained from such taxation. In adopting this course, the Legislature no doubt appreciated that, in view of the sole theory upon which a tax on foreign corporate shares, eo nomine, is maintainable (i. e., that, for purposes of the tax, they, in themselves, are a distinct species of property), it could not in any instance attempt an intangible, theoretical division of such shares into two parts, one representing capital invested in manufacturing within our state and the other extraterritorial assets, and forego the right to tax the first while authorizing an assessment on the second, without thereby admitting the levy on the latter to be an effort to reach property beyond the jurisdiction of the taxing power. In other words, an avowed attempt to assess a tax against only a fraction of each share of the stock of a foreign corporation possessed by a resident holder, upon the ground that such undivided portion gains its value from property outside of Pennsylvania, which, for that reason, cannot be taxed by this state or any of its subdivisions, would be utterly inconsistent with the only theory upon which a local assessment on such shares is sustainable, and would, in effect, convert the tax in question from one on shares of stock, eo nomine, to one upon corporate property. All of these good and sufficient reasons for writing the law as we find it call for due consideration in construing the legislation now before us. Therefore we cannot agree with appellants' contention that a desire to avoid double taxation must be accepted as the sole explanation of the exemption clause here in question, nor can we read its language from that standpoint alone; on the contrary, as we have endeavored to show, when the statute was drawn, the effective maintenance of an important public policy was involved, and this, no doubt, influenced the phraseology now under discussion. The words of the act must be accepted as written, and, when so read, it is clear that the court below did not err in declaring the shares of stock in controversy wholly exempt from taxation.

The effect of the exemption in wholly relieving the stock of appellees from taxation is by no means unique or unprecedented in the operation of our tax system. As pointed out by counsel for appellees, shareholders of the Pennsylvania Railroad, for example, are relieved from individual taxation on the stock of that company, because the corporation itself pays a state tax on capital. In calculating this latter tax, however, only the assets of the railroad within our borders are considered, and the stockholders go entirely free of either a direct or indirect tax on the very considerable value added to their shares by the extensive extraterritorial possessions of that corporation. In the case at bar, while the company involved is a foreign corporation whose Pennsylvania capital stock tax is comparatively small, yet it has vast assets employed in manufacturing within our state, from which we gain enriching benefits, and this latter fact, for purposes of entitling stockholders to exemption, is treated in the statute under consideration as equivalent to the payment of a capital stock tax; hence, as in the example above cited, since there can be no tax of any character, either direct or indirect on extraterritorial assets, the result is that plaintiff absolutely escapes taxation on his individual shares.

(b) The attack upon the constitutionality of the act of 1913, supra, has no merit, since the fundamental validity of tax immunities such as those therein provided for is now beyond question. See opinion of McPherson, J., adopted per curiam in Commonwealth v. Germania Brewing Co., 145 Pa. 83, 22 Atl. 240, where the parts of the Constitution here in question, and their bearing upon exemption provisions like those at bar, are ably discussed. As to the indirect classifying effect of these immunity provisions, the selection and classification of subjects for taxation are, generally speaking, exclusively within the control of the Legislature, the only restriction being that there must be no discrimination between members of the same class. Commonwealth v. Del. Div. Canal Co., 123 Pa. 594, 16 Atl. 584, 2 L. R. A. 798; Commonwealth v. Sharon Coal Co., 164 Pa. 304, 30 Atl. 127, 128.

[5, 6] For purposes of taxation upon shares in the hands of stockholders, the effect of the particular exemption clause now before us is to divide corporations into two distinct groups: (1) Those doing no business, making no official reports, and paying no capital stock tax in Pennsylvania, upon the stock of which resident shareholders must pay a tax; (2) those which are bona fide engaged in business here, report to the auditor general, and are either liable to a state tax on capital stock or relieved therefrom by the laws of the commonwealth—the stock of which is exempt in the hands of resident shareholders. When the underlying reasons are kept in mind, as we have endeavored to explain them, it cannot be held that this grouping is unwarranted, and, since there is no want of uniformity within the respective classes, the constitutional validity of the legislation is secure.

[7] (c) As to appellants' last contention: The language employed in the statutory provisions under consideration cannot justifiably be construed to mean that only the stock of corporations either liable to a tax on or exempt as to their entire capital is to enjoy exemption in the hands of shareholders. The word "entire" does not appear in the act, and we see no warrant for placing it there. Sturges v. Carter, supra, cited by appellants, is not controlling; it involves the construction of an Ohio statute which is essentially different from the one under discussion.

Another aspect of the case may be noticed. Appellants argue that, under a literal reading, the words of the act of 1913, supra, relieve from taxation, in the hands of the holders thereof, not only stock of corporations here engaged in manufacturing, but also the stock of any corporation that pays a capital stock tax to the state, no matter how small; and appellants express the fear that, unless we put the construction upon the statute for which they contend, foreign corporations, for the benefit of their shareholders, may seek to take an undue or improper advantage of this situation. Why shareholders of foreign corporations liable to a capital stock tax in Pennsylvania, with no apparent regard to the amount of tax paid by their companies, should be put on a par with other shareholders who enjoy tax exemption because their corporations are engaged in manufacturing within our borders is not so clear; but we deem it unnecessary to the determination of this case to discuss that point, for, while the corporation at bar pays a small capital stock tax, the strength of appellee's position, and the fact which controls our decision, is that this particular concern comes bona fide within the manufacturing class. Moreover, if there is danger from the act as it now stands, that is for the Legislature, not for us, to correct; but it may not be out of place to say that, under the ordinary rules of law, an effort to gain an undue advantage by connivance or fraud can usually be frustrated. It is not contended, however, that any such effort confronts us in the present case.

[8] One other matter calls for notice: In a case like the present, in order to secure judicial review, the usual and proper remedy is by an appeal from the board of revision to the common pleas, and, if desired, from that tribunal to the appropriate higher court (see Act June 26, 1901, P. L. 601; Act June 13, 1911, P. L. 892; section 5, Act June 17, 1913, P. L. 507; Van Nort's Appeal, 121 Pa. 118, 128, 15 Atl. 473; D., L. & W. R. R. v. Luzerne County Commissioners, 245 Pa. 515, 517, 91 Atl. 889; Philadelphia v. Phillips, 65 Pa. Super. Ct. 578, 582-584; but, since equity is not entirely without power to restrain the collection of a tax (D., L. & W. R. R. v. Commissioners, supra), and no question of jurisdiction or practice is raised by either party, we have determined the points of law here involved. It must be understood however, that this decision is not to be cited in the future as an authority on correct procedure.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the decree is affirmed at the cost of appellants.

CAFFERY v. PHILADELPHIA & R. RY. CO.
(two cases).

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE §370(1)—RECORDS KEPT BY THIRD PERSONS.

Where a photograph was offered in evidence, it was not error to exclude record of establishment where it was made, to show when it was taken, where person who took photograph was not called as witness, and there was nothing to show record was in his handwriting, or that any effort had been made to introduce him as a witness.

2. EVIDENCE §213(1)—INDUCEMENT TO COMPROMISE—THREAT.

Evidence of a threat to give false testimony, made to one party by a witness of the other, is admissible, though expressly made to induce settlement of the case.

3. WITNESSES §374(2)—IMPEACHMENT.

Where plaintiff had some discussion with an uncle, who was in the employ of defendant, as to settlement of the case, and the uncle testified that plaintiff was not injured, it was not error to admit in rebuttal evidence that he had threatened to lie the plaintiff out of court if she did not settle the case.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Actions by Maria B. Caffery and by John M. Caffery against the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company. Judgments for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

William Clarke Mason, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Thomas James Meagher, of Philadelphia, for appellees.

WALLING, J. These are actions by husband and wife for personal injuries to the wife. On August 7, 1916, the plaintiff Mrs. Caffery, while a passenger on one of defendant's trains, was injured in a collision under such circumstances as to render the carrier liable therefor. She lived at Coatesville, and with members of her family, set out that morning for Atlantic City. After the accident she completed her journey and remained at said city for three days, when her husband came and took her home. Her condition while there was a controverted question at the trial. Plaintiff's evidence was that she was ill, and defendant's that she was well, and out as usual, enjoying the pleasures of the resort.

[1] On that branch of the case defendant offered a photograph of Mrs. Caffery and members of her party in bathing suits, and evidence that it was taken there at the Palace studio on August 9, 1916. Another picture, in which Mrs. Caffery appears with others in bathing suits, was admittedly taken at a former visit to the same studio on the 18th of the preceding June, and plaintiff's evidence was that both pictures were taken at that time. Defendant called Mr. Lipp, the manager of the studio, who testified that a separate consecutive number was written in pencil on each negative, and that they had a book in which was kept a daily record of the numbers corresponding with those placed on the negatives. This was to enable the studio to furnish additional photographs from the negatives on file. Neither of the photographs in question was taken by the manager, nor was the number on either negative or in the book made by him; nor, so far as appears, was he present when either photograph was taken or either number written. It is not shown that he saw the parties, or had any personal knowledge of the transaction. A Mr. Menelick was employed at the studio, and seems to have taken these photographs; but he was not called as a witness, nor was it shown that the numbers on the negatives or in the book were in his handwriting, or in the same handwriting. Mr. Lipp testified that he did not know where Menelick was; but it is not shown that any search, diligent or otherwise, was made to find him. The trial judge held that the book was not sufficiently proven, and declined to admit it in evidence, or to permit a witness to state as facts information obtained therefrom, in which we see no error. Book entries or other like writings of private parties, to be competent as proof against third parties, must be authenticated by the best evidence attainable. See 16 Cyc. 1208; 2 Wigmore on Evidence, § 1521; Heiskell v. Rollins, 82 Md. 14, 83 Atl. 283, 51 Am. St. Rep. 455; Terry v. Birmingham National Bank, 98 Ala. 569, 9 South. 299, 30 Am. St. Rep. 87; Post v. Kenerson, 72 Vt. 341, 47 Atl. 1072, 52 L. R. A. 552, and note, 82 Am. St. Rep. 948; 2 Wharton on Evidence, § 1181. The authorities cited for appellant do not conflict with this rule.

The same principle applies to photographs, which cannot be received in evidence until verified by the testimony of some qualified person. Wigmore on Evidence, § 798. What is sufficient verification of book entries to warrant their admission is largely a question for the discretion of the trial judge. 10 Ruling Case Law, p. 1175. Here the best evidence is that of the one who made the entries, or who saw them made, and that was not furnished. There was no effort made to find Menelick, and no reason given for failure to produce him as a witness; hence no ground was laid for the admission of secondary evidence. The fact that Mr. Lipp did not know where Menelick was did not prove that the latter could not be found, as there was nothing to indicate that any effort had been made to find him. Aside from that, there was no proof, or offer of proof, that the entries were in Menelick's handwriting. Nothing appears, except that it is a book of the studio wherein was kept a daily record by numbers of the negatives for the convenience of the business, not verified by the one who made the entries therein, nor by proof of his handwriting, nor by any one having personal knowledge thereof. For lack of proof the book was properly rejected. When duly authenticated, such entries may always be used to refresh the recollection of a witness; but it is not necessary here to determine whether in such case they are admissible, as independent evidence, to affect the rights of third parties.

Mrs. Caffery and her two children went to Atlantic City on the occasion of the accident in the company of her uncle, Adam R. Franciscus, who was an employé of the defendant and its principal witness at this trial. The examination tended to disclose some feeling on his part against the plaintiffs; and it was permissible in cross-examination to bring out the interest he had taken in the defense, even though it might show incidentally that he had tried to bring about a settlement. This was to test the credibility of the witness, not to show an effort on part of defendant to settle the case; no such offer was made, or could have been permitted. In fact, that part of the cross-examination of this witness to which error is assigned seems entirely harmless. It tends only to show that he had some talk about settling the case with a man whose name he did not know, but thought it might be Howell. We do not see how that could prejudice the defendant.

[2, 3] In rebuttal plaintiffs were permitted to offer testimony to the effect that shortly before the trial they had a conversation with Mr. Franciscus, in which he stated that if they did not settle the case he would go into court and lie them out of it. This was relevant and proper, as going to his credibility. Evidence of a threat to give false testimony, made to one party by a witness of the other, is relevant as affecting the truthfulness of such witness, and will not be excluded because expressly made to induce settlement of the case. The threat of a witness to commit perjury unless a case is settled is not privileged, like an offer of a party to compromise litigation. Evidence which affects the credibility of a witness is competent. Magehan v. Thompson, 9 Watts & S. 54. "A party seeking to show interest or bias of an adverse witness is not confined to cross-examination, but may introduce independent evidence for the purpose." 40 Cyc. 2676. In the discretion of the trial judge, such independent evidence may be offered without previous cross-examination of the adverse witness with reference thereto. Cronkrite v. Traxler, 187 Pa. 100, 41 Atl. 22. We see no error in the comments of the trial judge upon the above-mentioned rebuttal evidence; and, in any event, that part of the charge is not properly before us, as no exception was taken thereto. Error can only be assigned to so much of the charge as was made the subject of exception.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgments are affirmed.

WANNER v. PHILADELPHIA & R. RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. RAILROADS §350(9)—INJURIES AT CROSSING—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action to recover for death of plaintiff's husband at a grade crossing while passenger in an automobile, question whether sufficient warning of the train was given to notify travelers approaching the crossing, the view at which was obstructed, held for the jury.

2. RAILROADS §350(5) — CROSSING ACCIDENTS—WARNINGS—JURY QUESTION.

Whether a railroad provided sufficient warning signs and signals at a dangerous crossing, where the view was obstructed, held, on the evidence, for the jury.

3. RAILROADS §350(30) — ACCIDENT AT CROSSING — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where driver of automobile and deceased were unfamiliar with the road, it was for the jury to say whether, in view of a narrow roadway, a sharp curve, and the necessity of being on the lookout for other vehicles, the driver was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to drive ahead of the train, instead of coming to a stop at the crossing.

4. NEGLIGENCE §92—IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.

A passenger in a hired automobile, with his back in the direction from which a train came, where there was nothing to show he was aware of the proximity of a railroad crossing, was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; the negligence of the driver not being imputable to him.

5. RAILROADS §350(21) — ACCIDENT AT CROSSING — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether plaintiff's intestate, a passenger, sitting with the driver in the front seat of a hired automobile, was guilty of negligence in turning his head toward those in the back seat, with whom he was conversing, while the automobile was approaching a crossing, of which plaintiff did not know, held for the jury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Berks County.

Action by Annie Wanner against the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, O. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

Jefferson Snyder, of Reading, for appellant. John B. Stevens, of Reading, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. Plaintiff sued for and recovered damages for the death of her husband, who was killed at a grade crossing by defendant's engine while riding as a passenger in an automobile. Defendant now appeals from the action of the court below in discharging its motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, and contends the court's action was erroneous for the reasons, first, there was no evidence of negligence on the part of defendant; and, second, deceased was guilty of contributory negligence.

[1, 2] At the time of the accident deceased was a passenger in an automobile hired from the driver, Mengle, who conducted a taxicab business under the name of the Northeastern Taxicab Service. The accident occurred between Reading and Virginsville, at a crossing near Moselem station on the Berks & Lehigh branch of defendant's railway. Before reaching the crossing the highway over which the automobile traveled paralleled a creek, and turned sharply to the right and up grade to and across a covered bridge 155 feet in length. The sides of the bridge were entirely inclosed, shutting off all view, except at the two entrances. The railway crossed the highway 31 feet from the east entrance to the bridge, and at the moment of emerging from the structure a view of the railroad track is obtainable for a distance of 400 feet. There is no "Stop, Look, and Listen" sign at the crossing; there is, however, a crossing sign attached to the opposite or west entrance to the bridge, approximately 187 feet from the railroad track. The car in which deceased was riding was proceeding at a speed of from 15 to 20 miles an hour, and defendant's train approached the crossing at approximately the same speed.

The driver of the automobile testified he neither saw the railroad nor the train until the forward end of his car was about 8 feet from the track, and, believing a stop on the near side impossible, endeavored to cross ahead of the train, and had almost succeeded in so doing, when the rear wheel was struck by the engine as the automobile was leaving the track. The testimony on the part of defendant, that a whistle was blown at a whistling post located a quarter of a mile from the crossing, is not seriously disputed; but whether further warning of the approach of the train was given is not positively shown. Although the fireman testified he rang the bell, his statement was not verified by the engineer, and a witness standing at the station awaiting the arrival of the train testified he did not hear the bell, and would have heard it if rung. The driver and passengers in the car testified no warning of the approach of the train was given. Owing to the natural obstructions and general contour of the ground, and the fact that the train and automobile were fully half a mile apart when the whistle was blown, the occupants of the car probably could not have heard the warning. They were, however, in a position to hear the bell, if rung, as the train approached the crossing. The fireman testified he rang the bell continuously from a point 200 or 300 feet from the crossing. Whether this was sufficient warning to persons approaching the railroad through the covered bridge, without opportunity to observe the track until within a few feet of it, could not be determined as matter of law. In view of the circumstances and surroundings, and the condition of the approach to the railroad, it was clearly for the jury to say whether sufficient warning was given to notify travelers approaching the grade crossing. Bickel v. Penna. R. R. Co., 217 Pa. 456, 66 Atl. 756, 118 Am. St. Rep. 926.

[3] The question of contributory negligence was also for the jury. The crossing is a particularly dangerous one. The usual danger sign in the immediate vicinity of the track was absent, and in its stead a warning notice was attached to the framework of the bridge at the opposite end from the line of the railroad, nearly 200 feet from the crossing, and in such position as to not be readily noticed by persons driving on the highway. At the entrance to the bridge is an incline and sharp curve, and, the structure being narrow, the driver of an automobile in approaching the curve would naturally do exactly as the driver in this case testified he was doing, namely, be on the alert for vehicles approaching over the bridge from the opposite direction. The driver and deceased were both unfamiliar with the road; the former having been over it but once previously, and that at night and traveling in the opposite direction, and the latter practically without knowledge of the locality and existence of the crossing. Whether or not, in view of the narrow roadway, the sharp curve, and the necessity of being on the lookout for other vehicles, either the driver or deceased should have noticed the crossing sign at the entrance of the bridge, an unusual place for such signs, was necessarily a question for the jury. According to the testimony of the driver, he first saw the railroad, and also the approaching train, at the time his machine was clear of the bridge, and concluded the safer course would be to cross the track ahead of the train rather than attempt to stop between the bridge and the railroad. Whether his choice was a wise one is not the question; as the danger was sudden and imminent, he was not bound to pursue the safest and wisest course in attempting to avoid an accident. Centofanti v. Penna. R. R. Co., 244 Pa. 255, 90 Atl. 558.

[4] Aside from the question of negligence of the driver there is nothing in the circumstances, or in the relation between deceased and the driver, justifying the imput-

ing of the latter's negligence, if any, to the former. The car was a hired one, engaged to take deceased and his friends to a particular destination, and in the immediate control, aside from the destination and route to be traveled, of the driver. At the time of the accident deceased was sitting on the front seat of the automobile, with his back in the direction from which the train came, in a position enabling him to converse with his friends on the rear seat. In absence of notice or warning to apprise him of danger, no negligence can be imputed to him because of the position in which he was sitting.

[5] There was nothing in the speed of the vehicle, or the way it was operated, to warn him of possible danger, and, it not having been shown he was aware of the crossing, or had better opportunity than the driver to observe either the crossing or the approaching train, it cannot be said he sat without protest and permitted himself to be placed in a position of danger. As a matter of fact, he did see the train an instant after the driver saw it; there was, however, neither time nor occasion for him to remonstrate or interfere with the operation of the car. To do so, under such circumstances, would be to invite more certain disaster. Whether deceased was negligent in failing to discover the presence of the crossing in time to give the driver warning of the approaching train was, under the peculiar circumstances, a question of fact for the jury. Senft v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., 246 Pa. 446, 92 Atl. 553. See, also, Hardie v. Barrett, 257 Pa. 42, 101 Atl. 75, L. R. A. 1917F, 444, and cases there cited.

The judgment is affirmed.

BUELL v. WILLIAMSPORT STAPLE CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

BANKRUPTCY —LEASE OF MACHINERY—OPTION TO PURCHASE—EXERCISE OF OPTION—BANKRUPTCY OF LESSOR.

Where corporation leased machinery with a right to purchase, and with provision that, if lessor filed petition in bankruptcy, title should pass to lessee company, which elected to purchase before bankruptcy proceedings, its liability for the price was fixed, and verdict for the price was properly rendered in action by trustee in bankruptcy, who sued in affirmance of the contract.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Lycoming County.

Action by Edwin D. Buell, trustee of the G. A. Webster Company, against the Williamsport Staple Company. Judgment directed for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

O. E. Sprout, of Williamsport, and John E. Cupp, of Philadelphia, for appellant.

Mortimer O. Rhone and A. R. Jackson, both of Williamsport, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. Under its contract with the G. A. Webster Company the defendant acquired the right to use the machinery and equipment of that company during the period of the contract. It also had the right to purchase the machinery and equipment, together with the stock and merchandise, at a fixed price. It was further provided that, in case a petition in bankruptcy was filed against the Webster Company, title to the machinery, equipment, and merchandise should immediately vest in the defendant company upon certain conditions set forth. The defendant, however, exercised its right under the contract and became the purchaser of the property of the Webster Company, before any proceedings in bankruptcy were instituted, and its liability to pay for the property the price named in the contract, therefore, became fixed. The trustee in bankruptcy brought this suit in affirmance of the contract, and there was no interference with defendant's possession of the property. The court below was right in directing a verdict for the plaintiff, and in overruling defendant's motion for judgment non obstante verdicto.

The judgment entered upon the verdict for the plaintiff is therefore affirmed.

KROSHINSKI v. SCHOOL DIST. OF BOROUGH OF DICKSON CITY et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR —§356—TIME FOR TAKING APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

An appeal from a decree dismissing a bill will be quashed, where it was not taken until more than six months after the decree complained of was filed.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Lackawanna County.

Bills by Adam Kroshinski against the School District of the Borough of Dickson City and against the Dickson Lumber Company. The cases were tried together. From a decree dismissing the bills, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, O. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISER, and WALLING, JJ.

George Morrow, of Scranton, for appellant. M. J. Martin and Elmer D. Adair, both of Scranton, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. These two cases were disposed of together below, under agreement of counsel, and were so argued here. A final decree dismissing the bill in each case was filed June 6, 1916, more than six months before these appeals were taken, and they are therefore quashed, without prejudice to any right of the appellant in proceedings at law.

CITIZENS' ELECTRIC CO. v. LYCOMING-EDISON CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

INJUNCTION §231—CONTEMPT—FINDINGS OF FACT—REVIEW.

Decree dismissing rule for attachment for alleged violations of an injunction will not be disturbed, where lower court, after full hearing, found that defendant had fully complied with its decree.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Lycoming County.

Action by the Citizens' Electric Company against the Lycoming-Edison Company. From an order discharging a rule to show cause why attachment should not issue for contempt of court, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

It appeared that an injunction had been awarded as prayed for in the bill; that thereafter plaintiff alleged a violation of the injunction, and a rule to show cause why an attachment should not issue was allowed. After hearing the evidence, the court found as fact that defendant had complied with its former decree and discharged the rule for the attachment.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

John G. Reading, M. C. Rhone, R. F. Allen, Herbert T. Ames, and Thomas H. Hammond, all of Williamsport, for appellant. Addison Candor, of Williamsport, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The appellant in this case asked for an attachment against the defendant, alleging that it had violated the decree of the court below. After a hearing, and upon careful investigation, the trial court found as a fact that the defendant had fully complied with its decree, and it dismissed the rule for the attachment. We have not been convinced that the court below erred in the conclusion which it reached in this respect.

Its decree is therefore affirmed, and this appeal is dismissed, at the cost of appellant.

FORD et al. v. DEIGENDESCH.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §706(6)—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against an owner of a horse and wagon for injuries caused to a boy, whether the driver of the wagon exercised due care held for the jury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Francis X. Ford, by his next friend, William J. Ford, and William J. Ford against Paul H. Deigendesch. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed. Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

William G. Wright, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Augustus Trask Ashton and Victor Frey, both of Philadelphia, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. The evidence in this case shows that an employé of defendant drove defendant's horse at a trot, with a loose rein, through a narrow roadway, some 6½ feet in width, bordered by a sidewalk only 2 feet in width. It appears that the horse suddenly shied, and moved sidewise, so that the wheel of the wagon to which he was attached was thrown upon the narrow sidewalk, striking and injuring the plaintiff, a small boy. Whether or not the driver exercised due care, under the circumstances, in permitting the horse to travel at such a rate of speed, or whether it was careless in him to drive with a slack rein at that time and place, were questions for the jury to determine. Binding instructions in favor of defendant were properly refused, and the question of the driver's negligence was submitted to the jury in a charge to which no exception was taken.

The judgment is affirmed.

GREENBERGER et al. v. SCHWARTZ et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. BANKRUPTCY §198—LIENS—VALIDITY.

An adjudication in bankruptcy, under Bankruptcy Act, § 67f (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 9651), renders all liens obtained against the bankrupt within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy void.

2. BANKRUPTCY §387—COMPOSITION WITH CREDITORS—DISCHARGE.

Whether the bankrupt's estate is administered by a trustee, or there is a composition by the bankrupt with his creditors, the effect of discharge is the same, under Bankruptcy Act, § 14c (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 9598), if the composition is confirmed by the court.

3. BANKRUPTCY §198—JUDGMENTS—VALIDITY—COMPOSITION WITH CREDITORS.

Where judgment was entered against a firm and the individual members within four months of bankruptcy proceedings, and plaintiffs were named as creditors, and a composition with creditors was confirmed by the bankruptcy court and carried out, the judgment entered was rendered void by the bankruptcy proceedings.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Lackawanna County.

Action by Israel Greenberger and others against M. Schwartz and Jacob Rosenfeld. On issue to determine the validity of the lien of a judgment. Exceptions to report of referee in favor of defendant dismissed, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, and WALLING, JJ.

William J. Fitzgerald, and John P. Kelly, both of Scranton, for appellants. L. M. Levy, of Scranton, for appellees.

BROWN, C. J. Moses Schwartz and Jacob Rosenfeld were partners doing business in the city of Scranton under the firm name of Schwartz & Rosenfeld. On June 17, 1912, Rosenfeld executed and delivered, in the name of the firm, to Greenberger & Co., a promissory note, containing a confession of judgment, for $2,525.55, payable to their order two months after date. At the time this note was executed Schwartz & Rosenfeld were neither insolvent nor in contemplation of bankruptcy. On October 7, 1916, the appellants entered judgment on the note against the defendants individually and as a firm, but the same was subsequently stricken off as to Schwartz, who had not signed the obligation, and was opened as to Rosenfeld and the firm of Schwartz & Rosenfeld, to enable them to set up the defense of a discharge in bankruptcy. At the date of the entry of the judgment the said firm and the two individual members thereof were insolvent within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and this was well known to the appellants. On November 4, 1915, within a month after the said judgment had been entered, a petition in bankruptcy was filed by the creditors of the firm of Schwartz & Rosenfeld, in the District Court of the United States for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, against the defendants as a firm and as individuals, and on the 26th of the same month they were duly adjudged bankrupts by said court. They subsequently filed their schedules in the bankruptcy proceedings, and named the plaintiffs therein as creditors. On January 10, 1916, the defendants in due form offered a composition to their creditors, which was thereafter duly confirmed by the said District Court, and was carried out by the defendants as bankrupts.

The issue on the opened judgment was referred to a very learned referee, by whose report judgment was directed to be entered for the defendants, on the ground that, under the Bankruptcy Act, the judgment entered by the appellants was null and void, and from the judgment so entered by the court below, in confirming the report of the referee, there is this appeal by Greenberger & Co. On it two questions are raised: (1) Is the lien of a judgment entered against an insolvent debtor within four months of bankruptcy proceedings absolutely void, or only voidable? And (2) if it be voidable, can it be attacked by the bankrupt after the termination of bankruptcy proceedings as to non-exempt property? If the first question was properly answered by the referee and the court below, in holding that the lien of the judgment was void, the second is not in the case.

[1] Section 67f of the Bankruptcy Act provides:

"All levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens, obtained through legal proceedings against a person who is insolvent, at any time within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, shall be deemed null and void, in case he is adjudged a bankrupt, and the property affected by the levy, judgment, attachment or other lien shall be deemed wholly discharged and released from the same, and shall pass to the trustee as a part of the estate of the bankrupt." Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 30 Stat. 564 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 9651).

[2, 3] An adjudication of bankruptcy ipso facto renders null and void all liens obtained through legal proceedings against the bankrupt within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy against him. Whether the bankrupt estate is administered by a trustee, or there is a composition by the bankrupt with his creditors, the effect of a discharge in bankruptcy is the same, if the composition is confirmed by the court. Section 14c Bankruptcy Act (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 9596). In view of the plain words of section 67f of that act, the referee was of opinion that the judgment in question was null and void. In so holding he regarded Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company v. Hall, 229 U. S. 511, 33 Sup. Ct. 885, 57 L. Ed. 1306, as controlling, and simply followed it in making his report. While the question in that case was as to the liability of property of a bankrupt, exempt by the laws of his own state, to attachment proceedings instituted in another state within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the Supreme Court of the United States said of the said section 67f:

"Barring exceptional cases, which are specially provided for, the policy of the act is to fix a four months period in which a creditor cannot obtain an advantage over other creditors nor a lien against the debtor's property. 'All liens obtained by legal proceedings' within that period are declared to be null and void. That universal language is not restricted by the later provision that 'the property affected by the * * * lien shall be released from the same and pass to the trustee as a part of the estate of the bankrupt.'"

In thus construing the said section of the Bankruptcy Act, the only construction of which it is susceptible was given to it, and nothing more need or can be said in dismissing this appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

DOYLE v. PHILADELPHIA RAPID TRANSIT CO.(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)1. STREET RAILROADS §90(4)—COLLISION—
EVIDENCE.

Motorman of street car can assume that driver of wagon, in the street ahead of him alongside the track, will not drive in front of the car.

2. STREET RAILROADS §117(11)—COLLISION
—EVIDENCE.

In action against street railroad company, to recover for personal injuries from collision between plaintiff's wagon and a street car, compulsory nonsuit held properly entered on the evidence, which showed that it was impossible to stop the car in time to avoid the collision after plaintiff suddenly drove onto the track from behind another vehicle.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Onney B. Doyle against the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company. From a judgment refusing to take off a compulsory nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The facts appear by the following from the remarks of Ferguson, J., in the common pleas, in entering the compulsory nonsuit:

In this case we have nothing but the fact that there was a collision. We have an automobile standing against the curb on the north side of Arch street, east of Broad street (in the city of Philadelphia); we have the wagon of Mr. Field standing on the north side of Arch street, east of Broad street, 30 feet back of the automobile, and from the horse's head to the tail-board of the wagon was 16 feet, so the distance between the automobile and the wagon was just about twice the length of the horse and wagon. The case absolutely depends upon the testimony of Mr. Field, if there is any case at all, because Doyle saw nothing. All he knows is that there was a crash, and, as I said before, the mere fact that there was a crash, and that he was injured as a result of the crash, does not prove that the transit company was negligent, because, when there is another wagon, which is a free agent in the streets and may go wherever the driver directs it, you can easily see that it might possibly be that a collision would have resulted, no matter how careful the motorman might have been. Mr. Field says that when he came out of the cigar store he saw the car coming west on Arch street and crossing Thirteenth street, and he walked down to the curb and got into his wagon and looked through the window in the back and saw the car was coming. He did not tell us where it was; he did not tell us how close it was. He took the reins and drove ahead, and at some point between where the wagon had been standing and where the automobile was, as to which he leaves us entirely in the dark, he pulled his horse out to straddle the track, in order to get around the automobile, and was struck by the car.

[1] That that resulted from the negligence of the motorman of the car there is no evidence. The car had the right of way, and the motorman had the right to assume that a man driving a wagon in the street ahead of him, alongside of the track, would not drive the wagon in front of the car. If he did pull the wagon in front of the car, it did not make the motorman negligent. He could only be held negligent, under circumstances such as are indicated in this case, if the wagon had been on the track, or approaching the track, a sufficient distance from the car for the motorman to have stopped the car and to have avoided the collision. Those distances are not given to us, and juries are not permitted to guess what must have been the fact. They have to have the evidence, and they have to have an opportunity of determining whether they will believe it or not; but, assuming that they believe it, they have to have evidence from which they could conclude that there was negligence. That evidence does not appear in this case, and for that reason I enter a nonsuit.

The lower court entered a compulsory nonsuit, which it subsequently refused to take off.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

Eugene Raymond and John Martin Doyle, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. Bernard J. O'Connell, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. [2] The record in this case shows no evidence of negligence upon the part of the defendant which was sufficient to justify its submission to the jury. Judgment of compulsory nonsuit was properly entered, and the court below did not err in refusing to take it off.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re NOLAN'S ESTATE.(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)WILLS §316(2)—TESTAMENTARY INCAPACITY —DEVISAVIT VEL NON.

Where evidence shows that testator was a man of intemperate habits, but was perfectly sober at time of the execution of his will, and understood what he was doing, an issue devisavit vel non was properly refused.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Berks County.

In the matter of the estate of Francis Reilly Nolan, deceased. From decree refusing issue devisavit vel non, Charles J. Nolan appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

E. H. Deysher, of Reading, for appellant. H. P. Kelser, of Reading, for appellee. Lee Joseph R. Dickinson and J. Bennett Nolan, both of Reading, for appellees Nolan and Reading Trust Co.

PER CURIAM. The learned judge below, specially presiding, found that the testator—"appeared at the office of his attorney, unaccompanied by any person, and gave directions concerning the disposition he desired to make of his property by will. The will was drawn in accordance with the directions received by the attorney. It was, on a subsequent visit to the office of the attorney, read to the testator, and, upon being asked if that was the disposition of his property intended, he replied that it was. He desired certain persons to witness the will, and the will was taken by the testator and the son of the attorney who drew it to the store of the witnesses, and there signed after the testator had declared it was his will. The attorney who drew the will, his son, and the two witnesses all testify that the testator was not intoxicated; that he was mentally capable at the time of its execution to dispose of his property by last will and testament."

In view of the testimony that, though the testator was a man of intemperate habits, he was at the time of the execution of his will perfectly sober and sane, and understood exactly what he was doing, the issue asked for was properly refused. Tasker's Estate, 205 Pa. 455, 55 Atl. 24.

Appeal dismissed, at appellant's costs.

IN RE PEIFFER'S ESTATE.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS \Leftarrow 206(1)— CLAIMS FOR SERVICES—EVIDENCE.

Claim against decedent's estate presented by daughter-in-law for nursing decedent held properly disallowed, where claimant, her husband, and decedent had lived together on the latter's farm, and the crops and income were regularly divided, and claim was not presented until claimant's husband, who was executor, had been surcharged for mismanagement of the estate.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Berks County.

In the matter of the estate of Edward Peiffer, deceased. From decree dismissing exceptions to adjudication, Mary Peiffer appeals. Affirmed.

From the record it appeared that Mary Peiffer, the wife of the executor, and the daughter-in-law of the decedent, presented a claim of $2,400 for nursing decedent. The claimant, her husband, and decedent resided together on the latter's farm for many years. The crops and income from the farm were regularly divided between the claimant's husband, who was the tenant, and the decedent. There was no evidence to support the claim, except testimony as to a number of loose and vague declarations on the part of the decedent that the claimant should be paid for her services. There was evidence that claimant, immediately after the funeral, when asked what the estate owed her, replied, "I don't want anything; I gave it willingly."

The facts further appear from the following opinion of Schaeffer, P. J., in the orphans' court:

We have carefully examined again the evidence bearing on this claim, and we do not see how, in the light of it, we can sustain the exceptions filed here. The testimony shows that the claimant and her husband occupied this farm with the decedent for many years, and that they lived together on it as one family, up to the time of his death. In view of this family relation, the testimony—loose expressions of gratitude and appreciation, and of a desire that she should be paid, and the like (Wise v. Martin, 232 Pa. 159, 81 Atl. 184)—is of a character which is always regarded as insufficient to support a claim of this nature. No express contract is even alleged, and no demand is shown to have been made by the claimant in the lifetime of the decedent. Services for nursing are presumed to be periodically paid (Gummiskey's Estate, 224 Pa. 509, 73 Atl. 916, 132 Am. St. Rep. 787), and it is almost incredible that the decedent should receive his share of income of the farm from the claimant's husband, who had the sole control of the same, for this period of 2½ years, during which she rendered these services, and not some settlement be made for the nursing, if payment was contemplated by the parties. The facts and circumstances surrounding this whole case justify the conclusion that these services were either voluntarily performed by the claimant by reason of the relation existing between her and her father-in-law, the decedent, or were paid for at stated periods when they were due, and that this claim would not have been made, if claimant's husband, the accountant, to whom the farm was devised, had not been charged with the mismanagement of the estate, and finally surcharged with the sum of $1,442.19.

Despite the earnest and exhaustive argument of counsel for the exceptions, we are constrained to dismiss them, and confirm the distribution absolutely.

The lower court dismissed the exceptions to the adjudication. Mary Peiffer appealed. Error assigned was in dismissing exceptions to the adjudication.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

William Kerper Stevens, of Reading, for appellant. W. S. Rothermel and W. E. Sharman, both of Reading, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given by the learned court below for disallowing appellant's claim for services, her appeal from its disallowance is dismissed, at her costs.

STROUT v. STROUT et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Sept. 12, 1918.)

1. PERPETUITIES ¶1—RULE AGAINST—INTENTION.

Rule against perpetuities is not, like rule of construction, test to determine intention, but its object is to defeat intention, so that every provision in a will is to be construed as if rule did not exist, and rule then applied.

2. PERPETUITIES ¶1—CONSTRUCTION OF WILL—INTENTION.

In construing residuary clause of will to determine whether it violates rule against perpetuities, intention of testatrix is to be gathered from entire will, and not from residuary clause alone.

3. PERPETUITIES ¶1—RULE AGAINST—TERMINATION OF ESTATES.

Rule against perpetuities concerns itself only with vesting, commencement of estates, not with their determination.

4. PERPETUITIES ¶4(12)—ABSOLUTE LEGACY—POSTPONEMENT OF PAYMENT.

When gift of legacy is absolute, time of payment alone being postponed, since time is not of substance of gift, vesting of legacy is not postponed to render it violative of rule against perpetuities.

5. PERPETUITIES ¶4(15)—VESTING OF LEGACY—DISCRETION OF TRUSTEE.

Discretionary power in trustee as to time of payment of legacy does not prevent its vesting, thus rendering it violative of rule against perpetuities.

6. WILLS ¶529—REQUEST TO CLASS—PRESUMPTION.

Law presumes that testator, when he bequeaths fund generally to class, intends that members shall share equally, that being legal meaning of such bequest.

7. WILLS ¶629—CONSTRUCTION—FUTURE OR CONTINGENT INTEREST.

Legacy or devise should be construed as giving vested rather than contingent interest.

8. PERPETUITIES ¶4(15)—RULE AGAINST—RESIDUARY CLAUSE OF WILL—"WISH."

Residuary clause reading that testatrix gave to M. S. to hold in trust all residue of her personality, "and I wish it to be distributed to the children of L. B. S. and herself (M. S.) or their descendants at such times as she sees fit for their best benefit," did not violate rule against perpetuities, "I wish" being mandatory, time of payment alone being postponed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Wish.]

9. WILLS ¶498—CONSTRUCTION—"DESCENDANTS."

"Or their descendants," used in a will, includes only lineal heirs.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Descendant.]

10. WILLS ¶538—CONSTRUCTION—REQUEST TO DESCENDANTS—TIME OF DEATH.

Where, by residuary clause, testatrix gave to M. S. to hold in trust all residue of personality directing distribution to children of L. B. S. and M. S. "or their descendants," independently of Rev. St. c. 79, § 10, testatrix provided lineal descendants of child dying in her lifetime should take parent's share.

11. TRUSTS ¶268—EXPENSES OF LITIGATION—ADVERSARY SUIT.

Where father of beneficiaries under will sued to take trust estate from possession of his wife, the trustee, to deprive them of all benefit of fund and to divert it to his benefit, having been defeated, he was not entitled to have trust estate charged with expenses of litigation.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Cumberland County, in Equity.

Suit by Leon B. Strout against Mildred Strout and others. Case reported. Bill dismissed.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPREAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Woodman & Whitehouse, of Portland, for complainant. Clarence E. Sawyer, W. R. & E. S. Anthoine, and Paul E. Donahue, all of Portland, for defendants.

MORRILL, J. Viola Phipps, late of Brunswick, died on the 18th day of February, 1913, leaving a will, which has been duly proved and allowed. The residuary clause of that will is as follows:

"I give and bequeath to Mildred Strout, to hold in trust, all the rest and residue of my personal property, and I wish it to be distributed to the children of Leon B. Strout and herself or their descendants at such times as she sees fit for their best benefit."

On October 28, 1914, prior to the commencement of the present action, the executor of this will filed a bill asking for instructions and for the construction of certain portions of said will. To that bill the present plaintiff was a party. A justice of this court entered a decree that one of the preceding clauses of said will was invalid as contrary to the rule against perpetuities, and directed the executor, after paying certain legacies, to pay and deliver the remainder of the property mentioned in the clause so held to be invalid to the residuary legatee. Acting under this decree, Mr. Sawyer, the executor, paid and delivered to Mildred Strout, who had qualified as trustee, cash and securities to the amount of $14,718. The executor has about $700 in his hands for further distribution.

The plaintiff, who is the father of the three beneficiaries named in the residuary clause, and the next of kin and sole heir of the testatrix, now claims that the residuary clause is void and contrary to the rule against perpetuities, and that Mildred Strout, the mother of his children, shall account to him for the fund held by her. In other words, he now endeavors to deprive his children of the benefit of a fund which the testatrix intrusted to their mother, and not to him, "for their best benefit."

Without expressing any opinion as to whether this contention is now open to the plaintiff after the decree in the former suit, to which he was a party, we proceed to examine his claim, which his counsel states as follows:

"The sole question for construction and determination by the court is whether said residuary clause contained in the fourteenth paragraph of the will is void as violating the rule against perpetuities."

[1, 2] It should be borne in mind that the rule against perpetuities is not, like a rule of construction, a test more or less artificial to determine intention. Its object is to defeat intention. Therefore every provision in a will is to be construed as if the rule did not exist, and then to the provision so construed the rule is to be applied. Gray on Perpetuities, p. 378. In so construing the provision in question the intention of the testatrix is to be gathered from the entire will and not from the residuary clause standing alone.

[3] The rule concerns itself only with the vesting, the commencement of estates, and not at all with the termination. It makes no difference where such a vested estate or interest limited terminates. Pulitzer v. Livingston, 89 Me. 359, 365, 372, 36 Atl. 635.

[4, 5] Moreover, when the gift of a legacy is absolute, and the time of payment only is postponed, the time, not being of the substance of the gift, is held to postpone the payment, but not the vesting, of the legacy. Kimball v. Crocker, 53 Me. 268, 271. And the discretionary power in the trustee as to time of payment does not prevent the vesting of the legacy. Hone's Ex'rs v. Van Shaick, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 564; Kimball v. Crocker, supra.

The will in this case is, in some respects, artificially drawn. The scrivener evidently did not have in mind the rule against perpetuities, nor the distinction between vested and contingent interests. He appears not to have realized, or to have disregarded, the care which should be observed in the creation of trust estates; nor does he appear to have considered the various changes which might arise after the death of the testatrix.

Yet, carefully considering the entire will, we think that it is not difficult to ascertain the intention of the testatrix. At her death three children of Leon B. Strout and Mildred Strout were living, Marjorie, Marian, and Roger. In the preceding paragraphs of the will, wherever provision is made for them, the testatrix makes it clear that there is to be no discrimination between them; they are to "share and share alike," or to "share equally."

[6] Referring to the residuary clause, we see no reason to doubt that the children were to share equally in the legacy thereby bequeathed. The law presumes that a testator, when he bequeaths a fund generally to a class, intends that the members of the class shall share equally in the fund bequeathed, and such is the legal meaning of such a bequest. Tucker v. Bishop, 16 N. Y. 402, 406. Mildred Strout has no power over the legacy except to fix a proper and discreet time for payment, "as she sees fit, for their best benefit." The will does not say that the legacy is to be distributed "at such times and in such sums and proportions as she sees fit," but only "at such times." The time of payment only was postponed. The shares of the children were fixed beyond the power of the trustee to alter. Counsel for the plaintiff, in attempting to distinguish this case from the case of Haley v. Palmer, 107 Me. 311, 78 Atl. 368, and the prior case of Holcomb v. Palmer, 106 Me. 17, 75 Atl. 324, says: "But the trustee here is given power to distribute to the children, if she sees fit, and not to the descendants, or, if she prefers, all to the descendants and none to the children, or part to some of the children and none to the others, or a part to some of the descendants and none to the rest;" and upon this construction he bases his argument that "it is inconceivable under these circumstances how any interest in a residuum can be said to have vested in any definite beneficiary." We cannot accede to this construction, and our construction of the residuary clause distinguishes this case from Whelan, Trustee, v. Reilly, 5 W. Va. 356, cited in support of counsel's position.

[7, 8] Applying, then, the rules and principles hereinbefore referred to, and having in mind the familiar principle that a legacy or devise should be considered as giving a vested rather than a contingent interest (Kimball v. Crocker, 53 Me. 268, 267), we think that the residuary clause of the will of Viola Phipps does not violate the rule against perpetuities. The words "I wish" are equivalent to a command; they are mandatory. Clifford v. Stewart, 95 Me. 38, 46, 40 Atl. 52. The trustee took the legal estate; the three children, Marjorie, Marian, and Roger, took the beneficial or equitable estate; no other interests were bequeathed; all interests, legal and equitable, vested at the death of the testatrix. The bequest is present and absolute; the time of payment only is postponed.

[9, 10] In Manice v. Manice, 43 N. Y. 303, on page 369, it is said: "Where the terms of a bequest import a gift, and also a direction to pay at a subsequent time, the legacy vests, and will not lapse by the death of the legatee before the time for payment has expired, but will pass to his personal representatives." The words "or their descendants," when used in a will, are construed to include only lineal heirs in the direct descending line. Baker v. Baker, 8 Gray (Mass.) 101, 119. So under the statute (R. S. c. 79, § 10). Morse v. Hayden, 82 Me. 227, 19 Atl. 443. In harmony with the idea of an equal division among the children, which we adopt, we think that the testatrix intended by the use of these words to provide, independently of the statute (R. S. c. 79, § 10), that if a child died in her lifetime leaving lineal descendants, such descendants should take the share of the deceased parent. Perhaps she was not advised of the existence of the statute. The construction that by the use of these words the testatrix intended that the share of one of the children dying after her death, and before distribution, would pass to such deceased child's lineal descendants, cannot be adopted.

It is inconsistent with the view that the children of Leon B. Strout and Mildred Strout, living at the death of the testatrix, take absolutely. Since the will fixes no other period to which the fact of the death of any child can be referred, the death of such child must occur in the lifetime of the testatrix. Traver et al. v. Schell et al., 20 N. Y. 89; Tucker v. Bishop, 16 N. Y. 402, 404.

A provision very similar to the provision in the case before us was sustained in Morton v. Southgate, 28 Me. 41. The case of Rogers v. Rogers, 11 R. I. 38, 72, et seq., is also very instructive. The bill must be dismissed.

[11] In the agreed statement which is made part of the case, the parties request and agree "that the reasonable expenses, costs, and counsel fees of the parties, both plaintiff and defendant in the cause, be allowed and ordered by the court to be paid out of the fund now in the custody of the clerk of this court; and for that purpose the parties by their attorneys shall file their bills for such expenses, costs, and counsel fees with the clerk of this court, to be passed upon by the single justice reporting the cause, after mandate by the law court, and incorporated in the final decree rendered in said cause, pursuant to mandate." The fund in the custody of the clerk referred to in above agreement consists of the securities which have been turned over to the trustee, Mildred Strout, by the executor of the will, pursuant to a decree entered upon the earlier bill in equity filed by the executor and mentioned in the early part of this opinion; the securities were so deposited to abide the final decree and order in this cause.

We think that the plaintiff is not entitled to have his expenses, costs, and counsel fees paid him from the trust fund. This is not the ordinary case of a bill in equity for the construction of a will; such a bill had already been filed by the executor and proceeded to final decree; nor is it a bill for the protection and preservation of the trust fund in the interest of all the beneficiaries. This litigation instituted by the plaintiff is of a highly adversary character; it has for its object to wrest the trust estate from the possession of the trustee, to deprive the children of the plaintiff of all benefit of the fund, and to divest the fund to the personal benefit of the plaintiff. In such a case the defeated party must bear the expense which he has incurred in his own interest alone. The trust estate is chargeable only with that expense which is incurred in the interest of all the cestuis que trustent. Somerset Railway v. Pierce, 98 Me. 528, 57 Atl. 888.

The judgment must be:

Bill dismissed. The securities of the trust, deposited with the clerk of courts, are to be restored to the trustee. The reasonable expenses and counsel fees of the trustee, Mildred Strout, incurred in the protection of the trust may be allowed and paid from the fund. The executor may be allowed his reasonable expenses and for his services in this cause, the same to be retained from the funds in his hands.

CURRAN v. HOLT.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 2, 1913.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ¶18(8)—MALPRACTICE—NEGLIGENCE.

That an operation for cataract and for removal of plaintiff's right eye was unsuccessful, and that vision of left eye was lost, was not alone sufficient to establish the operator's negligence, as a surgeon cannot insure recovery, in view of the fact that, with due care, loss of sight results in a percentage of cases in operations for cataract depending largely on patient's condition.

2. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ¶14(1)—SKILL AND CARE REQUIRED.

A physician and surgeon must exercise the ordinary skill of members of his profession in like situation, and must use reasonable care and diligence in his treatment of case, and his best judgment in the application of that skill to the case.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Cumberland County, at Law.

Action by William S. Curran against E. Eugene Holt, Jr. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff excepts. Exceptions overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Dennis A. Meaher, of Portland, for plaintiff. Hinckley & Hinckley, of Portland, and Edward I. Taylor, of Boston, Mass., for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. Action against a surgeon for alleged malpractice. Plaintiff was treated by defendant from November, 1911, until January, 1913. On January 28, 1913, the defendant performed an operation for cataract on plaintiff's right eye. The operation was not successful, and sight was not restored. As the left eye subsequently became involved from what was apparently sympathetic inflammation, the right eye was removed by the defendant on April 14, 1913. This removal, however, did not allay the trouble with the left eye, and, after further treatment for several months, vision in that eye was also lost.

The plaintiff in his writ alleges many negligent acts on the part of the defendant, which he says might have produced the blindness. These he summarizes in his brief as follows:

"Such as general negligence; that the incision on the eyeball of the right eye was within what is called the danger zone; that the defendant did not make a proper diagnosis of the eyes, and did not understand the real condition of the eyes before he operated; that he did not use proper methods in preparing the eye for the operations, and in treating the eyes before and after the operations, of January 23 and April 14, 1913."

[1] The evidence introduced by the plaintiff, including that of an eye specialist, failed utterly to substantiate a single one of the many claims set forth in the writ. True, the operation proved unsuccessful, and upon that fact alone the plaintiff seems to rest his case. But that is not sufficient to establish negligence on the part of the operator. The surgeon cannot insure recovery, and the testimony shows that, with all due care, loss of sight results in 5 or 6 per cent. of the cases in operations for cataract, depending in large measure upon the condition of the patient. It was shown here that the plaintiff's trouble was of long standing. His vision had been more or less affected for 40 years.

[2] It is not claimed that the defendant did not possess the ordinary skill of members of his profession in like situation. The law required him to exercise that ordinary skill, and to use reasonable care and diligence in his treatment of the case, and his best judgment in the application of that skill to the case in hand. Coombs v. King, 107 Me. 376, 78 Atl. 408, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1121; Merrill v. Odiorne, 113 Me. 424, 94 Atl. 753; McCann v. Twitchell, 116 Me. 490, 102 Atl. 740.

The evidence does not show that the defendant failed to measure up to the legal requirement in a single particular, either in the care and treatment prior to the operations, in performing the operations, or in the care and treatment subsequent thereto. The defendant was not called upon to offer any testimony. A jury would not have been justified in drawing from the evidence an inference of legal liability on the part of the defendant, and therefore the nonsuit was properly ordered by the presiding Justice.

Exceptions overruled.

QUINTER v. QUINTER.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1913.)

1. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS §45(4) — CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE.

Where father-in-law executed deed to his daughter-in-law for expressed consideration, and in action to recover the consideration expressed grantee alleged that transfer was a gift, the writings must prevail, unless the jury was clearly satisfied beyond any reasonable doubt that defendant's statement of the transaction was true.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §171(1)—CHANGE OF THEORY ON APPEAL.

Where, in an action for price of land sold, the affidavit of defense raised the issue that the transfer was in fact a gift, and not a sale, and the case was tried on that issue, the claim cannot be made on appeal that a different consideration than that mentioned could be shown by a mere preponderance of evidence.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §730(1) — ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—NECESSITY OF EXCEPTIONS.

Assignments of error complaining of parts of charge are defective, where they do not show exceptions taken to the charge.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Berks County.

Action by Charles R. Quinter, Sr., against Cora Belle Quinter. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Walter S. Young and William J. Rourke, both of Reading, for appellant. Henry D. Green and Lee Friday, both of Reading, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. Plaintiff executed to his daughter-in-law, the defendant, a deed for a house and lot for the expressed consideration of $2,000, and about a week later also executed a bill of sale for the household furniture and other personal property on the premises for a consideration of $75. Against the realty was a mortgage with an unpaid balance of $600, which defendant paid, but made no further payment on account of either realty or personalty. Plaintiff sued in assumpsit, and recovered a verdict for the entire balance, and from the judgment entered thereon defendant appealed.

[1] The sole defense set forth in the affidavit of defense is that the transfer of both real and personal property was intended as a gift in consideration of a promise by defendant to pay the indebtedness secured by the mortgage, and, as that payment had been made, no further amount is due plaintiff. The evidence adduced at the trial was conflicting, and the trial judge submitted the case to the jury, and charged the writing must prevail unless the jury were "clearly satisfied . . . by the evidence beyond any reasonable doubt, as strongly as oral testimony can satisfy the mind," that defendant's statement of the transaction was true. The only error of which defendant complains is that the trial judge, by the language quoted, placed upon her the burden of furnishing a degree of proof necessary to reform a written instrument, as to which it seems to be conceded the charge was not erroneous. Rowand v. Finney, 96 Pa. 192; Ott v. Oyer's Executrix, 106 Pa. 6, 17. It is, however, contended, as the issue is merely one of showing a different consideration from that expressed in the deed, the case is not within the rule stated, and a different consideration may be shown by the ordinary measure of proof, namely, a preponderance of testimony. Henry v. Zurfiehl, 208 Pa. 440, 53 Atl. 243; McGary v. McDermott, 207 Pa. 620, 57 Atl. 40.

The difficulty in defendant's contention is that the issue made up by the affidavit of defense was, not that the consideration was less than expressed in the deed, but that the transfer was a gift, and not a sale. The case was tried on this theory, and the trial judge in his charge said, in referring to defendant's testimony:

"She says that there was no sale, that there was never intended to be a sale; that there was a gift, on condition of her payment of the $600 mortgage."

[2] Defendant's contention was in effect that the transaction fundamentally differed from that appearing from the face of the papers executed by plaintiff, and was therefore inconsistent with their terms. The case was tried on this theory, and no exception taken to the charge at the time of the trial; nor was the trial judge asked to give different instructions, or to submit the case to the jury on the theory of merely an attempt to change the amount of the consideration in the writing. That the question now presented was not raised by defendant on the trial further appears from the opinion of the court below discharging the rule for a new trial, where it was said:

"It is perfectly clear from the record of this case that, it was tried by both parties and by the court upon the theory that the effort was by parol evidence to convert the written contract of sale into a gift, and it is to be noted that there is no exception to the charge so assuming, and laying down the chancery rule. It is well settled that it is too late after trial to shift to another theory. Lane v. Smith, 108 Pa. 415; Bank of Pottsville v. Schuylkill County, 190 Pa. 188 [42 Atl. 539]; Taylor v. Sattler, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 229; Gallagher v. Burke, 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 244, 250."

[3] The assignments of error are defective, in that they fail to show exceptions taken to the charge. We have repeatedly held such assignments must be self-sustaining, and show exceptions were taken to the parts assigned for error. Browarsky's Estate, 252 Pa. 86, 97 Atl. 91.

The judgment is affirmed.

BENEDICT v. BENEDICT et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 3, 1913.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES §111 — TRUST FOR GRANTORS.

Where person settled his property in irrevocable trust for his own use for life, reserving power to devise by will, and that his wife and children should take if he did not exercise such power, property is subject to attachment by creditor of settlor.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Franklin County.

Action by Mary A. Benedict against J. L. Benedict, with the Farmers' & Merchants' Trust Company as garnishee. Judgment against garnishee, and it appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

T. Z. Minehart, Walter K. Sharpe, William S. Hoerner, and Irvin C. Elder, all of Chambersburg, for appellant. O. C. Bowers, of Chambersburg, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. J. L. Benedict, in consideration of "natural love and affection toward his wife and children," and the sum of $1, executed and delivered to the trust company here named as garnishee a sealed written instrument, whereby he placed $11,000 in the latter's custody, for and upon the following uses and trusts:

"To invest and keep the same invested, * * * and pay the [net] income * * * to the said J. L. Benedict during the term of his natural life, and, at his death, to pay the principal of said trust fund * * * to such person or persons or objects as the party of the first part [the settlor] may appoint by any last will and testament which he may leave at the time of his death. In case he shall leave no such will, then one-third thereof to his widow, and the remaining two-thirds, or, in case he shall leave no widow, the whole, in equal shares, to such children of the party of the first part as may be living at the time of his death. In case any child or children shall die during the lifetime of the said J. L. Benedict, leaving children to survive who shall be living at the death of the said J. L. Benedict, such children of such deceased child or children shall take their parent's share. In case the said J. L. Benedict shall leave no children or issue of such children living to survive him, then the share or part of said trust fund that would go as aforesaid to such children shall be paid to the next of kin."

The deed in question stipulates that the trust shall be irrevocable, and that no part of the fund, either principal or income, shall be transferred or assigned by the settlor; further, that it shall not be liable for his future debts, contracts, or engagements, nor subject to attachment or other legal process at the suit of his creditors. On the date of the deed, March 24, 1915, Mr. Benedict had a wife and three children. June 15, 1917, he executed and delivered to plaintiff a judgment note for $2,500; the debt for which this was given having been contracted after March 24, 1915. August 14, 1917, judgment was entered on the note, and on the same day execution issued against the trust company, as garnishee, attaching any property in its hands belonging to the settlor. In due course, the court below held that the so-called "trust fund" was liable for plaintiff's claim, and defendants have appealed.

Under our decisions, the court below was clearly right in its disposition of this case. Had Mr. Benedict not retained absolute power to dispose by will of the corpus of the fund here in question, the present case would fall within the principle of Egbert v. De Solms, 218 Pa. 207, 67 Atl. 212, where the trust was held unassailable by an attaching creditor; but in the deed before us the settlor first expressly reserves unrestricted power to control by will the disposition of the entire fund after his death, his widow and children or next of kin taking only in the event of his failure to exercise this absolute right. Egbert v. De Solms is sufficiently distinguished in Rienzi v. Goodin, 249 Pa. 546, 551, 95 Atl. 259, where it is correctly stated that the decision in the former case in no way modified "the established law"; and this, as laid down in Nolan v. Nolan, 218 Pa. 135, 67 Atl. 52, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 369, cited by the court below, clearly sustains the judgment at bar.

It may be noted that Egbert v. De Solms, supra, is reported in the same volume as Nolan v. Nolan, and that the facts in the latter are strikingly like those in the case before us. There, as here, the deed, by its terms, is irrevocable, and, at the time of the execution thereof, the indebtedness in controversy had not arisen, nor was it in contemplation; finally, in both instances, at the creation of the trust, the settlor had several children living. In the present case, after reserving an absolute and unrestricted power of appointment in himself, the settlor provides that, upon default of its exercise, the fund in question shall go to his widow and children, or the latter's issue, in certain proportions; these being in accordance with the shares they would take under the intestate laws, or, if no widow, children, or issue, then to his next of kin. In Nolan v. Nolan, after reserving a like power of appointment, the settlor provided that, upon default in its exercise, the fund should go to her next of kin. While the phraseology is different, it will be observed that, so far as the question here involved is concerned, both of these provisions are, in effect, the same. In the Nolan Case (218 Pa. at pages 139, 140, 67 Atl. 53, 54 [12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 369]) we thus state the law:

"In order to make it [the trust] valid as to subsequent creditors, it must appear that the settlor has divested himself of all rights of ownership in, and control over the property thus conveyed, reserving only to himself the right to receive the income during life; and * * * it is against public policy * * * that a settlor should be permitted to play fast and loose with his property, in such a manner as to have the use of the income during life and the right to dispose of the principal by will at any subsequent time he chooses to exercise the power. * * * A person sui juris cannot, as against creditors, either prior or subsequent, settle his property in trust for his own use for life, and over to his appointees by will, and, in default of such appointment, to the use of his lawful heirs in fee. Mackason's Appeal, 42 Pa. 330 [82 Am. Dec. 517]."

The fact that, by the deed in Nolan v. Nolan, supra, the trustee was authorized to reconvey the property to the settlor, if the former deemed it expedient so to do, is not of controlling significance; for no such provision appears in Rienzi v. Goodin, supra, where the terms of the deed are almost precisely like those in the instrument at bar, and where Nolan v. Nolan was treated as a binding authority. We conclude that there are no substantial points of distinction between the present case and the two just cited.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

DAVIS v. EDMONDSON.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ¶113(1) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—PLEADING.

A statement of claim is insufficient, where it fails to make out a case clear of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.

2. PLEADING ¶345(1)—MOTION FOR JUDGMENT—STATEMENT OF CLAIM — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In action against owner of dance hall for injuries from falling off a platform at the rear door of the hall, judgment for defendant held properly entered, where statement of claim affirmatively showed contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Montour County.

Action by William Elwood Davis against George D. Edmondson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Trespass for personal injuries. The following is the opinion of Evans, P. J., in the common pleas:

The affidavit of defense in this case is practically a demurrer to the plaintiff's statement—that the statement does not set forth a cause of action against the defendant. Therefore every material allegation of fact stated therein must be regarded as true for the purpose of determining the question now before the court.

The Practice Act of May 14, 1915 (P. L. 483), abolishes a demurrer as a possible pleading in actions of assumpsit and trespass, except for libel and slander, brought in the common pleas. Section 4 of the act reads as follows: "Demurrers are abolished. Questions of law heretofore raised by demurrer shall be raised in the affidavit of defense, as provided in section 20."

Section 20 of the act reads as follows: "The defendant in the affidavit of defense may raise any question of law, without answering the averments of fact in the statement of claim; and any question of law, so raised, may be set down for hearing, and disposed of by the court. If in the opinion of the court the decision of such question of law disposes of the whole or any part of the claim, the court may enter judgment for the defendant, or make such other order as may be just."

The plaintiff in this case claims to recover damages for personal injuries because of the failure of the defendant to erect a guard rail around a platform 8 by 6 feet erected in a private alley in the rear of the opera house building in the borough of Danville in this county. The facts upon which the plaintiff bases his right to recover as disclosed by the statement and amended statement are as follows:

(1) On and prior to February 17, 1917 (date of accident), the defendant was the owner of a four-story brick building at the northeast corner of Mill and Mahoning streets in the borough of Danville.

(2) The defendant rented a room on the ground floor in said building to Mrs. Jacobs for the purpose of conducting dancing classes and the holding of dances therein.

(3) During the time the room was so rented and occupied, and at the time of the accident, there existed a narrow private alley or passageway in the rear of the building.

(4) A door opened from the rear of the room directly on a wooden platform about 3 by 6 feet extending across the private alley at a level of from 5 to 7 feet above the ground. The platform was directly outside of the door and doorway in the rear of the room leased to Mrs. Jacobs, and was unguarded by railing or barrier of any kind.

(5) During the time dances were going on in the room, it was customary for the tenant to open said rear door, and for dancers and musicians and others attending to pass through the same, go upon, stand on, and temporarily occupy the said wooden platform.

(6) On the night of February 17, 1917, the plaintiff was employed as one of the musicians who played for the dance held that night in the room leased to Mrs. Jacobs. During an intermission between the dances he passed through said door and doorway, out on the said small wooden platform, and stepped off and was injured.

(7) The plaintiff was not familiar with the said small wooden platform, did not know of its existence, and had never been in the dance room before that night.

(8) Some one other than the plaintiff opened the door on the night of the accident, and during an intermission the plaintiff walked out through the open door on the little wooden platform. He could not see the ends thereof because of the darkness of the night, and he walked off of the platform and was injured.

Upon this statement of facts the defendant contends in the affidavit of defense that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover: (1) Because the statement does not show any liability on the part of the defendant, entitling the plaintiff to recover the damages claimed. (2) Because the statement does not aver any negligence upon the part of the defendant, making him liable for the damages claimed. (3) Because the statement shows no cause of action against the defendant.

Upon the argument on the part of the plaintiff it was contended that the defendant rented his room for a dance hall, knowing that it would be used for such purpose; that it had a doorway in the rear opening upon the narrow, unguarded and unlighted platform; that if attendants upon dances passed through the doorway and attempted to stand on the platform in the nighttime they were in danger of stepping off of the same by reason of its being unguarded and unlighted; that he knew that the opening of such a door, and the passing out on this platform by those attending the dance, was the usual, ordinary, and probable act to be expected and anticipated; that dancers or musicians engaged in violent exercise in a heated room would open this rear door, and during intermissions step out on the platform to temporarily occupy the same for air and relaxation, and this was such a natural, reasonable, and probable use of the premises as should have been foreseen and anticipated, and the danger incident thereto guarded against, and the defendant, having failed to do so, was guilty of negligence.

On the other hand, on the part of the defendant it was contended that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover for the following reasons: (1) Because no negligence is alleged or shown; that the statement nowhere shows any negligence on the part of the defendant which would entitle the plaintiff to recover; that the room was rented as shown by the third paragraph of the statement to Mrs. Jacobs; that the defendant landlord owed no duty outside of the room to third parties, the patrons of his tenant; that the private alley or passageway in the rear of the building, paved with cobblestones, was no part of the room leased; and that the lease gave the tenant no right to the said alley or passageway; and (2) because the plaintiff's statement clearly shows and convicts him of contributory negligence.

[1] As the court views this case, the plaintiff's contributory negligence as disclosed by his statement is decisive. In the trial of a negligence case, where damages are claimed for personal injuries, the plaintiff is not required to disprove contributory negligence, but only to make out a case clear of contributory negligence. If he fails to make out a case clear of contributory negligence, a verdict should be directed for the defendant. The universal rule is that, if negligence on the part of the person injured contributed to the injury, he is not entitled to recover therefor; and the rule applies, although the contributory negligence is of a negative character, such as a lack of vigilance. 29 Cyc. 607.

[2] In the opinion of the court the thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth paragraphs of the plaintiff's statement clearly convict him of contributory negligence. He was employed as one of the musicians to play for the dance on the night of the accident; he had never previously attended any of the dances held in the room leased to Mrs. Jacobs; he did not know of the existence of the little 3 by 6 foot wooden platform erected across the private alley or passageway in the rear of the building. Some one other than the plaintiff opened the door earlier in the evening on the night of the accident, and the plaintiff, a total stranger to the place and surroundings, walked out through the doorway in the darkness of the night on the little wooden platform, and because he could not see the ends of the platform he stepped off and was injured.

In Sweeney, Appellant, v. Barrett, 151 Pa. 600, 25 Atl. 148, the syllabus of the case reads: "In an action for damages for personal injuries, a nonsuit is properly entered, where it appears that plaintiff, on a dark night, stepped from the rear door of the saloon leased to the defendant with the intention of going onto a lot with which he was unfamiliar, and, turning as he stepped out, fell down an outside open stairway leading to a cellar; there being no evidence that the stairway was built in an improper or unskillful manner."

In Johnson v. Wilcox, 185 Pa. 217, 19 Atl. 939, it was held that where a plaintiff, while on his way to a dance room in the third story of a building having a safe entrance by a well-lighted hall and stairway, stepped aside through a door on the second floor out in the dark, upon a platform which he thought was protected by a railing, but fell and was injured, was guilty of such contributory negligence that in an action against the owner of the building it was proper to direct a verdict for the defendant.

The injury of which the plaintiff complains in this case was so clearly the result of his own carelessness or negligence that he is not entitled to recover. He did not even know of the existence of the platform as he walked out through the open door in the darkness of the night and stepped therefrom.

Defendant filed an affidavit of defense in the nature of a demurrer. The lower court entered judgment for the defendant.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Fred Ikeler and H. R. Stees, both of Bloomsburg, for appellant. Russell Duane, of Philadelphia, and H. M. Hinckley, of Danville, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The correct conclusion of the learned court below was that it clearly appears from plaintiff's statement of his cause of action that the injuries he sustained were due to his carelessness or negligence, and the judgment, which was properly entered under Act May 14, 1915 (P. L. 483), is affirmed.

DE NARDO v. STEPHENS-JACKSON CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⇨184(11)—CAUSE OF INJURY—EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence points to a certain cause for an accident rendering defendant liable, the plaintiff will not be denied redress because there may be some other possible cause.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨118(9)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—SAFE TOOLS.

The operation of a quarry is a hazardous business, and it is the operator's duty to furnish such tools as will, so far as is reasonably practicable, protect his employes from danger in blasting.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨137(1)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—USE OF EXPLOSIVES.

In the employment of powder or other explosives in a quarry, it is the duty of the master to exercise care commensurate with the danger to be reasonably anticipated, and, if he employs a defective system as a result of which the workmen are not adequately protected, he is liable for injuries to one of them from an explosion.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨97(2)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DANGEROUS APPLIANCES.

A master who places in the hands of an employe a dangerous article knowing that it is likely to produce injury is liable for natural consequences.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨219(1)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—INJURY TO EMPLOYE.

The rule as to assumption of risk does not apply where the danger is hidden or unknown to the employe.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨236(19)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—EXPLOSIVES—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where a quarry owner permitted an illiterate foreign laborer, who was not familiar with quarrying methods, to use an iron bar to tamp the holes containing explosives, and failed to supply him with a wooden rod or other safe implement, the question of negligence was for the jury.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨289(10)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether an illiterate foreign laborer not familiar with quarrying methods was guilty of contributory negligence in using an iron rod in tamping a hole loaded with explosives held, on the evidence, for the jury.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨238(11)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether an illiterate foreign laborer not familiar with quarrying methods assumed the risk of injury from an explosion while he was tamping a loaded hole with an iron bar, the master not having supplied a wooden rod or other safe implement, held a question for the jury.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨106(1)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DEFECTIVE TOOLS—BY WHOM SUPPLIED.

Where an illiterate foreign laborer, without knowledge of methods of quarrying, was injured by an explosion while tamping a loaded hole with an iron bar, that being the only implement furnished to him, the master was liable, though he did not supply the particular bar, it having been the practice in the quarry to use iron bars for that purpose.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Northampton County.

Action by James De Nardo against Stephens-Jackson Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHISKEB, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

W. H. Kirkpatrick, of Easton, for appellant. Robert A. Stots, of Easton, for appellee.

WALLING, J. Plaintiff, an Italian laborer, was employed by defendant in its business of mining slate rock, and was injured January 7, 1915, by the premature explosion of a blast. The business required a large amount of blasting, and plaintiff had been engaged seven years at that work for defendant. He was called a "hole man," and his work was to load the holes after they had been drilled. He also performed other duties in this mine, where he began work when a boy. On the day in question a hole three-fourths of an inch in diameter had been drilled to a depth of three and one-half feet, and plaintiff proceeded to load it by putting in blasting powder until the hole was filled to within about six inches of the surface, then he inserted the fuse and put in some hemp rope. After this he took an iron tamping bar, about eight inches long, placed it in the hole, and struck it a light blow with a metal hammer; then removed the bar, put in some soil or scrap, replaced the bar, and struck it another light blow with the hammer, when the blast exploded, causing the injury complained of. Prior to the accident the only tool used in this mine for tamping was an iron bar similar to that above described. These bars were picked up by the workmen around the mine, and on one occasion a fellow employe of plaintiff had made three of them, including the one here in question, by cutting up an iron rod found in the mine. Defendant knowingly permitted the tamping to be done with the iron bars and failed to supply any wooden rods or other implements for that purpose. The evidence tended to show that wooden rods were in common use for that purpose in other mines, and were safer, because they absorbed the shock and would not create sparks or strike fire by contact with the rock. An expert witness expressed the opinion that the use of the iron bar caused the explosion, which, in his opinion, was the result of a spark or possibly of concussion. It appears from the testimony that powder will sometimes adhere to the rough edges of the drilled hole, by which a spark at the top may be carried down and cause an explosion, or it may be caused by concussion as a result of a blow on the iron bar. Other possible causes are mentioned. The jury, to whom the question was referred, found that the accident resulted from the use of the iron bar, and charged the defendant with negligence. A jury cannot be permitted to guess at the cause of an accident, but here the finding is supported by some competent testimony.

[1] Where the evidence points to a certain cause for an accident, which would fasten liability upon the defendant, the plaintiff will not be denied redress, because there may be some other possible cause for the accident. In such case the question is for the jury.

[2-4] The evidence justified a finding that iron bars were unsafe tools to use for tamping loads in blasting, and that defendant was negligent in making general use of them for that purpose. Defendant was engaged in a hazardous business, and it was its duty to furnish such tools as would, so far as reasonably practicable, protect its employes from danger. "In the employment of inherently dangerous agencies, such as powder or other explosives, it is the duty of the master to exercise a degree of care for the safety of the servant commensurate with the danger reasonably to be anticipated. This rule is especially applicable to the plan or method of operation deliberately adopted by the master or his representatives. The master is liable if the injury to the servant is the result of a defective system not adequately protecting the workmen at the time of the explosion." 9 Ruling Case Law, p. 691. See, also, Tissue v. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., 112 Pa. 91, 3 Atl. 667, 56 Am. Rep. 310. So far as relates to defendant's negligence it is not important who supplied the particular bar in question, as, by the method in use for years in this mine, all the tamping was done by iron bars. The company's negligence resulted from the unsafe method of using and authorizing the use of iron bars for that purpose. "And one who places in the hands of or authorizes the use of by another person of a dangerous instrument or article under such circumstances that he has reason to know it is likely to produce injury is liable for natural consequences." 29 Cyc. 460. And see Mahoney v. Cayuga Lake Cement Co., 208 N. Y. 164, 101 N. E. 802.

[5] As plaintiff had been doing the same work for seven years, it is urged that he assumed the risk. This contention is not without force. However, he was an illiterate foreign laborer, had never been employed in any other mine, and, so far as appears, had no knowledge of blasting except as done by defendant. He had never been warned of the danger, and might assume that the employer had taken proper precautions for his safety. Under such circumstances the question of assumption of risk was for the jury, as it always is where the facts or inferences are in doubt. See 18 Ruling Case Law, p. 692. The rule as to assumption of risk does not apply where the danger is hidden and unknown to the employe.

[6-9] As the court below properly says:

"In the absence of any testimony to the effect that plaintiff had knowledge that an iron tamping bar was an improper tool to use and one which was not in common and ordinary use by other companies engaged in the same line of business, the court cannot hold that the plaintiff was charged in this respect with the assumption of the risk."

So far as appears no similar accident had occurred at this mine, and the danger was not so obvious and immediate as to convict plaintiff of contributory negligence as a matter of law, merely because he remained at his work. Whether he was guilty of such negligence as matter of fact, under all the evidence, was for the jury. No case similar to this has been cited from our own state, and elsewhere there is some lack of uniformity in the decisions; but the conclusion of the court below seems well founded and free from error. Under like circumstances a recovery was sustained in the well-considered case of Ohio Valley Ry. Co. v. McKinley (Ky.) 33 S. W. 186. See, also, Pitts & Hankins v. Wells (Ky.) 101 S. W. 1192. King v. Morgan, 109 Fed. 446, 48 C. O. A. 507, cited by appellant, is distinguishable from the present case. There plaintiff was intelligent, well educated, and had done like work in different mines. That decision was by a divided court, but, if accepted as authority, it would not control this case.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §=482 —PROSECUTION OF DECEDENT'S BUSINESS—LIABILITIES.

Where administrator continues decedent's business as a liquor dealer, and incurs certain expenses in the sale of eatables, but credits the estate with the amount received from such sale, it is error to surcharge the accountant.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §=281 —PAYMENT OF CERTAIN CREDITORS—INSOLVENCY OF ESTATE.

An administrator, who made advance payments to certain general creditors in full, to the exclusion of others, was properly surcharged with the amount of such payments, where the fund was not sufficient to pay all the creditors in full, with the right to take the place of creditors so paid and prorate with those unpaid in the funds for distribution.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Lackawanna County.

In the matter of the estate of Patrick F. Moran, deceased. From a decree dismissing exceptions to adjudication, Thomas P. Duffy, executor of Daisy M. Moran, administratrix, appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHISKER, and WALLING, JJ.

Thomas P. Duffy and Joseph F. Gilroy, both of Scranton, for appellant. William J. Fitzgerald and Charles P. O'Malley, both of Scranton, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This is an appeal on behalf of accountant from an adjudication on exceptions to an administration account. Patrick F. Moran died testate on April 13, 1913, leaving a widow, Daisy M. Moran, but no children. Letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to the widow, who took charge of the estate. Mr. Moran conducted a licensed hotel in Scranton; his license and lease of the hotel building expiring April, 1914. The administratrix conducted the place as a licensed hotel, until she sold the property, which included the furniture, fixtures, and stock of liquors, to an owner of the building at private sale in January, 1914, for $2,000. The property so sold was appraised at $3,026.25; but owing to the approaching expiration of the lease, it was unsalable to an outside customer. So far as appears, the sale was for the best interest of the estate, and the accountant claims credit for $1,026.25, as a loss on the sale of that property, which was allowed by the orphans' court. The correctness thereof is not before us, as the appeal is on behalf of the accountant only. Probably by mistake, such credit is stated in the adjudication as $756.25, instead of the correct amount. The error assigned as to that is sustained, and the credit is allowed at the full amount of $1,026.25.

[1, 2] In the conduct of the hotel Mrs. Moran expended $9,786.79 and received $8,726, sustaining a net loss of $1,060.79, for which she claims credit in the account. This was properly disallowed. The will gives no authority to continue the business, and as a general rule in such case the executor or administrator may not properly do so; when he does, the gain, if any, belongs to the estate, while the loss falls upon him. Allam's Estate, 199 Pa. 573, 583, 49 Atl. 252. It was Mrs. Moran's duty to make disposition of the property for the best price obtainable. There was no transfer of the license, and the continued sale of liquor there was a violation of law, by which she acquired no legal or equitable claim to reimbursement. See Grimm's Estate, 181 Pa. 233, 37 Atl. 406; Buck's Estate, 185 Pa. 57, 39 Atl. 821, 64 Am. St. Rep. 816.

[3] She kept a daily account of expenditures for eatables, amounting in all to $1,665.65, for which she claims credit; this is disallowed in the adjudication. It should be allowed. The estate is credited with the amount received for meals and lunches, and therefore should be charged with the expense of keeping up that branch of the business. To so hold saves the estate harmless, without injustice to accountant. The rule requires an executor, who unsuccessfully continues testator's business without authority, to stand the loss; while the effect of the adjudication in this case is that, in addition to the loss, accountant must pay the estate $1,665.65. The error assigned as to that is sustained and the credit allowed.

[4] This is a partial account, and before it was filed the administratrix had expended $3,965.22 by paying in full certain creditors of the estate, while she had paid nothing to other creditors of equal rank. As the fund was not sufficient to pay all the creditors in full, the court below properly surcharged her with that amount, without prejudice; that is she takes the place of the creditors so paid and prorates with those unpaid in the fund for distribution. In the end accountant will lose nothing thereby, should the estate prove solvent. An administrator has no right to make advance payment to certain general creditors in full to the exclusion of others, and in doing so takes the risk of the solvency of the estate.

[5, 6] In the account as filed the administratrix was charged with $600 rent received by her from real estate and credited with $268.18 expended thereon. As we gather from the record, the court below struck out this debit and credit, and rightly so, as real estate has no proper place in an administration account, except as authorized by will or when sold for payment of debts. See Fross' Appeal, 105 Pa. 258.

The administrator is charged in the account with the $3,026.25, as the inventory value of the personal property in the hotel, and also with the $2,000 received from its sale, and is credited with the $1,026.25 for the loss, apparently making a double charge against accountant of the $2,000. However, this question is not raised, nor do we decide it; but, as the matter appears on the face of the record, if an error, possibly it can be corrected by bill of review. The account was filed April 8, 1914, Mrs. Moran died four days thereafter, and this appeal is by her executor.

The decree of the orphans' court, as modified by this opinion, is affirmed at the cost of the Patrick F. Moran estate.

BELL v. JACOBS.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT — 300—COLLISION WITH AUTOMOBILE—LIABILITY OF OWNER.

The owner of a car is not relieved of responsibility because he is not personally at the wheel, where another is driving with his permission, especially where the owner tacitly assents to the manner in which the car is driven.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 706(4)—COLLISION WITH AUTOMOBILE—VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE—NEGLIGENCE.

A city ordinance requiring vehicles to keep to the right of the center of the street in the direction in which they are going may be considered in connection with the evidence of the case on the question of the evidence of negligence of the driver of the car.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 702—MOTOR VEHICLES—OVERTAKING CAR.

Act July 7, 1913 (P. L. 372), requiring driver of motor vehicle, when overtaken, to turn reasonably to the right of the center of the highway, allowing the other vehicle free passage to the left, does not change the rule of the road, or conflict with ordinance requiring approaching vehicles to pass to the right.

4. TRIAL — 191(1) — INSTRUCTIONS — ASSUMPTION AS TO FACTS.

A request for an instruction, assuming the existence of a disputed fact, is properly denied.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Berks County.

Action by Mattie M. Bell against William R. Jacobs. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHISKEER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Cyrus G. Derr and Oliver M. Wolff, both of Reading, for appellant. William Kerper Stevens, of Reading, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This is an action of trespass for alleged negligence resulting in the death of plaintiff's husband. Spring street extends through the city of Reading in an easterly and westerly direction, and passes under the tracks of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway by a right-angle subway. The paved roadway of the street is of the width of 42 feet and descends sharply to the east as you approach the subway from the west. On May 20, 1916, plaintiff's husband rode his motorcycle west on this street, and, after passing through the subway, met defendant's automobile coming down the grade, and the vehicles collided, causing the death of Mr. Bell. The evidence was conflicting. That for plaintiff tended to show that the automobile was moving at high speed, and on the left or north side of the street, and that the deceased was driving carefully, and kept to his right, according to the rule of the road. Evidence for defendant (appellant) was to the effect that his car was moving at moderate speed and on the right side of the road, and that the deceased came at high speed, with his head down and moving in a zigzag course, and ran into defendant's car on the south side of the street, after it had come to a stop. Under the charge of the court, the verdict established the truth of plaintiff's contention. It was in the daytime, and the vehicles were in plain sight of each other for over 300 feet, so the collision could not be termed unavoidable; but whether it resulted from the fault of the deceased, or of the defendant, or of both, depended upon conflicting evidence and was for the jury. Each had the right to assume that the other would use due care; and it could not be declared as a matter of law that the deceased was, or that the defendant was not, guilty of negligence.

[1] Defendant had secured Mr. Fink, an expert workman, to make some repairs to the automobile, and, before leaving it at the repair shop, they were taking it for a drive to see what was needed. Fink was acting as chauffeur, and defendant sat beside him, but made no request or suggestion as to the driving of the car. It was defendant's car, and he acquiesced in what Fink, who was acting for him, did, and cannot be excused because he was not personally at the wheel. A man out riding in his car is not relieved from responsibility for its management because, with his permission, another is acting as driver; and this is especially so where the owner tacitly assents to the manner in which the car is driven. There is a presumption, not here rebutted, that an owner present in his car has power to control it.

There were other elements of negligence charged, aside from being on the wrong side of the street; hence the trial judge properly refused to charge that the verdict must be for the defendant, if the jury believed he was on the south (right) side of the street at the time of the accident. One may not drive recklessly, or with undue speed, even on his own side of the street, nor necessarily escape liability for an accident because of that fact. It is quite possible that defendant came down on the north side of the street, and turned to the south side too late to avoid the accident.

[2-4] It was a controverted question which vehicle collided with the other; therefore the points which assumed that the motorcycle ran into the automobile were properly declined. A request which assumes the existence of disputed facts cannot be granted. The city ordinance requiring all vehicles to keep to the right of the center of the street in the direction in which they are going was properly admitted in evidence. While such ordinance is not per se evidence of negligence,

It may be considered in connection with the evidence in the case. Foot v. American Product Co., 195 Pa. 190, 45 Atl. 984, 49 L. R. A. 704, 78 Am. St. Rep. 806; Lederman et ux. v. Penna. R. R., 165 Pa. 118, 80 Atl. 725, 44 Am. St. Rep. 644. Section 18 of the act of July 7, 1913 (P. L. 672) requiring the driver of a motor vehicle, when overtaken, to turn reasonably to the right of the center of the highway, allowing the other vehicle free passage to the left, does not change the rule of the road, nor conflict with the ordinance in question. A regulation requiring vehicles to keep to the right of the center of the street may be practicable in cities, but not in country districts, while the rule of turning out to the right applies to both. We will not review the action of the court below in refusing a new trial, except in case of manifest abuse of discretion.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

LAUDENBERGER v. EASTON TRANSIT CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

STREET RAILROADS — 99(14) — INJURIES AT CROSSING—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Plaintiff's intestate, a guest of the driver of an automobile, was guilty of contributory negligence, barring recovery for injuries received in a collision of the automobile with a street car at a crossing, where he paid no attention to the surroundings, although the street car was plainly visible, and neither the intestate the driver or the motorman saw the danger until it was too late to avert the collision.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Northampton County.

Action by Isabella M. Laudenberger against the Easton Transit Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The facts appear in the following excerpt from the opinion of Stewart, J., in the common pleas sur defendant's motion for judgment n. o. v.:

This is a motion by defendant for judgment n. o. v. It appeared from the evidence in this case that the husband of the plaintiff was riding in an automobile with Martin Neeb and his son, Elvin Neeb. Martin Neeb owned the automobile, and was driving it, seated on the left-hand side of the automobile. Mr. Laudenberger was on the right of the driver, and in the back seat was Elvin Neeb. They were proceeding northwardly on the road known as the Wilson Crossing road. This road ran into and stopped at the Easton and Bethlehem state road. On the south side of the state road is the track of the Easton Transit Company, which was built very close to the property line. Along the state road towards the east at a very close distance on September 11, 1916, was a peach orchard which was in full leaf. This orchard also extended southwardly along the Wilson Crossing road, back nearly to the railroad track, which crossed the road, 800.5 feet south from the transit company's track. It was impossible for any one going along the Wilson Crossing road towards the transit company's track to obtain a view of a car approaching from the east until he reached a point, 10, 12, or 15 feet from the track.

The undisputed evidence is that from a point on the transit company's track, where the center of the Wilson Crossing road intersects it, a person standing beside the south rail could see a car approaching from the east at a distance of 1,010 feet. At a distance of 322 feet from the transit company's tracks, on the Wilson road, there is a railroad warning sign, and on a telephone pole about 3 1/4 feet from the south rail of the transit company's track, where the road runs into the state highway, there is a large transit company sign, with large letters on it, and the words, "Stop, Look, Listen." That is Exhibit No. 8 in the case. Two hundred feet west of the transit company's crossing is what is known as the Elliott House. There is a downward grade from east to west in the transit company's track for at least 700 feet, east from the crossing, varying in degree, but the highest grade is 3.33%. There is also a slight upward grade on the Wilson Crossing road, extending from a point about 10 or 15 feet to the transit company's track. At about 4:30 p. m. on a perfectly clear day Mr. Neeb drove his automobile along the Wilson Crossing road at a speed of 20 miles an hour, until he came within a point about 150 feet from the transit company's track, when he slackened down to about 8 to 10 miles an hour, when he threw on his power to go up the slight incline and to cross the tracks. He testified that he heard no whistle, and he also testified that he looked ahead for the crossing. He did not stop at any time, and while the auto was on the track it was struck by a trolley car which was proceeding from the east at a speed, according to the motorman's testimony, of from 18 to 20 miles an hour. One of the witnesses, however, states that they were going, to the best of his judgment, 30 to 35 miles an hour. Mr. Laudenberger was instantly killed. Both the motorman and Mr. Neeb testified that they saw each other within a very short space; the car being not over 20 feet from the point of collision, and the automobile from 12 to 15 feet. We are here endeavoring to accurately present the situation, but the exact distances will appear in the testimony, which we shall quote hereafter.

The learned counsel for the defendant insists that there is no evidence that the defendant company was negligent; that a preponderance of the evidence shows that the motorman blew his whistle at a proper place; that both he and the conductor so testified; that it was plainly heard by the boy, Brunell, who was right at the crossing, and by Miss Hammann, who was in an automobile; that plaintiff's testimony is purely negative; that the evidence discloses that the motorman was standing in a proper position, and that he threw on the brakes as soon as he saw the automobile; and that there was no negligence in the rate of speed at which the car was traveling. We do not propose to discuss these questions, because a careful examination of the entire testimony has convinced us that the other defense of contributory negligence is conclusive of the case. * * *

Dunlap v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 248 Pa. 130, 93 Atl. 873, is on all fours with this case. In that case Dunlap was killed. He was riding in an automobile with Beckman, its owner and driver. Beckman was a constable, and Dunlap was his deputy. They were transacting business in the city of Philadelphia. The negligence charged was excessive speed and failure to give warning. The collision occurred at a crossing of two streets. Beckman was a witness for the plaintiff, just as Neeb was here. Mr. Justice Frazer sums up the matter so fully that we quote from his opinion as follows: "He further testified that plaintiff's husband said nothing as they approached Eighteenth street as to the likelihood of meeting an approaching car, nor made any effort to observe whether or not the track was clear, and that 'he was just simply sitting there looking.' Under these circumstances, was plaintiff's husband chargeable with negligence? As a general principle of law a passenger is not chargeable with the negligence of his carrier. That rule, however, does not relieve the passenger of the duty of exercising reasonable care to avoid danger. He is responsible for his acts of either omission or commission. In this case plaintiff's husband should be held to a somewhat higher degree of duty than a passenger for hire would be held. Beckman and plaintiff's husband were engaged in a common purpose, and had a common object in view, that of transacting business, in which both were interested. While Beckman's negligence should not be imputed to plaintiff's husband, the latter, however, was not relieved from all responsibility. It was incumbent on him to exercise proper care, and not sit quietly by and fail to see danger that was plainly imminent. Deasy v. Pennsylvania Railroad Company, 129 Pa. 514 [18 Atl. 718, 6 L. R. A. 143, 16 Am. St. Rep. 738]; Brommer v. Pennsylvania Railroad Company, 179 Fed. Repr. 577 [103 C. C. A. 185, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 924]. He was as familiar with the neighborhood as Beckman, and undoubtedly saw the car tracks of defendant on Eighteenth street, and presumably was aware that a car might pass at any moment. Under such circumstances it was the duty of plaintiff's husband to at least have used his eyes in the proper direction and if he saw the car coming, as he undoubtedly would, warned Beckman of the danger. In not having done so, or made any effort to discharge a plain duty he owed to Beckman, as well as himself, he was chargeable with negligence, which contributed to and made the accident possible. Plaintiff therefore is not entitled to recover."

We are unable to see any difference between the principle of that case and the present case, and we were in error in permitting the jury to consider the question whether Mr. Laudenberger exercised reasonable care for his own safety, and whether he joined in testing a patent danger.

Verdict for plaintiff for $3,000. The court subsequently entered judgment for defendant n. o. v. Error assigned was in entering judgment for defendant n. o. v.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Clayton J. Heermance, of New York City, and Kirkpatrick & Maxwell, of Easton, for appellant; Robert A. Stotz, of Easton, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The judgment for the defendant non obstante veredicto was entered on the ground of the contributory negligence of the deceased. This was inevitable under the testimony, and defendant's tenth and eleventh points should have been affirmed. The learned trial judge so admits in his opinion granting defendant's motion for judgment and on so much of that opinion as points out that no distinction can be made between Dunlap v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, 248 Pa. 130, 93 Atl. 873, and the present case, the judgment is affirmed.

In re OLD FORGE BOROUGH'S CONTESTED ELECTION.

Appeal of TAROLI.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

ELECTIONS — §295(1) — CONTEST — BALLOTS — EVIDENCE.

In a contest of election for a borough councilman, a decree declaring the election of a contestant held proper on the evidence.

Appeal from Court of Quarter Sessions, Lackawanna County.

In the matter of the contest of election of the office of councilman in the borough of Old Forge. From an order declaring Hugh B. Garvin legally elected, Sam Taroli appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Edwards, P. J., filed the following opinion in the quarter sessions:

At the election held in the borough of Old Forge, in November, 1915, the returns from the Fifth ward show that for the office of councilman of said ward Sam Taroli received 53 votes and Hugh B. Garvin 51, thus electing Taroli by a majority of 2 on the face of the returns. A contest was instituted on behalf of Garvin, and the only question raised in the petition to contest, as well as in the amended petition, related to certain informalities in the marking of the ballots for the said office.

The answer of the respondent denied the allegations of the petition, and charged that many votes were cast for Garvin which were illegal for various reasons other than irregularities in the marking of ballots. As to the defective markings of the ballot, the best evidence would be the ballots themselves. The ballot box was opened by order of the court, and the vote for councilman was counted in open court in the presence of one of the judges. Because of the averments of the answer attacking the qualifications of certain voters on the ground of non-residence, nonpayment of taxes, noncitizenship, etc., we appointed an examiner to take the testimony and to report to the court. The parties in interest appeared before the examiner. Counsel for the contestant offered in evidence the proceedings before Judge Edwards in the recount of the votes, and rested. The respondent's counsel examined many witnesses, and much testimony is found in the record. The final conclusion reached by the examiner is that the evidence failed in the proof of illegal votes on the grounds set forth in the answer. We concur in the conclusion reached by the examiner.

It appears, therefore, that the only question left in this case is the recount of the vote in open court. The recount was made on February 26, 1916. After some preliminary proof we made the following announcement from the bench:

"The ballot box having been opened and the ballots counted and examined, it appears that 91 ballots are valid, and counsel on neither side make any objection to the validity of the 91 ballots. Of these Taroli receives 46 votes, for councilman, and Garvin 45 votes. It also appears that there were in the box 4 ballots marked with a party mark, and also with a mark opposite the name of an individual for one office or another, and these 4 ballots are declared void, leaving for further examination 13 ballots, which are objected to on one side or the other. The court orders that the ballot box be closed and sealed and delivered to the sheriff, to be retained in his custody until the further order of the court. The 13 ballots which are yet to be examined, and about which there is a dispute on one side or the other, will be sealed and placed in the custody of the clerk of the court, and a later day will be fixed for argument in regard to these ballots and the examination of them."

The 13 ballots objected to on one side or the other are before us. We have numbered them consecutively from 1 to 13, inclusive. The following ballots are defectively marked: Nos. 3, 5, 8, 11, and 13, and cannot be counted for either candidate. Ballots Nos. 1, 2, 4, 6, 7, 9, and 12 are properly marked. Of these 8 good ballots 6 were cast for Garvin and 2 for Taroli. The tabulation of the total vote for councilman is as follows:

Number of ballots for councilman.....108
Defectively marked ballots..... 9

Total number of good ballots..... 99 —of which 51 were cast and are counted for Hugh B. Garvin and 48 for Sam Taroli. We therefore declare that Hugh B. Garvin was legally elected councilman of the Fifth ward in the borough of Old Forge at the general election held November 2, 1915, and we direct that the borough of Old Forge pay the costs of these proceedings.

The court decided that Hugh B. Garvin was legally elected councilman of the Fifth ward in the borough of Old Forge at the June election of November 2, 1915. Sam Taroli appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

John Memoio, of Scranton, for appellant.
A. A. Vosburg and Clarence Balentine, both of Scranton, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is dismissed, on the final opinion of the learned president judge of the court below, filed February 13, 1918; the costs here to be paid by the appellant.

Application of PENNSYLVANIA STATE CAMP, PATRIOTIC ORDER OF AMERICANS.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS — APPLI- CATION FOR CHARTER.

Act April 6, 1893 (P. L. 7), providing an exclusive method for incorporation of societies operating on the supreme and subordinate lodge plan, petition of such a beneficial association to be incorporated under the general incorporation act (Act April 29, 1874) was properly refused.

2. STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION.

Where two acts are in pari materia and passed at the same session of the Legislature, they are construed with reference to each other.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Berks County.

Application by the Pennsylvania State Camp, Patriotic Order of Americans, for a charter. From an order of the court of common pleas, refusing the application, petitioner appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Endlich, P. J., filed the following opinion in the common pleas:

This is an application for the incorporation of a beneficial organization with power to create subordinate lodges. It is made under and in conformity with the provisions of the General Incorporation Act of 1874 (P. L. 73) and its supplements. The question is whether it is grantable under these enactments, or whether it ought to be made under and in conformity with the act of April 6, 1893 (P. L. 10), differing in a variety of essential details from those prescribed by the former laws.

[1] As far back as 1890 it was pointed out by the Supreme Court, in Com. v. Equitable Ben. Ass'n, 137 Pa. 412, 18 Atl. 1112, that the beneficial societies authorized to be incorporated by the act of 1874 were the kind of local beneficial associations existing and well understood at the time. And in January, 1896, it was decided by Judge Simonton, in Com. v. Order of Vesta, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 254, that, whilst local beneficial societies might be incorporated under the act of 1874, the latter did not authorize the incorporation of beneficial societies operating on the supreme and subordinate lodge plan. Possibly with a view to meeting the effect of this decision and conferring the power denied by it, the act of April 6, 1893 (P. L. 7), was passed, "defining fraternal and relief societies and their status, authorizing them to create subordinate lodges," etc., and applying to "any association * * * now or hereafter formed or organized and carried on for the sole benefit of its members," etc. Assuming the validity of this legislation, it would, standing alone, doubtless have affected beneficial societies thereafter erected under the act of 1874. But on the same day was approved another statute, Act April 6, 1893 (P. L. 10), "regulating the organization and incorporation of secret fraternal beneficial societies, orders or associations and protecting the rights of members therein"—a statute, which expressly gives the power to operate through supreme and subordinate lodges, and which, as pointed out by Judge Sulsberger, in Lady Foresters of America, 18 Dist. Pa. R. 780, embodies a complete system for the incorporation of such societies, and is not an amendment or supplement to the general incorporation law of 1874.

[2] The two enactments of 1893, being in pari materia, and passed at the same legislative session, are, of course, to be interpreted with reference to each other. White v. Meadville, 177 Pa. 643, 35 Atl. 695, 84 L. E. A. 567. If, therefore, the second enactment (P. L. 10) provides an exclusive method of incorporation of societies operating on the lodge plan, the direction of the first enactment (P. L. 7) that it apply to beneficial societies "hereafter formed," etc., must be understood as contemplating such societies formed, etc., under the act of April 6, 1893 (P. L. 10). Now it was held in Rhoads v. Hoernerstown B. & S. Ass'n, 32 Pa. 180, following Johnston's Estate, 33 Pa. 511 (relating to statutes revising the subject-matter of earlier ones and evidently intended as substitutes for them), and Gwinner v. Lehigh & D. G. R. R. Co., 55 Pa. 126 (declaring that acts granting a right conditioned on different things are inconsistent and that, to the extent of such inconsistency, the later supersedes the earlier), and in turn followed by many other decisions, that a later statute, providing a complete system for the incorporation and regulation of certain corporations upon conditions differing from those prescribed by a previous statute, necessarily takes the place of the latter and affords an exclusive method of incorporation of such associations thereafter. It is not apparent how the operation of this principle with respect to the statutes here in question can be denied. The effect of it seems clearly to be that the incorporation of a beneficial society, to be conducted on the lodge plan, must be under the act of 1893.

Nor has any adjudication even impliedly to the contrary been pointed out or come to our notice. In Derry Council Order U. A. M. of Hummelstown, Pa., v. State Council, 197 Pa. 413, 47 Atl. 208, 80 Am. St. Rep. 838, where the incorporation, decreed April 10, 1893, was under the act of 1874, the question does not appear to have been mooted—perhaps because it was not conceived as legitimately arising. The decision in Re Court Manayunk, No. 52, Foresters of America, 24 Pa. Dist. R. 331, goes only to the extent of holding that a pre-existing unincorporated local subordinate lodge may be incorporated under the act of 1874, as distinguished from the creation of a new organization with power to establish subordinate bodies. Finally, when in Lady Foresters of America, 18 Pa. Dist. R. 780, already referred to, Judge Sulzberger intimates that the applicants for incorporation might choose whether to proceed under the act of 1874 or that of 1893, the proper understanding of that remark would seem to be that they might ask for incorporation as a purely local concern under the earlier statute, or as one operating on the lodge system under the later statute. The proviso in section 7 that the act shall not apply to incorporated or unincorporated societies not accepting it, nor be understood as requiring them to accept or be incorporated under it, evidently refers to societies then existing, and has no bearing upon the method of incorporation to be pursued in the case of newly formed bodies. It seems to be in that sense that the proviso is adverted to in Court Manayunk, No. 52, Foresters of America, 24 Pa. Dist. R. 331, above cited.

Thus, without laying any stress upon the past rulings of this court on the question presented, we are led to the conclusion that we are obliged, however reluctantly, to refuse this application, because of its nonconformity with the requirements of the act of 1893.

The court refused the application. The applicant appealed. Error assigned was the order of the court.

Argued before BROWN, O. J., and POTTER, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Bertram D. Bearick, of Philadelphia, for appellants.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is dismissed, at appellant's costs, on the opinion of the learned court below refusing the application for a charter.

SWARTZ v. BIXLER et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. March 6, 1918.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT §76(2)—LEASE TO FIRM—COVENANTS AGAINST UNDERLETTING—DEATH OF PARTNER.

Where lease made to three partners provides for forfeiture on assignment or underletting, and one lessee dies, and surviving lessees purchase his interest from his executors, covenant against assignment or underletting is not broken.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Northampton County.

Action by Mark T. Swartz against Fannie T. Bixler and Arthur B. Bixler, individually and as partners trading as A. B. Bixler &

Co. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

McKean, J., filed the following opinion in the common pleas:

The plaintiff in the above-stated case brought an action of ejectment to recover premises demised by his predecessor in title unto Fannie T. Bixler, Arthur B. Bixler, and Samuel P. Ludwig, copartners doing business as "the C. W. Bixler Company." It was agreed between the parties that trial by jury should be dispensed with, and that decision should be submitted to the court in accordance with the act of assembly entitled "An act to provide for the submission of civil cases to the decision of the court, and to dispense with trial by jury," approved April 22, 1874 (P. L. 109). The essential facts submitted by the parties, upon which the conclusions of law must be based, are not disputed. The requests for findings of facts and requests for findings of law, together with the court's replies thereto, are filed herewith and made a part of this opinion. From the undisputed facts it appears that the Northampton Trust Company, trustee under the will of Charles Pomp, made an agreement of leasing with Fannie T. Bixler, Arthur B. Bixler, and Samuel P. Ludwig, copartners doing business as "the C. W. Bixler Company," on the 6th day of July, 1911, for the premises described therein, located at the northwest corner of Fourth and Northampton streets, in the city of Easton, Pa. Mark T. Swartz, the above-named plaintiff, on the 18th day of May, 1916, acquired title to said premises subject to the lease of defendants. Samuel P. Ludwig, one of the lessees, died on the 15th day of June, 1916. Plaintiff received and accepted, on the 1st day of August, 1916, the rent due from the surviving tenants for the quarter annual period ending on that day. On the next quarter annual period, to wit, November 1, 1916, the rent then due was tendered to plaintiff and refused by him. The lease contains the following covenant: "And the said parties of the second part also agree not to sublet the said demised premises, or any portion thereof, or to assign this lease, either by themselves, judicial sale, operation of law, or otherwise, without permission in writing to that effect first had and obtained from the said party of the first part." Another clause in the lease provides: "This agreement shall be binding upon the executors, administrators, successors, or assigns of the parties hereto." It further appeared that letters testamentary on the last will and testament of Samuel P. Ludwig, deceased, were granted to Etta Ludwig on the 28th day of June, 1916, and that on the 15th day of September, 1916, the interest of Samuel P. Ludwig in the copartnership of the C. W. Bixler Company was purchased by Arthur B. Bixler, one of the surviving copartners, and that the firm name was changed to that of A. B. Bixler & Co. An inventory of the firm's assets, from which the interest of Samuel P. Ludwig was ascertained in accordance with the terms of the articles of copartnership, did not include any interest in the lease in question, nor was any assignment of Samuel P. Ludwig's interest in said lease made.

Plaintiff urges the court that judgment should be entered in his favor for the following reasons:

(a) The death of Samuel P. Ludwig and the passing of his interest to Etta Ludwig, the personal representative of Samuel P. Ludwig, deceased, constituted such an assignment of the lease as violated the covenant "not to sublet the said demised premises, or any portion thereof, or to assign this lease, either by themselves, judicial sale, operation of law, or otherwise, without permission in writing to that effect first had and obtained from the said party of the first part."

(b) The sale of the interest of Samuel P. Ludwig, deceased, in said partnership to Arthur B. Bixler constituted such a transfer or assignment as violated the covenant "not to assign this lease, either by themselves, judicial sale, operation of law, or otherwise."

Plaintiff's contention is in effect an attempt to enforce a forfeiture under the clause prohibiting an assignment of the lease without permission in writing first obtained of the lessor. Upon the theory that the lease was a part of the partnership assets, and when the interest of Samuel P. Ludwig in the partnership assets passed first on the death of Samuel P. Ludwig to his personal representative it was an assignment by operation of law, and when the interest of Samuel P. Ludwig in the firm was sold to Arthur B. Bixler it was an assignment of the lease by the act of the parties. The acts complained of by plaintiff in violation of the forfeiture clause in the lease did not bring any new member into the firm, nor was the business of the firm discontinued. The surviving partners retained their possession of the premises and continued the business under the firm name of A. B. Bixler & Co. There is no evidence of any assignment of the lease made by the executrix of Samuel P. Ludwig. An inventory was taken of the interest of Samuel P. Ludwig in accordance with the partnership agreement, and this interest was purchased by Arthur B. Bixler, one of the surviving partners, from the executrix of said decedent. This inventory did not include a valuation of the lease, and all that was transferred to Arthur B. Bixler was decedent's interest in the stock of goods contained in the store of the firm. The interest of Samuel P. Ludwig in the lease, so far as the evidence discloses, remains as it was at the time of his decease. It is not asserted that the lessees assigned this lease "by themselves." In order to effect an assignment of this lease, there must be some voluntary act on the part of the parties. "Covenants in restraint of assigning without license, though they prohibit the lessees from giving, granting or selling without license, the word 'assign' comprehending each of these modes of disposition, have ever been regarded with jealousy, to prevent the restraint from going beyond the express stipulation, and very easy modes have always been countenanced for defeating them. * * * Such assignments only without consent as are the voluntary act of the lessee amount to a breach of the covenant, and therefore the vesting of the term in the administrator of the lessee on his intestacy is no breach. * * *

The same law obtains with regard to its vesting in the executor." Platt on Leases, vol. 2, p. 250. It would have been possible for the parties to provide that in the event of the death of one or more of the parties the lease was to become null and void, or prohibit the continuance of the business by the survivors or survivor upon the death of one or more of the members of the firm. This was not done, and the court cannot write into the lease covenants of this character. Death dissolved the partnership, but it did not terminate the lease.

If it could be held, in accordance with the contention of plaintiff, that the death of Samuel P. Ludwig and the passing of his interest to Etta Ludwig, the personal representative of Samuel P. Ludwig, constituted such an assignment of the lease as violated the covenant "not to sublet the said demised premises, nor any portion thereof, or to assign this lease, by themselves, judicial sale, operation of law, or otherwise, without permission in writing to that effect first had and obtained from the said party of the first part," then we are met by the payment of the rent, which was accepted and received by plaintiff on the 1st day of August, 1916, after the decease of Samuel P. Ludwig, and the granting of letters testamentary to Etta Ludwig, which would operate as a waiver on the breach. In 24 Cyc. 1861, it is said: "The acceptance by a landlord of rent which accrues after the breach of a condition contained in the lease is a waiver of the right to declare a forfeiture of the lease and re-enter because of such breach, provided the acceptance was with full knowledge upon the part of the landlord of the fact of the breach and all the circumstances thereof." The plaintiff testified that he knew of the death of Samuel P. Ludwig at the time of his decease. The legal construction of the lease in question must be obtained from a strict interpretation of the written intention of the parties therein expressed. The members of the firm of the O. W. Bixler Company consisted of the estate of C. W. Bixler, represented by the executors, Fannie T. Bixler and Arthur B. Bixler, Arthur B. Bixler individually, and Samuel P. Ludwig. The lessees named in the premises of the lease, containing the names of the parties and the date thereof, are Fannie T. Bixler, Arthur B. Bixler, and Samuel P. Ludwig, and they have signed in like manner in the execution of the lease. It is not material that the lease is also signed by "The O. W. Bixler Company, by Samuel P. Ludwig." The words after their names in the premises of the lease "copartners doing business as 'the O. W. Bixler Company,'" are descriptive, and have no significance, as throughout the entire agreement the parties are treated as individuals. So far as the lease is concerned they are tenants in common, and as such entitled to a unity of possession. The death of one of the lessees cannot destroy this unity of possession, nor could their unity of possession be destroyed, except by the joint act of the three tenants. It has not been asserted by the plaintiff, nor does the evidence disclose, that any written assignment has been made by the lessees which would affect their right of possession. In 2 Williams, Executors, 686, it is said: "If a lease be made for a term of years upon condition that, if the lessee shall assign his term without the assent of the lessor, it shall be lawful for the lessor to re-enter, the term, nevertheless, shall vest in the executor or administrator without any breach of the covenant." The facts presented in the case at bar do not establish a breach of the covenant whereby the plaintiff would be entitled to recover.

The court entered judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appealed. Errors assigned were in dismissing exceptions to findings of fact and conclusions of law and the judgment of the court.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Calvin F. Smith and W. S. Kirkpatrick, both of Easton, for appellant. E. J. Fox and Evans & Beck, all of Easton, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. The judgment in this case is affirmed, on the opinion of the learned judge below, finding that the appellees were entitled to it.

STATE v. JOHNSON. (No. 18.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
June 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \Leftrightarrow 159(2)—
AMENDMENT—POWER OF COURT.

Under section 44 of the Criminal Procedure Act (2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1834), the court cannot by amendment make the indictment charge a crime when none is presented, or make it charge a crime different from that presented by the grand jury.

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \Leftrightarrow 159(2)—
AMENDMENT—POWER OF COURT.

The power of amendment of an indictment under section 44 of the Criminal Procedure Act is applicable to that class of cases where, on the face of the indictment, a specific criminal charge can be perceived, which fails to be effective only by means of an error which, looking at the charge and averments of the indictment, the court can clearly infer was a clerical error.

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION \Leftrightarrow 159(2)—
AMENDMENT—SUBSTITUTION OF CHARGES.

An indictment based on section 166 of the Crimes Act (2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1795) charged that defendant received $2,547.54 of the goods and chattels of one A. C., well knowing said moneys, goods, and chattels to have been fraudulently converted, etc. Held, that an amendment by insertion of the word "moneys" immediately after statement of the amount, so as to read "$2,547.54 of the moneys, goods, and chattels," etc., made no material change in the charge, as it was obvious that a charge of receiving of money fraudulently converted was originally intended, and appeared on the face of the indictment.

4. RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS \Leftrightarrow 2—CHECKS—STATUTES.

Section 166 of the Crimes Act is violated by receiving and collecting checks on a lawyer's bank account of moneys belonging to his client, knowing the ownership of such moneys.

Swayze and Taylor, JJ., dissenting.

Error to Supreme Court.

Elwood Johnson was convicted of fraudulent conversion. His conviction was affirmed by the Supreme Court (90 N. J. Law, 21, 100 Atl. 242), and he brings error. Affirmed.

Halsted H. Wainwright, of Manasquan, for plaintiff in error. Charles F. Sexton, Prosecutor of Pleas, of Long Branch, for the State.

PARKER, J. The writ of error in this cause was dismissed for failure to comply with the rules (103 Atl. 187), and later reinstated on application of plaintiff in error, to the end that any meritorious questions existing might be considered.

So far as relates to points treated in the opinion of the Supreme Court, we agree with the views expressed by that court and adopt them as our own. But counsel for plaintiff in error urges that there were two points raised before the Supreme Court which it did not decide, and relies on them for a reversal here. The opinion below expressly states that the other errors assigned were not argued or briefed and that the court considered them as abandoned. Such is the well-settled rule. And that an appellate court will ordinarily not consider points not raised in the court below is as well settled, except in cases of public policy or lack of jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Dodd v. Una, 40 N. J. Eq. 672, 713, 5 Atl. 155; State v. Shupe, 88 N. J. Law, 610, 97 Atl. 271; McMichael v. Horay, 90 N. J. Law, 142, 160 Atl. 205.

[1] One of the points now raised does bear on the matter of jurisdiction, viz. the amendment of the indictment, which is based on section 166 of the Crimes Act, quoted in the opinion below. It is claimed that as originally presented the indictment charged the receiving of goods and chattels, and not money; and that the trial court undertook by amendment to insert a charge of receiving money, thus giving the indictment an effect that it did not originally possess. If this point is well taken, there should be a reversal, because the well-recognized rule is that under section 44 of the Criminal Procedure Act the court cannot by amendment make the indictment charge a crime when none is presented, or charge a crime different from that presented by the grand jury. State v. Flynn, 76 N. J. Law, 473, 477, 72 Atl. 296, and cases cited; State v. Unsworth, 86 N. J. Law, 237, 240, 88 Atl. 1097. And if it charged a crime different from that originally presented and could not be so amended, the trial court was without jurisdiction over this part of the subject-matter. We proceed therefore to examine the indictment and the amendment to ascertain whether the point made has actual merit.

[3] The charge of the indictment is that the defendant on, etc., at, etc., within the jurisdiction of the court, $2,547.54 or the goods and chattels of one A. C. before then feloniously, unlawfully, and fraudulently obtained, taken, and converted by one Charles Harvey, unlawfully and feloniously did receive and have, well knowing said moneys, goods, and chattels to have (been) feloniously, etc., taken and converted by said Charles Harvey, contrary to the form of the statute, etc. The amendment consisted simply of inserting the word "moneys" between the statement of the amount and the words "of the goods and chattels," so that it should read, at, etc., within the jurisdiction, etc., $2,547.54 of the moneys, goods and chattels of one A. C., etc., thus making it conform to the later language "well knowing said moneys, goods and chattels" which appeared in the indictment as presented by the grand jury.

[2] We think this case is within the rule laid down in the Supreme Court case of State v. Kern, 51 N. J. Law, 259, 264, 17 Atl. 114, that the power of amendment may be held to apply to that class of cases where, on the face of the indictment, a specific criminal charge can be perceived, which fails to be effective only by means of an error which, looking at the charges and averments of the indictment, the court can clearly infer was a clerical error. The argument is that defendant was charged, not with receiving $2,547.54 of money, but with that amount of goods and chattels, and that it was without the power of the court to amend the indictment so as to charge him with receiving money. Conceding the lack of that power, we do not agree that the court attempted to exercise it. There is nothing in the section of the Crimes Act which says anything about the value of the goods, chattels, chose in action, or other valuable thing taken and converted, or which makes the value a test of the punishment; and in such cases allegations of value are unnecessary. 1 Bish. New Criminal Procedure, §§ 541, 567. The legitimate inference is therefore that the pleader meant receiving money in charging the receiving of a specific amount; and, if there were any doubt on this point, it is cleared up by the actual employment of the word "money" in the allegation of scienter. For these reasons we conclude that the amendment made no substantial change in the crime intended to be charged, and hence was a proper amendment to make.

[4] The other point is one which strictly need not be considered in view of the statement of the court below that it was not argued there. It is that the proof failed to show the identity of the money stolen with that received by the defendant. We think the proof was adequate on that point. It indicated that Harvey had certain funds of A. C. in his custody, which he placed in a special bank account opened for the purpose, and which account, and the checks drawn thereon, were earmarked so as to show the ownership by A. C. of the fund; that Johnson knew Harvey had received that money and what he had done with it; that Harvey owed Johnson money and could not pay; and that Harvey on the suggestion and solicitation of Johnson drew earmarked checks to Johnson against the fund which Johnson cashed or otherwise collected, he having promised Harvey that he would see that he was reimbursed so as to make the account good. It is indubitable that there was a fraudulent conversion by Harvey of the money represented by every check he drew to Johnson, and, as Johnson received it knowing its ownership, by the one transaction there was a conversion by Harvey and a receiving by Johnson in the sense contemplated by the statute. If the money had been in cash in Harvey's safe, and he took it out of the safe and handed it to Johnson, saying, "This belongs to A. C., but I will pay it to you for my own debt," the infraction of the statute would have been no more clear.

The judgment will be affirmed.

SWAYZE and TAYLOR, JJ., dissent.

EAST RIDGELAWN CEMETERY CO. v. FRANK et al.

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. March 24, 1911.)

1. CEMETERIES ⇨5—ASSOCIATIONS—CERTIFICATES FOR SHARES OF PROCEEDS OF SALE.

A certificate issued by a cemetery association, to the effect that the holder is to receive a share of proceeds of sale of lots, is invalid, as unauthorized by Cemetery Act.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⇨64—REMEDY AT LAW.

Remedy for breach of agreement to cancel mortgages or to procure land to straighten lines is at law for damages, and not by specific performance.

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⇨114(2)—BILL—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

Bill for specific performance of agreement to convey land must show agreement is written.

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⇨49(1)—CONSIDERATION.

Specific performance will not be granted of an agreement not founded on valuable consideration.

Suit by the East Ridgelawn Cemetery Company against Adam Frank and others. On demurrer to amended bill. Demurrer allowed.

John R. Hardin, of Newark, for demurrant Adam Frank. George P. Rust, of Passaic, and Michael Dunn, of Paterson, for defendant Cemetery, etc.

STEVENS, V. C. The original bill filed in this cause was demurred to and the demurrer sustained. East Ridgelawn Cemetery Co. v. Frank, 77 N. J. Eq. 86, 75 Atl. 1006. The complainant has amended its bill, and the bill as amended has again been demurred to. The amendments consist largely in a more detailed statement of what was before matter of inference.

[1] In the original bill it was inferred from what was stated that the two companies, the East Ridgelawn and the West Ridgelawn Cemetery Companies, had joined in issuing certificates for 13,500 shares of proceeds of sale of cemetery lots. This is now distinctly alleged and the certificate set forth. It certifies that the holder is to receive his pro rata share of the proceeds of sale by the two companies of sublots or plots after deducting certain expenses, etc. The certificate is plainly open to the objections mentioned in my former opinion, and I shall not here repeat them. Its issuance is not a valid consideration for a promise. The Cemetery Act (1 Comp. St. 1910, p. 372) does not authorize a single company to issue such a certificate, and still less does it authorize two companies to join in issuing it. The policy of the law is to restrict cemetery companies to the ownership of 135 acres. If this scheme is valid, any number of companies may be organized to join in one certificate and form what would be, virtually, a consolidated company possessing as many acres of land as their organizers might see fit to acquire.

[2-4] One of the causes of demurrer is that the action, if sustainable, is legal and not equitable. If the defendant Frank has, contrary to agreement, failed to cancel the mortgages upon parts of the cemetery property, the remedy is plainly a suit at law for breach of contract. If he has, or in so far as he has, failed to procure enough land to enable the cemetery company to straighten its lines, such failure on his part (there being a valuable consideration for the promise) would also entitle the company to sue at law. It is, however, alleged that four tracts of land, containing 6.25 acres, stand in the name of either Gruber or Howe, who hold for Frank (Pond having released his interest), and it is prayed that Frank be compelled to convey these, as he agreed to when he received the 13,500 shares. It is not alleged that this part of the agreement is in writing. A bill for specific performance must show a written agreement to convey. Fry on Sp. Per. § 332; Titus v. Taylor (N. J. Ch.) 65 Atl. 1003. Aside from this, it appears that the only consideration for the promise was the illegal issue of the 13,500 shares. No rule is better settled than that specific performance of an agreement, not founded on valuable consideration, will not be enforced in equity. I cannot understand how the certificates in question, plainly illegal and unauthorized, can be said to constitute such a consideration.

If there was an agreement between the Passaic Trust & Safe Deposit Company and the cemetery companies other than that which related to the issuance of share certificates, it is not set forth. If there was any agreement between Frank and that company, other than the receipt to which I am about to refer, the bill does not show it. The deposit company received from Frank 2,500 shares of the 13,500 issued and gave him a paper writing, called a "receipt," declaring that:

"Said shares are absolutely his property and as such subject only to a voluntarily created lien to secure the payment of certain mortgages of Herbert B. Gruber referred to in a certain declaration of trust of the Passaic Trust & Safe Deposit Company * * * in favor of the shareholders in East and West Ridgelaun Cemeteries."

The declaration of trust is not set forth. The receipt then goes on to say that the shares, or any money deposited in lieu thereof, shall not be considered subject to any other liens, except by agreement of the pledgor until the mortgages are first paid; that any shares may be withdrawn on a deposit of $40 for each share; that moneys deposited by him under receipt shall be subject to his order when drawn for the payment in whole or in part of any existing mortgage above referred to or when drawn in favor of or for the benefit of either cemetery. If he paid any of the mortgages in whole or in part, he was also at liberty to withdraw shares to the extent therein mentioned, as he might also do by consent of the cemetery companies.

Whether this was the private agreement of the pledgor and pledgee only, or whether, by the declaration of trust or other writing, the cemetery companies had an interest in it, we are not informed. Its terms are not shown to have been violated, and how it could be enforced, except according to its terms, is not evident. The pleader does not seem to make it the basis of any claim to relief, although he does charge generally that the trust company refuses to aid complainant by enforcing "said trust" so that the mortgage aforesaid may at least be paid and satisfied. The bill seems to proceed upon the theory, somewhat vaguely stated, that the court itself can create a lien of some sort upon the shares, both those in the trust company's hands and those in the defendant's hands, or can direct a part of them to be canceled. I can find nothing in the bill that would justify such relief, even on the assumption that the court could treat the shares as creating a legal obligation.

I think the demurrer should be allowed.

KOBYLIS v. PHILADELPHIA & R. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

RAILROADS \S 350(25)—DEATH AT CROSSING—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for death of plaintiff's husband at a grade crossing, contributory negligence of deceased, struck by an engine coming around a sharp curve without warning, where there was no watchman at the crossing, and the train which struck him was obscured by a passing freight train on another track, was for the jury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Louisa Kobylis against the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

William Clarke Mason, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Bertram D. Rearick, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. Appellant states but one "question involved" for our consideration, namely, the alleged contributory negligence of plaintiff's deceased husband. This is correctly disposed of in the following excerpts from the opinion of Judge Wessel, who presided at the trial:

"About 2 o'clock in the afternoon of September 14, 1915, Frank Kobylis met his death by being struck by an engine belonging to defendant, while it was being operated along defendant's right of way through the town of Locust Gap, in this state. His widow brought this action * * * for the recovery of damages, which she claimed were suffered by reason of defendant's negligence. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff. * * * Defendant moved for * * * judgment n. o. v. * * * In considering this motion plaintiff must be given the benefit of every fact and inference of fact pertinent to the issue which the jury could legitimately find from the evidence. * * * We must, therefore, consider the facts to have been as follows: Defendant operated a two-track railroad through the town of Locust Gap, crossing Bridge street at grade; they have been designated as the north and south bound tracks. At the time of the accident a trolley car was standing * * * [east of the railroad, near] Bridge street. Deceased was on his way * * * to the trolley, intending to use it to be transported to his home. * * * He had been running, and, when he reached a point in Bridge street [west of the railroad], he stopped, * * * and then proceeded on a walk, up a slight grade to about 4 feet from the first rail of the south-bound track, where he stopped again, looked and listened, and saw, coming toward him [on this south-bound, or near, track], about 200 feet away, a long freight train being drawn by four engines up a heavy grade at about 2 to 5 miles per hour. The engine which struck him was not then visible, * * * on account of 'the dead men's curve' in the railroad, some 496 feet distant from that crossing. No whistle was blown by the latter [until deceased was struck], nor [was there] any [sufficient] warning * * * of its approach; there was no signaling device, nor a watchman, at this crossing. [Deceased] continued to walk across the tracks at about 1 mile per hour. When he reached a point between the two tracks, he hesitated and then started forward, and, when he had almost reached the last rail of the second [or north-bound] track (only one more step being required to clear it), the right side of the bumper of the engine of the 'Newbury freight' train, * * * being operated on a down grade at the rate of 30 to 35 miles per hour, came in contact with his body, and he was killed. * * *

"Defendant contends that these facts clearly established deceased's contributory negligence; with that view we are unable to agree. * * * Kobylis having stopped about 4 feet from the first rail [of the south-bound track], having no knowledge of the approach of a train on the north-bound track, and seeing the heavy freight train approaching at 2 to 5 miles per hour, * * * some 200 feet distant [on the south-bound track], was justified in proceeding toward the trolley car. He had the right to rely upon the defendant's exercise of its duty in giving some warning of the approach of the 'Newbury freight' train. Wagner v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 252 Pa. 354, 97 Atl. 471. But defendant contends that he must have then seen that train, if he had used his eyes; that the distance from the place where he stopped to the point where he was struck was about 20 feet; * * * that the train was traveling 30 or 35 times faster than the deceased, and therefore, during the time the deceased walked from the point where he stopped until the time he was struck, the train had traveled 35 times 20, or at most 700 feet, while the measured distance from the center of Bridge street to the curve was 810 feet. As a mathematical demonstration this is persuasive; but it fails to take into consideration the width of the rails, the curve in the railroad, the distance traveled by the train during the period of time in which the deceased hesitated after he had [started] crossing, the fact that no person located the exact spot where deceased stopped, [or] the points between and the angle upon which the measurement was taken, and other facts. * * * Shaffer v. Pa. R. R. Co., 258 Pa. 288, 101 Atl. 962. * * * After Kobylis had [entered upon] the crossing, * * * to have attempted to retrace his steps might have resulted in his being overtaken by the heavy freight train. * * * Its noise and the close proximity of the two trains probably caused Kobylis to hesitate between the tracks for just enough time to bring him to his death. The jury has concluded that Kobylis stopped at a proper place, looked, and listened, and was not guilty of contributory negligence, but that defendant's negligence was the sole cause of the accident. The evidence to the contrary is, in our opinion, not so clear and positive as to justify us in interfering with its conclusion."

To the foregoing liberal quotation from the opinion of the court below we need only add that, in view of the considerable distance the train on the near track was from the crossing which plaintiff's husband attempted to traverse in order to board the trolley on the other side of the railroad, and the slow rate of speed at which this train was approaching, it could not be ruled as a matter of law that the position of danger in which the deceased subsequently found himself was knowingly and negligently assumed by him; that issue of fact was properly submitted to the jury and determined against appellant.

The assignments of error are overruled and the judgment is affirmed.

DI GRAZIO v. PENNSYLVANIA R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1913.)

1. RAILROADS §=350(8)—ACCIDENT AT CROSSING—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where a railroad company, on a dark night, pushed freight car with engine at rear, and headlight thus obscured, along a siding and over a sidewalk, where it struck plaintiff, who could not see the car approaching, and the evidence was conflicting as to whether a signal was given and as to speed of the car, the question of defendant's negligence was for the jury.

2. RAILROADS §=350(26)—ACCIDENT AT CROSSING—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where there was evidence that deceased, struck on a dark night by a car propelled by an engine from the rear, at a point where a switch track crossed the sidewalk, stopped, looked, and listened as he approached the siding, and the evidence as to whether a warning was given was conflicting, the question of contributory negligence was for the jury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Josephine Di Grazio against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

At 6:30 p. m., on January 23, 1917, plaintiff's husband, Carlo Di Grazio, was walking westwardly on the south sidewalk of Washington avenue, between Ninth and Tenth streets in the city of Philadelphia. There were two tracks on Washington avenue and a siding from the southern (east-bound) track across the south sidewalk into a coalyard.

Plaintiff introduced evidence to the effect that deceased stopped, looked, and listened as he approached the siding, that he proceeded to cross and had almost crossed the west rail when he was struck by a car which was being pushed by a locomotive into the siding, and was instantly killed. The night was very dark and there were no lights about the entrance or siding or upon the train or the car which was being pushed into the siding. There was evidence that the car which struck deceased was at the time moving at the rate of 15 miles per hour, and that no bell or other warning of its approach was sounded. There was also evidence that where shifting was necessary after dark it was customary to guard the pavement by a man with a lantern, but that at the time of the accident this precaution was not taken.

Defendant's proofs were that the car was moving slowly, that the headlight on the engine was burning, and that the car was plainly visible, and that the bell was rung as the train approached. Plaintiff's witnesses testified that if the light on the engine was burning it was obstructed by the car it was pushing into the siding and which struck deceased.

Verdict for plaintiff for $10,000, and judgment thereon. Defendant appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Sharswood Brinton, of Philadelphia, for appellant. John J. McDevitt, Jr., of Philadelphia, for appellee.

PER OURJAM. [1, 2] That this case was for the jury clearly appears from the facts to be found in the reporter's statement of them, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

SMOKER v. BALDWIN LOCOMOTIVE WORKS.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS \S 706(6)—ACCIDENT IN STREET—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether defendant's truck driver, driving eastward over a bridge on the south street car track, was guilty of negligence in turning to the left on the other track to avoid a car approaching him from the rear, instead of turning to the right, where he had ample space to clear the car, so as to render his employer liable for injuries to the motorman on a west-bound street car, with which he collided head on, immediately after emerging from a cloud of smoke emitted from a train passing beneath the bridge, held for the jury.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS \S 706(7)—ACCIDENT IN STREET—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether a motorman on a west-bound street car passing over a bridge was negligent, precluding recovery for injuries by a head-on collision with defendant's truck on its emerging from a cloud of smoke emitted by a train passing beneath the bridge, held for the jury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by William Smoker against the Baldwin Locomotive Works. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Maurice W. Sloan, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Victor Frey and Augustus Trask Ashton, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. William Smoker sued to recover for personal injuries, alleged to be due to defendant's negligence. The verdict favored plaintiff, judgment was entered accordingly, and defendant has appealed.

At trial in the court below, defendant presented no evidence, but asked for binding instructions, and, subsequently, for judgment n. o. v. Appellant assigns the refusal of these requests as error.

[1, 2] When the testimony is viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, as it must be on this appeal, there is ample evidence to sustain the following statement of facts contended for by appellee: On May 29, 1917, shortly after midnight, defendant's heavy automobile truck, lighted only by two small oil lamps in front, was being operated eastwardly on the east-bound car track of Spring Garden street, Philadelphia. An east-bound street car came up behind the truck at a point 80 feet east of Thirty-First street, upon the Spring Garden street bridge over the Schuylkill river; in response to a signal from the motorman of this car, defendant's chauffeur turned his truck to the left and entered upon the west-bound track. At the point in question there was sufficient space to accommodate the truck on the right, between the east-bound track and the curb, and no necessity existed for turning in the other direction. Just as the east-bound car passed the truck, a cloud of smoke was thrown over the street railway tracks by a locomotive, which at that moment passed under the bridge; the smoke being so dense it completely concealed from the view of defendant's chauffeur the approach of a west-bound trolley car upon which plaintiff was acting as motorman, and, from the vision of the latter, the former's motor truck. Notwithstanding these conditions, the chauffeur ran directly on, in the west-bound track, for a distance of nearly 70 feet from the point where he first turned in, and, just as the truck emerged from the eastern edge of the smoke cloud, a collision occurred between it and plaintiff's car. The truck was still coming head-on, in the west-bound track, when only 10 feet away from the car; but, judging from the position of the former after the accident, the chauffeur, immediately before the actual collision, must have attempted a quick turn to the right, too late, however, to change the situation of danger which he had created. The trolley car was running not more than 4 miles an hour, and, immediately upon seeing the automobile in the track, plaintiff threw off his power, apparently doing all he could to avoid the collision, having previously rung his bell. There was evidence to show that, under ordinary circumstances, the bridge upon which the accident happened was sufficiently illuminated to permit of seeing "a square away."

The questions of the alleged negligence of defendant's chauffeur (who admittedly was acting within the scope of his employment at the time), first, in turning at all into the path of west-bound cars when there was no necessity for that course, and, next, in traveling eastwardly for a distance of 70 feet through smoke and steam which concealed him from oncoming west-bound cars, as also the alleged contributory negligence of plaintiff in not avoiding the collision, were submitted in a charge which is not complained of. On the evidence at bar, the issues involved were for the jury, and the court below did not err in so ruling.

The judgment is affirmed.

MINDLIN et al. v. SAXONY SPINNING CO.
(W. H. LORIMER SONS CO., Garnishee).

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. ATTACHMENT §92—FOREIGN ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVIT.

In foreign attachment the affidavit must set out a good cause of action and such facts as give the court jurisdiction, and must not be ambiguous nor depend on conjecture or inference.

2. ATTACHMENT §113 — FOREIGN ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVIT.

To support a writ of foreign attachment, it must be averred that defendant has property within the jurisdiction, and that he lives beyond it.

3. ATTACHMENT §102 — FOREIGN ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVIT.

Affidavit in foreign attachment for breach of contract of sale of yarn, based on a written order, must state the acceptance of the order either in writing or by parol and a breach of the contract, and also when the goods should have been delivered, and the market price at such time.

4. ATTACHMENT §122(2) — FOREIGN ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVIT—AMENDMENT.

Absence of averment in affidavit that property attached in a foreign attachment was owned by defendant may be supplied by amendment.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Henry Mindlin and Louis Rosen-man, copartners as Mindlin & Rosenman, against the Saxony Spinning Company, defendant, and the William H. Lorimer Sons Company, garnishee. From an order dissolving the attachment, plaintiff's appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Paul Freeman and Alfred Aarons, both of Philadelphia, for appellants. Julius C. Levi, of Philadelphia, for appellee William H. Lorimer Sons Co.

WALLING, J. This is an action of foreign attachment in assumpsit by a New York firm against a North Carolina corporation for alleged breach of contract for sale of cotton yarn. No service was had on defendant; but, when ruled by the garnishee, plaintiffs filed an affidavit of cause of action, which the court below held insufficient and dissolved the attachment, wherein we see no error.

[1] The affidavit must set out a good cause of action and such facts as give the court jurisdiction, and must not be ambiguous nor depend upon conjecture or inference. See Hallowell v. Tenney Canning Co., 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 60. The object of a writ of foreign attachment is to compel the appearance of defendant; and, to authorize such writ, he must have property within the jurisdiction of the court, otherwise there is nothing to attach and no means of compelling an appearance or of securing plaintiff's claim. See Raymond v. Leishman, 243 Pa. 64, 89 Atl. 791, L. R. A. 1915A, 400, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 780; Pennsylvania Railroad Co. v. Pennock, 51 Pa. 244; also opinion of Sharswood, P. J., in Delaware Mutual Insurance Co. v. Walker, 1 Phila. 104. The first object of such proceeding is to seize the property of the absent debtor; when there is none the action fails.

[2] To support the writ, it is as necessary that defendant have property within the jurisdiction as that he be beyond it. Both are essential and must be averred. Where the writ has been served, it must appear in the affidavit that the property attached is that of the defendant. It is as possible to ascertain the ownership of property as the whereabouts of a defendant. It does not follow, because such writ binds property thereafter coming into the hands of the garnishee, that it can be sustained without something in the first instance to attach. The reason for the rule is well illustrated by the court below:

"Here we have a citizen of the state of New York issuing an attachment in the state of Pennsylvania against a defendant resident in the state of North Carolina, summoning as garnishee a third person who does not appear to have in his possession any property belonging to defendant. If this case be permitted to proceed upon the paper filed by plaintiffs, a judgment may be entered against defendant for want of an appearance and damages assessed in a sum of upwards of $12,000; that judgment will appear in the records of this court, and its effect upon defendant's credit will be the same as if a judgment had been obtained in an ordinary personal action in adverse proceedings. Thus a creditor would, to all practical purposes, be able to compel nonresidents of every state in the union to appear in our courts, even if there was not within the jurisdiction of our courts, at the time the attachment issued, any property belonging to their debtor."

[4] The absence of averment as to defendant's property may be treated as formal and supplied by amendment. Hallowell v. Tenney Canning Co., supra; Schneck v. Freeman, 55 Pa. Super. Ct. 38.

[3] There are more serious objections. The affidavit purports to set out a claim for $12,417.21, for damages on account of defendant's failure to deliver cotton yarn, in accordance with a certain contract based on plaintiffs' order, viz.:

"New York, Sept. 23, 1914.

"Copy.

"Saxony Spinning Co., Lincolnton, N. C.—Gentlemen: Kindly enter our order for goods mentioned below. To be delivered as follows:

"Deliveries to commence upon completion of previous order.

"Yours truly,

Mindlin & Rosenman."

Then follows a description of the goods in the language of the business, and on the margin the words, "To quantities 50,000 lbs." The affidavit avers that, "Said order was duly accepted by defendant and partial deliveries thereunder, to wit, 39,236 pounds, were made to plaintiffs and paid for by plaintiffs," but does not state when or how accepted, whether in writing or by parol, nor when the partial deliveries thereunder were made. The allegation as to due acceptance of the order is a legal conclusion. There is no averment as to when if ever the deliveries under the previous order were completed, and there is nothing to show when or in what amounts the yarn mentioned in the above-quoted order should have been delivered. The affidavit avers that on May 15, 1917, defendant finally and unequivocally refused to deliver the balance of the yarn; but that is a conclusion, and the real facts are not set out, and it does not appear whether such alleged refusal was oral or written. The measure of damages would be the difference between the market price and the contract price at the time and place of delivery. See Hauptman v. Pa. W. Home for Blind Men, 258 Pa. 427, 102 Atl. 142. Here there is nothing to show when the goods should have been delivered or what the market price then was; hence no basis for assessment of damages. The affidavit sets out the market price on one day only, to wit, May 15, 1917. But there is nothing to indicate that it was the time called for in the contract for the delivery of all or any of the goods in question. Plaintiffs could not change defendant's liability by demanding a delivery at a time different from that named in the contract. The defects above mentioned, and other uncertainties in plaintiffs' affidavit of cause of action, fully warranted the order of the court below dissolving the attachment. It is not necessary to refer separately to the other contract set out in plaintiffs' claim, as it involves only $32.45, and some of the defects to which we have called attention apply equally to that branch of the case.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the order dissolving attachment is affirmed.

HAGER et al. v. PHILADELPHIA & R. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. CARRIERS ~~vs~~ 308(8) — INJURY TO PASSENGER—NEGLIGENCE OF EMPLOYÉ.

A railroad company is liable for negligent acts of its employes in assisting passengers from its cars.

2. CARRIERS ~~vs~~ 320(25) — INJURY TO PASSENGER—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action to recover for injuries to plaintiff when alighting from a car at a station, whether negligence of defendant's employes assisting her to alight was the cause of her injury held a question for the jury.

3. CARRIERS ~~vs~~ 347(1)—INJURY TO PASSENGER — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where the question of contributory negligence of plaintiff in alighting from car was in doubt, it must be submitted to the jury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Mary Elizabeth Hager, by her next friend, William P. Hager, and William P. Hager in his own right, against the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

William Clarke Mason, of Philadelphia, for appellant. John Weaver, of Philadelphia, for appellees.

WALLING, J. This is an action of trespass by husband and wife to recover for personal injuries to the wife. On June 19, 1915, plaintiffs took passage on one of defendant's excursion trains to go from Philadelphia to Forrest Park with a large party for an annual picnic. Where trains stop at the park, there is a gravel or cinder walk used as a platform, which is at least three feet below the bottom step of passenger cars; making a step or jump down of that distance in alighting. The evidence for plaintiffs is to the effect that the train was filled with passengers, and as it stopped the brakeman at the rear of the car in which they were riding called, "This way out"; and that Mr.

Hager was the first passenger to go out the rear door and off the car; and that he, seeing a brakeman there to assist the ladies went in search of a table and benches for the picnic dinner; also, that Mrs. Hager, coming out after several other passengers, walked down the car steps and saw a brakeman standing on the walk, who with his left hand was assisting lady passengers from said car down to the walk and with his right hand was performing a like service for ladies alighting from the next car; that he took her left hand, she released her hold from the handrail, and, just as her foot was leaving the bottom step, when she was committed to the act of alighting, he suddenly and without warning jerked his hand away, causing her to fall to the ground and strike her knee upon the rail of an adjoining track, by which she received serious and permanent injury. Mrs. Hager was then 28 years of age. Her story was corroborated by other witnesses, but was flatly contradicted by evidence for the defense, which was to the effect that no such accident happened and that Mrs. Hager's fall was the result of tripping on a rail after she had safely alighted and left the walk, and that the trainmen did not hear of the accident until the return trip that afternoon. The case was carefully submitted to the jury, who found for plaintiffs. From judgments entered thereon, the defendant brought these appeals.

[1] Mrs. Hager was a passenger and entitled to protection as such until she was landed upon the ground or platform. See Bickley v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 257 Pa. 389, 376, 101 Atl. 654; Brooks v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 218 Pa. 1, 66 Atl. 872. It is the duty of a common carrier of passengers to exercise the highest practical degree of care and to afford them a safe means of ingress and egress to and from the car or other vehicle of transportation. Mack v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 247 Pa. 598, 602, 98 Atl. 618. A railroad company is liable for the negligent acts of employees while assisting passengers to or from its cars. Gensemer v. Conestoga Traction Co., 237 Pa. 224, 84 Atl. 901.

[2] The rules above mentioned are not seriously controverted, but it is earnestly urged that Mrs. Hager was guilty of such contributory negligence as to prevent recovery, in that she was relying implicitly upon the brakeman and not looking out for her own safety. Her answers on cross-examination would seem to warrant such contention, and, had she stepped off the side of a platform or into a hole or stumbled upon some visible object it might be sustained. But a plaintiff's want of care will defeat his action only when it was an inducing cause of the accident or contributed thereto. Gould v. McKenna, 86 Pa. 297, 27 Am. Rep. 705; Creed v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 86 Pa. 139, 145, 27 Am. Rep. 698; McClung v. Penna. T. Cab Co., 252 Pa. 478, 97 Atl. 694. Whether Mrs. Hager's failure to look in advance, for the purpose of determining the distance from the car steps to the ground, contributed to the accident, was for the jury. Had she known the exact distance, would that have changed her conduct or the result of the sudden withdrawal of the brakeman's hand? It was a regular place for receiving and discharging passengers, and many were safely alighting. Here the real cause of the accident, as claimed by plaintiffs and found by the jury, was the act of the brakeman in suddenly withdrawing his hand at the critical moment; with that, her alleged want of care had no connection. The fall seemingly resulted from that act, and it is not clear that it could have been prevented by watchfulness on her part. She was looking forward, but does not recall just where, and we cannot say that any amount of looking on her part would have prevented his act or the fall which resulted. While required to exercise ordinary care, she was justified in relying upon the brakeman to assist her, for that was the duty he assumed to perform, and she was not bound to anticipate that he would be negligent.

[3] Where the question of contributory negligence is in doubt, it must be submitted to the jury. McCracken v. Consolidated Traction Co. (No. 1) 201 Pa. 373, 381, 50 Atl. 830, 88 Am. St. Rep. 814. It is at least doubtful whether her seeming want of care contributed to the accident. As to the duty of a passenger to ascertain in advance of alighting the distance from the car step to the station platform, defendant relies upon some expressions in the opinion of the court in Del., Lack., etc., R. Co. v. Napheys, 90 Pa. 135. What that case decides, however, is that, the fact that a passenger upon alighting from a car fell and hurt her knee did not of itself create a presumption of negligence against the railroad company; and also that under the evidence there presented, the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were for the jury.

As a brakeman was present to help the ladies, it cannot be affirmed as a legal conclusion that Mr. Hager was negligent in failing to wait and assist his wife in alighting. Owing to the congested traffic, it might have been difficult for him to do so; and, in any event, whether he should or not was a question of fact.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgments are affirmed.

In re PUTERBAUGH'S ESTATE.

Appeal of ROBINS et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. ADOPTION \Leftrightarrow 18 — STATUS OF ADOPTED CHILD.

While the law gives an adopted child a right to inherit, it does not change his identity, nor make him a child in fact.

2. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 497(2) — CONSTRUCTION — BEQUEST TO "CHILDREN."

Under bequest to "children," grandchildren and other remote issue are excluded, unless an intent is shown by the will to provide for children of a deceased child, in cases where the will would otherwise remain inoperative, or the will clearly shows that the word "children" was used in a more extensive sense.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Children.]

3. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 497(5) — CONSTRUCTION — "CHILD."

Where testator gave his residuary estate in trust for his son for life, and on his death absolutely to his child or children and their heirs, and the son died, leaving only a child adopted after the testator's death, the adopted child was not a "child" within the meaning of the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Child.]

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Monroe County.

In the matter of the estate of Isaac T. Puterbaugh, deceased. From a decree dismissing exceptions to adjudication, H. P. Robins and Edwin Robins appeal. Reversed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Wilton A. Erdman, of Stroudsburg, for appellants. A. Mitchell Palmer and O. Raymond Bensinger, both of Stroudsburg, for appellee.

STEWART, J. Isaac T. Puterbaugh, late of Monroe county, died March 26, 1889, testate, leaving to survive him a son, Harrison S., who at that time was about 40 years of age, married, but without children. This son, Harrison S., died intestate May 26, 1916, leaving a widow, no natural-born child or children, but an adopted child Edna, who had been adopted by him under a decree of court of May 29, 1894, and is here the appellee, now Mrs. Edna Puterbaugh Marsh. By the will of Isaac T. Puterbaugh, he directed, inter alia, as follows:

"Fifth. All the rest and residue of my estate consisting of personal property, I give and bequeath to my executor hereinafter named, in trust for the following purpose, viz.: That my said executor shall keep the same invested or invest the same in good securities and shall pay the interest and income thereof to my said son, Harrison S., during his natural life, and at his death shall give, assign, and transfer the said estate absolutely to his child or children and their heirs, * * * in the event of my said son, Harrison S., dying without leaving any child or children then" over.

After the death of Harrison S., the trustee filed his account, showing a balance in the trust fund of $7,925.66, which the auditing judge, Hon. M. F. Sando, specially presiding, awarded, after payment of costs and expenses, to Mrs. Edna Puterbaugh Marsh, the adopted child of Harrison S. To this final order exceptions were filed by H. P. Robins and Edwin Robins who claim the entire fund as residuary legatees, to whom the entire fund resulted under the will in the event of Harrison S. dying without leaving child or children. Upon the exceptions being overruled, this appeal was taken.

[1] It brings before us the single controverted question of who is entitled to the fund, whether the adopted child of Harrison S., or the residuary legatees under the will or the testator, who were to take in the event of Harrison S. dying without child or children. In this as in every other testamentary disposition which becomes the subject of judicial construction or interpretation, the first inquiry must be to ascertain, if possible, the intention of the testator as expressed in his will, which, once ascertained, must be given effect. The peculiarity here is that, while the will is entirely free from ambiguity in itself, inasmuch as the beneficiaries are not mentioned by name, owing to certain conditions and circumstances which arose subsequent to the testator's death, more or less difficulty is encountered when we come to apply it to the person or persons designated by the testator in distinction from all others. The gift here, over upon the death of Harrison S., is to "his child or children and their heirs, * * * and in the event of his dying without leaving any child or children, then" over. Whom did the testator understand to be comprehended within the words "children of Harrison S.," as he here employed them? It is proper enough to assume that he knew of existing legislation that enabled any proper person, by and with the consent of the parent or guardian of a minor child and with the approval of the court, to adopt it as his child and heir; but it is quite as fair and proper to assume that he knew at the same time of the clear distinction the law makes between natural and adopted children; for instance, that giving the latter the right to inherit does not make him a child in fact (Com. v. Nancrede, 32 Pa. 389), that one adopted has the rights of a child without being a child, and that the identity of the child is not changed (Schafer v. Eneu, 54 Pa. 304). We derive but little light from these assumptions. A circumstance which we think, however, goes very far in support of appellant's contention, is that the adoption of this appellee occurred four years after the death of the testator, and nothing is to be found in the will suggesting that, so far as testator knew, the adoption of a child was then contemplated.

Not a single extrinsic fact can be pointed to as indicating that the testator intended that any one not of his blood should share in his bounty, while the will itself may be searched in vain for any indication tending even remotely to show that he so intended.

[2, 3] To give the words of the gift to Harrison's child or children a meaning which would include adopted children would be to enlarge them beyond their natural meaning and proper import. This was declared where the effect was made to have the same words include grandchildren in Hallowell v. Phipps, 2 Whart. 376, a case requiring less strain, so at least it seems to the writer, than the effort to enlarge them, so as to include adopted children, since ordinarily and by common usage these words are understood to mean immediate offspring or descendants. In the case referred to Justice Rogers, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"Under a bequest to children, grandchildren, and other remote issue are excluded, unless it be the apparent intention of the testator, disclosed by his will, to provide for the children of the deceased child. But such construction can only arise from a clear intention or necessary implication; as where there are not other children than grandchildren, or when the term 'children' is further explained by a limitation over in default of issue. The word 'children' does not ordinarily, and properly speaking, comprehend grandchildren, or issue generally. Their being included in that term is only permitted in two cases, viz. from necessity, which occurs when the will would remain inoperative, unless the sense of the word 'children' were extended beyond its natural import, and where the testator has clearly shown, by other words, that he did not intend to use the term 'children' in the proper actual meaning, but in a more extensive sense."

We cite this case, not overlooking the lack of strict analogy between the cases, the one an effort to extend the meaning of children in a will so as to include grandchildren, the other to extend it so as to include children by adoption, merely to show the disposition of the courts to confine and limit the word "children" in its application, when it occurs in a will, to its natural import, except where the testator has clearly shown by other words that he intended to use the term in a more extensive sense. No such word can be found in this will. In Hunt's Estate, 133 Pa. 260, 19 Atl. 548, 19 Am. St. Rep. 640, Mr. Justice Green, referring to the rule declared by Mr. Justice Rogers in the case above cited, says:

"With us it has never been departed from, but has been enforced in many instances, and never with any abatement of any of its terms. * * * It is very clear that one of the two exceptions to the operation of the rule does not exist in the present case. There are other actual children of the testator, to whom the words of the codicil do apply, and hence there is no reason or necessity for departing from the ordinary meaning of the word 'children,' as designating the legatees mentioned in the codicil. The other exception is 'where the testator has clearly shown by other words that he did not intend to use the term "children" in the proper, actual meaning, but in a more extensive sense.' All the authorities agree that such intention must clearly appear, and, if it does not, the word 'children' must be confined to its ordinary meaning."

No reason can be suggested why this rule should not apply as well to the case of adopted children as to grandchildren, where the sole inquiry is as to testator's meaning and intention. We think it does so apply.

The case calls for no discussion of the several statutes relating to the adoption of children; these are clearly not involved, for, however construed, they could reflect no light on the one pertinent inquiry which has regard to testator's intention. It is not a question of the right of an adopted child to inherit, but simply a question of the testator's intention with respect to those who are to share in his estate. We see nothing in the will, or in the circumstances surrounding it, indicating any intention on part of the testator to include in his bequest to the child or children of his son, Harrison S., any but his immediate offspring.

The decree awarding the fund to Mrs. Edna Puterbaugh Marsh is reversed, and the record is remitted for distribution in accordance with the views here expressed; the cost to be paid out of the fund.

POTTSVILLE UNION TRACTION CO. v. BOROUGH OF ST. CLAIR et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. INJUNCTION ¶163(1) — TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—APPREHENSION OF DANGER.

An order dissolving a preliminary injunction was properly entered, where there was no immediate or impending damage to plaintiff, but only an apprehension thereof.

2. STREET RAILROADS ¶57(5)—INJUNCTION—OBSTRUCTING STREET CAR LINE.

Equity has jurisdiction to enjoin a municipality from obstructing the tracks of a street railroad company, and otherwise interfering with the operation of its cars in the municipality.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Schuylkill County.

Bill by the Pottsville Union Traction Company against the Borough of St. Clair and others. From a decree dissolving preliminary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed, with leave to apply for reinstatement of injunction.

Bechtel, P. J., filed the following opinion in the common pleas:

[1] And now, October 6, 1917, we dissolve the preliminary injunction granted in this case, for the reason, first, that we do not feel that we have any jurisdiction, under the decision in the case of Bellevue Borough, Appellant, v. Ohio Valley Water Co., 245 Pa. 114, 91 Atl. 236, and for the further reason that we feel that the evidence has not disclosed any immediate or impending damage to the plaintiff; it discloses rather an apprehension of danger.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Byron A. Milner, of Philadelphia, Otto E. Farquhar, of Pottsville, M. M. Burke, of Shenandoah, and F. O. Newbourg, Jr., and Joseph De F. Junkin, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. J. Milton Boone and William Wilhelm, both of Pottsville, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. [2] The first reason given by the court below for dissolving the preliminary injunction is not good. It had undoubted jurisdiction of appellant's bill, which averred that the appellees had threatened to and were about to place and erect fences and others obstructions across the tracks and roadbed of appellant upon and along the streets and highways in the borough of St. Clair, and to otherwise interfere with, impede, and prevent the operation of the company's cars in said borough. In Bellevue Borough v. Ohio Valley Water Company, 245 Pa. 114, 91 Atl. 236, a very different situation was presented, and all that was there decided was that the question of the reasonableness of rates established by public service corporations must, in the first instance, be submitted to the Public Service Commission when challenged.

We have not been convinced that the court erred in dissolving the injunction for the second reason given, and the appeal is dismissed, at appellant's costs, with leave to it to apply for a reinstatement of the injunction, if appellees should actually threaten or attempt to do the things complained of.

HUNT v. SNYDER.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1913.)

1. JUDGMENT \Leftrightarrow 818(7) — FULL FAITH AND CREDIT—RES JUDICATA.

The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive in an action thereon in another state only in so far as it is responsive to the pleadings, and in such other action evidence may be offered to show that the subject-matter involved was not included in the original action or that the court was without jurisdiction.

2. JUDGMENT \Leftrightarrow 822(3) — RES JUDICATA—ISSUES.

A judgment in the court of Pennsylvania in a prosecution for desertion and nonsupport of defendant's wife, revoking an order allowing monthly payment for support, is not res judicata in action in New York to recover money paid by the wife for necessities for herself and children in New York, including a time subsequent to the decision in the desertion proceeding.

3. JUDGMENT \Leftrightarrow 822(3) — FOREIGN JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where a judgment of a court of Pennsylvania is interposed in a proceeding in New York under a plea of res judicata, an adverse holding on such plea is conclusive in a subsequent action in Pennsylvania on the judgment rendered in the proceeding in New York.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Schuylkill County.

Action by William L. Hunt against William Snyder. Judgment for plaintiff for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

James B. Reilly, of Pottsville, M. M. Burke, of Shenandoah, and C. A. Whitehouse, of Pottsville, for appellant. J. O. Ulrich, of Tamaqua, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense in an action on a judgment obtained in the Supreme Court of Niagara county, N. Y. The action on which the foreign judgment was secured was instituted by defendant's wife to recover the cost of necessities she alleged were purchased by her for herself and two children and paid for out of her earnings. The answer averred plaintiff deserted defendant and, on February 1, 1912, caused his arrest in Schuylkill county, Pa., on a charge of desertion and nonsupport, and that the court of that county, after hearing, found plaintiff was not entitled to support and maintenance, because of misconduct, and dismissed her complaint. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict for $3,170 and costs rendered in favor of plaintiff, on which judgment was entered and subsequently assigned to William L. Hunt, the use plaintiff.

Defendant contends the judgment obtained in New York is not conclusive for the reason that court was without jurisdiction as the rights of the parties were determined by the courts of Pennsylvania previous to the institution of the New York action. In the desertion proceeding in Schuylkill county the court made an order directing defendant to pay for the support of his wife the sum of $20 a month. This order, however, was revoked in 1914. In the meantime the sum of $330 had been paid the wife under the order, for which sum an allowance was made against plaintiff's claim. The affidavit of defense in the present case recited the proceeding in Schuylkill county, the making of the order for payment of $20 a month and its subsequent revocation, and averred the action of the court was conclusive of the rights of the parties, and, consequently, the New York courts were without jurisdiction of the matter in controversy. On the other hand, plaintiff relies upon the New York judgment as being conclusive of the matters adjudicated in that jurisdiction.

[1] The general rule is that a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is final and conclusive, and must be given full faith and credit in other jurisdictions as to all matters in controversy, or which with proper diligence might have been interposed as a defense in the original action. Marah v. Pier, 4 Rawle, 273, 26 Am. Dec. 131; Bell v. Allegheny County, 184 Pa. 296, 39 Atl. 227, 63 Am. St. Rep. 795; Stilwell v. Smith, 219 Pa. 36, 67 Atl. 910; Browarsky's Estate, 252 Pa. 35, 41, 97 Atl. 91. It is also equally well settled that a judgment is conclusive only in so far as responsive to the pleadings, and consequently, in an action brought on a judgment of another state, evidence may be offered to show the subject-matter involved was not included in the proceeding in the foreign jurisdiction, or that the latter court was without jurisdiction of the cause of action or of the party. Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 11 Sup. Ct. 773, 35 L. Ed. 464; Thormann v. Frame, 176 U. S. 350, 20 Sup. Ct. 446, 44 L. Ed. 500; Price v. Schaeffer, 161 Pa. 530, 29 Atl. 279, 25 L. R. A. 699, and cases cited.

[2] In applying these principles it will be noted the judgment of the New York court was not obtained in a proceeding for desertion, but the action was to recover money paid by the wife for necessaries for herself and children in the state of New York, and included a period of time subsequent to the final order in the desertion proceedings in Pennsylvania. The wife resided in the state of New York and the summons was duly served on defendant in that state. The New York courts, accordingly, had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, and, as shown by the answer filed, the defense now interposed was likewise set up as a defense in that action. So far as the record sets forth the proceeding in the New York case involved the defense now set up. The judgment of the court of Schuylkill county in revoking its earlier order of support was conclusive as to the right of the wife to support in desertion proceedings at that particular time, but would not necessarily be conclusive as to a subsequent time on a different state of facts, or in an action of assumpsit to recover money paid by the wife for necessaries.

[3] The previous judgment of the court of quarter sessions of Schuylkill county as a matter of defense in the proceeding in the New York court was passed upon and determined by that court and from its decision no appeal was taken. Its judgment must therefore be considered conclusive in the present action.

The judgment is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH ex rel. SCHUYLKILL COUNTY v. SITLER et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. COURTS — 478—ATTACHMENT—FUNDS IN HANDS OF CLERK OF COURT.

A fund held by a clerk of court in his official capacity is in custodia legis, and is exempt from attachment issuing out of other court; but, where held in his private capacity, the fund is attachable.

2. BAIL — 73—ATTACHMENT—CASH DEPOSIT.

Under Act March 14, 1877 (P. L. 3), authorizing clerk of quarter sessions to take bail, he is not authorized to accept a deposit of money in lieu thereof, and, if he does so, the fund is attachable.

3. STIPULATIONS — 14(5)—CONSTRUCTION.

Where judgments were entered on bond of tax collector, and the court refused to open them, and an appeal was taken as to one of the judgments only, under agreement that its disposition should be conclusive as to the other judgment, the agreement did not prevent the issuing of process on the other judgment pending the appeal.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Schuylkill County.

Action by the Commonwealth, on the relation of Schuylkill County, against O. B. Sitler and others. From an order quashing a writ of attachment execution, relator appeals. Reversed, and attachment reinstated.

See, also, 258 Pa. 570, 102 Atl. 272; 260 Pa. 550, 108 Atl. 925.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

Arthur L. Shay, C. A. Snyder, and John F. Whalen, all of Pottsville, for appellant. J. O. Ulrich, of Tamaqua, for appellees.

BROWN, C. J. O. B. Sitler, a defaulting tax collector for the borough of Tamaqua for the years 1913, 1914, and 1915, was convicted of embezzlement and was allowed to appeal to the Superior Court from the sentence imposed upon him by the court of quarter sessions of Schuylkill county. In allowing his appeal the Superior Court ordered him to enter into a recognizance, in the sum of $5,000, for his appearance if the judgment of the court of quarter sessions should be affirmed. It was affirmed, and application for an appeal to this court was refused. Instead of entering into a recognizance, as directed by the order allowing his appeal to the Superior Court, Sitler's father, W. A. Sitler, deposited, in lieu of it, $5,000 in cash with the clerk of the court of quarter sessions, and this money was in the hands of the clerk when the judgment of that court was affirmed by the Superior Court. While Sitler's appeal was there pending, judgments were entered in the court of common pleas of the county upon the bonds given by him as tax collector; W. A. Sitler, his father, being a surety on each of them. One of these judgments was entered in the court below to May term, 1916, No. 328, and application to open it was refused. The refusal to open it was affirmed by this court. Commonwealth ex rel. Schuylkill County et al. v. Sitler et al., 258 Pa. 570, 102 Atl. 272. After C. B. Sitler's petition for an appeal to this court from the judgment of the Superior Court had been refused, he surrendered himself to the sheriff of the county, to comply with the sentence of the court of quarter sessions, and this attachment in execution thereupon was issued by the county of Schuylkill upon one of the judgments entered on the tax collector's bond. The garnishee named was the clerk of the court of quarter sessions, with whom W. A. Sitler had deposited the $5,000 in cash in lieu of a recognizance. Upon his motion the attachment was quashed, because (1) it had been issued upon a judgment as to which there was an agreement by counsel of record that the action of this court on the appeal taken from the refusal to open the judgment to May term, 1916, No. 329, should be controlling; and (2) the money deposited with the clerk of the court of quarter sessions was in the custody of the law, and therefore not liable to attachment. From the order quashing the attachment the county has appealed.

[8] The agreement that the disposition of the appeal taken from the refusal of the court below to open the judgment entered to May term, 1916, No. 328, "should be conclusive of the facts in this judgment," though somewhat ambiguous, evidently meant that the judgment upon which this attachment issued should be opened only if, by our decree, the judgment entered to May term, 1916, No. 328, should be opened. There was no agreement that, during the pendency of the appeal to this court, process should not issue on any of the other judgments which the lower court had refused to open, and there was therefore no violation of the agreement in issuing this attachment ad lev. deb. on the judgment entered to May term, 1916, No. 329. In issuing it, the county of Schuylkill assumed the risk of a reversal by this court, which might have had the effect of rendering the attachment fruitless; but there was no such reversal. In holding that the attachment was issued in violation of the agreement, the learned court below made it broader than was warranted by its terms as brought up on this appeal.

[1] If the moneys attached in the hands of the clerk of quarter sessions were held by him in his official capacity as such officer, by virtue of some law authorizing him to so hold it, they would undoubtedly have been exempt from attachment, for they would have been in custodia legis. The test of their exemption is a very simple one. The clerk was either authorized to receive them, or he was not so authorized, and, if not, they were not in his hands as an officer of the law. No statute authorized him to receive the moneys. His only authority, when the Superior Court allowed Sitler's appeal, was to take bail or a recognizance for the defendant's appearance under the act of March 14, 1877 (P. L. 3), which is as follows:

"The clerks of the several courts of quarter sessions and over and terminer of this commonwealth shall hereafter have authority, in all cases, excepting in the case of a defendant charged with treason, felonious homicide or voluntary manslaughter, to take bail and recognizances, and approve such bonds as may be required by law, whenever the law judge or judges, and associate judges, if there be associate judges, shall be absent from the county seat, or shall be unable on account of sickness or other cause to attend to the duties of their office."

[2] The order of the Superior Court was that Sitler should enter into a recognizance to appear, and the clerk of the court should have taken nothing else, for nothing else would have been in compliance with that order. If a practice has arisen under which clerks of the courts of quarter sessions accept cash deposits in lieu of bonds or recognizances, no such practice is authorized by law. A general power to take bail does not authorize the receipt of a deposit of money in lieu of it. U. S. v. Faw, 1 Cranch, C. C. 486, Fed. Cas. No. 15,078; Butler v. Foster, 14 Ala. 323; Dunlap v. Patterson, 74 N. Y. 145, 30 Am. Rep. 283. And where a clerk or other officer of the court holds funds in his private capacity, and not by statutory provision, the fund is attachable in his hands. Weaver, Adm'r. v. Davis, 47 Ill. 235; Morse v. Holt, 22 Me. 180. The deposit of the $5,000 by W. A. Sitler with the clerk of the court was a voluntary act on his part, neither required nor authorized by law, and the receipt of the deposit by the clerk was equally unauthorized. The money was therefore to be regarded as W. A. Sitler's, and liable to attachment for his indebtedness.

The order of the court below, quashing the attachment, is reversed, and the attachment is reinstated; the costs on this appeal to be paid by the appellee.

PENNSYLVANIA POWER CO. v. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. April 22, 1918.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES §=185 — WATER COMPANIES — APPLICATION FOR CHARTER.

Under Act June 7, 1907 (P. L. 455), relating to application for charter for a water company, precise location of a dam to be built need not be set forth in application.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES §=185 — WATER COMPANIES — APPLICATION FOR CHARTER—CHANGE OF PLAN.

Where application for charter of water company set forth name of stream in which it proposed to construct dam or dams, and application was approved by water supply commission, public service commission may subsequently approve of application, though amended plan is produced, showing a smaller number of dams and one at less height than that shown on original plan.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES §=185 — ERECTION OF DAMS—JURISDICTION OF WATER SUPPLY COMMISSION.

The water supply commission, and not the public service commission, has jurisdiction to pass on the final plans of a water company after its incorporation.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ¶185 — WATER COMPANIES—CHARTER—APPROVAL—REVIEW BY SUPREME COURT.

The Supreme Court will not reverse an order approving incorporation of a water company, where application had been approved by water supply commission, and public service commission had heard evidence, so as to enable it to act intelligently on the subject.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ¶185 — WATER COMPANIES — CHARTER — COMPETITION.

An order of the Public Service Commission, approving application for a charter of a water company, will not be reversed at the instance of an older company because the new company would be a competitor.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ¶185 — WATER COMPANIES—APPROVAL OF CHARTER—RIGHTS OF INTERVENERS.

Approval of incorporation of water company will not be reversed at instance of intervening landowner, where notice of hearing had been given, and the intervener did not appear until the testimony had been concluded, and the matters set up by intervener had been considered by the public service commission.

Appeal from Superior Court.

Application of the Connoquenessing Power Company for a charter. From an order of the Public Service Commission, approving the application, the Pennsylvania Power Company appeals. Dismissed.

Application for approval of charter. From the record it appeared that the material portions of the application were as follows:

"(1) The name of the proposed corporation is Connoquenessing Power Company.

"(2) Said corporation is formed for the purpose of the supply, storage, or transportation of water and water power for commercial and manufacturing purposes in the township of Wayne, county of Lawrence, and state of Pennsylvania.

"(3) The name of the river, stream, or other body of water from which it is proposed to take or use water and water power, and, as near as may be, the points on said river, stream, or other body of water between which said water and water power is proposed to be taken, or used, is as follows, viz.: It is proposed to take and store the waters of the Connoquenessing creek and its tributaries by means of a dam or dams across said stream located between the mouth of said Connoquenessing creek at its junction with the Beaver river and a point at or near the mouth of Slippery Rock creek, a tributary of said Connoquenessing creek, in Wayne township, Lawrence county, Pa., in a reservoir, extending up and along said Connoquenessing creek to Walker's Mill, North Sewickley township, Beaver county. It is also proposed to take and store the waters of Brush creek, a tributary of the said Connoquenessing creek, by the construction of a dam across said Brush creek, at a point $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles from its mouth in the township of Marion, Beaver county, in a reservoir extending up and along said Brush creek for a distance of 11 miles. It is also proposed to take and store the waters of the Little Connoquenessing creek, a tributary of the said Connoquenessing creek, by the construction of a dam across said Little Connoquenessing creek at a point 2 miles from its mouth in Jackson township, Butler county, in a reservoir, extending up and along said Little Connoquenessing creek, for a distance of 9 miles.

"(4) The business of said corporation is to be transacted in Pittsburgh, Pa."

The original protest of the Pennsylvania Power Company set forth that it was a hydroelectric company existing under and by virtue of the laws of Pennsylvania, and that it had a hydroelectric plant at Ellwood City, Lawrence county, Pa., where it generated electrical current for sale in the borough, cities, and townships of the state; that the service rendered by it was reasonable and adequate, and that the rates were just and reasonable; that the incorporation of the applicant would seriously interfere with the water rights, dams, power houses, and facilities of the protestant; and further that the incorporation of the applicant is neither necessary nor proper, because the protestant is already willing to offer all the prospective customers in this district a reasonable and adequate service at reasonable rates, and the incorporation of the applicant would only lead to ruinous competition. The protest ended with a prayer that the protestant be allowed to submit evidence of its contention and that no final action be taken until it had an opportunity to be heard.

The petitioner amended its application, and to the amended application the protestant filed another protest, wherein all the original reasons were reaffirmed. In addition, it was pointed out that the rules of practice had not been complied with, that the statement of the purpose of the company was not in accordance with the articles of association as certified by the secretary of the commonwealth, and in general that the application was so indefinite that the commission could not entertain the application.

After several hearings the commission handed down a pro forma report and order, in which it was stated that the Pennsylvania Power Company had appeared as a protestant and after a hearing the commission found and determined that the granting of the application is proper for the service, accommodation, convenience, and safety of the public, and a certificate of public convenience should issue, evidencing the approval of the incorporation. A certificate of public convenience was issued. From this report and order and certificate of public convenience the Pennsylvania Power Company as a protestant appealed.

Further facts appear in Penna. Power Co. v. Public Service Commission, 66 Pa. Super. Ct. 448, and from the following opinion of the Superior Court, by Henderson, J.:

This case comes up by appeal of the Pennsylvania Power Company from an order of the public service commission approving the incorporation of the Connoquenessing Power Company, the object of which is the supply, storage, or transportation of water and water power for commercial and manufacturing purposes in the township of Wayne in the county of Lawrence. The plan involves the construction of a dam or dams on Connoquenessing creek and the development of electrical power by means of water power as authorized by the act of July 2, 1896 (P. L. 425). The appellant is a power company owning a dam in Connoquenessing creek at Ellwood City, at which it has a power plant for the generation of electricity which it supplies to Ellwood City and other places in the vicinity. R. C. Coleman and six other persons, owners of farms in New Sewickley township, Beaver county, through whose lands Brush creek, a tributary of Slippery Rock creek, runs, were on their petition permitted to intervene as appellants after the appeal taken by the Pennsylvania Power Company.

[1, 2] The complaint of the appellant is that the findings and determinations of the commission are not in conformity to law, and are unreasonable and based on incompetent testimony materially affecting the findings and determinations. The lack of conformity to law relied on, it is urged by the appellant, is found in the discrepancy between the project in the articles of association approved by the water supply commission and the plan presented to the public service commission. The promoters of the new company presented their plan to the water supply commission as required by the act of June 7, 1907 (P. L. 455), which body approved of the project after a protracted examination and consideration of the scheme, in the course of which there was submitted a plan for the development of the water power of Connoquenessing creek and some of its tributaries, according to which it was proposed to work in the practical operation of the company when incorporated. After the approval of the plan by the water supply commission and a more definite consideration of the subject, it was deemed advisable to change the plan, so that a smaller number of dams would be erected and a dam on the creek near its confluence with the Beaver river would be constructed of a less height than was first proposed. This amended plan the appellant contends was a different one in essential respects from that placed before the water supply commission, and their application to the public service commission was for the approval of "a more facially valid record of incorporation, so they might use it as a cloak to their unlawful actions."

The argument is based in part on the assumption that the application for such a charter should specify the exact rivers, etc., and the "precise points" thereon, where the water or water power is to be taken. The first section of the act of 1907 provides that "no application for a charter for a corporation for the supply of water for the public, or for the supply, storage and transportation of water and water power for commercial and manufacturing purposes, or for any other water or water power company shall be approved by the Governor, nor shall letters patent be issued thereon, unless said application is first submitted to, and has received the approval of, a majority of the members of the water supply commission, * * * nor unless said application shall contain, in addition to the statements now required to be made, the name of the river, stream or other body of water from which it is proposed to take or use water or water power, and, as near as may be, the points on said river, stream or other body of water, between which said water or water power is proposed to be taken." It was manifestly not the intention of the Legislature to require that the precise location of a dam should be fixed by law before the incorporation of the company. The location was only to be stated "as near as may be." It is easily seen that it might be ascertained from a test that the particular site selected was not suitable for the support of a dam wall and that a change of place would be necessary. Some leeway was therefore allowed to meet such or perhaps other contingencies.

Moreover, the act of June 25, 1913 (P. L. 555), regulates the construction of dams, and provides that none shall be erected without the consent or permit of the water supply commission in writing previously obtained. It is further provided that the commission shall have power, not only to grant or withhold consent, but may incorporate and make a part of said consent or permit such conditions, regulations, and restrictions as may be deemed by it advisable; and no construction of such works shall be undertaken or prosecuted, except in accordance with the terms, conditions, regulations, and restrictions of such consent or permit, and such rules and regulations with regard thereto as may be prescribed by the commission. It will be seen, therefore, that the matter of definite plans for the development of the work of a water power company is subject to the control of the water supply commission, which control is to operate after the incorporation of the company and when its work is undertaken.

[3] The public service commission, in approving the charter, did not include the approval of a plan for the development of the company's business. It is not invested with authority to regulate the erection of dams or the development of the water power resources of the state. That is a subject over which the water supply commission has jurisdiction. The suggested change in the plan as to the number of dams or the height of the dams, as made to the public service commission, was not a matter of consequence, therefore, nor in any sense illegal. The authority of the water supply commission to impose regulations and conditions to be observed by a corporation proposing to develop the water power of a stream is broad, as shown by the language of the statute. It is unnecessary to here consider its extent. It has undoubted authority to attach any of the conditions necessary to carry out the purposes of the legislation on the subject, with a view to the protection of the rights of the public and of individuals or companies having vested interests.

[4] It is further objected that the order was made without evidence or against the weight of the evidence. An examination of the voluminous record does not lead us to that conclusion. The applicants for the charter had the deliberate approval of their plan by the water supply commission. Evidence was taken on the questions involved, and the commission was aided by the discussion of able counsel on the respective sides. The statute does not declare what evidence shall be sufficient to induce the commission to act; nor does it require that evidence be taken under all circumstances. Some applications may be of such character as to render that course entirely unnecessary. The geographical and topographical conditions involved in such a case may be within the knowledge of members of the commission, and it would be manifestly impracticable to declare by legislative enactment or judicial decree just how the public service commission should acquire the information which would lead it to a determination of a particular case. Section 18 of article 5 of the statute provides that "when application shall be made to the commission by any public service company for any approval under any of the provisions of this act, * * * such approval in each and every such case, or kind of application, shall be given only if and when the said commission shall find or determine that the granting or approval of such application is necessary or proper for the service, accommodation, convenience or safety of the public." P. L. 1913, p. 1414. The nineteenth section of the same article authorizes the commission to hold such hearings and to examine such witnesses and make such inquiries, physical examinations, valuations, and investigations as it may deem necessary or proper in enabling it to reach a determination. It is sufficient to say with respect to the pending controversy that there was evidence before the commission which was heard, that elaborate arguments were presented; that the action of the water supply commission was considered, and such a presentation of the facts made as enabled the public service commission to act intelligently on the subject. It is not the function of this court on such an appeal to reverse the action taken because a different result might have been reached with greater propriety.

[5] It is further urged that the granting of the application ought not to be approved, because it does not appear in the case that it was proper for the accommodation, convenience, or safety of the public; the substance of the appellant's argument being that there is evidence of adequate service of electrical power in the district proposed to be served by the Connoquenessing Power Company, that the new company will be a competitor in a field theretofore exclusively occupied by the appellant, and that such competition is contrary to the policy of the law. With respect to this objection, it may be said that it is not a matter of public policy to prohibit competition. It has not been declared by the Legislature nor decided by the courts that a public service company entering into business in a particular locality necessarily acquires an exclusive and permanent right to prosecution of a business of that kind over an area which it might consider its exclusive territory. Moreover, the matter of intrusion into the appellant's locality is a subject for consideration by the public service commission when the company shall have reached a stage in the development of its business where it proposes to supply power. It was probably apparent to that body there was a large field in that section of the state for the use of electricity and that the increase of the supply would stimulate the development of manufactories. It was not shown in the case, and the fact probably does not exist in the commonwealth, that there is an excess of power for industrial activity. It may be, as contended, that the cost of the proposed enterprise will be such that the returns from the investment will be unprofitable. That is a matter for future determination, of course; but we think the commission cannot be expected to have a demonstration of the financial possibilities of an enterprise before it gives its approval thereto. It does not warrant the success of such a project.

[6] The complaint of the intervening appellants is that the public service commission did not open the hearing for the purpose of taking testimony in support of the allegations set forth in their petition to the public service commission and that the commission erred in entering the order of May 10, 1916, approving the incorporation of the water power company. The answer of the public service commission to the petition of the landowners to intervene sets forth that the order of the commission was made "after public hearing held upon due notice, and after careful consideration of all evidence which could in any wise affect the decision of the commission," and in reply to the complaint of the refusal of the commission to open the hearing the answer avers "that notice of the hearing on the application before it was given as required by law, that the petitioners did not avail themselves of the opportunity presented to appear before the commission until the testimony had been concluded, and that proof of the matter raised by the petitioners here could not have altered the decision of the commission, for the reason that the facts stated had been brought to the attention of the commission and considered by it, and were not material or relevant to the issue raised by the petition for a certificate of public convenience." It thus appears that the subject in which the interveners were interested was brought to the attention of the commission, was discussed before the commission, and that the order was made in the light of the conditions existing on the ground. It is further to be noted that the work contemplated by this power company does not include the erection of dams on Brush creek, and that any dams to be hereafter erected are to be subject to the approval of the water supply commission. The rights of the interveners as landowners are protected by the statutes authorizing the creation of the company. Brumbaugh v. Raystown Water Power Co., 254 Pa. 215, 98 Atl. 1032.

There is no ground for a supposition that the action of the public service commission would have been affected by additional evidence as to the relation of the water power project to the property of the landowners on Brush creek. The notice of the application of the water power company for a charter did not conform to the rule prescribed by the public service commission, but that rule was adopted to secure uniformity in the procedure for a charter merely, and has not the effect of positive law. The commission has held the notice to be sufficient, the parties in interest have been heard, all the questions raised have been considered and on the facts presented the action of the public service commission cannot be held to be illegal. That it is unreasonable has not been made clear.

After a review of the whole case, we are of the opinion that the order of the public service commission should be approved, and the appeal dismissed, at the cost of the appellant. It is so ordered.

The Superior Court affirmed the order of the public service commission. Pennsylvania Power Company appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Ralph J. Baker and Douglass D. Storey, both of Harrisburg, for appellant. J. E. B. Cunningham, Berne H. Evans, and Frank M. Eastman, all of Harrisburg, Joseph H. Thompson, of Beaver Falls, and Wm. N. Trinkle, of Philadelphia, for appellee Connoquenessing Power Co.

PER CURIAM. These two appeals were heard together. Each is dismissed, at appellant's costs, on the opinion of the Superior Court, sustaining the action of the Public Service Commission.

MORRISON v. RHODE ISLAND CO.
(No. 5073.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Oct. 18, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR \Rightarrow 832(1)—REARGUMENT.

Motion for reargument will be denied by Supreme Court, where all the grounds set forth in the motion were duly considered before former opinion was filed.

On defendant's motion for reargument. Denied.

For former opinion, see 104 Atl. 71.

A. B. Crafts and Augustine H. Downing, both of Providence, for plaintiff. Clifford Whipple and G. Frederick Frost, both of Providence, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. The defendant's motion for leave to reargue the above case, filed by permission of court on the 5th day of October, 1918, is denied. All the grounds set forth in the motion were duly considered before the opinion was filed at the last term. The court finds no reason to grant a reargument.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION v. PROVIDENCE GAS CO. (two cases).
(Nos. 298, 296.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Oct. 17, 1918.)

GAS \Rightarrow 14(1)—JURISDICTION AND POWERS—RIGHT OF APPEAL—INTERVENING CITY.

Where gas company, under Pub. Laws 1912, c. 795, applied to Public Service Commission to fix rates, the city and town affected thereby, having intervened under rule 8 of the Public Utilities Commission, as authorized by section 17 of such act, had the right to appeal, notwithstanding section 34 limits the appeal to a "complainant."

Proceeding by the Providence Gas Company before the Public Utilities Commission for fixing the charges and rates for gas sold to the City of Providence, the Town of North Providence, and others, wherein the aforesaid City and Town intervened. From the order of the Public Utilities Commission, fixing the rates, said City and Town separately appeal, and the Gas Company in each case moves to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

Elmer S. Chace, City Sol., and Henry C. Cram and Charles P. Sisson, Asst. City Sols., all of Providence, for complainants. Swan & Keeney, of Providence, for respondent.

SWEETLAND, J. The above-entitled proceedings are respectively the appeal of the city of Providence and the appeal of the town of North Providence from a certain order of the Public Utilities Commission fixing the rates and charges of the Providence Gas Company, a corporation, for gas sold by it in the city of Providence, the town of North Providence, and certain other municipalities of the state. Said proceedings are before us at this time upon the motion of the Providence Gas Company that each of said appeals be dismissed, on the ground that this court is without jurisdiction therein, for the reason that said city and town are not entitled by law to appeal from said order.

Chapter 795 of the Public Laws, approved April 17, 1912, is an act creating the Public Utilities Commission, prescribing its powers and duties, and providing for the regulation and control of public utilities. All the questions involved in the matter now before us are governed by the provisions of said act. It appears from the record that on July 12, 1918, the Providence Gas Company filed with the Public Utilities Commission schedules of its rates and charges for gas to be sold by it in said city and town, which rates were to become effective on September 1, 1918. Under the authority conferred by said act, after notice to said gas company and to such other interested persons as the commission deemed necessary, including the city of Providence and town of North Providence, said commission proceeded upon its own motion to investigate the reasonableness of said schedules of rates. The commission found the rates contained in the schedules filed by the gas company to be unreasonable, and by its order the commission substituted therefor rates and charges which in its judgment were just. The city of Providence and the town of North Providence, being dissatisfied with the rates and charges thus fixed in the order of the commission, have sought to appeal to this court.

Section 34 of said act regulating appeals from the orders of the commission, among other things, provides that:

"Any public utility or any complainant, aggrieved by any order of the commission fixing any rate, toll, charge, joint rate or rates * * * may appeal to the supreme court for a reversal of such order."

The act does not by its terms give the right of appeal from an order of the commission to any other person. The point of the motion of the gas company now under consideration is that neither the city of Providence nor the town of North Providence can properly be denominated a complainant in said proceeding before the commission, and hence under the act neither has the right to appeal from said order.

Sections 18, 19, 20 and 21 of said act, among other things, provide that any municipal or other corporation, or any group of persons designated in said sections, may make written complaint to said commission against any public utility, alleging that the rates and charges of said public utility are unreasonable. After notice and hearing on said complaint the commission shall make its determination and order. Under the provisions of said four sections the public utility, whose acts are under consideration, is the respondent, and the municipal or other corporation or the group of persons who institute the proceeding is clearly the complainant. It is the contention of the gas company that the right of appeal given to a complainant by section 34 is restricted to a moving party in proceedings instituted under the four sections referred to, viz. sections 18, 19, 20, and 21.

Sections 26, 27, and 28 of said act, among other things, provide that without complaint said commission may on its own motion investigate the reasonableness of rates and charges fixed by a public utility. Notice of the hearing and investigation shall be given to said public utility and to such other interested persons as the commission shall deem necessary, and thereafter the proceedings shall be had and conducted in reference to the matter investigated in like manner as though complaint had been filed with the commission relative to the matter investigated, and the same order or orders may be made in reference thereto as if such hearing and investigation had been made on complaint. This was the procedure followed in the matter now under consideration. The commission undertook to make an investigation on its own motion. Notices of the hearing and investigation were given to the Providence Gas Company as respondent, and to such other persons as the commission deemed necessary, including the city of Providence and the town of North Providence, and thereafter, under the provisions of the act, the proceeding was to be conducted as though it was a complaint filed with the commission.

Section 17 of said act provides as follows:

"Sec. 17. All hearings, investigations and inquiries before the commission shall be governed by rules to be adopted and prescribed by the commission, and in such hearings and investigations and inquiries, the commission shall not be bound by the technical rules of evidence."

Acting under the authority conferred in section 17, the commission adopted rules of practice and procedure, rule 3 of which is in part as follows:

"Parties, or utilities not parties, may petition in any proceeding for leave to intervene and be heard therein. Such petition shall set forth the petitioner's interest in the proceeding. The leave granted on such application shall entitle the intervener to appear and be treated as a party to the proceeding."

At the opening of the hearing and investigation now under consideration, the chairman of the commission made the following statement:

"I suggest that at this time the various cities and towns will enter their appearances officially with the stenographer, and of course such cities and towns as do enter their appearance will be given permission to intervene as parties to these proceedings."

Thereupon the city of Providence and the town of North Providence each entered its appearance, and throughout the hearing acted as parties adversary to the respondent gas company. The solicitor for the city of Providence cross-examined at length the witnesses presented by the respondent, and introduced evidence in opposition to the claim of the respondent. At the close of the hearing the solicitor for the city of Providence and the solicitor for the town of North Providence each argued against the approval by the commission of the schedules of rates and charges filed by the respondent. The position assumed at the hearing by said city and town, respectively, was identical with that of a party instituting a complaint against the respondent gas company, attacking the justice of its rates and charges. In the circumstances of the matter we are of the opinion that, when said city and town were permitted to intervene as parties in the proceeding, which under the statute was being conducted as though it was a complaint filed with the commission, they intervened as parties complainant, with the rights of complainants, including the right to appeal from the final order afterwards made by the commission.

The motion of the respondent gas company in each of the above-entitled proceedings is denied.

LYON v. MAYOR AND COMMON COUNCIL OF HYATTSVILLE

(Court of Appeals of Maryland. Jan. 16, 1918.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — § 523(5) — SEWER ASSESSMENT — RECOVERY OF PAYMENT MADE.

Declaration to recover, on the ground of a sewer assessment having been wrongfully made, money paid under protest to prevent sale of property for enforcement of the assessment, stating that in suit by plaintiff and his wife, to set the assessment aside it was held valid, held to show plaintiff not entitled to recover.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Prince George's County; Beall, Judge.

Action by Wallace C. Lyon against the Mayor and Common Council of Hyattsville. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BOYD, C. J., and BRISCOE, BURKE, THOMAS, PATTISON, URNER, STOCKBRIDGE, and CONSTABLE, JJ.

Clayton E. Emig, of Washington, D. C., for appellant. Vincent A. Sheehy, of Washington, D. C., for appellee.

PATTISON, J. The demurrer to the appellant's declaration having been sustained, and he having failed to amend within the time allowed him, a judgment for cost was entered against him in favor of the appellee. From that judgment this appeal is taken.

The suit was instituted to recover the sum of $275.77 paid by plaintiff to the defendant in payment of an assessment against his wife, as the owner of a lot of land in Hyattsville, Md., to aid in the construction of a sewer.

er in Maryland avenue, in said town. The assessment was made under an ordinance passed by the defendant pursuant to an act of the General Assembly of this state. The validity of the ordinance is not assailed, but the assessment is said to have been wrongfully made thereunder, for the reason stated in the opinion in Lyon v. Mayor and Common Council of Hyattsville, 131 Md. 693, 132 Md. 56, 108 Atl. 104, decided at the present term of this court, which we think unnecessary to repeat here. As alleged in the declaration, the wife, at that time the alleged owner of said land, refused to pay the assessment and instituted proceedings in the court, in which this declaration was filed, to set aside and annul the assessment because, as she alleged, the assessment was null and void.

As to said proceedings the plaintiff in his brief, in stating the substance of this declaration, says:

"That his cotenant of said premises [his wife] entered proceedings in the court below to have the said assessment set aside, which proceedings were decided adversely to the appellant and his cotenant."

The declaration then states that the plaintiff paid said sum of $275.77, the amount of said assessment and interest, under protest and coercion, after the said property had been advertised for the sale to enforce the payment of the said assessment. It is upon this statement of fact that the plaintiff attempts to recover the amount so paid by him, although at the time of the institution of this suit the proceedings referred to in the declaration as having been instituted by his wife to set aside the said assessment as null and void had been adversely decided by the lower court, and the assessment held by it to be valid, and the decision of that court affirmed by this court in Lyon v. Mayor and Common Council of Hyattsville, 125 Md. 306, 98 Atl. 919, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 765.

It is clear, upon the facts stated in the narr., that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and hence the court below committed no error in sustaining the demurrer thereto. The judgment will therefore be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

WEST NEW YORK IMPROVEMENT CO.
et al. v. TOWN OF WEST NEW YORK.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
Jan. 31, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

JUDGMENT §§470, 551, 564(1)—DECREE—FINALITY—COLLATERAL ATTACK—DIRECT ATTACK.

A decree of the Chancellor adjudicating the rights of parties is a final adjudication of all matters in issue and determined, and such a decree cannot be opened in a collateral proceeding, not directed to that end, simply because it stands in the way of a different result in another cause. The earlier decree settles the rights of parties as to the issues involved and decided in the proceedings on which it is based, and, to avoid it, it must be opened by a direct assault, or by an appeal.

Appeal from Court of Chancery.

Bill to quiet title by the West New York Improvement Company and others against the Town of West New York. From a decree dismissing the bill, complainants appeal. Reversed, and record remitted to Court of Chancery.

Marshall Van Winkle and Gilbert Collins, both of Jersey City, for appellants. Mark A. Sullivan, of Jersey City, for appellee.

BERGEN, J. In 1859 William W. Niles, being the owner of a tract of land in the township of Union, in the county of Hudson, made and filed a map of the tract, showing its division into lots and streets, on which was protracted a street called Niles avenue, running east and west from Bergenline avenue, crossing the Bull's Ferry road, to the Hudson river, which is its easterly end, and where there is a high cliff, with the Hudson river far below, so that the avenue could not be opened to the extent indicated on the map. The present bill was filed to quiet the title to the lands embraced within the lines of Niles avenue, as indicated on the map, lying east of the Bull's Ferry road (now Park avenue) and the Hudson river. The Vice Chancellor advised that the bill be dismissed, and the Chancellor so decreed. From this decree the complainant has appealed.

The facts not disputed are that lots were sold on the portion of the street to which this controversy is limited, and to quiet the title to which the bill was filed, by reference to the map as filed, and that such lots are now all owned by the complainant; that previous to 1890 James H. Symes became the owner of all the lands lying east of Park avenue, formerly Bull's Ferry road, and in that year filed his bill in equity to quiet the title to the land, in which the township of Union, the municipality which the defendant succeeded, was made a party. This bill of complaint rested upon the ground that various maps had been made of the tract, some, if not all, subsequent to the original map of 1859; that these maps had protracted on them streets not consistent with the original map, and particularly inconsistent with Niles avenue, because of which, it was averred in the bill, the township claimed some interest in the land. The answer admitted the complainant's possession and claim of ownership, but disavowed any information concerning the other averments set out in the bill.

The final decree in that case adjudged, among other things, that the township of Union had no estate or interest in or incumbrance upon the lands, except the right to unpaid taxes and assessments levied against them. The lands as to which it was adjudged and decreed that the township of Union had no estate or interest in, or incumbrance on, embraced that part of Niles avenue lying east of Park avenue. The taxes reserved to the township by this decree were subsequently paid. This decree finally adjudged the rights of the parties to that litigation, because the township, having been made a party, was bound to set up every claim or interest which it had antagonistic to the prayer of the bill, and if the right to accept the alleged dedication, based upon the map, then existed, not having been accepted for a period of 40 years, the township was bound to make that claim at that time, and, if it did not, the decree in the litigation to which it was a party finally determined all questions that it should have set up. Chadwick v. Island Beach Co., 48 N. J. Eq. 616, 12 Atl. 890; Board of Home Missions v. Davis, 70 N. J. Eq. 577, 62 Atl. 447, affirmed in 71 N. J. Eq. 788, 65 Atl. 1117. Therefore by this decree it was adjudged that the township of Union had no interest in the lands, and removed any cloud from the title of Symes, the predecessor in title of the present complainant, and this decree cannot be assailed or set aside in any collateral proceeding.

Notwithstanding this adjudication, the town of West New York, the present defendant, which succeeded to the government and the rights of the township of Union, did, by resolution, on April 2, 1914, 24 years after the adjudication by the Court of Chancery that it had no estate, interest in, or incumbrance upon the lands, and while that decree was in full force and effect, accept Niles avenue, by virtue of which it claims an interest in so much of Niles avenue as lies east of Park avenue. The present bill was filed to quiet the title against this claim. In disposing of this bill the Vice Chancellor disregarded the former decree, saying that, in his opinion, the court was not authorized in 1890 in making that decree, because it was based, in part at least, upon the stipulation and agreement of counsel, who in his opinion could not make such a stipulation, and that the decree in the Court of Chancery made in 1890 should be opened. While the decree of dismissal does not in terms open that decree, it had that effect, because, manifestly, the present decree could not have been made if the former decree remained in full force and effect.

We confess a moderate degree of surprise that a Vice Chancellor should undertake to set aside the solemn decree of the Court of Chancery, which had not been appealed from, and still remained in full force and effect, simply because he thought it should never have been made. Such a proceeding amounts to the exercise by the Vice Chancellor of an appellate power to review all the decrees of the Chancellor, however ancient, which do not comport with his view, although the decree may have been partly executed, as in this case, by the payment of taxes reserved to the same defendant in the former decree, the payment of which it had accepted. The Vice Chancellor had no power to open the original decree in the present proceeding. That decree had adjudicated between these parties the very question which is raised in the present proceedings, and the complainant was entitled to a decree as prayed for upon the ground of res judicata.

The notion of the Vice Chancellor that counsel for the defendant in the original suit had no authority to stipulate the facts, or to consent to the entry of the decree, is fallacious. Courts constantly accept the stipulation of counsel as a basis for their judgments and decrees, and if such consent is made without authority, it is the duty of the party for whom it is made to promptly complain, and not wait for nearly a quarter of a century, after accepting so much of the decree as is favorable, to disavow the authority of counsel. To get rid of a decree entered by consent of counsel in excess of his authority, the complaining party must act with reasonable promptness.

The decree dismissing the bill will be reversed, and the record remitted to the Court of Chancery, that it may be dealt with according to the views expressed by this court.

MAYNARD v. BARRETT.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ~~vs~~ 706(5)—USE OF STREET—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a pedestrian for injuries from being struck by defendant's motor truck, evidence held to sustain verdict for plaintiff.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Robert A. Maynard against William Barrett, president of the Adams Express Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

William A. Schnader and Thomas De Witt Cuyler, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. Henry J. Scott, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

MESTREZAT, J. This is an action of trespass brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for injuries which he alleges he sustained by reason of the defendant's negligence. It appears that on June 19, 1916, about half past 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the plaintiff was walking eastwardly on the south side of Cherry street in the city of Philadelphia, and when he reached the intersection of Seventeenth and Cherry streets he was hit by an electric truck of the defendant company and severely injured. The plaintiff alleges the driver of the truck fall-

ed to give proper signals of its approach to Cherry street as it proceeded along Seventeenth street; he did not have such control of the truck that it could be brought to a stop within a reasonable distance, and the truck was driven at such close proximity to the curb of Seventeenth street as to make it dangerous and a menace to persons on the pavement. The plaintiff testified that after making a business call at 1726 Cherry street, he proceeded east on the south side of Cherry street to Seventeenth street, which he intended to cross for the purpose of attending to a business affair farther east on Cherry street. When he arrived at Seventeenth street he looked east, south, and north, and saw no vehicle approaching. He saw a limousine car standing on the west side of Seventeenth street north of Cherry street. He stepped back about two steps, so that he could see beyond the limousine, and saw no other vehicle. He undertook to cross Seventeenth street, and when in the act of stepping off the curb, "one foot on the pavement and one foot going toward the street," he was hit by the defendant's electric truck. He was about 2 feet south of the Cherry street curb. He heard no sound of a gong or other warning. Ada Allen, plaintiff's witness, testified that she was sitting at an open window in the second or third house on Seventeenth street south of Cherry street and saw the truck north of Cherry street coming south on Seventeenth street; that it did not give any warning signal of its approach to the latter street; that after it had crossed Seventeenth street it ran very close to the west curb of Seventeenth street and hit the plaintiff as he was stepping off the pavement, and carried him between 3 and 5 feet, when the truck stopped. Virginia Allen, plaintiff's witness, testified that from a window she saw the plaintiff coming east on the south side of Cherry street, and when he was in the act of stepping from the curb into Seventeenth street the truck ran very close to the edge of the curb and caught and pinned him under it. She says that the plaintiff was struck by the front wheel of the truck, and that it gave no warning signal of its approach to the place of the accident, which was where the crossing would be if there had been any crossing stones on the street. One of the defendant's witnesses testified that she was going north on the pavement on the west side of Seventeenth street, and met the plaintiff south of Cherry street walking close to the curbstone, and that the upper part of the truck seemed to strike him on the shoulder; that he was facing south at the time he was struck; and that he fell between the front and rear wheels, and was south of the rear wheel when the truck stopped, which was about 3 feet from the point of the collision. She also testified that at the time of the accident the front wheel of the truck seemed to be almost touching the curb of the pavement. The plaintiff was walking in the same direction in which the truck was traveling. The driver of the truck, defendant's witness, testified that, as he was driving south on Seventeenth street and was north of the house line of Cherry street, he saw the plaintiff at the southwest corner of Seventeenth and Cherry streets; that he did not see him turn the corner on Cherry street, and gave no further attention to him, and knew nothing of him until the accident occurred south of Cherry street.

The defendant claims that the accident occurred on the west side of Seventeenth street and about 40 or 50 feet south of the line of the Cherry street curb and not at the crossing of the two streets; that the plaintiff came in contact with the truck between its front and rear wheels, fell under the truck, and was carried from 3 to 5 feet, when the truck stopped. It is claimed that at the time of the collision the truck was not being operated at a negligent speed; that the plaintiff was not struck by any part of the front of the truck, nor did any part of the truck pass over him; that no part of the truck extended over the Seventeenth street curb. Several witnesses were called by defendant, and they contradicted the testimony of the plaintiff as to where and how the accident occurred, and their testimony would have justified a finding that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and absolved the defendant from any negligent conduct in operating the truck at the time of the accident. The learned president judge of the court below submitted the case in an exhaustive charge in which he directed attention to the material parts of the testimony of the witnesses on both sides and explained fully and correctly the duties of the plaintiff and the driver of the truck as they approached the intersection of the streets. In concluding the charge on this branch of the case the court said:

"What do you think about this matter? Do you think that Nadler [the driver of the truck] handled the car as he ought to have done? Do you think that he handled it as a man of ordinary common sense would? If he did not, then, if Maynard [the plaintiff] was clear of blame in the matter himself, you may render a verdict in the plaintiff's favor. If Nadler was not guilty of negligence, if you think that he did everything that a man of ordinary common sense and intelligence would have done under the circumstances to save other people from harm, your verdict ought to be in favor of the defendant. And your verdict ought to be in favor of the defendant if you think that Mr. Maynard was careless in the way in which he attempted to leave the curb on the west side of Seventeenth street, or in the way in which he approached the curb on the west side of Seventeenth street. He was bound to give some attention to his safety, and if he neglected those reasonable precautions which any man of common sense would have taken, and in that way helped to bring this accident about, he is not entitled to one cent of damages."

The verdict was for the plaintiff, and after a careful examination of the testimony we are not convinced that it was not sufficient to justify its submission to the jury both as to the plaintiff's and defendant's negligence. We are therefore compelled to affirm the judgment which was entered on the verdict. Judgment affirmed.

ENGLANDER v. OSBORNE et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⇨156—PREFERRED STOCK—DIVIDENDS.

Holder of preferred stock; entitled to receive when and as declared a fixed annual cumulative dividend of 6 per cent. before any dividends on common stock, where a dividend of 54 per cent. for current year and arrearages for nine years was declared on preferred stock, was entitled to restrain payment of declared equal dividend on common stock.

2. CORPORATIONS ⇨156—PREFERRED STOCK—DIVIDENDS.

The general rule is that preferred stockholders are entitled to share with common stockholders to profits distributed after the latter have received in any one year an amount equal to the dividends of the preferred stock.

3. CORPORATIONS ⇨156—PREFERRED STOCK—CONTRACT.

The priority of preferred stockholders rests upon the contract, and beyond its provisions they occupy no position to the corporation different from that of the holders of common stock.

4. CORPORATIONS ⇨156—DIVIDENDS—PREFERRED STOCK.

When a dividend is declared the holders of preferred stock are entitled to first claim to the extent of their preferences for the current year, and if enough remains more than sufficient to pay similar dividends on common stock, both classes of stockholders are entitled to share it equally.

5. CORPORATIONS ⇨156—DIVIDENDS—CUMULATION.

Without an agreement, express or implied, that dividends shall be cumulative, unpaid dividends covering arrearages cannot be claimed.

6. CORPORATIONS ⇨156(2)—DIVIDENDS—COMMON STOCK.

Common stockholders are not entitled to go back of the current year and claim to be reimbursed for unearned dividends of the past years, as their status was determined when during any current year there were no profits to be divided, and as each new year begins a new dividend.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Bill in equity by Samuel Englander, executor of the estate of Matilda De Witt, deceased, against Charles Osborne, John G. Hoffman, and others to enjoin the declaration of a dividend on the common stock of a corporation. From a decree overruling a demurrer to the bill and awarding an injunction, defendant John G. Hoffman appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, and FRAZER, JJ.

John G. Kaufman and V. Gilpin Robinson, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. Joseph B. Englander, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. [1-5] Plaintiff's decedent owned certain shares of the 6 per cent. cumulative preferred stock of the Hoffman, De Witt & McDonough Company, one of the defendants. No dividends were paid on either the company's preferred or common stock until 1917, a period of nine years, when a dividend of 54 per cent., covering the current year and all arrearages, was declared and paid on the preferred stock, and at the same time a dividend of equal amount was declared on its common stock. Plaintiff began these proceedings to restrain the payment of the latter dividend, contending the holders of common stock were not entitled to a dividend of more than 6 per cent. without sharing the excess equally with the preferred stockholders. Defendants demurred and claimed the holders of common stock were entitled to receive dividends to an amount sufficient to make up arrearages in past years and equalize the common and preferred stock before holders of the latter were entitled to receive an excess above the amount of their fixed dividends and arrearages. The court below overruled the demurrer and restrained the payment of the dividend on the common stock. Defendant appealed.

The certificates of the preferred stock of the company provide:

"The holders of the preferred stock shall be entitled to receive when and as declared and the company shall be bound to pay a fixed yearly cumulative dividend of six per cent. (6%) payable quarterly, before any dividend shall be set apart on the common stock."

We find nothing limiting the right of the preferred stockholders to the 6 per cent. dividend, regardless of the earnings of the company, and in absence of such limitation the general rule is that such stockholders are entitled to share with the holders of the common stock all profits distributed after the latter have received in any year an amount equal to the dividend on the preferred stock. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 215 Pa. 610, 64 Atl. 829, 7 Ann. Cas. 613; Sternbergh v. Brock, 225 Pa. 279, 74 Atl. 166, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1073, 133 Am. St. Rep. 877; Sterling v. Watson Co., 241 Pa. 105, 88 Atl. 297. The priority of the preferred stockholders rests upon the contract, and beyond the provisions of such contract they occupy no position toward the company different from that of the holders of common stock. When a dividend is declared the former are entitled to first claim to the extent of their preference for the current year, and if there remains a sum more than sufficient to pay a similar dividend on the common stock, both classes of stockholders are entitled to share equally in the excess. In absence of agreement, express or implied, that dividends shall be cumulative, unpaid dividends in the past cannot be claimed. 10 Cyc. 573.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT \Leftrightarrow 373—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—"ACCIDENTAL INJURIES"—HEAT PROSTRATION.

Stroke from direct rays of sun, heat stroke, or prostration are "accidental injuries," within Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736); it being immaterial whether prostration results from artificial heat or from sun's natural heat, directly or through heated atmosphere, if exhaustion results from heat in course of employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accidental Injury.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT \Leftrightarrow 372—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—"ACCIDENT."

Under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), and particularly section 301, death from accident in course of employment means death resulting from unforeseen violence to physical body in course of employment, as distinguished from ordinary or occupational diseases; "accident" being an event occurring without foresight or expectation, but casually or fortuitously.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accident.]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT \Leftrightarrow 373—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW—"ACCIDENT IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT"—HEAT PROSTRATION.

An employé, overcome by heat while working at his employer's lunch counter on a hot day, and who died within two hours, suffered an "accidental injury in the course of his employment," within Workmen's Compensation Act June 3, 1915 (P. L. 738) § 301, so that his widow might recover compensation.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT \Leftrightarrow 418(4)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—AGREED FACTS—RECORD IN SUPREME COURT.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 753, 754) §§ 422, 425, facts on which claim for compensation is based, if agreed upon on appeal to common pleas, should be brought before Supreme Court upon record, on subsequent appeal to it.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT \Leftrightarrow 374—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—INJURY WHILE ENGAGED IN EMPLOYMENT.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), giving compensation for personal injury or death of employé "by an accident in the course of his employment," compensation is not based on the theory that employment in which person "is engaged" is proximate cause of injury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Mary Lane against the Horn & Hardart Baking Company. From a judgment affirming the deci-

[6] Likewise there is no logical reason for holding that common stockholders are entitled to go back of the current year, and claim to be reimbursed for unearned dividends in past years. To do so would render such dividends cumulative in effect without agreement. Accordingly, when during previous years no dividends were earned this was conclusive as to the right of all stockholders, both preferred and common, except for the contractual right of the former to payment out of future profits to the extent of their preference before the latter would be entitled to participate in the earnings. So far as the holders of the common stock were concerned their status was finally determined when, during any current year, there were no profits to be divided. The profits so lost are lost forever, and each new year marks the beginning of a new dividend paying period. Dent v. London Tramways Co., 16 Ch. Div. 344, 353; Morawetz on Corp. (2d Ed.) § 459, cited in 10 Cyc. 573.

The foregoing principles were properly applied by the learned judge of the court below. No different rule was suggested by this court in Sternbergh v. Brock, supra, relied upon by appellant. The statement by this court that (225 Pa. 287, 74 Atl. 169, 24 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1078, 133 Am. St. Rep. 877) "it is to be assumed that before the holders of preferred stock could claim more than the five per cent. dividends that they received, the holders of the common stock were entitled to receive a dividend of the same percentage on the par value of their shares," cannot be construed as giving the holders of the common stock the right to reimbursement for dividends unpaid in past years before the preferred stockholders are entitled to participate in the excess profits of a given year. The question there before the court was whether preferred stockholders were limited to dividends to the amount of their preference, or whether they were entitled to participate in excess profits in any year after the common stockholders had received a dividend equal to that paid on the preferred stock. There was no claim made by the holders of the common stock for reimbursement for dividends unpaid in the past, though it appears from the opinion of this court (225 Pa. 286, 287, 74 Atl. 166, 24 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1078, 133 Am. St. Rep. 877) that past dividends on common stock did not equal dividends on preferred stock. Notwithstanding this fact the preferred stockholders were permitted to participate with the common stock in an excess of dividends earned in a particular year. Aside from the fact that the question now before us was apparently not raised or discussed, the case, instead of supporting appellant's view, is authority in support of the conclusion reached by the court below.

The assignments of error are overruled and the decree of the court below affirmed.

sion of the Workmen's Compensation Board, allowing the claim, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Alfred D. Wiler, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Louis Levinson, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. Mary Lane claimed compensation, under Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), for the alleged accidental death of her husband, an employé of defendant. The claim was allowed by the Workmen's Compensation Board, and this decision was affirmed by the court below. Defendant has appealed.

Upon the facts involved, Commissioner Scott says:

"This case comes before the board on a petition for determination of compensation due the claimant under agreed facts. The statement of facts precludes any other cause of death than that of heat exhaustion or prostration, due to the heated condition of the atmosphere. The claimant's deceased husband was overcome by heat while working at the defendant's lunch counter, on a hot August day in 1917, and died within two hours. There is nothing in the statement to show that [the temperature of] the place where the employé was working was hotter than the outside atmosphere, or that he was affected by different heat conditions than prevailed in the community at large."

[1, 2] On the governing rules of law, the commissioner correctly states:

"The term 'personal injury' in our act is confined to injuries of accidental origin and such diseases as naturally result therefrom, and must be held to include any form of bodily harm or incapacity [accidentally] caused by [either] external violence or physical force. * * * A stroke by lightning, a stroke from the direct rays of the sun, a heat stroke, or heat prostration, are untoward, unexpected mishaps, and accidental injuries, within the meaning of the act. * * * It is immaterial whether the heat prostration is produced by artificial heat, or by the natural heat of the sun, directly or through the heated atmosphere, if the exhaustion comes from heat in the course of employment."

[3, 4] In cases such as the one at bar, the character and cause of the injury must be considered, in order to determine whether the results complained of are properly attributable to "accident," within the meaning of that term as used in the act of June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), supra; for, wherever death is mentioned in the statute, it means death resulting only from unforeseen violence to the physical structure of the body and its resultant effects (section 801, P. L. 738), or, in other words, death from "an accident" happening in the course of the deceased person's employment, as distinguished from either ordinary or occupational disease developed during the course of such employment; these latter not being within contemplation of the act. This subject is fully discussed in McCauley v. Imperial Woolen Co., 104 Atl. 617.

The learned commissioner is not without authority in holding heat prostration, under circumstances such as those at bar, to fall within the meaning of the word "accident," as that term is employed in modern compensation legislation, and, we may add, as it is used in the law of insurance. In Ismay, Imrie & Co. v. Williamson, Law Rep. A. C. 1906, 437, 439, Lord Loreburn, speaking for the House of Lords, said:

"This man died from an accident. What killed him was a heat stroke, coming suddenly and unexpectedly upon him while at work. Such a stroke is an unusual effect of a known cause, often, no doubt, threatened, but generally averted by precautions, which experience, in this instance, had not taught. It was an unlooked-for mishap in the course of his employment. In common language, it was a case of accidental death."

See, also, Maskery v. Lancashire Shipping Co., decided by the Court of Appeals, England, and reported in 7 Butterworth's Workmen's Compensation Cases, 428, 430, where the engineer on a steamship met his death from a heat stroke while crossing the Red Sea. The contention of defendants was that they were not liable "because the Red Sea is always very hot, and there was no special heat on that particular day more than people in the engine room going through the Red Sea would ordinarily be exposed to." In affirming an allowance of compensation, the court held that the Ismay Case applied, and the opinion refers to the heat stroke as "an occurrence which was in its nature fortuitous." Andrew v. Fallsworth Industrial Society, 90 Law Times Reports (New Series) 611, 612, involves death from a stroke of lightning; Pack v. Prudential Casualty Co., 170 Ky. 47, 55, 185 S. W. 496, L. R. A. 1916E, 952, death from sunstroke; and McGlinchey et al. v. Fidelity Casualty Co., 80 Me. 251, 253, 14 Atl. 13, 9 Am. St. Rep. 190, death from fright—all held to be accidental; while N. W. Commercial Travelers' Ass'n v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 10 Manitoba Rep. (Queen's Bench) 537, holds death from frost to be within the terms "bodily injuries effected through external, violent and accidental means." Finally, N. A. Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 51, 8 Am. Rep. 212, a case where an assured strained himself while loading hay, defines "accident" as "an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; * * * an accident signifies happening by chance or unexpectedly, * * * casual [or] fortuitous." Of course, neither this last ruling nor any other of the insurance cases mentioned can be looked upon as governing the present compensation claim; but all are illustrative of the liberal views entertained by the courts as to the meaning of the term "accident" in determining liability for death or personal injury.

[5] Section 422 of the act of 1915, supra (P. L. 753), provides that the facts on which a claim for compensation depends may be agreed upon, and, in that event, the "petition shall contain the agreed facts and shall be signed by all parties in interest." Section 425 (P. L. 754) provides that, on an appeal to the courts, such agreement shall be included in the transcript, or record, sent up for consideration. In the present instance, the agreement itself has not been physically brought before us, as it should be, but the commissioner's findings are that the statement of facts contained therein "precludes any other cause of death than that of heat exhaustion or prostration, due to the heated condition of the atmosphere"; hence we must take it no organic weakness or occupational disease can be accounted the proximate cause of the death of claimant's husband, but the casualty was attributable solely to the unexpected and violent effect of the heat upon the physical structure of deceased's body, and this was properly held by the Compensation Board and the court below to be an accidental death within the meaning of the act.

[6] Appellant's contention that "the whole intent of this legislation [compensation law] is based upon the theory that the employment in which the person is engaged is the proximate cause of the injury," is without merit. In this connection is sufficient to call attention to Dzikowska v. Superior Steel Co., 259 Pa. 578, 581, 108 Atl. 351. There the deceased, during an intermission in his work, while waiting for material, struck a match for the purpose of lighting a cigarette, and, as a result, his clothing ignited and he was fatally burned. We sustained an award in favor of the widow, and said, inter alia:

"In the compensation acts of some of the states, compensation is allowed only for injuries 'arising out of and in the course of his employment,' thus attaching two conditions to the right to recover. In the Pennsylvania statute, the words 'arising out of' do not appear; and we are therefore relieved from the necessity of considering the question whether in this case the accident arose out of, or was due to the character of, the employment. Under our statute compensation is given for personal injury or death of an employe 'by an accident in the course of his employment.'"

In the present case, the court below rightly held that claimant's husband died from an accident happening in the course of his employment, within the meaning of the act of 1915.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment sustaining the allowance of compensation is affirmed.

McCAULEY v. IMPERIAL WOOLEN CO.
et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §=417(4½)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—REFEREE—STATUS.

A compensation referee is an officer of Workmen's Compensation Board, with defined powers, and his records belong to files of court, and, on appeal, are before it for review, within limitations of Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736, 751, 753) §§ 409, 419-421.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §=416—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—REFEREE'S FINDINGS—REVIEW BY COMPENSATION BOARD.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), Compensation Board, if not sustaining referee's decision, may not reverse on question of fact, but must grant a hearing de novo, and substitute its own findings and conclusions, and, on appeal on alleged error of law, must act solely on referee's record, and sustain, reverse, or modify his final order.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §=416—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—APPEAL TO COMPENSATION BOARD.

Appeals to Workmen's Compensation Board, taken under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 753) § 420, amount to a writ of error, and if taken under section 421 amount to a motion for a new trial before board, instead of referee.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT §=416—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—APPEAL TO COMPENSATION BOARD—"ERROR OF LAW."

Under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), a referee's finding of fact without any evidence at all is an "error of law," within section 420 (P. L. 753), giving an appeal from referee's decision to Compensation Board on errors of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Error of Law.]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT §=416—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—APPEAL TO COMPENSATION BOARD—NATURE OF APPEAL.

Where referee's ultimate finding is in form of a mixed conclusion of fact and law, and classification of appeal to Compensation Board under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 753) §§ 420, 421, is not made plain by appellant, the board must exercise its discretion in determining its nature.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT §=416—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—APPEAL TO COMPENSATION BOARD—QUESTION OF FACT—DETERMINATION.

Where referee's finding is attacked because testimony was insufficient to justify it, and not because there was no legal evidence whatever to warrant it, a question of fact arises, and, under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 753) § 421, the board must sustain referee or grant a hearing de novo.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT §=416—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—HEARING DE NOVO BY COMPENSATION BOARD—EVIDENCE.

On Compensation Board's hearing de novo under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 753) § 421, depositions taken before referee may, by agreement of parties, be accepted as proofs, either for purpose of board's finding of its own facts or its adoption of referee's findings, though on hearing under section 420, on point of law, testimony cannot be re-examined for finding of new facts, as referee's findings, not appealed from, are final under section 409 (P. L. 751).

8. APPEAL AND ERROR §=1—STATUTE—"APPEAL."

"Appeal" has no conclusive meaning, and it is necessary in each instance to look to particular act giving an appeal, to determine powers to be exercised by appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Appeal.]

9. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(3)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW — APPEAL FROM COMPENSATION BOARD TO COMMON PLEAS—NATURE.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 751, 754) §§ 409, 425, appeal from Compensation Board to common pleas is in nature of certiorari, intended to prevent appeals to courts, except for errors of law, and to hasten final determination of claims.

10. CERTIORARI §64(1)—EXTENT OF REVIEW.

Review on certiorari is usually limited to a mere inspection of record, to see whether judgment conforms therewith, or whether lower court exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion, and generally the lower court's opinion is no part of record.

11. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(5)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—CERTIORARI TO COMMON PLEAS—REVIEW.

In proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), the appellate court, on certiorari, may examine the opinion of the board, to see the basis on which it acted.

12. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(4½) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — REVIEW BY COMMON PLEAS—NOTES OF TESTIMONY.

Notes of testimony are not properly part of record sent up on appeal from Compensation Board to common pleas under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 754) § 425, and, if mistakenly included in record, should not be considered.

13. MASTER AND SERVANT §418(6)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—REVIEW BY SUPERIOR AND SUPREME COURTS—NATURE.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 751, 754, 756) §§ 409, 425, 433, right of review by Supreme and Superior Courts in a compensation claim is on certiorari alone, and they may examine everything properly contained in records sent to common pleas, including findings and reasons of referee and Compensation Board, and reasons of court below.

14. EVIDENCE §14—JUDICIAL NOTICE—ANTHRAX.

It is a matter of general knowledge that anthrax is primarily a disease of animals, such as sheep, which may be transmitted to men handling infected animal materials, like wool, by the entrance of anthrax bacilli into the body and their rapid multiplication and development.

15. EVIDENCE §317(18)—MASTER AND SERVANT §404, 405(4)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—HEARSAY.

In a claim for compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), what deceased said as to the cause of a mark upon his neck was hearsay, which, standing alone, was insufficient to sustain referee's findings for claimant.

16. MASTER AND SERVANT §416 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—DEATH FROM INJURY BY ACCIDENT IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT—FINDINGS.

On claim under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), for wool sorter's death from external anthrax, referee's findings that he received a scratch on his neck in the course of his employment, and that anthrax germs then entered his body, causing his death, justified conclusion that he died as result of injury by accident in course of his employment.

17. MASTER AND SERVANT §404 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—CONSTRUCTION.

Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), contemplates liberality in the admission of proof and the inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom.

18. MASTER AND SERVANT §405(4)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—ACCIDENT — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

The probable nature of an accident, followed by death for which compensation is claimed, under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), may be established by circumstantial evidence.

19. MASTER AND SERVANT §415 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—PROOFS.

Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 752, 753, 755) §§ 417, 421, 428, and Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 760) § 17, permits liberal investigation by hearing and otherwise, and after all data have been gathered, without regard to technical rules, the proofs must be examined, and irrelevant and incompetent testimony excluded, and findings must rest on relevant and competent evidence.

20. MASTER AND SERVANT §405(1)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — FINDINGS — HEARSAY.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 752, 753, 755) §§ 417, 421, 428, and Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 760) § 17, relating to findings and procedure, neither referee nor Compensation Board has right to find material facts on hearsay alone.

21. MASTER AND SERVANT §372 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—OCCUPATIONAL DISEASES.

Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736, 738) §§ 1, 301, defining terms and liability, contemplate injuries by accident only, and do not cover occupational diseases.

22. MASTER AND SERVANT §372 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — "INJURY" — "PERSONAL INJURY" — "ACCIDENT" IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT."

Under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 738) § 301, defining "injury" and "personal injury," injury to physical structure of body need not be by external violence, and if accident causing injury is a mishap or fortuitous happening, not expected or designed, it is an "accident in course of employment."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Injury; Personal Injury.]

23. MASTER AND SERVANT §373 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — ACCIDENT IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 738) § 301, defining injury by accident in course of employment, death from germ infection, to be within the act, must be sudden development from some abrupt violence to physical structure of body, and not result of a gradual development from long exposure to natural dangers incident to employment.

24. MASTER AND SERVANT §416 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — APPEAL TO COMPENSATION BOARD.

Where Compensation Board, on appeal from referee, treated appeal as involving a question of law, within Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915 (P. L. 753) § 420, it could not make separate findings of fact, so that provision of section 409 (P. L. 751), that its findings of fact should be final, did not apply.

25. CERTIORARI §66—FINDINGS — COMPETENCY OF EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTION.

On certiorari, where the testimony is not before the court, it must assume that the evidence was competent, relevant, and sufficient, in the absence of findings as to its character.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Mary McCauley for compensation for the death of her deceased husband, James McCauley, against the Imperial Woolen Company, employer, and the London Guarantee & Accident Company, insurer. From a judgment reversing a decision of the Workmen's Compensation Board, setting aside the referee's award of compensation, defendant appeals. Affirmed, with a procedendo.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

C. Donald Swartz and William W. Smithers, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. I. D. Levy and William Linton, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. The plaintiff, widow of James McCauley, claimed compensation for the death of her husband. The referee found in favor of the claimant. The Workmen's Compensation Board reversed this finding. The case was removed to the common pleas of Philadelphia county, which reversed the board and affirmed the referee. The defendant employer entered the present appeal. Several interesting points of law are thus raised, which we shall pass upon separately. The first of them may be divided into three branches; i. e., the jurisdiction on appeal of (a) the Compensation Board; (b) the common pleas; and (c) this court. They will be considered in the order stated.

[1, 2] The act of June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736), in section 400 (P. L. 751), stipulates that "a referee's findings of fact shall be final, unless the board shall allow an appeal therefrom as hereinafter provided." Section 419 (P. L. 753) provides that any party in interest may appeal to the board on the ground: (1) That the referee's decision is not "in conformity with the terms of this act, or that the referee committed any other error of law"; (2) that the findings of fact and conclusion of the referee are "unwarranted by the evidence," or "because of fraud, coercion or other improper conduct by any party in interest." Section 420 (P. L. 753) provides that, when an appeal is based on alleged error of law, the board may either sustain, reverse or modify the decision of the referee. Section 421 (P. L. 753) provides that, when the appeal is taken on the ground that the referee's decision is unwarranted by the evidence, or because of improper conduct by a party in interest, the board may either sustain the referee or "grant a hearing de novo."

The referee is an officer of the board, vested with defined duties and powers. All records made by him belong to the files of that body, and, on appeal, are before it for review, within the limitations of the act. The statute contemplates and requires that if, after inspection and consideration of the adjudication and evidence, the board does not sustain the referee's final decision, before the former may reverse on a question of fact, it must grant a hearing de novo, make investigation, and substitute its own findings of fact, and conclusions thereon, for such findings of the referee as are not adopted; but, when an appeal is based only on alleged error of law, the board must act solely upon the record of the referee, and thereon it may either sustain, reverse, or modify the latter's final order.

[3, 4] That learned jurist, President Judge Shafer, of the common pleas of Allegheny county, in Yalch v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Company, 65 P. L. J. 636, 637, correctly construes the act of 1915, supra, thus:

Appeals to the board "are taken under two sections of the act [420 and 421]. The first amounts to a writ of error, and the second to a motion for a new trial; the new trial to be had before the board, instead of the referee. The first of them is to redress errors of law committed by the referee, and the second to review his findings of fact, when it is claimed they are not warranted by the evidence. The finding of fact without any evidence at all is an error of law. While the appeal in this case is taken because it is alleged that the findings of fact are not supported by the evidence, this does not prevent the board from treating the appeal as taken under section 420, rather than section 421."

[5] In cases of the character of the present claim, the ultimate finding is often cast in the form of a mixed conclusion of fact and law; and under such circumstances, if the classification of an appeal is not made plain by the appellant, ex necessitate the board must exercise its discretion in determining the nature thereof. Here, admittedly, the appeal was properly treated as turning on a point of law.

[6] The real contention is an utter lack of legal evidence to sustain the referee's conclusion that the death of James McCauley was occasioned by an accident occurring in the course of his employment. In other words, the defendant employer does not controvert, as matter of fact, that McCauley's death was due to the cause set up by claimant, but denies there is any legal proof to show that this causal event, which is alleged as an accident, happened while deceased was acting in the course of his employment. This contention raises a question of law, which the board had power to determine under section 420, upon a consideration of the legal adequacy of the testimony taken before the referee. Had the attack been simply upon the ground that the testimony was insufficient in fact to justify the latter's findings, and not that there was no legal evidence whatever to warrant them, a question of fact, not of law, would have been raised, and, under section 421, the board would have been obliged either to sustain the referee or grant a new hearing.

[7] On a hearing de novo under section 421, the depositions taken before the referee might, by agreement of the parties, be accepted by the board as proofs in the case, either for the purpose of finding its own facts or formally adopting those stated by the referee; but on a hearing solely to determine a point of law, raised by appeal under section 420, the testimony has no place in the consideration for the purpose of finding new facts, because those found by the referee, being unappealed from, are final under section 409. In a case like the one at bar, however, the board must consider the legal sufficiency of the testimony, not to find new facts, but in order to determine whether or not those relied upon by the referee may stand in law. Of course, if the appeal raises both questions of fact and law, the board may treat it accordingly. In this instance the board acted in conformity with the intent of the parties and proper procedure when it finally disposed of the point involved as one of law. The question of the correctness of its legal conclusion will be adjudged later in this opinion.

[8, 9] The next matter for our consideration concerns the rights and duties of the common pleas upon the appeal to that tribunal from the decision of the compensation board. Section 409 of the act of 1915, supra, provides that "the board's findings of fact shall in all cases be final, * * * [but] from any decision of the board on a question of law an appeal may be taken to the courts as hereinafter provided." Section 425 (P. L. 754) provides that, if any party in interest desires to appeal from the decision of the board "on matters of law," he must file notice in the appropriate court of common pleas, and, in such case, it shall be the duty of the Bureau of Workmen's Compensation to prepare and deliver to the prothonotary of the proper county "a transcript of the * * * finding of fact and award or disallowance of compensation, or modification thereof, involved in the appeal." As recently stated in Franklin Film Manufacturing Corporation, 258 Pa. 422, 426, 98 Atl. 623, 624:

"At the present time, in our law, the word 'appeal' has no conclusive meaning; * * * therefore, it is necessary in each instance to look at the particular act of assembly giving the right of appeal, to determine just what powers are to be exercised by the appellate court."

The statute here in question makes no provision for bringing up the testimony to the courts by sealing a bill, certifying the record thereof, or other known method; more than this, the act particularly prescribes what shall be sent to the common pleas—significantly, in view of its provisions as to the finality of the findings of fact, omitting reference to the evidence taken before the referee or board—all of which makes it clear that the appeal to the common pleas contemplated by this statute is in the nature of a certiorari; the purpose probably being to prevent appeals to the courts, except for errors of law, and thus to hasten the final determination of claims under the act.

It may be noted that if, on appeal to the courts, the Legislature had desired the testimony in workmen's compensation cases brought up for consideration, it knew how to accomplish this end, as shown by article

6, section 18, of the Public Service Company Law (Act July 26, 1913 [P. L. 1374, 1425]), where it is provided that, on such appeals from the Utilities Commission, the testimony shall be certified, "under seal," as part of the record for consideration. See St. Clair Borough v. Tamaqua & P. E. Ry. Co., 259 Pa. 462, 467, 109 Atl. 287.

[10-12] On certiorari, judicial review is usually limited to a mere inspection of the record, to ascertain whether the judgment in question is in conformity therewith, or to see whether the tribunal which rendered such judgment either exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion; and, generally speaking, the opinion of the lower tribunal is no part of the record. In statutory proceedings, such as the one at bar, however, it is now firmly established with us that, even on certiorari, an appellate court may examine the opinion of the court below "to see the basis on which it acted." Franklin Film Mfg. Corp., supra, 253 Pa. p. 426, 98 Atl. 624.

Here, fortunately for the claimant, the material underlying, or subordinate, findings of both the referee and board, as stated in their respective adjudications, are consistent with one another and show the exact character of proof upon which their divergent conclusions rest. Hence, albeit the common pleas properly could not examine the notes of testimony mistakenly included in the record sent to it (Carlson's License, 127 Pa. 330, 335, 18 Atl. 8; Rice, P. J., in Meenan's Appeal, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 579, 582), that tribunal was, and this court now is, in a position to determine the issue of the alleged lack of legal evidence to sustain the referee's allowance of compensation. Whether or not the conclusion of the court below in that regard was correct we reserve for later consideration in this opinion.

[13] As to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court on the present appeal, section 409 of the act of 1915, already quoted, provides that from any decision of the board "on a question of law" an appeal may be taken "to the courts." The first specific mention of either the Supreme or Superior Court occurs at the end of section 425, as follows:

"Any appeal from a decision of the board to the courts of common pleas, and from them to the Supreme or Superior Court, shall take precedence over all other civil cases."

The next and only other reference to the latter courts appears in section 433 (P. L. 756), to the effect that it shall be the duty of their prothonotary "to make a monthly report to the board of the disposition of all appeals taken to such courts" in workmen's compensation cases. Thus it becomes apparent there is no actual provision contained in the act of 1915, supra, authorizing an appeal from the common pleas to either the Supreme or Superior Court; hence our right of review is on certiorari alone. Gangewere's Appeal, 61 Pa. 342; Diamond St., 196 Pa. 254, 261, 46 Atl. 428.

The proceedings at bar being purely statutory, and differing from the common law, as already noted, on certiorari our jurisdiction is more analogous to that exercised upon the examination of equity proceedings than on the review of common-law actions, and in the former class of cases the opinion of the chancellor may be looked at to discover the reasons for his action. Independence Party Nomination, 208 Pa. 108, 111, 57 Atl. 344; Foy's Election, 228 Pa. 14, 16, et seq., 76 Atl. 713; Franklin Film Mfg. Corp., supra. Therefore, on the present review, this court may examine all that is properly contained (according to the provisions of the act of 1915, supra) in the record sent to the common pleas, including the findings and reasons stated in the adjudications of the referee and board, and, of course, also including the reasons given by the court below as the "basis" of its decision, but not the notes of testimony.

The foregoing considerations bring us to the controlling question in the case; i. e., whether the records referred to demonstrate either the presence or lack of legal evidence to sustain the findings of the referee to the effect that claimant's husband came to his death as the result of an accident which happened to him during the course of his employment.

[14-18] James McCauley was a "wool sorter" in the employ of defendant. The latter admitted he died "of external, and not internal, anthrax." Concededly, it is a matter of general knowledge that anthrax is primarily a disease of animals, such as sheep, which may be transmitted to men when handling infected animal materials, like wool. It is caused by the entrance into the human body of anthrax bacilli, and their rapid multiplication and development. The findings of the referee show a practical accord among the doctors, produced as experts, that, in the majority of cases, the inoculation which causes external anthrax occurs through a scratch or an abrasion of the skin; while internal anthrax is usually caused by inhaling the germ, or taking it in with food.

The findings further show that, when James McCauley went to his work on the morning of April 4, 1916, he was perfectly well and had no abrasion or mark upon his neck, but when he left defendant's plant, in the afternoon of that day, there was a "little scratch," or abrasion, "about the size of a dime," just above the "Adam's apple," which caused a swelling, and that this was the beginning of external anthrax, from which he died within three days. The findings likewise show professional medical experts testified that, in their opinion:

"If deceased was a wool sorter [as he was] when he went to work on April 4, 1916, with no marks on his neck, and sustained an abrasion about the size of a dime upon his neck, and the neck immediately began to swell, and external anthrax developed, this condition probably was brought about by the anthrax germ entering through the abrasion."

In addition to the findings just referred to, others show that on the afternoon of April 4th, as McCauley was leaving defendant's mill, he said to his son, "I got stuck with a sticker;" also that, immediately upon his arrival home, he told his wife that one of the stickers in the wool which he was carrying had torn him in the neck. The board properly decided that what McCauley said, as to the cause of the mark upon his neck, is hearsay, and, standing alone, insufficient to sustain the findings in favor of the claimant made by the referee; but we concur in the view of the court below that the other facts in the case constitute circumstantial evidence which, together with the competent and relevant parts of the expert professional testimony already referred to, was adequate to sustain the referee's allowance of compensation. In other words, under the circumstances of this case, deceased apparently not having been where he was liable to become inoculated with external anthrax, except at his work, and he, as he left defendant's mill on the day in question, having shown symptoms of that disease by the mark upon and swelling of his neck, the inference may reasonably be drawn, in view of the nature of the work on which he was engaged, that the inoculation occurred during the course of his employment, or, as said by one of the doctors:

"In all probability "the disease was caused by the anthrax germ entering through the skin by reason of a 'sticker' from the wool which deceased handled during the day."

In reaching the conclusion just stated, we have not examined the notes of testimony, which, as herein previously decided, were not properly before the court below, and therefore are not part of the record on this appeal. For the purpose of determining the point involved, we have restricted our consideration to the reasons stated in the several adjudications before us, as the basis of the respective conclusions contained therein, and the material underlying findings of the referee and the board, which, as previously stated, are consistent with each other and sufficiently indicate the character of evidence upon which the divergent ultimate, or controlling, findings rest. While findings of the latter class cannot be sustained on review, when those of the former class show a fatal lack of legal evidence (which is not the case at bar), at the same time it is to be kept in mind that statutes of the character of the one now before us contemplate liberality in the admission of proofs and the inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom; also that, even under the old law, the probable nature of an accident followed by death could be established by circumstantial evidence alone. Weinschenk v. Philadelphia H. M. Broad Co., 258 Pa. 98, 104, 101 Atl. 926.

[19, 20] On the subject of the proofs, section 428 (P. L. 755) of the act of 1915, supra, provides that "neither the board nor any referee shall be bound by the technical rules of evidence in conducting any hearing or investigation." Section 417 (P. L. 752) provides that the referee, "either before or after any hearing," may "make an investigation of the facts set forth in the petition, or cause the same to be made," and that, with the consent of the board, he may appoint impartial experts to "ascertain the facts"; while section 421 states the board shall have power to make such investigations as it may deem necessary to ascertain the facts, and to "employ physicians, surgeons, or other experts, to aid in its investigation." Section 17 of the companion act of June 2, 1915 (P. L. 758, 760), also provides that:

"The board and every referee shall have the power to conduct any investigation which may be deemed necessary to ascertain the facts of any claim, or any other matter properly before such board or referee," and "such investigations may be made by the board or referee, personally, * * * or by any other person or persons authorized by law."

These provisions do not mean, however, that either the referee or board has the right to find material facts on hearsay alone, whether such evidence is developed in the course of formal hearings or in less formal investigations; for, in the first place, the rule which forbids the making of material findings on hearsay alone, is more than a technical rule of evidence, and, next, there is nothing in the act before us which justifies the conclusion that the Legislature intended any such loose method for determining material facts. The act permits liberal investigation, by hearing and otherwise; but after all the data have been gathered without regard to technical rules, then the proofs must be examined, and that which is not evidence within the meaning of the law, must be excluded from consideration; that is to say, when all the irrelevant and incompetent testimony has been put aside, the findings must rest upon such relevant and competent evidence of sound, probative character as may be left, be this either circumstantial or direct.

Here the underlying findings show sufficient evidence of the kind just mentioned to sustain the ultimate, or controlling, findings made by the referee, to the effect that the scratch upon the neck of James McCauley occurred during the course of his employment, and at that time the anthrax germ entered the body of deceased, subsequently causing his death. On these latter findings, the referee was justified in concluding that McCauley died as the result of an injury by accident while acting in the course of his employment, and hence that claimant was entitled to compensation.

[21] Section 1 of the act of 1915, supra, provides that the statute shall apply to "all accidents" occurring within this commonwealth; this being limited by section 301 (P. L. 738) to cases where the employer and employé shall by agreement, "either express or implied," accept the provisions of the act.

The section in question provides that, in such instances, "compensation for personal injury to, or for the death of, such employé, by an accident, in the course of his employment, shall be made." It then provides that:

"The terms 'injury' and 'personal injury' * * * shall be construed to mean only violence to the physical structure of the body, and such disease or infection as naturally results therefrom," and, wherever death is mentioned, "it shall mean only death resulting from such violence and its resultant effects"; further, that "the term 'injury by an accident in the course of his employment' * * * shall not include an injury caused by an act of a third person intended to injure the employé because of reasons personal to him, and not directed against him as an employé or because of his employment, but shall include all other injuries sustained while the employé is actually engaged in the furtherance of the business or affairs of the employer."

It is plain from these provisions that the act before us contemplates injuries by accident only, and therefore does not cover what are termed "occupational diseases."

[22] It remains but to show that, in this case, the entry of the anthrax germ into the body of the deceased, and the disease or infection which naturally resulted therefrom, can be held properly to constitute an accident within the meaning of the act. In this connection, it is to be noted that there is nothing in the language quoted from section 301 which requires an injury to have been caused through force externally applied, or, much less, by some tangible substance of material size. The words used are "violence to the physical structure of the body," not injury to the physical structure of the body by external violence. The violence in question may originate from lifting heavy weights, or from other provable causes (for instance, intense heat operating directly on the part of the body internally affected—see Lane v. Horn & Hardart Co., 104 Atl. 615, decided simultaneously herewith), which effect a sudden change in the physical structure or tissues of the body, and still be within the Compensation Act. In short, if the incident which gives rise to the injurious results complained of can be classed properly as a "mis-hap," or "fortuitous" happening—an "unforeseen event, which is not expected or designed"—it is an accident within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act. See House of Lords case of Fenton v. Thorley & Co., 19 T. L. R. 684, 685; Boardman v. Scott & Whitworth, [1902] 1 K. B. 43, 46.

[23] When, however, death results from germ infection, to bring a case of this character within the act of 1915, supra, the disease in question must be a sudden development from some such abrupt violence to the physical structure of the body as already indicated, and not the mere result of gradual development from long-continued exposure to natural dangers incident to the employment of the deceased person, as in cases of occupational diseases, the risks of which are voluntarily assumed. Here the anthrax

MESSINGER v. LEHIGH VALLEY R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(7)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—FINDINGS OF COMPENSATION BOARD—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Section 409, Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915, making Compensation Board's findings of fact final in all cases, includes all instances where board either adopts referee's findings or makes its own findings after a hearing de novo, and courts can grant no relief from its erroneous findings.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(3½)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW—RULING OF COMPENSATION BOARD—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where referee disallowed claim for compensation because employer and employé were engaged in interstate commerce, and Workmen's Compensation Act June 2, 1915, did not apply, the Compensation Board's affirmance thereof was final, and appeal therefrom to common pleas was properly dismissed.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Myrtle Messinger against the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company. From a judgment dismissing an appeal from the Workmen's Compensation Board, sustaining a referee's findings of fact, claimant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Ulysses S. Koons, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Benjamin O. Frick and Prichard, Saul, Bayard & Evans, all of Philadelphia, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. Plaintiff claimed compensation for the death of her husband, who was accidentally killed in the course of his employment with defendant. The referee disallowed the claim, on the ground that, at the time of the accident, "the employer and employé were then engaged in interstate commerce," and therefore the Workmen's Compensation Act of Pennsylvania could not apply, citing New York Central R. R. Co. v. Winfield, 244 U. S. 147, 152, 37 Sup. Ct. 546, 61 L. Ed. 1045, L. R. A. 1918C, 439, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1139, and Erie R. R. Co. v. Winfield, 244 U. S. 170, 172, 37 Sup. Ct. 556, 61 L. Ed. 1057, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 662. An appeal was taken to the Workmen's Compensation Board, attacking the underlying findings of fact made by the referee on the ground that they were not supported by the evidence in the case, and the ultimate or controlling finding on the ground that "absolutely no evidence" had been introduced to sustain it. The board affirmed the findings and conclusion of the referee, and dismissed the appeal, whereupon the case was removed to the common pleas (of Philadelphia county), which tribunal affirmed the order of the board. Plaintiff then appealed to this court.

germ, a distinguishable entity, came into actual contact with the deceased, thus gaining an entrance into his body, and his neck began to swell and discolor; therefore the complaint from which McCauley died can be traced to a certain time when there was a sudden or violent change in the condition of the physical structure of his body, just as though a serpent, concealed in the material upon which he was working had unexpectedly and suddenly bitten him. See Helrs v. Hull & Co., 178 App. Div. 350, 352, 164 N. Y. Supp. 767.

[24, 25] In reading this opinion, one must constantly keep in mind that the Compensation Board did not treat the appeal to it as on an allegation of mistake of fact, and grant a hearing de novo, but as involving and turning upon a question of law; i. e., was there legal proof to sustain the conclusion of the referee? Under these circumstances, that body had no power to make separate findings of fact; hence the statutory rule that "the board's findings of fact shall in all cases be final" (held to be binding upon the courts in Poluskiewicz v. P. & R. C. & I. Co., 257 Pa. 305, 101 Atl. 638) does not apply. The findings referred to in section 409 of the act, as just quoted, mean either those made after a hearing de novo before the board or contained in the report of the referee and affirmed by the former. In the present case, had the board considered the appeal to it as involving questions of fact, granted a hearing de novo and made its own findings, restricting them to what it considered the ultimate, or controlling, facts involved, the court below would have been powerless to interfere, so far as the question now before us is concerned, unless the record had been returned for additional findings (Poluskiewicz v. P. & R. C. & I. Co., supra); for, on certiorari, the testimony not being up for review, in the absence of findings as to the character of the evidence, the courts would be obliged to assume the latter competent, relevant and sufficient (Toole's Appeal, 90 Pa. 376; Di Nubles' License, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 571, 578; Meenan's License, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 575, 578; Meenan's Appeal, supra). Here, however, the written opinions of both the board and referee so plainly show, by findings, the character of the evidence, as to enable the courts to adjudge the legal question involved. Therefore the case is reduced to this: We having determined that there is no lack of legal proof to sustain the findings of the referee, and there having been no appeal from these findings as matters of fact, the provision in section 409 of the act, that "a referee's findings of fact shall be final unless the board shall allow an appeal therefrom," applies and governs in favor of the appellee.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment of the court below is affirmed, with a procedendo.

[1, 2] Appellant states two questions involved:

(1) "Are the findings of fact by the Workmen's Compensation Board, . . . upon appeal from the referee, final in cases where there is no testimony whatever to support said findings of fact?"

(2) "Was there any competent legal evidence before the referee to sustain his finding of fact that appellant's husband was injured while engaged in an act of interstate commerce?"

Section 409 of the act of June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736, 751), provides that "the board's findings of fact shall in all cases be final." This provision comprehends all instances where the board either adopts the findings of the referee or makes its own findings on a hearing de novo, and, as recently ruled by us in Poluskiewicz v. P. & R. C. & I. Co., 257 Pa. 305, 307, 101 Atl. 638, if the board errs in its findings, the "courts can grant no relief." Here there are no subordinate underlying findings as to the character of evidence upon which the ultimate or controlling findings rest, and, since the case before us is on certiorari, the testimony taken by the referee is no part of the record; hence we are not in a position to determine the propositions stated by appellant. In McCauley v. Imperial Woolen Co., 104 Atl. 617, we make a rather minute examination of the act of 1915, supra, and fully discuss the relative rights, duties, and jurisdiction of the Compensation Board and courts thereunder. It would serve no useful purpose to go over the same ground again.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

MOONEY v. LEHIGH VALLEY R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(3½)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BOARD—INTERLOCUTORY ORDER—APPEAL.

Where Workmen's Compensation Board concludes that a referee's adjudication indicated that there was no evidence before him substantiating the allegations of the claim petition, its order granting a hearing de novo is interlocutory, and no appeal lies therefrom.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(7)—APPEAL TO WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BOARD—HEARING DE NOVO.

Where referee's conclusions comprehend mixed findings of fact and law, the Workmen's Compensation Board is justified in treating the appeal to it as involving a question of fact, and in granting a hearing de novo.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Elizabeth Mooney, widow of an employé, against the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company. The Workmen's Compensation Board, after considering the referee's report, granted a hearing de novo; and from an order of the Court of Common Pleas quashing an appeal from the board, claimant appeals. Appeal quashed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Ulysses S. Koons and Charles F. Gerhard, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. Benjamin O. Frick and Prichard, Saul, Bayard & Evans, all of Philadelphia, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. Plaintiff claimed compensation for the death of her husband, who was accidentally killed in the course of his employment with defendant. The referee made a compensation order. Thereupon an appeal was taken to the board, on the ground "decedent was engaged in an act connected with interstate commerce at the time the accident occurred, and the Workmen's Compensation Act of June 2, 1915, (P. L. 736), is not applicable to the case." The board found that adjudication of the referee "clearly indicates there was no evidence before him that substantiated the allegation of the claim petition," and concluded it could not "sustain the findings of fact of the referee"; therefore it made an order granting "a hearing de novo." Plaintiff removed the case to the common pleas, which tribunal determined the order in question was merely interlocutory, quashed the appeal, and remanded the record. Plaintiff then appealed to this court.

[1, 2] The appellant states, inter alia, the following questions for our determination:

(1) "Did the Workmen's Compensation Board have the right to grant a hearing de novo in an appeal by defendant solely from the referee's conclusion of law that plaintiff's husband was not engaged in interstate commerce?"

(2) "Was the grant of a hearing de novo as aforesaid merely an interlocutory order of the board, from which there could be no appeal?"

A sufficient answer to the first of these questions is that the conclusion therein referred to comprehends a mixed finding of fact and law; hence the Compensation Board was justified in treating the appeal to it as involving a question of fact, and in granting a hearing de novo. As to the second question involved, we agree with the court below that the order in question is interlocutory. In McCauley v. Imperial Woolen Co., 104 Atl. 617, we analyze the relevant parts of the act of 1915, supra, and so fully discuss the points of practice here involved that a repetition thereof in this case would serve no useful purpose.

This appeal is quashed.

GRANT v. PATRONS' ANDROSCOGGIN
MUT. FIRE INS. CO.(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Sept. 23, 1918.)INSURANCE ¶685(3)—VALIDITY OF POLICY—INTEREST OF INSURED—CHANGE OF INTEREST —NOTICE—EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff, in an action to collect on an insurance policy, held to have sustained the burden of proving that the insurer had notice of the change of interest in the property made by giving a mortgage.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Waldo County, at Law.

Action by Geneva A. Grant against the Patrons' Androscoggin Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Case reported. Judgment for plaintiff.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, and DUNN, JJ.

Fellows & Fellows, of Bangor, for plaintiff. Tascus Atwood, of Auburn, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. The facts essential to the decision of this case are as follows: The plaintiff took of the defendant company a policy of insurance upon her real estate. She then placed a mortgage upon the insured property, and by direction of the bank to which the mortgage was given went to see the agent who procured the insurance, to get him to stamp it "or sign it." She says he told her to write on the mortgage:

"In case of fire pay with interest to the order of the Belfast Savings Bank."

This was written by her on the policy. The agent admits her coming to see him, but denies that he told her to indorse anything upon the policy, but, on the contrary, says he told her he had no authority to do so, and that she must write the secretary of the company. After this transaction she paid, and the company accepted, assessments from her in 1914, 1915, 1916, and they have never been returned.

This case comes up on report. Under our statute (Rev. St. 1916, c. 53, § 119), that "the agents of all domestic companies shall be regarded as in the place of the company in all respects regarding any insurance effected by them," and that "the company is bound by their knowledge of the risk and of all matters connected therewith," and the interpretation, time after time, of this statute, defining the scope and effect of its meaning, it is evident that the only question before us is one of fact, involving the recollection of a transaction and the conversation regarding it, between the plaintiff and the agent of the company.

It is the opinion of the court that the plaintiff is corroborated by the circumstances surrounding the disputed transaction and conversation, and that she has fairly sustained the burden of proof.

According to the stipulation in the report, the entry must be: Judgment for the plaintiff for $1,800 and interest from 90 days after the proof of loss.

MORSE CO. v. BARNES.(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Sept. 23, 1918.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ¶829(2)—ACTION FOR PURCHASE PRICE—DEFENSE OF INTENTION OF ILLEGAL SALE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for the price of intoxicating liquors, the burden rests on the defendant to prove his defense that the liquors were intended for illegal sale by a preponderance of the evidence.

2. NEW TRIAL ¶168—MOTION IN APPELLATE COURT—GROUNDS.

In an action for the purchase price of liquors, it was for the jury to place its own construction upon the testimony of defendant, who was evasive and uncertain in his testimony, and verdict will not be disturbed on motion for new trial.

3. NEW TRIAL ¶168—MOTION IN SUPREME COURT—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTION.

Where the charge of the presiding justice is not printed, it must be assumed to have been correct, and to have properly presented all the issues raised.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Oxford County, at Law.

Action by the Morse Company against Fred G. Barnes. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant moved for new trial. Motion overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Albert J. Stearns, of Norway, Me., for plaintiff. Eugene F. Smith, of Norway, Me., and Alton C. Wheeler, of South Paris, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This case comes up on motion for a new trial by the defendant. The plaintiff brought an action to recover for intoxicating liquors sold and delivered to the defendant. The amount claimed, including interest, was $10.45. The defense set up was that the liquors were intended for illegal sale and were so disposed of. Under the well-settled law in this state, the only question presented to the jury was whether the defendant, when he purchased the intoxicating liquors in question, intended to dispose of them in a manner prohibited by law. It is claimed that the uncontradicted testimony of the defendant shows that the liquor was intended for illegal sale, although it might not have been known to the defendant that the method by which he intended to dispose of it was illegal.

[1, 2] The defendant admits the contract and the receipt of the liquors, but undertakes to avoid payment by setting up the defense in question. The burden is upon him to sustain his contention by a preponderance of the evidence. The only evidence by which he undertook to do this was his own. A reading of his testimony shows that it is uncertain, and either through stupidity or intention to evade lacked frankness. It was for the jury to say what construction they would place upon this uncertain and evasive attitude of the defendant. So far as anything appears in the case, it may be that the jury disbelieved the defendant's testimony.

[3] Allusion in argument is made to the charge of the presiding justice, but as the charge is not printed it must be assumed to have been correct, and to have properly presented all the issues raised in the case. We do not feel justified in disturbing this verdict.

Motion overruled.

ROYAL INS. CO. v. NELKE

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Sept. 23, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ~~856~~—TIME FOR PRESENTATION OF EXCEPTIONS—ALLOWANCE AND FINDING.

Where case was tried and verdict rendered April 12th, and April term adjourned April 15th, exceptions not filed or presented to presiding justice for allowance, or to opposing counsel for examination, until June 17th, and allowed only as far as discretion of presiding judge extended, will be dismissed; there being no waiver of provision of superior court rule 22 as to exceptions being presented at term or within 10 days after adjournment.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Androscoggin County.

Action by the Royal Insurance Company against Arthur W. Nelke. Defenses overruled, and defendant brings exceptions. Exceptions dismissed.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Ralph W. Crockett, of Lewiston, for plaintiff. McGillicuddy & Morey, of Lewiston, for defendant.

SPEAR, J. This is an action of replevin for the possession of an automobile. The facts are briefly as follows: Mr. William T. Ruhl of Boston was the owner of a Buick car. On the 4th day of December his sister drove the car into the city, left it in the street unlocked, and it was stolen. The car was insured against theft in the Royal Insurance Company. The company was notified, investigated, and at the time for payment paid the policy, and took from the owner a subrogation receipt, and also an absolute bill of sale of the car. This bill of sale vested the title of the car in the plaintiff company. It is contended that the failure of Miss Ruhl to lock the car, as required by the Massachusetts statute, was an act of negligence that would have excused the company from paying the policy.

It is further contended that the car was not licensed and was a trespasser on the road.

These defenses were urged as conclusive of the plaintiff's right of recovery.

The presiding justice, however, overruled these contentions, and the defendant excepted. While the decision of the case is necessarily based upon other grounds, it is a satisfaction to observe that the verdict was warranted upon the testimony.

But the ground upon which the case must be considered involves the rule of fixing the time of presenting exceptions. The plaintiff filed a motion to dismiss the exceptions because they were not seasonably filed or presented to the presiding justice. There is no dispute about the facts stated in the motion, viz.:

"Under rule 22 of the superior court for Androscoggin county, exceptions must be presented to the presiding justice at the term at which they are taken or within 10 days after the adjournment of the term. The case was tried and verdict rendered April 12th. The April Term adjourned April 15th. The exceptions were not filed or presented to the presiding justice for allowance, or to counsel for the plaintiff for examination, until June 17th, 66 days after verdict, and 63 days after adjournment of the term. Neither does the docket show any entry of the filing of them up to June 17th. Counsel for the plaintiff expressly stated immediately after the trial that he would waive no right to object to the allowance of exceptions on account of delay. The exceptions were allowed only as far as the discretion of the presiding justice extended. This all appears as a part of the bill itself."

The rule must be regarded as controlling. The discretion of the presiding justice could not extend beyond the 10-day limitation prescribed by the rule; otherwise the rule would have no force against his unlimited discretion. It may be competent for parties to waive the provisions of the rule, as by an entry on the docket in term time, "Exceptions filed and allowed," or some other minute of agreement; but waiver is expressly negatived in the case before us, as the facts stated in the motion show.

This conclusion is supported by all the decisions which have been rendered upon a similar state of facts. Fish v. Baker, 74 Me. 107; Howard v. Folger, 15 Me. 447. The Massachusetts cases are to the same effect. Dunn v. Motor Co., 92 Me. 165, 42 Atl. 389, is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. It does not disclose a similar state of facts.

The exceptions, accordingly, were not seasonably presented and approved by the presiding justice, and the entry must be:

Exceptions dismissed.

LEWISTON BUICK CO. v. NELKE et al.
(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Sept. 23, 1918.)

Exceptions from Superior Court, Androscoggin County.

Action by the Lewiston Buick Company against Arthur W. Nelke and another. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendants bring exceptions. Exceptions dismissed.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Ralph W. Crockett, of Lewiston, for plaintiff. McGillicuddy & Morey, of Lewiston, for defendant Nelke. Pulsifer & Ludden, of Auburn, for defendant trustee.

PER CURIAM. This is an action for money had and received, to recover the amount paid the defendant for an automobile alleged to have been stolen property. The case was tried and a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiff. It is unnecessary to recite the facts, as the decision of the case depends upon precisely the same legal principle as was involved in Royal Insurance Co. v. Nelke, 117 Me. 386, 104 Atl. 626. The two cases were tried at the same term of court, and the exceptions were filed and allowed at the same time. A motion was filed to dismiss the exceptions for the same reasons stated in the latter case. While we think the verdict was warranted by the evidence, yet, for the reasons stated in Royal Insurance Company v. Nelke, the entry must be:
Exceptions dismissed.

HUNTER v. MOUNTFORT.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Sept. 23, 1918.)

NEW TRIAL \S 173—PROCEEDINGS—TESTIMONY AT FORMER TRIAL.

Where verdict for plaintiff was set aside and case retried, the testimony taken at the former trial was not a part of the second trial, and could not be considered in passing on motion for nonsuit at close of plaintiff's evidence.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Cumberland County, at Law.

Action by Madeline A. Hunter, by next friend, against John H. Mountfort. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff excepts. Exceptions sustained, and new trial granted.

See, also, 102 Atl. 975.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

William A. Connellan and Harry H. Cannell, both of Portland, for plaintiff. Payson & Virgin, of Portland, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This case has been tried before, and a verdict for the plaintiff set aside.

After the plaintiff's evidence was all in upon the present trial, a motion for nonsuit was sustained, and exceptions taken. By an inadvertence it was assumed that the testimony taken at the former trial was a part of the present case, and could be considered in the exceptions before the law court.

But, such not being the fact, the only question is whether the plaintiff's undisputed evidence was sufficient to warrant her in having it presented to the jury. We think it was.

Exceptions sustained.

New trial granted.

FLAHERTY v. MAINE MOTOR CARRIAGE CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 10, 1918.)

1. SALES \S 273(5)—SALE OF AUTOMOBILE—OBLIGATION OF SELLER.

Dealer in standard automobiles manufactured by others, who contracted to supply described type of motor truck, that is, a three-ton Pope-Hartford, 1912 model, was bound only to furnish truck of that pattern, with parts properly constructed and assembled, a marketable machine; there being no warranty of suitability to buyer's business.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 1066—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, on question of breach of warranty in sale of motor truck, fitness for purpose intended was not involved, it was prejudicial error to include that issue in instruction submitting issue of proper construction of machine.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Cumberland County, at Law.

Action by Patrick J. Flaherty against the Maine Motor Carriage Company. There was verdict for plaintiff, and defendant moved for new trial and excepts. Exceptions sustained.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

D. A. Meaher, of Portland, for plaintiff. P. F. Chapman and Ralph O. Brewster, both of Portland, for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. The plaintiff, who carried on a trucking business in the city of Portland under the name of the Portland Trucking Company, on March 2, 1912, ordered of the defendant corporation, a dealer in motor vehicles, a three-ton Pope-Hartford truck. The order was in writing, and by its terms the truck was to be of the model of 1912, with demountable rims, gas headlights, and a body of certain dimensions, with adjustable sides. The agreed price was $3,400 f. o. b. factory, of which $1,000 was to be in cash when the vehicle was ready for delivery, and the balance in a note for $2,400, payable $200 each month; the truck to remain the property of the defendant until the note was fully paid.

There were no other specifications, and there were no express representations or guaranties of any kind. At the end of the order was this statement:

"Note.—No verbal agreement or promise not specified in this order will be recognized."

It is not claimed, however, that any oral guaranty was made. The order was signed by both parties, and by it their rights must be governed.

The truck arrived from the factory and was delivered to the plaintiff on April 4, 1912. The cash payment of $1,000 was then made and the note for $2,400 was given. Soon after the employees of the plaintiff began to use the vehicle they discovered various defects in it, and these were remedied more or less satisfactorily by the defendant. At one time a machinist came from the plant of the Pope-Hartford Company and sought to correct the difficulties; but the plaintiff claims that it at no time operated properly, especially on country roads, and that it was not adapted to the purpose for which he purchased it. The plaintiff, in addition to the $1,000 initial payment, made certain other payments in cash and rendered service to the defendant in trucking, which was credited as cash, to the amount of $810, during the summer and early fall, as found by the auditor, and he drove the truck in his business about 4,500 miles during that time.

On October 24, 1912, the defendant began foreclosure proceedings for default of the amount due on the note installment, and the foreclosure was completed without redemption.

Two years later, in September, 1914, the plaintiff brought this action for money had and received, to recover the amount paid toward the consideration, claiming a breach of implied warranty on the part of the defendant in the sale of the truck and a valid rescission on his own part. The jury returned a verdict in the sum of $1,692.99, and the case is before the law court on defendant's motion and exceptions.

We need consider only the exceptions. In the course of the charge, the jury were explicitly instructed, in various forms of expression, that there was an implied warranty on the part of the seller that this auto truck was suitable for the business and adapted to the purpose for which it was purchased by the plaintiff. This instruction went farther than the law warrants, under the facts of this case.

[1] The rules of law governing warranties accompanying the sale of manufactured articles are well settled in this state, and the rights of the parties are clearly defined. The defendant here was not a manufacturer to whom application had been made for the construction of a particular machine for a special and designated purpose, but he was a dealer in machines of standard and well-known types manufactured by others. Under the contract he was bound to supply a certain described and defined type of truck well known in the general market, to wit, a three-ton Pope-Hartford, of the model of 1912. Of course, it must be of that pattern, with its parts properly constructed and assembled, so as to meet the requirement of a merchantable or marketable machine. Further than that he was not bound. The contract carried with it no guaranty or warranty or representation of suitability, nor of adaptability to the plaintiff's business. The plaintiff had made his own selection as to type, and the responsibility for the wisdom of the choice rested on him, not on the seller. White v. Oakes, 88 Me. 367, 84 Atl. 175, 32 L. R. A. 592; Lombard Water Wheel Co. v. Great Northern Paper Co., 101 Me. 114, 63 Atl. 555, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 180 and note; Philbrick v. Kendall, 111 Me. 198, 88 Atl. 540; Armour Fertilizer Works v. Logans, 116 Me. 83, 99 Atl. 766.

[2] The grounds on which the plaintiff based his claim for breach of warranty were two: First, that the machine was not properly constructed; and, second, that it was not adapted to his work, especially in the sand and mud of country roads. The first element was involved in this action; the second was not. The jury, however, were instructed to consider both propositions on the question of breach of warranty. This was reversible error, as it related to a vital point in the case.

Exceptions sustained.

SHEPHERD v. S. L. CROSBY CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 15, 1913.)

DAMAGES \Leftarrow 208(1)—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Question of damages for breach of contract held for the jury.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, at Law.

Action by Edwin A. Shepherd against the S. L. Crosby Company. Judgment on verdict for plaintiff. On defendant's motion for new trial. Motion overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Charles W. Hayes, of Foxcroft, for plaintiff. Myer W. Epstein and George H. Worsster, both of Bangor, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This is an action brought to recover damages for an alleged breach of a contract to deliver automobiles. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $909.78, and the case is before us on general motion for a new trial.

The plaintiff ordered 15 Maxwell touring cars, and the defendant agreed in writing to deliver to the plaintiff 15 cars as follows: Five in October, 1916, 3 in March, 1917, 3 in May, 1917, and 4 in June, 1917. The defendant delivered the first lot of 5 cars, but before the time for delivery of the March allotment the price of the touring cars was advanced by the manufacturers, and the de-defendant refused to deliver the cars at the contract price, the plaintiff refused to pay the advanced price, and this suit followed. It will serve no useful purpose to recite the evidence. It clearly appears that the defendant broke its contract, and the remaining questions as to damages presented questions for the jury, under proper instructions, which we must assume were given.

The testimony justifies the verdict, and it is so manifestly right as to conclusion and damage that it must stand.

Motion overruled:

ZANONI v. CYR et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 15, 1918.)

1. SEARCHES AND SEIZURES § 8—RETURN OF SEARCH WARRANT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—CONSTRUCTION—"OTHER WARRANTS."

The words of Rev. St. c. 134, § 15, relating to search warrants, "and be made returnable like other warrants," in view of section 8, authorizing "other warrants," apply to the form of the warrant and duty of the justice, and not to the duty or liability of the searching officer.

2. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES § 28(1)—ACTION AGAINST—SEARCH WARRANT—JUSTIFICATION—WARRANT NOT RETURNED TO COURT.

A search warrant reciting the essential facts of a complaint, as enumerated in Rev. St. c. 134, § 14, and otherwise complying with section 15, requiring return where person or thing searched for is found, and bearing the return statement, "Nothing found," although not returned into court, is sufficient to protect the officers executing it from liability for trespass.

3. SEARCHES AND SEIZURES § 8—SEARCH WARRANTS—EXECUTION—NECESSITY OF RETURN—WHEN NOTHING FOUND.

Rev. St. c. 134, § 15, does not require a search warrant to be returned in any event, but only in case the person or thing searched for is found.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Oxford County, at Law.

Action by Tersella Zanoni against William F. Cyr and another for trespass. Hearing upon exceptions to report of referee. Exceptions overruled, and judgment entered for defendants in accordance with referee's report.

Argued before CORNISH, O. J., and BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Bernard A. Bove and Jacob H. Berman, both of Portland, for plaintiff. George A. Hutchins and Blaise & Parker, all of Rumford, for defendants.

HANSON, J. This was an action of trespass, heard by a referee, who made the following report:

"Judgment for the defendants, with the right of exceptions to the plaintiff upon the grounds stated in the rescript and hereto attached."

The rescript states the case fully, as follows:

"This is an action of trespass against the defendants for the alleged making of an illegal search of the dwelling house of Zanoni, and while so doing insulting and exciting his wife, so that she fell into a state of nervous prostration and suffered much pain and injury. The plaintiff claims first that the search was unreasonable. I find as a matter of fact that it was not. Nor do I find that there was any abuse of process. The plaintiffs further claim, however, as a matter of law, that the defendants are guilty as trespassers ab initio. This contention arises upon this state of facts: The warrant was issued and served on the 29th day of September, 1916. The warrant was fair on its face, authorized the defendants as duly qualified officers to make the search commanded, and was executed in a reasonable manner. A proper return was made upon the warrant of the date of September 29, 1916, signed by Lewis B. Small, deputy, naming William F. Cyr as aid. The return contains this statement: 'Nothing found'—and a notation of the officer's fees and court fees. The warrant was never returned to the court that issued it, nor to the sheriff, but was retained in the possession of Deputy Small, the defendant who procured and served it, from September 29, 1916, until October 6, 1917, when he produced it at the reference as a justification. Upon this state of facts I rule as a matter of law that the failure of the defendant Small, to return the warrant to the court issuing it, having found nothing in his search, and having made no arrest, does not deprive him of the right of protection under the warrant, but affords him, and his aid, Cyr, the other defendant, full justification for making the search complained of. To this ruling I reserve the right of exceptions to the plaintiff."

[1-3] But one question arises: Did the warrant require the defendants forthwith to make a return under the circumstances? We think not. The law authorizing search and seizure process provides that search warrants can be issued only according to the following provisions (R. S. c. 134, § 14): The complaint for a warrant to search must be made in writing, sworn to and signed by the complainant, must specifically designate the place to be searched, the owner or occupant thereof, and the person or thing to be searched for, and allege substantially the offense in relation thereto, and that the complainant has probable cause to suspect and does suspect, that the same is there concealed. Section 15. Search warrants shall recite, by reference to the complaint annexed or otherwise, all the essential facts alleged in the complaint, be directed to a proper officer or to a person therein named, and be made returnable like other warrants, and the person or thing searched for, if found, and the person in whose possession or custody the same was found, shall be returned with the warrant before a proper magistrate.

The plaintiff contends that the words "and be made returnable like other warrants" have peculiar significance, and apply to this case supporting his contention, and asks in his brief, "What does the Legislature mean by the words 'like other warrants'?" Counsel concludes that recourse to the common law is the only avenue open, and quotes Cutting, J., in Patterson v. Creighton, 42 Me. 878:

"At common law, all warrants issuing from the proper authorities are to be executed and returned by the officer to whom they are directed and received, with his doings thereon, and his return, as to other parties, is conclusive."

As to the first contention, we think the words "and be made returnable like other warrants" are fully explained, and their purpose indicated, by a reference to the statute authorizing "other warrants." Section 8 of chapter 134, R. S., provides that—

"Warrants issued by trial justices shall be made returnable before any trial justice in the county, and such warrants may be returned before any municipal or police court in the same county and the same proceedings had thereon as if said warrants had originally issued from said municipal [court] or police court; and the justice, for issuing one not so returnable, shall be imprisoned for six months and pay the costs of prosecution."

These words plainly relate to the form of the warrant and the duty of the justice, and not to the duty or liability of the officer. Again, section 15 does not require a return to be made to the justice issuing the warrant in any event, but only in case the person or thing searched for "is found." The return shows that nothing was found, and such return, now used in this case as a justification, must be held to have been properly used, and the warrant may be returned to the proper magistrate within a reasonable time after final disposition of this case. The warrant did not in terms require the officer to make a return, and it seems that it has not been the custom in this state to have in such warrant a command to make return if there was "nothing found." No other case has arisen, a fact which may or may not justify continuance of the present form of warrant, as the Legislature may determine.

Exceptions overruled.

Judgment for defendants in accordance with the report of referee.

Appeal of PEMBROKE

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 15, 1913.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §20 (7)—CREDITOR OF ESTATE—EVIDENCE.

Upon issue whether seller of piano was creditor, entitled to petition for administration, piano having been sold to deceased's son, who had assigned contract to deceased, evidence that deceased exercised ownership with consent of seller, made payments on piano, and promised to pay balance, was admissible.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §1010(1)—SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT — FINDINGS OF FACT OF PRESIDING JUSTICE—REVIEW.

Exceptions do not lie to findings of fact of presiding justice, and such findings are final, if there is any evidence to sustain them.

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §23(3)—PROMISE TO ANSWER FOR DEBT OF ANOTHER.

Where purchaser of piano with knowledge of seller assigned all his right and title in contract of purchaser to his mother, and she acknowledged liability and made certain payments in her behalf, the obligation was her own, and not within the statute of frauds.

Appeal from Supreme Judicial Court, Piscataquis County, at Law.

Petition by Hughes & Son Piano Manufacturing Company for administration of the estate of Mary Pembroke, deceased. Administration was granted, and Patrick B. Pembroke, husband of deceased, appealed. The presiding judge dismissed the appeal, and affirmed the decree, and appellant excepts. Exceptions overruled.

Argued before BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Harry L. Smith, of Dover, and John S. Williams, of Guilford, for appellant. Charles W. Hayes, of Foxcroft, for appellee.

HANSON, J. This was an appeal by Patrick B. Pembroke, husband of Mary Pembroke, deceased, from a decree of the judge of probate for the county of Piscataquis, granting administration of the estate of said Mary Pembroke to Charles W. Hayes, on the petition of Hughes & Son Piano Manufacturing Company, claiming to be a creditor of said estate. The following reasons of appeal were alleged:

First. That said Charles W. Hayes is not an heir at law or next of kin of said Mary Pembroke.

Second. That your appellant, Patrick B. Pembroke, is the widower of the said Mary Pembroke, and is a suitable person for administrator of her estate.

Third. That Hughes & Son Manufacturing Company was not a creditor of the said Mary Pembroke during her lifetime, and is not a creditor of her said estate.

Fourth. That said Charles W. Hayes is not a creditor of the estate of said Mary Pembroke.

At the hearing the first, second, and fourth reasons of appeal were admitted; the issue was upon the third reason, and involved the ownership of a piano.

A statement of the case, so far as material here, may be taken from the exceptions, which were to the admission of certain testimony filed by the appellant:

"John Pembroke, son of the late Mary Pembroke, hired and received of the petitioning corporation a certain piano, known as 'Hughes & Son Mfg. Co. Style Hook, No. 22308,' agreeing to pay certain instalments until the full sum of $300 had been paid. John Pembroke signed a certain writing or contract, commonly called a lease, November 29, 1913, and on the same day delivered to said corporation an organ, for which he was allowed $35 by said corporation, which was applied to the purchase price of said piano, and in said lease agreed to pay $7 per month thereafter until the full sum of $300 had been paid. John Pembroke, with the knowledge of Hughes & Son Company, assigned all his right and title in said lease to his mother, Mary Pembroke, in February, 1916. Mary Pembroke died in June following, and, her husband failing to seek administration of her estate, the petition herein was filed and allowed. The appellant claimed 'that the assignment of said lease from John Pembroke to his mother was a conditional assignment; that it was made in anticipation of his going to the Mexican border; that any interest he might have in said lease should go to his said mother, in case he should not return home, but to be null and void should he return alive.' And appellant further claims that said assignment was, in its nature, and the nature of the lease, asking said Mary Pembroke to assume the obligation of another, and clearly within the statute of frauds; that Mary Pembroke was not indebted to said Hughes & Son Manufacturing Company during her lifetime, consequently her estate is not indebted to said company."

[1] Appellant excepted to the admission of testimony which tended to show that Mary Pembroke, in her lifetime, acquired and exercised ownership over said piano, with the consent of Hughes & Son Company, and that certain payments were made on the amount due them, in her behalf and upon her account; that she acknowledged her liability and promised to pay the balance due. The testimony came from disinterested parties, having full knowledge, and in part relating to documents belonging to Mary Pembroke, and was clearly admissible. The exceptions presented these questions: Was the lease or contract between John and Mary Pembroke within the statute of frauds? Was the undertaking of Mary Pembroke simply to pay the debt of her son, and not her individual undertaking?

The presiding justice, upon hearing the evidence, found for the appellee, and entered his decree as follows:

"This case was heard by me on the 17th day of October, 1917. After a careful consideration of the law and the evidence, my conclusion is that the appeal should be dismissed, and the decree of the judge of probate affirmed. I therefore direct the clerk of court to make the entry: 'Appeal dismissed, with costs. Decree of judge of probate affirmed.'

"As a part of my finding, I also file the evidence with decree."

[2, 3] The testimony authorizes the finding of the sitting justice. There is nothing before us to justify varying the rule that exceptions do not lie to the findings of fact by the presiding justice, and such findings are final, binding, and conclusive, if there is any evidence to sustain such finding. Palmer's Appeal, 110 Me. 441, 86 Atl. 919; In re Gower, 118 Me. 153, 93 Atl. 64. It clearly appears that Mary Pembroke owned the piano, that she was indebted to Hughes & Son Company for the balance due them thereon, and that she promised to pay them that amount. The obligation was her own, and not within the statute of frauds. Colbath v. Seed Co., 112 Me. 277, 91 Atl. 1007.

ILSLEY et al. v. KELLEY.

SEAVEY v. SAME.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 17, 1918.)

NEW TRIAL \Leftrightarrow 78(1)—GENERAL MOTION—VERDICT MANIFESTLY WRONG.

The case having been tried before with a similar result, the issue being the same and the case a close one, it will not be held that verdict is so manifestly wrong as to require granting of general motion for new trial.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, York County, at Law.

Actions by Harry L. Ilsley and others and by Asa M. Seavey against John Kelley. The cases were tried together, and, the jury having found for defendant, plaintiffs move for new trial. Motions overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Elias Smith, of Limington, and Emery & Waterhouse, of Biddeford, for plaintiffs. Hiram Willard, of Sanford, and J. Merrill Lord, of Kesar Falls, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. Two actions of trespass quare clausum for cutting and removing timber. The cases were tried together, and are before the court on the plaintiffs' general motion for a new trial.

The land in suit is in range D, in the town of Limerick. Range D is divided into 16 lots. The defendant admits the cutting and removing the timber, but says he owns the land on which it was cut. There was but one question involved, namely: Where is the division or check line running north and south between lots 14 and 15? Two lines were set up—the plaintiffs claiming the westerly line as the true one; the defendant claiming the easterly line to be the true original line between lots 14 and 15. The strip of land lying in the disputed limit is 175½ feet wide at the north end, and 173 feet at the south end.

These cases were tried before, with a similar result. The issue was the same. The case is a close one, and, the jury having found for the defendant, we are not authorized to say that the verdict is so manifestly wrong as to require interference.

The entry will be:

Motions overruled.

CHARLES LAWRENCE CO. v. BUZZELL et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 17, 1918.)

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY \Leftrightarrow 161—LIABILITY OF SURETIES—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In suit against sureties on traveling salesman's bond, defendants claiming plaintiff had known of its agent's default and had not notified them, etc., evidence held to justify verdict for plaintiff.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Aroostook County, at Law.

Action by the Charles Lawrence Company against W. F. Buzzell and another. A nonsuit was directed, and plaintiff excepts. Judgment ordered for plaintiff under stipulation.

Argued before OORNTISH, C. J., and HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Andrews & Nelson, of Augusta, for plaintiff. Pierce & Madigan and Shaw & Thornton, all of Houlton, for defendants.

PER CURIAM. This is an action of debt, brought by Charles Lawrence Company, a Massachusetts corporation, doing a wholesale grocery business in Boston, against W. F. Buzzell and George Q. Nickerson, both of Houlton, Me., sureties on a bond given the plaintiff company by Fred H. Harmon, plaintiff's traveling salesman in Aroostook county, conditioned on the said Harmon's accounting to said company for any and all money, checks, securities, etc., received by him from any of the debtors of said company. The cause was heard before a jury at the November term, 1917, of said court. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence the presiding justice directed a nonsuit, with the stipulation on the part of the defendants that, if the law court overrules the order of nonsuit, the law court is authorized to assess such damages as the law and the evidence requires. The case is before the court on exceptions to such order.

The said Fred H. Harmon, as traveling salesman of plaintiff company, had been in its employ about eight years. In addition to selling goods, he collected about $20,000 a year. His territory comprised the whole of Aroostook county, where there are many small towns with no banking facilities. For this reason Harmon was a little slow, or slack, in making remittances of these collected accounts. The plaintiff company wrote Harmon, stating that it would be necessary for them to stamp his accounts "Pay no money to salesmen." In reply Mr. Harmon offered to furnish a bond for $1,000, to secure the payment to the company of any sums collected by him. Harmon sent the bond voluntarily upon which suit is brought. The bond was accepted by plaintiff company, after it had made some inquiries as to the financial responsibility of the sureties. Mr. Harmon continued to make collections as before, being occasionally short in his remittances, as he had formerly been, for about a year. At the end of that time, after reporting collections of about $500 without remittances therefor, he disappeared. It then developed that, shortly before his disappearance, he had collected an additional amount of $667.85, for which he had made no returns whatever. The penal sum of the bond was $1,000, of which sum $350 had already been paid to said company by one of the sureties. Plaintiff company claimed in said action the balance of $650 and interest thereon from May 27, 1915.

The defendants' claim is stated in the brief statement:

"That prior to the alleged execution of the bond in suit the principal had defaulted criminally as employee of the plaintiff corporation to a large amount, which defalcation the said plaintiff in the exercise of due care should have known, and in fact did know; that the said plaintiff knew that the said principal was not honest and trustworthy, and should and did anticipate that he might default again; that the said plaintiff, anticipating future defaults, demanded a bond from the said principal as a condition of his further employment by it; that said bond was not in the usual course of business, but was especially required from this principal; that the said defendants, the sureties on said bond, were ignorant of all of the foregoing, as was well known to the plaintiff; that the defendants, if they had been aware of the aforesaid facts, would not have signed the same, as the plaintiff well knew; that before the acceptance of said bond by the plaintiff it was informed of the names and addresses of the defendants, the sureties thereon, and had ample opportunity to disclose the facts aforesaid to them, as legally bound to do, yet notwithstanding which the plaintiff fraudulently and willfully concealed and withheld all said information from the defendants, by reason of which willful and fraudulent concealment the said defendants, relying upon the representation of the said plaintiff that the said principal was worthy of trust and confidence, signed said bond.

"And the said defendants further say that, prior to the time that the larger portion of the defalcation complained of occurred, the said plaintiff discovered that the said principal was in default, but, notwithstanding its plain duty in the premises, did not remove the said principal, but continued in its employ, made no attempt to collect the shortage from him, and gave no notice to the said defendants until after the principal had absconded; that one of the defendants, in ignorance of the foregoing, paid to the plaintiff a sum largely in excess of the amount in default when first discovered by the plaintiff before the date of this writ, to wit, $350.

"And the said defendants further allege that if on the said discovery proper steps had been taken by the plaintiff, and the principal removed from its employ, and they, the defendants, as sureties, notified, any further defalcation by the principal might have been avoided."

The defendants contend that they are not liable upon the bond for two reasons:

First. That it was the duty of the plaintiff to make known all facts, of which they had knowledge, that were material for the defendants to know, before signing such an instrument; that they did not inform the defendants that the agent of the plaintiff was a criminal defaulter, which fact was material to the defendant; and that they had ample opportunity to notify them. On the contrary, they fraudulently concealed this fact from the defendants, and that therefore the bond was never valid, and the defendants are not bound by it.

Second. Assuming the bond was valid at its inception, it was the duty of the plaintiff to make known to the defendants any default on the part of the principal which occurred after signing the bond; that the principal did default, and that these defaults were never disclosed to the sureties; and that therefore the bond was avoided at the time the first default occurred, which was not disclosed to the defendants. The amount already paid, $350, would be more than enough to discharge all defaults occurring prior to the plaintiff's learning of Harmon's default.

The pleadings present issues of fact, and the plaintiff's testimony was directed to meeting the allegations in the defendants' brief statement, while proceeding in the usual way in the attempt to make out a prima facie case. We think the plaintiff succeeded, and that there was much evidence which from its very nature, being part oral and part documentary, tended to support the plaintiff's claim, and which, if believed by the jury, would have justified a verdict for the plaintiff. We are of the opinion that the case should have been submitted to a jury, but under the stipulation on page 26 of the case we are authorized to find; and do find, that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for $650, and interest from May 27, 1915.

So ordered.

MORRISSETTE v. GRAND TRUNK R. CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 22, 1918.)

MASTER AND SERVANT §276(8)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for injuries to a brakeman while coupling cars, resulting in death, evidence as to the cause of the accident held insufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.

On Motion and Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Androscoggin County, at Law.

Action by Olivene Morrisette, as administratrix, against the Grand Trunk Railroad Company. Verdict for plaintiff. On defendant's motion and exceptions. Motion sustained, and new trial granted.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, and MORRILL, JJ.

McGillicuddy & Morey, of Lewiston, for plaintiff. H. P. Sweetser, of Portland, and Dana S. Williams, of Lewiston, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This case comes up on motion and exceptions. As the motion is decisive of the case, the exceptions need not be considered.

The plaintiff's intestate was a brakeman on the Grand Trunk Railroad. On the 1st day of May, 1917, he received injuries while coupling cars to the tender of an engine from which shortly after he died. The case was tried, and a verdict rendered for the plaintiff. The only question upon the motion is whether there was any evidence upon which the verdict can be sustained. We are unable to find any. Nor, in view of the undisputed evidence as to where the decedent was found after the accident, are we able to form a satisfactory conjecture as to how the accident happened.

The car was coupled to the tender. The pin was in the coupling. He was sitting astride the coupling on top the pin, with one leg, between the hip and knee, jammed between the jaws of the bumpers, and the other leg on the other side of the coupling. The way he was caught, shows he could not have been standing on the ground and guiding the apparatus for making the coupling. The undisputed evidence also shows this to be the fact. The engineer says he went between the cars to adjust the coupling, stepped back, gave him the signal to back up, and he did back the engine to the car, and the coupling caught. The engineer further said that Morrisette had completed his duties for coupling when he signaled to back up, and had no occasion to go between the tender and the car after he had given the signal. The plaintiff furnishes no evidence as to how the accident occurred. She claims that the inference may be properly drawn that the decedent went in between the tender and the car to further adjust the coupling, but we are unable to see how either the way Morrisette was caught or the evidence has any tendency to warrant the inference. So far as the evidence goes, the negligence of the defendant has not been shown to have contributed to the accident and injury for which the plaintiff seeks to recover.

Motion sustained. New trial granted.

FOSS v. FOSS.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 22, 1918.)

NEW TRIAL §168—MOTION IN SUPREME COURT—GROUNDS—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiff and defendant are the sole witnesses, and the evidence is conflicting, the court will not interfere, in the absence of a showing that the verdict is inherently wrong, or so evidently influenced by bias, prejudice, or misunderstanding as to work a wrong.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Aroostook County, at Law.

Action by Gertrude Foss against John O. Foss. Judgment for defendant. On plaintiff's motion for new trial. Motion overruled.

Argued before SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Shaw & Thornton, of Houlton, for plaintiff. W. S. Lewin, of Houlton, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This case comes up on a motion for new trial by the plaintiff. The only witnesses were the plaintiff and defendant. The testimony was squarely conflicting. It was for the jury to settle the conflict. They did it in favor of the defendant. Whatever might be the opinion of the court upon the evidence, they cannot intervene, unless it appears that the verdict is inherently wrong or so evidently influenced by bias, prejudice, or misunderstanding as to work a wrong. This is not a case where we can interfere.

Motion overruled.

RHODE ISLAND CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT. (No. 292.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Oct. 22, 1918.)

1. COSTS §=254(5)—COST OF TRANSCRIPT — DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where transcript of testimony filed by plaintiff after setting aside of verdict as against evidence and as awarding excessive damages was used in proceedings subsequent both to trial and to delivery of transcript to plaintiff, allowance of cost of transcript as part of taxed costs is discretionary with superior court.

2. COSTS §=264 — APPLICATION FOR ALLOWANCE—NOTICE.

Statutes do not require that notice be given to opposing party of plaintiff's application to justice of superior court for allowance of cost of transcript of testimony filed by plaintiff, and failure to give notice does not render invalid action of trial justice in allowing cost.

3. COSTS §=264—APPLICATION FOR ALLOWANCE—NOTICE.

It is better practice to give notice to opposing party of application for allowance of cost of transcript of testimony, particularly where made to a judge who did not preside at trial.

4. COURTS §=99(1)—LAW OF CASE — REVIEW OF DECISION BY ANOTHER JUSTICE—ALLOWANCE OF COSTS.

Where plaintiff's motion for allowance of cost of transcript of testimony as part of taxed costs was addressed to discretion of first justice of superior court who had jurisdiction in matter, though he had not presided on trial of case, his decision was not subject to review by another justice of superior court.

Petition for writ of certiorari by the Rhode Island Company against the Superior Court to quash its record as contained in an order in a case wherein petitioner was defendant. Writ dismissed, and record sent up by the Superior Court remitted to it.

Oliford Whipple, Earl A. Sweeney, and G. Frederick Frost, all of Providence, for petitioner. John P. Brennan, of Providence, for respondent.

STEARNS, J. This is a petition for writ of certiorari for the purpose of quashing the record of the superior court as contained in the order of that court entered July 29, 1918, in the case of John W. Hanley v. Rhode Island Company, the effect of which order was to allow the cost of a certain transcript of testimony to remain as part of the plaintiff's costs in said case. The Hanley Case was an action for negligence in which three trials were had before a jury. In the first trial, owing to misconduct by the jury, the case was taken from the jury and passed.

In the second trial before Mr. Justice Sweeney, the plaintiff recovered a verdict for $5,000, which was later set aside by the trial justice on motion of the defendant, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence and that the damages awarded were excessive. To this decision the plaintiff duly took exception, filed a transcript of the testimony which was allowed by the court, and his bill of exceptions as required by law, and upon hearing of the bill of exceptions before this court the plaintiff's exceptions were overruled and the case was remitted to the superior court for further proceedings. The case was again tried before Mr. Justice Sweeney and another jury, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,500, which was sustained by the trial court, and to this decision of the trial court no exception was taken by either party. In due course the costs of the suit were taxed by the clerk of the superior court, and included therein was an item for the cost of the transcript of testimony in the second trial which had been allowed by one of the justices of the superior court. The application for the allowance of the cost of this transcript of the second trial was made by the attorney for the plaintiff in the regular course of proceedings to the particular judge of the superior court who was assigned for duty during that period of the vacation of the superior court. The justice who allowed the cost of the transcript had not presided at any of the trials referred to, and no notice of the application was given to the defendant. The defendant then filed in the superior court a motion to revise costs in several particulars, including the allowance of the cost of transcript aforesaid. This motion was heard by Mr. Justice Doran, who granted said motion in part and refused to interfere in regard to the matter of the allowance of the cost of the transcript. The defendant now petitions this court for a writ of certiorari, and the particular error of law alleged is the action of Mr. Justice Doran in regard to the matter of the allowance of the cost of the transcript, and this is the only question now raised in this proceeding.

[1-4] We find no error in the action of Mr. Justice Doran in this respect. The transcript in question was used in proceedings in said cause subsequent both to the trial and to the delivery of the transcript to the plaintiff, and in such circumstances the allowance of the cost of the transcript as part of the taxed costs is discretionary with the superior court. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. Co. v. Superior Court, 39 R. I. 560, 99 Atl. 582. The application to the justice of the superior court in the first instance for the allowance of the cost of this transcript was one which was addressed to his discretion. The statutes do not require that notice of this application shall be given to the opposing party, and the failure to give notice to the defendant in this particular case does not render invalid the action of the trial justice. We think that it is better practice to give notice to the opposing party in an application of this kind, particularly in a case where the application is made to a judge who did not preside at the trial. The fact that no notice or opportunity to be heard had been given, in some circumstances, might be sufficient to warrant the finding by this court that there had been an abuse of the discretion in granting the motion. In this particular case the record was such, however, as to present a fairly complete history of the case. Inasmuch as this motion was addressed to the discretion of the first justice who had jurisdiction in the matter, we do not consider that the decision thereon was subject to review by another justice of the superior court, and the action of Mr. Justice Doran in refusing to review this decision was without error.

The writ of certiorari is dismissed, and the record in the cause entitled John W. Hanley v. Rhode Island Company sent to us by the superior court is remitted to said court.

SHEPARD et al. v. SPRINGFIELD FIRE & MARINE INS. CO. et al. (No. 419.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Oct. 21, 1918.)

On motion for leave to reargue. Denied in part, and granted in part.

For former opinion, see 104 Atl. 18.

Wilson, Gardner & Churchill, of Providence, for complainants. Mumford, Huddy & Emerson, of Providence (E. Butler Moulton and Charles C. Mumford, both of Providence, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. On respondents' motion for leave to reargue the above cause, filed by leave of court July 9, 1918, in vacation, and now considered after the opening of the present term (October, 1918):

1. As to that portion of the motion which relates to the weight and effect of the testimony before this court upon complainants' appeal, the matters stated and referred to in the motion were all argued before this court and were fully considered by the court in framing its opinion filed at the last term (July 1, 1918), and the court finds no reason for a reargument of the cause upon such matters; that portion of the motion is therefore denied.

2. It appears from the transcript that, at the conclusion of complainants' testimony, the cause was dismissed upon motion of the respondents upon two grounds, one of which is not urged in the present motion, and was fully disposed of in the opinion, in favor of the complainants. The other ground was that upon all the complainants' testimony the allegations of the bill were not sustained and no case was made for setting aside the award. The trial court took that view of the testimony and ordered the bill dismissed. This court took a contrary view of that testimony and found that the complainants had sufficiently supported the material allegations of the bill and were entitled to have the award set aside, and thereupon reversed the decree of the lower court and ordered the cause to be remanded to the superior court sitting in Washington county, with direction to enter its decree setting aside the award.

The respondents now urge that since the bill was dismissed after the testimony for the complainants was heard, and without hearing any of the testimony which the respondents now say that they were prepared to offer in defense, if their motion to dismiss had not been granted, this court ought not to order the bill to be dismissed upon the record as it stands, and seem to imply that respondents should have an opportunity to offer their testimony in defense before the cause is finally determined.

The court will hear the parties upon this branch of the cause, upon the question whether the respondents should be allowed to present such evidence in defense, and, if so, in what court, and in what manner, and subject to what conditions, such evidence should be presented. The cause may be assigned for hearing upon this question by agreement or on motion in due course.

HELDMYER v. OLEAVER.

(Superior Court of Delaware. New Castle. April 8, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE ⇐183(18)—LOST CONTRACT—SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

Testimony of witness that, according to his best recollection, he had given duplicate copy of contract involved to B., that he had learned that B. would make a search, and if he could find the copy would mail it in time for trial, and that neither copy nor any communication had been received from B., was insufficient to make secondary evidence admissible.

2. EVIDENCE ⇐817(1)—HEARSAY—SEARCH FOR MISSING PAPER.

Plaintiff having testified that he had, during noon recess, communicated with B. over the telephone as to a missing paper, question as to what B. said about search held not objectionable as hearsay.

3. EVIDENCE ⇐183(18)—LOST CONTRACT—SEARCH—EVIDENCE.

Testimony of witness held to show that a reasonable search had been made for lost contract, so that secondary evidence was admissible.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐70(1)—WORK AND LABOR ⇐11—RECOVERY FOR SERVICES—AMOUNT.

Employé, who performs work according to terms of employment, is entitled to recover stipulated price, or, if there is no stipulated price, such sum as the work is reasonably worth.

5. BROKERS \S 52—COMMISSION—COMPLETION OF SALE.

To be entitled to compensation from seller of real estate, broker must have been seller's agent, and must have effected the sale, or conducted the negotiations to such stage as to complete the bargain for the sale, so far as it depended upon his action or efforts.

6. BROKERS \S 64(1)—COMMISSION—COMPLETION OF SALE.

If plaintiff, as agent of defendant, brought defendant and another together, and they came to an agreement for the sale and purchase of the defendant's farm, plaintiff's right to compensation for his services, in the absence of any misrepresentations as to ability of purchaser, would be established, though the purchaser subsequently refused to comply with the terms of the sale.

7. BROKERS \S 88(3)—MISREPRESENTATIONS—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Question of purchaser's ability to comply with terms of sale, and whether any misrepresentations were made by plaintiff, real estate broker, as to his ability, held, under the evidence, for the determination of the jury.

Action by John Heldmyer, Jr., against Henry Cleaver. Trial by jury. Verdict for plaintiff.

BOYCE and CONRAD, JJ., sitting.

Levin Irving Handy, of Wilmington, for plaintiff. Richard S. Rodney, of Wilmington, for defendant.

The action of the plaintiff was to recover for services which, as a real estate broker, he had rendered the defendant in the sale of a certain farm.

The declaration, in assumpsit, contained a special count on an alleged agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant for the sale of a certain farm, on the basis of 3 per cent. commission on $15,000, the price the defendant asked for the farm, and also the common counts.

It was proved that the plaintiff, on or about the _____ day of _____, A. D. 1916, brought to the defendant one Morgan, of the state of Maryland, as a purchaser for the farm, and to whom, on the same day the defendant sold the farm for $15,000, $500 being paid down by check and the balance was to be paid on or before July 1st following. And in confirmation of the sale the defendant and M. entered into written agreements in duplicate—one of which was retained by the defendant and the other was delivered to M., who, on the following day, stopped payment of the said check, and testified at the trial, in answer to the question, "Why was it you did not finally comply?" "Well, I just thought it was a little too much more than I was able to shoulder, and I just stopped right there."

The defendant afterwards sued M. on the said check, in the courts in Maryland, and had a recovery for the full amount thereof, and waiting until after July 1st sold the farm to another.

Pursuant to previous notice, Mr. Handy for plaintiff, called upon Mr. Rodney, for defendant, to produce the said agreement of sale. Mr. Rodney not being able to do so, Mr. Handy sought to prove the terms of the agreement by M.

Objection was made on the ground that, when an instrument in writing is executed in duplicate, the loss of each must be shown in order to let in secondary evidence. The objection was sustained. M. then testified that he did not have the duplicate copy of the contract, but according to his best recollection he had given the same to Mr. Barrall, his attorney in Maryland. The plaintiff, being recalled, testified that he had a few days before conversed with Mr. Barrall over the telephone, in Mr. Hendy's office, and learned from Mr. Barrall that he would make a search for the contract, and if he could find it he would mail it to Mr. Handy in time for use at this trial, and that neither the contract nor any communication had been received from Mr. Barrall. It was again sought to prove the contents of said agreement by M. Objection was made on the ground that reasonable diligence of search for the paper had not been shown.

BOYCE, J. [1] The inquiry made of Mr. Barrall, and the reply received, do not show any search made by him for the paper in question, or that it is not in his possession. Proof of search or loss of the paper has not been made. The objection is sustained.

At the afternoon session, the plaintiff was recalled, and asked by his counsel whether he had, during the noon recess, at the request of M., communicated with Mr. Barrall over the telephone as to the missing paper, and, answering that he had, he was asked:

"What did Mr. Barrall say to you in that conversation which you had for Mr. Morgan at the recess of the court about any search, if any, he had made for the contract between Mr. Morgan and Mr. Cleaver?"

The question was objected to as hearsay.

BOYCE, J. [2] The reply in instances of this kind is not used as hearsay testimony to the loss of the paper in question, but merely as indicating that reasonable search has been made for the missing paper. 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) § 568B., note 9. For this purpose, we overrule the objection. The witness may answer the question.

"A. I told Mr. Barrall I was calling up about the paper Mr. Handy referred to last week in his office, and he said he had made a very careful search for it, but could not find it; that he did not write Mr. Handy, because he told him that if he found it he would send it to him, and not being able to find it he did not write; but if they wanted him he would come and testify."

"Q. You say you wrote the contract yourself for Mr. Morgan and Mr. Cleaver? A. Yes, sir."

"Q. What were the contents of it?"

Objection was made on the ground that sufficient diligence had not been shown in searching for the lost paper to admit secondary evidence.

BOYCE, J. [3] The court is of the opinion that a reasonable search has been shown. The objection is overruled. Take the answer of the witness.

"A. The agreement was drawn up by me between Mr. Morgan and Mr. Cleaver, and the purchase price for the farm was $15,000. Mr. Morgan paid $500 by check upon the signing of the agreement and the balance was to be paid at a certain time—I don't recall the date. It was satisfactory to both of them, and they both signed it, and Mr. White signed it as a witness to their signatures."

The defendant admitted that he agreed to pay the plaintiff 3 per cent. commission on the purchase price, if he succeeded in selling the farm; but he understood the agreement between them to mean that he would pay the commission when he had received the purchase price. He also stated that he accepted Mr. Morgan as the purchaser of the farm and as financially able to comply with the terms of the contract of sale.

BOYCE, J., charging the jury:

[4, 5] This action is brought by John Heldmyer, Jr., a real estate broker, against Henry Cleaver for the recovery of compensation for services alleged to have been rendered by the plaintiff for the defendant in the sale of a certain farm. The plaintiff demands the sum of $450, or 3 per cent. of the price for which he claims he effected the sale of the farm. When one employs another to do work for him, and the employé performs the work in accordance with the terms of the employment, the employé is entitled to receive the stipulated price, if such was agreed upon by the parties, or, if no stipulated price was agreed on, then he is entitled to recover such sum as the work is reasonably worth. To entitle a real estate broker to recover compensation for the sale of real estate of another, he must have been the agent of the seller, and he must have effected the sale or conducted the negotiations to such a stage as to complete the bargain for the sale so far as it depended upon his action or efforts to accomplish the sale.

[6] If, in this case, the plaintiff as the agent of the defendant brought Morgan and the defendant together, and if they came to an agreement for the sale and purchase of the farm, the right of the plaintiff to compensation for his services, in the absence of any misrepresentations as to the ability of the purchaser to comply with the terms of sale agreed upon, became established, though the purchaser subsequently refused to comply with the terms of the sale; for when the plaintiff brought to the defendant a purchaser willing and able to purchase the farm at the price authorized and agreed upon between the seller and the purchaser, the plaintiff's work was done and he became entitled to his compensation. And the purchaser's refusal to complete the purchase, without the fault of the plaintiff, will not prevent the latter from recovery of his compensation.

[7] In respect to the question of the purchaser's ability to comply with the terms of sale, and whether any misrepresentations were, in fact, made by the plaintiff, are matters for the determination of the jury under the evidence before them.

If you should be satisfied from a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff did perform the services which he had agreed to do for the defendant, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff for such sum as the defendant agreed to pay, or, if there was no specific sum agreed upon between the parties, then for such amount as you may find such services were reasonably worth. Tebo v. Mitchell, 5 Pennewill, 356, 63 Atl. 327.

Verdict for plaintiff.

(7 Boyce, 140)

STATE v. GRECO.

(Court of General Sessions of Delaware. New Castle. March 13, 1913.)

1. RAPE \S 16(1)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT.

The element of intent is an essential ingredient of the crime of assault with intent to rape.

2. RAPE \S 53(3)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT — EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, the particular intent with which the assault is made may be shown either by direct or circumstantial evidence; that is, by the express declarations or confession of accused, or by his acts and conduct, from which the intent reasonably and naturally may be inferred.

3. CRIMINAL LAW \S 869(1), 871(1) — EVIDENCE—PROOF OF OTHER OFFENSE—GUILTY KNOWLEDGE.

Proof of a distinct independent offense, other than that in issue, though embracing acts of the same general kind as those surrounding the offense charged, is not admissible to establish the latter, a rule subject to certain exceptions, as when it is necessary to show a particular intent to prove guilty knowledge.

4. CRIMINAL LAW \S 870, 871(9)—ASSAULT TO RAPE—GUILTY KNOWLEDGE—OTHER OFFENSE.

In prosecution for assault to rape, testimony of female witness, other than prosecutrix, as to defendant's like assault upon her in the same vicinity three days before that upon prosecutrix, was inadmissible to show guilty knowledge or intent.

5. RAPE \S 16(1)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT—PROOF OF ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

The offense of assault with intent to rape embraces not only assault with violence, but also intent to rape.

6. ASSAULT AND BATTERY \S 48 — "ASSAULT."

An "assault" is an unlawful attempt by force or violence to do injury to the person of another, with the present ability to accomplish the attempt.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Assault.]

Peter Greco was tried on an indictment charging him with an assault with intent to rape. Verdict of guilty, defendant suing out writ of error, which was dismissed for failure to prosecute.

BOYCE and CONRAD, JJ., sitting.

David J. Reinhardt, Atty. Gen., and Percy Warren Green, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State. J. Frank Ball, of Wilmington, for defendant.

The prosecuting witness testified that on the morning of November 27, 1917, at about 7:15 o'clock, while she was proceeding on Clayton street, in the city of Wilmington, towards her home, and just as she came out from underneath the bridge under which Clayton street passes as it runs into Brandywine Park, she heard a voice and rustling of leaves and turned around and saw the accused, who at that time put his hands in his pockets and walked with his head down; that, however, she did not think he was after her, and proceeded on her way towards the Brandywine to a point about 10 or 12 feet from the path where she was walking; that at about that time she felt a hand going across her mouth, with something in the hand that felt like a sponge and tasted sweet and smelled sweet; that she was then thrown to the ground and a terrific struggle ensued, which the witness described in detail, and which was finally terminated by the approach of two men, one of whom gave chase to the accused, while the other assisted the prosecuting witness to her home. The prosecuting witness testified that during the struggle she had every opportunity to, and did, identify the accused as the person making the assault upon her. After she had given her testimony, the Attorney General, in the presence of counsel for defendant and not in the hearing of the jury, informed the court that he desired to call a female witness for the purpose of proving by her that a similar assault was committed upon her by the accused, four days before, and eight squares from the place where the assault was committed upon Mary Lapsley.

The jury was directed to retire to their room, and the proposed witness was called to the stand and permitted to detail the facts and circumstances of the assault made upon her, the means employed in making the assault being similar to those made upon the prosecuting witness, and she identified the accused as the person who made it.

Mr. Ball insisted that the testimony disclosed a distinct, separate offense, and that it was inadmissible in the case on trial. The Attorney General contended that the testimony was admissible for the purpose of proving (1) identity; (2) similarity of plan or scheme; and (3) motive or intent. 1 Wharton's Crim. Ev. (10th Ed.) 165; 2 Wharton's Crim. Ev. (10th Ed.) 1659 (1667); State v.

Brown, 3 Boyce, 499, 85 Atl. 797; Effler v. State, 4 Boyce, 60, 85 Atl. 731.

BOYCE, J., delivering the opinion of the court:

[1-3] The indictment in this case charges that the accused did with violence assault the prosecuting witness with intent to commit rape. The element of intent is an essential ingredient of the crime charged. The particular intent with which an assault is made may be shown either by direct or circumstantial evidence; that is, by the express declarations or confession of the accused, or by his acts and conduct from which the intent may be reasonably and naturally inferred. Ordinarily evidence must be confined to the issue, so that it is a general rule that on the trial of a person for crime, proof of a distinct, independent offense, though it embraces acts of the same general kind as those surrounding the offense charged, is not admissible to establish the latter offense. This rule is subject to certain exceptions, as when it is necessary to show a particular intent for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge.

In State v. Brown, 3 Boyce, 499, 83 Atl. 797, this court, after recognizing the principle that where the element of intent is an essential ingredient of the crime charged, and the act done is claimed to have been innocently or accidentally done, or by mistake, or when the result is claimed to have followed an act lawfully done for a legitimate purpose, or where there is room for such an inference, it is proper to characterize the act by proof of other like acts producing the same result, as tending to show guilty knowledge, and the intent or purpose with which the particular act was done, and to rebut the presumption that might otherwise obtain (People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 357, 65 N. W. 203, 61 Am. St. Rep. 326), said:

"Where, however, the intent is not required to be specifically proved, or from the nature of the offense under investigation proof of its commission as charged necessarily establishes the criminal intent, or the intent is a necessary conclusion from the act done, evidence of the perpetration, or attempted perpetration, of other like offenses, should not be admitted."

In Effler v. State, 4 Boyce, 62, 85 Atl. 731, the Supreme Court said:

"* * * It appears, to prove identity, that there must be some connection between the two offenses, and it is not sufficient that they be similar offenses committed by the same person. Almost if not quite the same stringency of proof is required to prove identity of party by this kind of testimony as is required to show system or plan. We do not find the two offenses to be connected in such a manner as would make competent and relevant the proof of the similar offense to prove identity of the accused."

[4] There is in the case now before the court, a separation as to the time of the commission of the offense charged and the offense concerning which the witness has given testimony to the court in the absence of the jury. And there is not disclosed by her testimony any connection between the two offenses beyond that of proximity as to the time of their commission (three days), similarity of means employed in making the two assaults, and the identity of the person making them. In the application of the principle of the exception invoked, the limitation placed upon it by the court in the Effler Case is, we think, controlling in this case. We are constrained to hold that proof of a similar assault upon the witness, now before the court, is not admissible to show guilty knowledge or intent in the commission of the offense for which the accused is being tried. We decline to allow the testimony to be given to the jury.

The court directed that the jury return to the courtroom.

At the conclusion of the testimony and arguments of counsel,

BOYCE, J., charged the jury in part:

The indictment in this case charges that Peter Greco, with violence, did assault Mary Lapsley against her will with intent her to ravish and carnally know, in Wilmington hundred, this county, on the 27th day of November, 1917. The offense charged is commonly known as an assault with the intent to commit rape. Rape is defined to be the carnal knowledge of a woman, above the age of 10 years, by force and against her will.

It is provided by Rev. Code 1915, § 4707, that if any person shall, with violence, assault any female with intent to commit rape, such person shall be deemed guilty of felony, etc.

[5, 6] The offense embraces not only an assault with violence, but also an intent to commit rape. It is incumbent upon the state to sustain the charge by satisfactory proof with respect to both ingredients of the crime before there can be a conviction of the accused in manner and form as he stands indicted. An assault is an unlawful attempt by force or violence to do injury to the person of another, with the present ability to accomplish the attempt.

If you find that the accused made an assault upon the prosecuting witness, then your inquiry will be with what intent was the assault made, was it made with the intent to commit rape? The particular intent with which an assault is made may be proved by positive or circumstantial evidence, that is, by the declarations or confession of the accused that he committed the assault with the intent charged, or by the acts and conduct of the accused, and other circumstances from which such intent may reasonably and naturally be inferred.

It is not denied that a violent assault was made upon the prosecuting witness at the time and place as laid in the indictment, but the accused denies generally that he committed the crime charged against him. He also relies upon an alibi; that is, he claims that he was at another place at the time the offense was committed.

If you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused with violence, committed an assault upon Mary Lapsley, against her will, with intent her to ravish and carnally know, your verdict should be guilty in manner and form as he stands indicted.

If you find that the accused committed the alleged assault, but without intent to commit rape, your verdict should be guilty of assault. If you find that he did not commit the crime charged, or if you entertain a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, your verdict should be not guilty.

Verdict, guilty with recommendation to mercy.

Motion for new trial based on usual grounds was refused, and sentence being imposed, counsel for accused thereupon filed a praecipe for writ of error with the clerk of the Supreme Court, and a supersedeas bond, duly approved, with the clerk of the peace for New Castle county. At the following June term, 1918, of the Supreme Court, on motion of the Attorney General, the writ of error was dismissed because the convict had failed to prosecute his writ of error according to law and the rules of the Supreme Court, and he was subsequently resentenced and committed by the trial court.

KEMP v. McNEILL COOPERAGE CO.
(Superior Court of Delaware. Kent. April 28, 1918.)

1. NEGLIGENCE — 1, 121(1) — BURDEN OF PROOF.

In actions based on negligence, the burden of proof is on plaintiff; "negligence," which is the want of due care, or such care as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise under like circumstances, being never presumed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Negligence.]

2. NEGLIGENCE — 80 — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A plaintiff's own negligence, proximately contributing to his injuries, constitutes a defense in an action for such injuries.

3. NEGLIGENCE — 122(1), 135 — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — BURDEN OF PROOF.

Contributory negligence must be proved by a preponderance of evidence, and the burden of proof rests on defendant, unless it appears from plaintiff's testimony.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT — 150(1) — INJURIES TO SERVANT — WARNING.

It is the duty of an employer to warn his servant of any danger with which the servant may come in contact in the course of his employment, if not known to the servant and not discoverable by due care.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT — 153(3) — INJURIES TO SERVANT — WARNING.

Whether a danger is or is not apparent to a servant 17 years old, as affecting duty to warn him, depends on whether it would have been apparent to the average youth of the same age, intelligence, and experience.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT §284(2) — INJURIES TO SERVANT—KNOWLEDGE OF DANGER.

The knowledge of the existence of the thing that causes a personal injury to a servant is not necessarily a knowledge of the danger arising therefrom.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT §217(1) — INJURIES TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

If a servant knows of a danger, or by the ordinary use of his senses could have known thereof, he assumes the risk of injury therefrom.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT §89(1) — INJURIES TO SERVANT—SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

A servant, injured while acting outside the scope of his employment, without the order of his employer, cannot recover for personal injuries, even though resulting from dangerous and defective appliances.

9. DAMAGES §80 — PERSONAL INJURIES—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Where a servant 17 years old was injured by being caught in a set screw on a shaft, recovery might be had for such a sum as would reasonably compensate plaintiff for his injuries, including his pain and suffering in the past, and such as might come to him in the future, and for permanent injuries received, resulting from the accident.

Foreign attachment by Roy Kemp, an infant, by his next friend, Robert J. Kemp, against the McNeill Cooperage Company. The defendant appeared by giving the required security. The case was pleaded to issue. Trial by jury. Verdict for plaintiff.

PENNEWILL, C. J., and BOYCE, J., sitting.

Henry Ridgely and George M. Fisher, Jr., both of Dover, and T. Alan Goldsborough, of Denton, Md., for plaintiff. George M. Jones, of Dover, for defendant.

Plaintiff's evidence, by several witnesses, showed that the accident occurred on December 8, 1915, in a stove mill which defendant was operating near Sandtown, Kent county, Delaware; that on the day of the accident the mill was closed down for a short time in order that the saws might be filed, during which time the employes, including the plaintiff, a youth of 17 years of age, went outside. The plaintiff testified that he was employed to run a crozing machine in the mill, and to do whatever else he was told to do; that when the mill started up again he, being ordered by the superintendent or boss to put the belt on the pulley of a countershaft, went inside to do so; and while so engaged an uncovered set screw which protruded from one-half to three-quarters of an inch from the collar of the countershaft, caught in the side of his overalls and carried him around with the shaft as it revolved.

The superintendent or boss in charge of the mill on the day of the accident was the only witness for the defendant. He testified that the plaintiff's duty was to run a crozing machine on the second floor of the mill; that the belt in question was on the ground floor; that he did not order the plaintiff to put the belt on; that he was, in fact, on the second floor at the time of the accident, and did not know that the belt was off the pulley.

Plaintiff's Prayers.

1. That it is the duty of the master to warn the servant of any danger which the servant may come into contact with in the course of his employment, and which would not be apparent to the servant.

2. That the question whether a danger is apparent or not will depend upon the age and experience of the servant.

3. That in the case of a servant, who is a boy under the age of 21 years, the test as to whether a danger is or is not apparent will depend upon whether it would have been apparent to the average boy of the same age and experience, and not whether the danger would have been apparent to a person of maturer years and experience.

4. That knowledge of the existence of the set screw is not necessarily knowledge of the danger from the set screw; knowledge that a thing exists not being knowledge that the thing is dangerous.

5. That even if the jury shall believe that Roy Kemp might have seen the set screw, yet that this will not prevent a verdict for the plaintiff, unless the jury shall also believe that the average boy of his age and experience would have realized that the said set screw constituted a danger.

6. If the verdict should be for the plaintiff, it should be for such a sum as will reasonably compensate the plaintiff for his injuries, including therein his pain and suffering in the past, and such as may come to him in the future, and for permanent injuries received, if any, resulting from the accident. Travers v. Hartmann, 5 Boyce, 302, 310, 92 Atl. 855.

Counsel for the defendant was content to have the court charge the jury in accordance with the principles announced in the case of Selninski v. Wilmington Leather Co., 3 Boyce, 288, 83 Atl. 20.

BOYCE, J., charged the jury in part:

This is an action by Roy Kemp, an infant, by his next friend, Robert J. Kemp, against McNeill Cooperage Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the state of New Jersey.

The first count in the declaration, which contains two other counts, substantially the same as the first, charges that the defendant carelessly and negligently, on the 8th day of December, 1915, ordered the plaintiff to put a belt upon the pulley of a shaft in the defendant's mill without warning or instructing him, the plaintiff, of the existence of the protruding set screw in the collar of the shaft and of the danger of being caught in the clothes by the protruding set screw, and that in obedience to the order of the defendant, the plaintiff, on that day, in this county, then and there being a minor and unskilled in machinery and ignorant of the danger thereof, undertook to put the belt on the pulley of the shaft, and in so doing, and while in the exercise of due care and caution on his part, the protruding set screw caught in the clothes of the plaintiff, by reason whereof he, the plaintiff, was carried around by the shaft, which was then and there revolving with great speed, and was brought into violent contact with one of the sills upon which the said shaft was attached, and with the floor of said mill, and thereby the face and head of the plaintiff were bruised, wounded and lacerated, some of his teeth knocked out, the roof of his mouth, his jaw and his arm, shoulder and leg injured, and was otherwise badly cut, bruised and wounded, etc.

The defendant denies that it was negligent and claims that the plaintiff, on his own volition, without any direction of his employer put the belt upon the pulley of the shaft, and that he did so outside of the scope of his employment, and that his injuries were wholly caused by his own negligence.

[1] This action is based on negligence, and the burden of proving the negligence charged to the satisfaction of the jury is cast upon the plaintiff. Negligence is never presumed; it must be proved. Whether there was any negligence at the time of the accident, and whose, must be determined by the jury from the evidence. Negligence in a legal sense is the want of due care; that is, such care as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise under like circumstances. It is the failure to observe for the protection of another that degree of care and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand.

[2, 3] In order for the plaintiff to recover, he must satisfy you by the weight or preponderance of the evidence that the defendant was guilty of one or more of the negligent acts averred in his declaration. He must satisfy you not only that the injuries complained of resulted from the negligence of the defendant, but also that at the time of the accident he was himself without fault or negligence which proximately contributed to his injuries; for if his own negligence did proximately contribute to his injuries, the defendant is not liable, even if it was also negligent. Where contributory negligence of the plaintiff is relied on as a defense, it must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence, and the burden of proving it rests upon the defendant, unless it should appear from the testimony produced by the plaintiff.

[4-8] It is the duty of the employer to warn the servant of any danger with which the servant may come into contact in the course of his employment, if the same was unknown to the servant and could not be seen or known by the reasonable use of his senses and the exercise of due care. In the case of a servant of 17 years of age, the test as to whether a danger is or is not apparent will depend upon whether it would have been apparent to the average youth of the same age, intelligence and experience. The knowledge of the existence of the thing that causes the injury is not necessarily the knowledge of the danger arising therefrom. Whether the plaintiff in this action saw, or by the exercise of due care might have seen, the set screw in the shaft and have avoided the accident, is a question for your determination, and in determining such question you should consider whether an average youth of the age, intelligence and experience of the plaintiff would have realized, in the absence of warning, that the set screw was dangerous. If the plaintiff, from his experience gained in the defendant's factory or elsewhere, knew how to place the belt upon the shaft with safety, whether he did it of his own volition or under the direction of his employer, the defendant would not be liable on account of his failure to give the plaintiff instruction and warning. If he knew the danger, or by the ordinary use of his senses could have known thereof, he assumed the risks and may not recover therefor. If the plaintiff, at the time of the accident, was acting outside the scope of his employment, without the order of his employer, he cannot recover even though the machinery and appliances were defective and dangerous.

[9] In conclusion we will say that if you believe from the preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff's injuries were caused by the negligence of the defendant, as we have instructed you, and further believe that the plaintiff's own negligence did not proximately contribute thereto, your verdict should be in favor of the plaintiff, and it should be for such a sum as will reasonably compensate the plaintiff for his injuries, including therein his pain and suffering in the past, and such as may come to him in the future, and for permanent injuries received, if any, resulting from the accident. If, however, you are not satisfied that the plaintiff's injuries were caused by the negligence of the defendant, or if you believe that the plaintiff's own negligence contributed proximately to his injuries, your verdict should be for the defendant.

Verdict for plaintiff.

DEUTSCHE PRESBYTERISCHE KIRCHE
v. TRUSTEES OF PRESBYTERY OF ELIZABETH et al. (No. 44/728.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Aug. 22, 1918.)

1. TRUSTS \S 63%—CONVEYANCE OF CHURCH PROPERTY.

Where a church congregation agreed to deed church property to trustees of presbytery in consideration of assumption of mortgage, with the privilege of redemption and the use of the church by the grantor congregation, but the deed did not specify the assumption, and the agreement for the use of the church was not executed, the holding by the grantee was a resulting trust; an unqualified gift not having been contemplated.

2. TRUSTS \S 357(3)—CONVEYANCE OF TRUST PROPERTY—GRANTEE AS TRUSTEE.

Ordinarily, if a trustee transfer to another, without getting an equivalent, property that he holds in trust, that other will hold on the same trust.

3. CORPORATIONS \S 404(1)—TRANSFERS—AUTHORITY OF MANAGERS TO MAKE GIFT.

Managers of a corporation cannot give away its property.

Bill by the Deutsche Presbyterische Kirche against the trustees of the Presbytery of Elizabeth and others, to enjoin a sale of church property. Injunction issued.

Charles J. Stamler, of Rahway, for complainant. Conover English, of Newark, for defendants. Orlando H. Dey, of Rahway, for Greek Church.

STEVENS, V. C. This is a controversy over the equitable ownership of a church property in Rahway. Prior to May 15, 1909, the title was vested in complainant. On that day, by warranty deed, it, by certain of its trustees, conveyed or attempted to convey it to the trustees of the Presbytery of Elizabeth. The church now claims that it still has an equitable interest. The trustees of the Presbytery contend that they are the absolute owners. As such they have agreed to sell to St. John's Greek Catholic Church of Rahway, one of the defendants. The bill is filed, primarily, to enjoin them from so doing.

The church was organized as a Presbyterian congregation on April 10, 1884, under the Religious Corporations Act (3 Comp. St. 1910, p. 4389). A year thereafter it acquired the property in controversy from the Rahway Savings Institution, for the consideration of $2,400. It gave back a mortgage to secure $1,000 of the purchase money. The membership was small from the beginning, and as time went on it diminished. Between 1885 and 1909 it had paid only $200 on its mortgage indebtedness. On January 19, 1909, as appears from the minutes of the Elizabeth Presbytery, the following resolution was passed by that body:

"Resolved that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee of the Board of Church Election and the Trustees of Presbytery, and to give the Trustees of Presbytery power to negotiate a loan of $800 during the interval of Presbytery, if such a course should be found necessary.

These boards, after consideration, reported to the Presbytery, which thereupon adopted the following resolutions:

"1. That Presbytery hereby approves the action of its committee * * * in proposing to the German Presbyterian Church of Rahway to transfer its property by deed to the Trustees of Presbytery, in return for the assumption by the Trustees of Presbytery of the mortgage of $800 now lying against the property.

"2. That Presbytery hereby authorizes the Trustees of Presbytery to accept title to the German Presbyterian Church, provided it be offered, upon the terms above named, to enter into such agreement with the said congregation, as will secure the German Presbyterian Church of Rahway the free use of the property as long as it exists in connection with the Presbytery, and to do all that may be necessary to complete the transaction both as respects the transference of the title and the replacing of the mortgage."

By this resolution certain members of the Presbytery (including the Rev. Dr. Kerr) were appointed to represent Presbytery at the congregational meeting of the German Presbyterian Church to be held on the next Monday evening. This meeting took place, and Mr. Helms, one of the members of the congregation, offered the following resolution:

"Whereas, the church is incumbered with a mortgage for $800.00 which has existed for twenty-four years and the congregation seems unable to pay the same, and payment thereof has been demanded;

"And whereas the congregation has with difficulty sustained regular religious services and seems unable to do more under existing conditions;

"And whereas the Presbytery of Elizabeth, its members and subordinate committees to a large extent provided the funds for the acquisition of the church property, and it is desired that the property continue to be devoted to religious uses under direction of the Presbytery and be not lost by foreclosure or otherwise; and the Trustees of the Presbytery of Elizabeth have offered to assume said mortgage:

"Resolved, that the trustees of this church be directed to convey the church property consisting of a lot 50 feet wide fronting on Irving street, Rahway, and the church edifice thereon to the Trustees of the Presbytery of Elizabeth, their successors and assigns.

"Resolved, further that the Presbytery of Elizabeth be respectfully requested to still allow us to occupy and use the church for religious services so long as we may be able to sustain stated religious worship therein and to keep the property in proper order and repair.

"Resolved, further that the Presbytery of Elizabeth be requested to enter into agreement with the church to return the title to the property whenever the church pays the amount of the mortgage above referred to and that the church has the privilege of paying the amounts in installments of $100 or more."

The minutes show that a vote was taken by ballot. Ten votes were cast—all in favor of the preambles and resolutions—being (so the minutes state) "more than two-thirds of all the votes cast." The minutes do not show whether other members of the congregation were present.

On May 15, 1909, the German Church made a deed to the Trustees of the Presbytery of Elizabeth, in consideration, so the deed states, of "one dollar and other valuable consideration." The deed contains, unreservedly, covenants of seisin, warranty, and against incumbrances. It does not declare that the property is conveyed subject to the mortgage. Although the resolution of Presbytery provided that the Trustees of the Presbytery should assume payment; it, the grantor, by its covenant against incumbrances undertook to do so. The Presbytery furthermore directed its committee to enter into an agreement to secure the free use of the property as long as it (the church) existed in connection with the Presbytery. They made no such agreement, and nothing was done about the resolution of the congregation that provided that the Presbytery should be requested to enter into an agreement to return the title whenever the church paid the mortgage.

On May 27, 1909, the Trustees of the Presbytery paid off the mortgage to the savings institution with the proceeds of a $900 mortgage made by them to the Union County Savings Bank of Elizabeth. They paid the interest on this mortgage until 1916, when they received an offer to purchase from a Hebrew Church. The German Church had held its customary services from the time of the transfer to the time when this offer was made. Hearing of it, it objected to the proposed sale, and Mr. Schneider, one of its members, agreed thereafter to pay the interest on the mortgage and to discharge a municipal assessment, which he did. In consequence of the attitude of the congregation, and, as it is said, the inadequate price, the offer was declined.

In April of the present year, an offer of $5,348 was received from the defendant the Greek Church, and this offer was accepted by the Trustees of Presbytery, and $200 paid on account of the price. This suit was brought before the delivery of a deed or the payment of the balance of the purchase money.

It was proved that between the years 1885 and 1909 the German Church received about $8,400, not from the Trustees of the Presbytery, but from the Synod, a body having a more extensive jurisdiction. It was made up, almost entirely, of an annual contribution of $300 to the pastor's salary, and was a pure donation. Its payment is without effect upon the present controversy.

[1, 2] Counsel for defendants lay stress upon a line of cases in which it is held that a trust in land will not result to the grantor, if the conveyance purport to be given for a valuable consideration, upon parol proof that nothing was in fact paid and that the conveyance was wholly voluntary. Aller v. Crouter, 64 N. J. Eq. 381; 54 Atl. 426; Holton v. Holton, 72 N. J. Eq. 312, 65 Atl. 481; Coffey v. Sullivan, 63 N. J. Eq. 296, 49 Atl. 520. These cases have no application here. The controversy is not one between individuals, each claiming in his own right, but between two corporate trustees, each vested with authority to hold in trust for specific objects. Ordinarily, if a trustee transfer to another, without getting an equivalent, property that he holds in trust, that other will hold on the same trust. In the case in hand, I should say that, prima facie, if the grantor-trustee have made a conveyance, without valuable consideration and without specifying any other trust that it was competent for the two bodies to create, the grantee-trustee would take, charged with the same trust. It would lie upon the grantee-trustee to show that in some way or other a different trust was created, and this would not be shown by proof merely that the trusts which it was capable of executing covered a wider range of objects. It will not be disputed that the Trustees of Presbytery could have agreed to hold the property on the trust upon which the trustees of the church had held. Such agreement would have been within the scope of its power; and so the case comes down to this: What is there to show that it took on a different trust—assuming, of course, that the church trustees had power to authorize such a trust or to make a gift of the property. On this question, we are not left without light, for we have the corporate action of the congregation, on the one hand, and of the Presbytery, on the other. The Presbytery, as we have seen, took action first. The question before them was whether it was expedient to protect the church from a threatened foreclosure. They resolved that it would be well to propose to the church that it transfer its property "in return for the assumption by the Trustees of Presbytery of the mortgage." In this, we have the suggestion of a valuable consideration; but, as has been shown, such consideration was not in fact given. The warranty deed actually taken continued the burden on the church. If the Trustees of Presbytery paid off the old mortgage with the proceeds of the new, given by themselves, they could recover what they paid by suing on the covenant against incumbrances. The Presbytery also resolved that the trustees be authorized to accept title to the German Presbyterian Church of Rahway provided it be offered, upon the terms above named, to enter into such agreement with the said congregation as would secure the German Presbyterian Church of Rahway the free use of the property as long as it existed in connection with the Presbytery.

The body charged with the carrying out of these resolutions was composed of gentlemen of the highest character, and not the slightest reflection upon their conduct, viewed from an ethical standpoint, is here intended. But it is evident that their action did not accord with their instructions. They did not, probably through oversight, assume the mortgage, and they did not, as called for by the second resolution, enter into an agreement to secure to the church the free use of the property as long as it existed in connection with the Presbytery. It is needless to say that, had they made such an agreement, they would not have attempted, as they are now doing, to sell.

Let us next look at the action of the Rahway Congregation. They were doubtless advised of the action of the Presbytery. The Rev. Dr. Kerr, who was one of its members and one of the members of its trustees, was present at the meeting and, as he himself states, was the one who, on behalf of the church, drew the resolution requesting the Presbytery to enter into an agreement to return the title to the property "whenever the church pays the amount of the mortgage." If this resolution had been afterwards approved by the Presbytery, the complainant would be, without more, entitled to a return of its property; for it has tendered payment. What I desire here to emphasize is that what the congregation contemplated was, not an unqualified gift, but a trust terminable on payment of the mortgage. Whether, therefore, we consider the action of the Presbytery or the action of the church, we reach the same conclusion, viz. that an out and out gift was not intended. What was contemplated was the transfer on a somewhat different trust of a property worth then and now upwards of $5,000 to a body which was, from a financial standpoint, better able to take care of it. The subsequent conduct of the parties accords with their resolutions. The Trustees of the Presbytery allowed the congregation to use and control the property as before. When, in 1916, the Hebrew Society made its offer to purchase, and the congregation objected, the trustees permitted Mr. Schneider to pay an assessment and to take upon himself the payment of the interest on the mortgage.

[3] It is a well-known rule that the managers of a corporation cannot give away its property. Here it is argued that the congregation—the cestui que trust—authorized the gift. If we assume that the authorization, notwithstanding their resolutions, was absolute, still it does not appear that all the members of the congregation—the entire body of cestuis que trust—assented. What is proved is that ten members voted. It is not proved that these were all the members.

It seems plain that an injunction should issue restraining the sale to St. John's Church.

It is not quite as apparent what other relief should be given. The minds of the parties, so to speak, did not meet to the extent of concluding a definite arrangement. The proposition, on the one hand, was that the church should have the free use of the property as long as it existed in connection with the Presbytery. The proposition, on the other hand, was that the title should be reconveyed when the church paid the mortgage. The language of the clause adopted by the congregation and drawn, as I have said, by Rev. Dr. Kerr, is highly significant. It proves that further action defining the trust was contemplated and that the transfer of the legal title was a step merely toward the ultimate settlement. As the trust agreement has been left undefined, it seems to me that the equity of the church now is to have a reconveyance, on payment of all the money given or advanced by the Presbytery or its trustees since the mortgage was made, including, of course, the money for which the trustees have obligated themselves on their bond.

WURTH v. WURTH. (No. 48/666.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Aug. 16, 1918.)

DIVORCE — 100 — DESERTION — JUSTIFICATION — BURDEN OF PROOF.

Law does not call upon husband seeking divorce on ground of desertion to exclude hypothesis of justifiable cause; burden to justify separation by clear proof of matrimonial offense, supported by corroborating evidence, being cast on wife, as though made basis of application for divorce.

Petition for divorce on the ground of desertion by Louis J. Wurth against Elizabeth E. Wurth. On exception to the master's report that the material allegations of the petition were not proved. Exception sustained, and decree advised for petitioner.

W. Heit Appar, of Trenton, for exceptions.

BACKES, V. C. The master reported that the material allegations of the petition are not proved. The evidence establishes beyond peradventure that the defendant willfully deserted her husband, that the desertion was continuous for more than two years before the filing of the petition, and that it was obstinate. The testimony of the petitioner supports the allegations of the petition, and the corroborating oral and written proof convinces me that it is true. To the master, the separation and its continuation appeared "to be the determined and considerate act of the defendant"; but he evidently entertained the view that a willful and obstinate desertion was not made out because the petitioner failed to establish affirmatively that the wife's course was without justification. In a bill for maintenance which she filed, and immediately abandoned some years ago, she charged him with offenses that, if true, would have warranted her in separating from him. Of the truth of these charges, there is no proof. The law does not call upon the petitioner to exclude the hypothesis of a justifiable cause. The burden is cast upon the defendant to justify the separation by clear and satisfactory proof of a matrimonial offense, supported by corroborating evidence, the same as though it were made the basis of an application for divorce. Rogers v. Rogers, 81 N. J. Eq. 479, 96 Atl. 935, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711.

The exception will be sustained, and a decree advised.

IN RE VANDERBILT'S ESTATE.

Appeal of UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO.

(Prerogative Court of New Jersey. Aug. 21, 1918.)

GUARDIAN AND WARD \Leftrightarrow 160—DECREE SETTLING ACCOUNT—INTERMEDIATE CHARACTER—OPENING.

Where orphans' court, settling guardian's account, granted the substituted guardian and ward herself leave to take proceedings against original guardian's estate or his surety, the court, after time for appeal had passed, was authorized, on petition of the ward, to open the decree for exceptions; account being merely "intermediate account."

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Essex County.

In the matter of the estate of Mabel Vanderbilt, a minor. From an order opening a decree, the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company appeals. Order affirmed.

McDermott & Enright, of Jersey City, for appellant. Collins & Corbin, of Jersey City, for respondent Mabel Vanderbilt. Daniel L. Campbell, of Paterson, for respondent Fidelity Trust Co. Edward A. Markley, of Jersey City, for respondent William S. Woodhull.

LEWIS, Vice Ordinary. Nellie Black Vanderbilt, the mother of the respondent Mabel Vanderbilt, died February 11, 1907, leaving a will by which, after making certain specific gifts, she gave to her daughter, Mabel, one-half of the balance of money, bonds, and investments of which she might die seised, and appointed, as executors of her will, her husband, De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt, and Emma Littell Black. Mabel Vanderbilt was born August 29, 1894, and consequently was a minor at the time of the death of her mother. Her father, De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt, was accordingly appointed by the surrogate of Essex county, July 14, 1908, guardian of her estate, and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company became surety upon his bond as such guardian. On August 18, 1908, De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt, as guardian, received from himself as executor under the will of Nellie Black Vanderbilt certain money and securities representing the one-half share bequeathed to Mabel Vanderbilt by her mother. Included in these securities were 32 shares of the capital stock of the Pennsylvania Railroad and 30 shares of the capital stock of the American Express Company.

De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt died on the 31st of December, 1914, nearly a year before his daughter and ward, Mabel Vanderbilt, became of age, and thereafter one William S. Woodhull was appointed administrator of his estate and filed in the Essex county orphans' court what purported to be the final account of De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt as guardian of the estate of Mabel Vanderbilt. This account was noticed for settlement August 25, 1915, the notice being dated July 14, 1915. In the meantime, on January 26, 1915, the Fidelity Trust Company had been appointed by the surrogate of Essex county substituted guardian of the estate of Mabel Vanderbilt. It will be noted that Mabel Vanderbilt did not become of age until August 29, 1915, so that she was a minor when the notice of settlement was first given, and continued to be a minor on August 25, 1915, the date for which the settlement was noticed. The settlement of the account was adjourned by the orphans' court until October 22, 1915, and upon that date the account was settled and a decree made charging the estate of De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt with the sum of $632.84 as the portion of the estate of Mabel Vanderbilt for which the accountant was unable to account, as shown by the account itself. The parties represented by appearance upon the making of this decree were the accountant, the Fidelity Trust Company, substituted guardian of Mabel Vanderbilt, and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, bondsman of De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt as guardian. Mabel Vanderbilt herself had no notice of the proceedings for settlement. The balance of $632.84 with which the estate of De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt was charged by this decree of settlement was obtained by including amongst the items for which the accountant prayed allowance the 32 shares of the capital stock of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at the sum of $2,104, and the 30 shares of the American Express Company at the sum of $7,050; these stocks being in the hands of the accountant. The sums thus allowed on account of these stocks were greatly in excess of their actual market value at the time of the death of De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt and at the time of the settlement of the account. The decree of settlement, after directing that these shares, together with the other securities and moneys of the estate, be turned over to the Fidelity Trust Company, as substituted guardian for Mabel Vanderbilt, further ordered:

"That the Fidelity Trust Company, substituted guardian of said Mabel Vanderbilt, and the said Mabel Vanderbilt have leave to take such proceedings against the estate of De Witt C. Vanderbilt or against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, bondsman of the said De Witt C. Vanderbilt as aforesaid, as it or she may be advised."

In May, 1916, Mabel Vanderbilt, who had then attained her majority, filed a duly verified petition in the Essex county orphans' court, setting forth the foregoing facts and charging that De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt, as guardian of her estate, failed in his duty and committed a breach of his trust in failing to dispose of the Pennsylvania Railroad stock and the American Express Company stock at a time when he might have obtained a favorable price for the same, and that, as a result of such neglect of duty and breach of trust, the petitioner's estate had suffered a depreciation of about $4,000, for which William S. Woodhull, as administrator of the estate of De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt, should have been charged upon the settling of his account. The petition then prayed that the decree of the orphans' court made October 22, 1915, settling the account in question, might be opened, vacated, and set aside, and that the petitioner might have leave to file exceptions to the account in the particulars named. To this petition, the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, surety on the guardianship bond of De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt, filed an answer admitting the facts set forth in the petition, but denying the charge thereof. After hearing and argument, the Essex county orphans' court ordered that the decree of October 22d be opened for the purpose of permitting Mabel Vanderbilt to file exceptions to the account of De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt, guardian, as filed by William S. Woodhull, administrator of the estate of De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt, deceased, in a form annexed to and made part of the order. The exceptions thus permitted to be filed attacked the account: First, because the accountant asked allowance for the 32 shares of Pennsylvania Railroad Company stock at $2,104, whereas the same were worth, at the time of the death of accountant's intestate, only $1,776; and, secondly, because the accountant asked allowance for 30 shares of the stock of the American Express Company at the sum of $7,050, whereas the same were worth, at the time of the death of accountant's intestate, only $3,720. (Page 23.) The depreciation thus claimed by the exceptions amounted to $3,658, in an estate of approximately $15,000; in other words, about a quarter of the value of the entire estate. From the order of the Essex county orphans' court opening its own decree and permitting these exceptions to be filed, the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company has appealed to the Prerogative Court.

The only question presented by this appeal concerns the power of the orphans' court to open its own decree settling the account of the guardian, the time for an appeal from the decree in question having passed.

At the time the account was noticed for settlement and on the day for which the settlement was appointed, Mabel Vanderbilt was still a minor and had no notice of the proceedings; nor did she appear to the same subsequently on the day when the decree was actually made, October 22, 1915, by which time she had attained her majority. In the very nature of the case, therefore, the account and the decree thereon could have been only intermediate in character, although the accountant referred to and entitled his account "final." But the orphans' court, so far from regarding the account or decree as final, incorporated in the decree an express reservation granting to the Fidelity Trust Company, substituted guardian of Mabel Vanderbilt, and to Mabel Vanderbilt herself, leave to take such proceedings against the estate of De Witt Clinton Vanderbilt, or against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company as they might be advised. In opening the decree, the orphans' court was careful to recite, as a ground for so doing, the express reservation referred to, and also the fact that the account in question was in reality an intermediate account. The nature of the decree and its express reservations are therefore such as amply to justify the orphans' court in permitting a further inquiry into the items of the account. Indeed, the orphans' court, in making the reservation in the decree, must have contemplated such further inquiry, and left it open to the respondent to take such action for the instituting of such an inquiry as she might be advised. It now clearly appears that the proper practice in such a case is that adopted by the respondent. The propriety and correctness of the order complained of may therefore rest upon the language of the original decree itself reserving to the respondent the very right that the appellant now seeks to deny. In opening its own decree to permit exceptions to be filed, the orphans' court was, in reality, but taking steps for disposing of a matter which, on the very face of the original decree, was left unsettled.

The order of the orphans' court opening the decree of October 22, 1915, and permitting the respondent Mabel Vanderbilt to file certain specific exceptions, should be affirmed, with costs to the respondent.

WILLS §249—EXECUTION—DOMICILE—PROBATE BY ORDINARY.

Notwithstanding that a will executed by a person domiciled elsewhere at the time of his death, at a time when he was domiciled here with the formalities necessary under the laws of this state, but not with those required under the laws of the place of domicile at the time of death, and which will cannot be probated at the place of domicile, may be a valid disposition of immovables within this state, it cannot be probated by the Ordinary under the rule laid down in Chadwick's Case, 80 N. J. Eq. 471, 85 Atl. 266.

"To be officially reported."

Application for probate of the will of George H. Dodge, deceased. Probate denied.

Pitney, Hardin & Skinner, of Newark, for the probate.

LANE, Vice Ordinary. The application is to probate a will of a deceased who, at the time of his death, was and had been for 20 years domiciled in Georgia. Prior to his removal to Georgia, the deceased had been domiciled in this state, and his will was executed here, while he was so domiciled. He left real property within this jurisdiction. The will was executed with the formalities necessary under the laws of this state, but not those required under the laws of Georgia. Application has been made to the Georgia probate court for probate, and probate has been denied.

Counsel insist that, the will having been executed in accordance with the lex rei sitae and with the lex loci actus, it is a valid testamentary disposition of immovable property within this state, and they rely upon 1 Story on Conflict of Law, § 474, and subsequent sections. 40 Cyc. tit. Wills, p. 1074; Nelson v. Potter, 50 N. J. Law, 324, 15 Atl. 375; Van Wickle v. Van Wickle, 59 N. J. Eq. 317, 44 Atl. 877; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 174, 2 Sup. Ct. 336, 27 L. Ed. 401; Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 608, 3 Sup. Ct. 407, 27 L. Ed. 1049.

Whatever the fact may be, this court is precluded by the broad language used in Chadwick's Case, 80 N. J. Eq. 471, 85 Atl. 266, from granting probate. That court said:

"The plain, common sense meaning to be given to the act is that the ordinary was limited to the probating of wills of those domiciled within the state, which was the limit of his jurisdiction."

And the court affirmed the decree of the Vice Ordinary denying probate upon the ground that neither the Prerogative Court nor the Surrogate of any of the counties of this state have general jurisdiction to admit to probate the last will and testament of a nonresident having a domicile at the date of his death in another state, although such nonresident left property within this state, except as ancillary to a probate by the courts of the locality of such domicile. The present Ordinary, in Re Geisler's Will, 82 N. J. Eq. 311, 87 Atl. 623, said:

"The power of this court to admit to probate the will in question must rest exclusively upon the deceased having been domiciled in this state at the time of her death; and, if she were not, probate must be denied."

The result is that, until there is additional legislation, there is no way by which a permanent record can be made of a will of a nonresident not entitled to probate at the place of domicile, but valid, if in fact it be, for the purpose of passing real property in this state.

Probate must be denied.

ATWATER v. BASKERVILLE et al.

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Oct. 14, 1918.)

Supplemental opinion.

For former opinion, see 104 Atl. 310.

Foster M. Voorhees, of Elizabeth, for the motion. Clarke McK. Whittemore, of Elizabeth, and Abram H. Cornish, of Newark, opposed.

LANE, V. C. Since filing the opinion in this case, my attention has been called to the case of John Agnew Co. v. Board of Education of City of Paterson et al., 83 N. J. Eq. 49, 89 Atl. 1046. Vice Chancellor Stevenson there said:

"A foreign corporation, under the principle of comity, comes into New Jersey to do business and makes large contracts for the construction of buildings in New Jersey, in which business it acquires property in New Jersey, and also contracts debts. It would be a most extraordinary result, indeed, if when this foreign corporation becomes insolvent it could still transfer its New Jersey assets acquired in its New Jersey business so as to make preferences among its New Jersey creditors, necessarily disadvantageous to some of them, in defiance of the law which prevents New Jersey corporations from doing this thing. Our statute expressly provides that 'foreign corporations doing business in this state shall be subject to the provisions of this act so far as the same can be applied to foreign corporations.' Section 96. There is not the slightest difficulty in applying the prohibition upon preferences contained in section 64 of the Corporation Act to a foreign corporation and its assets, of the character and in the situation presented in this case. If the Glen Company had not been put in bankruptcy, the statutory action, based on insolvency, etc., provided for in section 65 of our statute, might have been brought, and the receiver appointed in such an action would have taken possession of all the New Jersey assets, including the right to collect this money from the city of Paterson, and would have administered the same precisely as they would have been administered in case the corporation had been created under our New Jersey statute." (Italics mine.)

The case was unanimously affirmed by the Court of Errors and Appeals, 83 N. J. Eq. 339, 90 Atl. 1135, for the reasons stated by Vice Chancellor Stevenson. The language used by the Vice Chancellor must have been present in the minds of the Court of Errors and Appeals, for the appeal was on the claim of the First National Bank of the Town of Union, and the remarks made by the Vice Chancellor were apposite to the disposition of that claim.

This case is in direct conflict with the construction sought to be put on McDermott v. Woodhouse, 87 N. J. Eq. 615, 101 Atl. 375, by counsel for the respondents.

My attention has also been called to the case of Boehme v. Ball, 51 N. J. Eq. 541, 26

Atl. 832. In that case it appeared that extensive litigation was conducted by a receiver appointed of a foreign corporation under the statute upon the ground of insolvency, and it never seems to have occurred either to Vice Chancellor Green or to counsel involved in the case that there was any doubt of the power of the Court of Chancery to appoint such a receiver.

McELIGOT & CHENOWETH CO. et al. v. TOWN OF NUTLEY.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. Sept. 17, 1918.)

JUDGMENT ¶713(2)—RES JUDICATA—MATTERS PROVABLE.

In a contractor's action against a town for a balance due on sewer construction, a judgment for defendant based on a holding that a certificate of acceptance had not been issued by the proper town official as alleged was res judicata in a subsequent case on the same cause of action, wherein plaintiff alleged that such certificate had been fraudulently withheld by defendant; such fraudulent withholding being within plaintiff's knowledge and provable by him in the first suit.

Certiorari to Circuit Court, Essex County.

Action by McEligot & Chenoweth Company, a corporation, and another, against the Town of Nutley, in the county of Essex. On case certified. Questions answered.

Argued June term, 1918, before BERGEN, KALISCH, and BLACK, JJ.

John A. Matthews and Reed & Reynolds, all of Newark, for plaintiffs. J. Harry Hull, of Nutley, for defendant.

KALISCH, J. The plaintiff, McEligot & Chenoweth Company, a corporation brought an action against the defendant, in this court, on the 4th day of December, 1918, to recover a balance of $9,850.39 alleged to be due it on a contract and a supplemental one for extra work, entered into by them, whereby the plaintiff agreed to construct a main trunk vitrified pipe sanitary sewer through certain streets in the town of Nutley, according to plan and specifications prepared by the town engineer. The contract contained a stipulation that the evidence of the completion of the work shall be a written certificate of the town engineer and a favorable report of the director of the department of streets and public improvements of the town to that effect; and the town was to pay the amount that may become due under the contract, as follows:

"Ninety-five per cent. of the entire cost when the work was completed according to specifications and the engineer's certificate and the director of the department of streets and public improvements of the town, thereto rendered."

The complainant alleged in its complaint that the director of streets and public improvements had certified the payments of the balance due under the original contract and the supplemental contract for extra work.

The defendant, in its answer, denied that there was any balance due to the plaintiff, either under the contract, or for extra work, labor, or materials; denied making or authorizing any contract to be made with plaintiff for extra work; denied that the town engineer or the director of public improvements ordered the plaintiff to perform any extra work or labor or to furnish extra materials as claimed by the plaintiff in its complaint; denied that the plaintiff had fully performed and completed the work under the contract; denied that the work was done in a proper and workmanlike manner and that the former engineer of the town and the director of streets and public improvements had certified the payments of any alleged balance due from the defendant to the plaintiff. As a defense to the plaintiff's action, the defendant set forth in its answer that the work set out in the contract was not completed in good and workmanlike manner, and that the work was still incomplete and unfinished, and that the contract provides "that the evidence of the completion of the said work shall be a written certificate of the engineer appointed by the town and the favorable report of the director of the department of streets and public improvements of the town of Nutley to that effect," and that no favorable report of the director of the department of streets and public improvements had been obtained by the plaintiff as required by the contract before the action was brought. The defendant also set up three counterclaims aggregating in amount $23,000. These counterclaims were founded upon damages alleged to have been sustained by the defendant by reason of alleged improper construction of the sewer and the negligent and unworkmanlike manner in which the work was done, and the general inefficiency of the sewer to accomplish the purpose of its construction, by reason of careless and improper workmanship. The cause came on for trial before Judge Adams, sitting with a jury, who, at the close of the case, directed a verdict in favor of the defendant upon the plaintiffs' cause of action, and the counterclaim was submitted to the jury, who returned a verdict on the counterclaim in favor of the plaintiff.

The trial judge certifies to this court the record of the former case, designated as "Exhibit D 1," and asks for an advisory opinion, in the present case, on the following stated facts:

"The plaintiff, in a former suit of which Exhibit D 1 is the record, alleged that the favorable report of the director of streets and public improvements provided for in the contract sued on had been given; a verdict was directed therein for defendant because no such certificate had actually been given upon which verdict judgment was duly entered and costs taxed and paid and said judgment canceled; the plaintiffs in this suit are seeking to recover the same amount claimed in the former suit under the same contract, but allege that such certificate of the director of streets and public improvements is fraudulently withheld; that no new fact has intervened between the last suit and the present suit upon the question of fraud, except that a new demand has been made upon the present director of streets and public improvements, who is a person who was in office at the time of the alleged completion of the contract, but who is not the man who held the office of director of streets and public improvements during the time when the greater part of the work under the contract was done and who supervised such work as was done during his incumbency of the office."

The question raised by these facts, and upon which the advisory opinion of this court is requested, is whether or not the judgment in the former suit is res adjudicata of the issues involved in this present action.

In the first action the plaintiff averred in its complaint that the director of streets and public improvements had certified the payments of the balance due from defendant to plaintiff under the original contract and the supplemental contract for extra work, and that, nevertheless, the defendant refused and still refuses to pay; and in the present action the plaintiffs aver that the director of streets and public improvements willfully, maliciously, and fraudulently withheld and withholds such certificate, and this latter averment marks the only difference between the two actions.

The record shows that one of the issues presented at the first trial was whether or not the director of streets and public improvements had certified the payments due, and that that issue was tried out and disposed of adversely to the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff was aware that it was incumbent upon it to prove, before it was entitled to a recovery against the defendant, that such certificate had been issued or was withheld fraudulently by the director of streets and public improvements. It must have known that no such certificate was issued, and therefore, in proceeding to trial under the state of the pleadings, it did so at its peril. Besides it was open to the plaintiff, at the first trial, to amend its complaint to conform with the facts or to submit to a nonsuit; but this, apparently, it did not see fit to do.

A plaintiff is required to present all the facts existing at the time of the commencement of his action and which relate to the subject-matter of such action and are essential to his right of a recovery, or be forever barred from doing so, after the issues presented have been tried out and final judgment given upon the merits of the case. All the facts which are now set out in the complaint filed in the present case were known to the plaintiff at the time it commenced its first action, and no new fact has intervened between the first and the present action that tends to change the original situation. It is clear that the plaintiff might have presented the ground which it now alleges as a basis for recovery in the first action. The legal rule is well settled that a judgment in a former case between the same parties relating to the same subject-matter settles all matters which came before the court under the pleadings, and also every other ground which might have been presented. Cromwell v. Sac, 94 U. S. 352, 24 L. Ed. 195; Roney v. Westlake, 216 Pa. 374, 65 Atl. 807, 116 Am. St. Rep. 772, 9 Ann. Cas. 184; Dickinson v. D., L. & W. R. Co., 90 N. J. Law, 158, 100 Atl. 203.

The plaintiff in the present case is in no position to properly complain of any hardship imposed upon it, since, if any hardship there be, it is clearly the result of its own act.

It is not out of place to mention here that the plaintiff was under no legal obligation to accept the fruits of the judgment rendered in its favor upon the defenses set up and the counterclaims, and might have applied to the court for a rule to show cause why the judgment should not be vacated and the verdict of the jury set aside, and upon the hearing of the rule it would have been free to present such facts which the court could properly consider and deal with, in the exercise of a sound discretion, whether or not a new trial should be granted.

As the matter now stands, there is a judgment record in the same cause of action in which the present issue tendered by the pleading was known to the plaintiff, at the first trial, and might have been presented but was not, and, that being so, the trial judge is advised that such judgment is res adjudicata of the question now raised by the present pleading.

In re BROWN. (No. 43/363.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Sept. 12, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSANE PERSONS §71—MARRIED WOMAN'S PETITION TO SELL PROPERTY—PARTIES—STATUTE.

When a married woman owning lands in this state desires to sell them, but is unable to do so by reason of the lunacy or other incapacity of her husband to join her in the execution of a proper deed of conveyance, and petitions the Court of Chancery to direct her to convey such lands without her husband joining her, under 3 Comp. St. 1910, p. 8233, § 8q, and for the conservation of so much of the purchase money as shall represent the interest of the husband in the lands sold, under section 8r, the husband, whose rights are affected, must be made a party to the proceedings.

2. INSANE PERSONS §71—MARRIED WOMAN'S PETITION TO SELL LAND—PRACTICE.
The practice to be observed in such cases pointed out.

On petition of Agnes Brown, a married woman, to sell real estate as a feme sole.

Conclusions of advisory master adopted, and order directed.

This matter was referred to Bayard Stockton, Esq., advisory master, who filed the following conclusions:

On petition of a married woman to sell real estate as a feme sole. The petitioner alleges in her petition that her husband, John O. Brown, has been a feeble-minded person since 1907, and since that date has been confined in various hospitals for the insane, and that he was on September 9, 1914, committed to the Camden County Hospital for the Insane as a private patient by the judge of the Camden county common pleas, and that he is still confined in that hospital; that on March 8, 1916, and on May 14, 1917, the petitioner purchased with her own money certain lands in Haddonfield, Camden county, particularly described in the petition; that she is desirous of conveying said lands; and prays that the merits of her application may be inquired into and that she may be permitted to sell said premises and to execute proper deeds or conveyances therefor. It does not appear from the petition whether or not the petitioner and her said husband had issue, the fruit of their marriage; but this is not material for the purpose of this application. The petitioner applies for an order of reference on filing the petition.

[1] The statute invoked is found in Comp. Stat. p. 3233, §§ 8q, 8r. Section 8q provides that in case any married woman owning lands situate within this state shall desire to convey the same, but shall not be able to do so by reason of the lunacy or other mental incapacity of her husband to join with her in the execution of proper deeds or conveyances therefor, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, upon petition filed for that purpose, to direct that such married woman may convey the said lands by deed or deeds executed by herself without concurrence of her husband, which deeds shall convey the lands free from any claim, estate, or right of the husband, and shall be an absolute bar to any right of curtesy therein. Section 8r provides that the Court of Chancery may, in a summary manner, inquire into the merits of the application by reference to a master or otherwise, and, in case the court permits such deed to be made, said court shall ascertain the actual value of the estate or interest of the husband, and that the value thereof shall be paid out of the purchase money to the committee or guardian of the lunatic or incapacitated husband, or, if there be no such guardian, to the clerk of the court.

The husband of a married woman has an actual estate or interest in the lands of his wife, capable of being estimated and valued. Doremus v. Paterson, 69 N. J. Eq. 188, 57 Atl. 548, affd. 69 N. J. Eq. 775, 61 Atl. 396; Hackensack Trust Co. v. Tracy, 86 N. J. Eq. 301, 99 Atl. 846. The interest of the husband in the wife's lands does not depend on the birth of issue. His interest is that of a contingent estate in remainder before issue born. Hackensack Trust Co. v. Tracy, supra.

The petition alleges that the husband is now non compos mentis. As his rights are to be affected by this proceeding, he must be made a party thereto and have an opportunity of making a defense. In Re Martin, 86 N. J. Eq. 265, 98 Atl. 510. He should be served with process, and brought into court, not necessarily by writ of subpoena or other writ.

[2] The proper practice in this case is that an order be made on John O. Brown to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be granted, and a certified copy of the petition and affidavits and of the order be served upon him in the presence of some competent person.

If upon the return of the order Mr. Brown does not appear, the clerk of the court will be assigned and appointed guardian ad litem to appear and answer for him. An order of reference will then be made to a special master, and the matter may be brought on for a summary hearing. This is in conformity to the practice adopted in Re Martin, supra, where the incapacitated party was a widow entitled to an estate in dower.

Edwin F. Crane, of Camden, for petitioner.

WALKER, Ch. An order will be made in conformity with the advice contained in the conclusions of Advisory Master Stockton, which are hereby adopted as the opinion of the court.

(92 N. J. Law, 114)

DRANOW et al. v. KOLMAR.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. Sept. 23, 1918.)

1. ANIMALS §70—ACTION FOR INJURIES BY DOGS—NOTICE OF VICIOUS PROPENSITIES.

That the dog that bit plaintiff had to defendant's knowledge previously bitten another boy on being teased constituted notice to defendant that the dog had vicious propensities.

2. ANIMALS §68—PERSONAL INJURIES—LIABILITY OF OWNER.

Where a ten year old boy was bitten on the cheek by a dog, the owner of the dog was liable for the injuries sustained, where he had knowledge that his dog would bite whether in play or in anger.

3. ANIMALS §70—NOTICE OF VICIOUS PROPENSITIES.

To maintain the claim that a dog that has previously bitten a person did not at that time manifest mischievous propensities, it must appear that the biting was in self-defense or by invitation and under such circumstances that the ordinary well-behaved dog of a kind and gentle disposition would have acted in a similar manner in a similar situation.

4. ANIMALS §74(7)—PERSONAL INJURIES—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for damages through being bitten by a dog, it was error to refuse to instruct that defendant would be liable if he knew that the dog had a mischievous propensity to bite people in play.

5. ANIMALS §74(7)—PERSONAL INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for damages through being bitten by a dog, a requested instruction, that it was not a defense that the dog was in the habit of biting people when patted or teased if defendant had knowledge thereof, was properly refused as being too broad.

6. TRIAL §253(9)—INSTRUCTIONS—IGNORING FACTS.

In an action for injuries through being bitten by a dog, an instruction, that knowledge of the owner that the dog had bitten a person as the result of being teased was not such knowledge of the mischievous propensity of the dog as would make the owner liable to a person subsequently bitten, was erroneous as disregarding the circumstances under which the biting occurred.

Action by Harry Dranow, by Louis Dranow, his next friend, and Louis Dranow, against Adolph Kolmar. On plaintiff's rule to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial granted. Verdict set aside, and new trial ordered.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUMMERE, C. J., and PARKER and KALISCH, JJ.

Queen & Stout, of Jersey City, for plaintiffs. Voigt & Otto, of Newark, for defendant.

KALISCH, J. The plaintiff, a lad ten years of age, was bitten in the cheek by defendant's dog. He brought an action, by his father, as next friend, against the defendant to recover damages for the injury sustained from the dog bite, in which action his father also joined, as a plaintiff, to recover the sums of money expended by him for medical attendance upon and for medicines furnished his son. The jury rendered a verdict for the defendant. The case is now before us on the plaintiff's rule to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial granted, as being against the clear weight of the evidence, contrary to law, errors in the charge of the court, and because of the refusal of the trial judge to charge certain requests submitted to be charged by plaintiffs' counsel.

The undisputed facts in the case appear to be: (1) That the defendant's dog, a fox terrier, bit Harry, the plaintiff, without any provocation; (2) that the defendant's dog had bitten another boy previously, and defendant knew it.

[1] The defendant claimed that he was not chargeable with knowledge of any vicious propensity in the dog to bite mankind, by reason of the information which he possessed, that his dog had on a prior occasion bitten a boy, because his information was that at the time when the biting occurred his dog was sitting on the front stoop of a house when the boy, in passing by, said "gr-r," and put his hand out toward the dog, whereupon the dog leaped to the ground and then jumped upon the boy and bit him in the cheek, and that this conduct of the animal was not a manifestation of a vicious propensity to bite, but a natural act under the then existing circumstances. Even conceding that it was a natural act, it was no less an exhibition of a mischievous propensity, and was notice to the owner of that evil trait. Therefore the admission of the defendant that he possessed the information of the behavior of the animal on that occasion was, in substance, an admission of knowledge of the dog's mischievous propensity.

In Evans v. McDermott, 49 N. J. Law, 163, 6 Atl. 653, 60 Am. Rep. 602, the defense relied on was that, though the dog had bitten several persons of which the owner had information, yet, since it appeared that in every instance the biting occurred while the dog was in a playful mood, therefore no damages could be recovered where it is shown that the dog had a propensity to bite only in play; but that to justify a recovery it must appear that the dog was in the habit of biting mankind while in angry mood, actuated by a ferocious spirit. Mr. Justice Joel Parker, speaking for the court, in an opinion replete with sound sense and observation, at page 164 of 49 N. J. Law, at page 654 of 6 Atl. (60 Am. Rep. 602), says:

"This is not the law. An action can be maintained against the owner by a party injured upon evidence that a dog, with the knowledge of the owner, had a mischievous propensity to bite mankind, whether in anger or not. In either case, the person bitten would suffer injury. A 'mischievous propensity' is a propensity from which injury is the natural result."

[2] Applying this doctrine to the facts of the present case, we are unable to perceive upon what principle of law or fact the jury could have properly found a verdict for the defendant. The verdict is clearly against the evidence and contrary to law.

[3] We are not to be understood, however, as declaring that there can be no circumstance which would justify a dog to bite a person, without subjecting the animal to the imputation of having a mischievous propensity to bite. A dog may be obliged to bite in self-defense. A dog's teeth and firmness and strength of jaw are the only means with which nature has supplied him for protection against the attacks of man and beast. Therefore, in order to properly say that a dog which has bitten a person did not at the time manifest a mischievous propensity, it must necessarily appear that the biting was done in self-defense, or by invitation and under such circumstances that the ordinary well behaved dog, of a kind and gentle disposition, would have acted in a similar manner in a similar situation.

[4] The trial judge was requested by the plaintiff, but refused, to charge the following request:

"If the jury finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the dog, with the knowledge of the defendant, had a mischievous propensity to bite people in play, defendant is liable."

The plaintiffs were entitled to have the court charge this request, and it was error to refuse it for the reasons above stated.

[5] The trial judge was also requested to charge, but refused, the following:

"It is not a defense to the action that the dog was in the habit of biting people when patted or teased, if the defendant has knowledge of the habit."

This request was too broad. A dog who will bite merely because he dislikes to be patted upon the head or body displays, decidedly, a mischievous propensity. And the same may be properly said of a dog who will not stand a moderate amount of teasing. But teasing may go to such an extent as to be equivalent to cruelty sufficient to incite a dog of the most gentle and kind disposition to take a bite out of his tormentor, in self-defense. The request, as a whole, in the respect pointed out, was faulty, and therefore the court was under no legal duty to charge it.

[8] Upon this phase of the case, however, the trial jury instructed the jury as follows:

"Of course, gentlemen, if a usually docile, gentle, good-natured dog, without vicious or mischievous propensity, is provoked or goaded by teasing to do an injury which it would not otherwise do, the owner would not be liable for such injury; nor would knowledge of such fact be sufficient to charge him with knowledge of viciousness, or a vicious or mischievous propensity."

This instruction is erroneous, in that it, in substance, unqualifiedly declares that knowledge of the owner of a dog that the animal has bitten a person, as a result of being teased, is not such knowledge of the owner of the mischievous propensity in his dog, as would make the owner liable to a person subsequently bitten by the animal. The doctrine of Evans v. McDermott, supra, is to the contrary.

It is not to be understood that, because the owner of a dog has knowledge of the mischievous propensity of the animal to bite, he will be conclusively held answerable in damages to a person subsequently bitten, irrespective of the circumstances under which the second biting occurred. It must always remain a question for a jury to decide whether the plaintiff, who is suing, did an act which ordinarily would induce an ordinarily good-natured, kind, and gentle dog to bite. In the present case it was not pretended that the plaintiff had been guilty of any such conduct.

For the reasons stated, the verdict is set aside, and a new trial ordered.

(Prerogative Court of New Jersey. Sept. 27, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 22(2)
—APPOINTMENT OF ADMINISTRATOR AD PROSEQUENDAM — JURISDICTION OF ORDINARY.

The Ordinary may, under his general jurisdiction, appoint an administrator ad prosequendam to prosecute a cause of action under the Death Act, 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 1907, as supplemented by chapter 180 of the Laws of 1917, P. L. 1917, p. 531, where the deceased was nonresident.

2. CASE DISTINGUISHED.

Lothrop's Case, 83 N. J. Eq. 246, followed; Chadwick's Case, 80 N. J. Eq. 471, 85 Atl. 266, distinguished.

"To be officially reported."

Application for the appointment of a special administrator or administrator ad prosequendam to prosecute a suit alleged to have accrued for wrongful death of Joseph Post, deceased. Appointment ordered.

Milton M. Unger, of Newark, for application.

LANE, Vice Ordinary. This is an application for the appointment of a special administrator or administrator ad prosequendam for the purpose of instituting a suit under the provisions of "An act to provide for the recovery of damages in cases where the death of a person is caused by wrongful act, neglect or default," 2 C. S. of N. J. p. 1907, as supplemented by chapter 180 of the Laws of 1917, P. L. 1917, p. 531. The deceased was a nonresident.

There has been no general administration in this state or elsewhere. Section 2 of the act, 2 C. S. p. 1908, provides that every action under it "shall be brought by and in the name of the personal representative of such deceased person." Section 1 of the supplement, P. L. 1917, p. 531, provides that "every action, proceeding or claim brought, instituted or made under and by virtue of the remedy given by the act to which this is a supplement shall be brought, instituted or made in the name of an administrator ad prosequendam." The Legislature has not seen fit to either amend or repeal section 2 directly. If the word "shall" in chapter 180 of the laws of 1917 is to be given its natural meaning, then a general administrator no longer may bring the suit, but it must be instituted by an administrator ad prosequendam. By chapter 181 of the Laws of 1917 the surrogates are given power to grant letters of administration ad prosequendam upon the estates of those who die resident in their counties. The surrogates are without power to appoint such administrators in cases of non-residents.

Application is made to this court for the appointment under its ordinary jurisdiction.

In Lothrop's Case, 33 N. J. Eq. 246, the Ordinary (Runyon) appointed an administrator ad prosequendam where the deceased was nonresident resting his power upon the practice of the ecclesiastical courts in England and upon the case of Coursen's Will, 4 N. J. Eq. 408, holding that the powers of this court in granting letters of administration are not special or limited, but full and general. To the report of Lothrop's Case an interesting note is attached. Lothrop's Case has been cited in the Supreme Court in Benson v. Wolf, 43 N. J. Law, 78, and with approval by the Court of Errors and Appeals in Davenport v. Davenport, 68 N. J. Eq. at page 615, 60 Atl. 379, 6 Ann. Cas. 261, and by the Court of Chancery (Garrison, V. C.) Babbitt v. Fidelity Trust Co., 70 N. J. Eq. at page 658, 63 Atl. 18. Coursen's Case was considered by the Court of Errors and Appeals in Chadwick's Case, 80 N. J. Eq. 471, 85 Atl. 266, and it was there held that the jurisdiction of the Ordinary was subject to legislative regulation, and construing together the legislation which now appears as sections 1 and 2 of "An act respecting the Prerogative Court and the power and authority of the Ordinary," 2 C. S. of N. J. p. 1722, the court held that the authority of the Ordinary did not extend to the probate of wills of those dying domiciled elsewhere. Except as specifically regulated by the Legislature, the jurisdiction of the Ordinary is full and general and extends to the exercise of the powers (in testate and intestate matters) of the English ecclesiastical courts. The question is whether the reasoning of the Chadwick Case applies to the grant of letters of administration. I think not. Administration of some nature may and must be taken out in every jurisdiction in which there is property. Story's Conflict of Law, vol. 1, §§ 513, 514, etc.; 11 Ruling Case Law, § 67.

While it has been said that administration taken out in a place other than that of the domicile of the deceased is ancillary to administration in the forum of the domicile, and that the foreign administrator must account to the administrator of the domicile of the deceased, this is subject to the qualification that debts in the locality of the foreign administrator must be provided for. Pisano v. Shanley Co., 66 N. J. Law, 6, 48 Atl. 618; 1 Story on Conflict of Law, § 525. It has never been held, to my knowledge, that administration cannot be taken out in the foreign jurisdiction until administration has been taken out in the place of the domicile. Such a holding would, in case administration never was taken out in the place of the domicile, as might be, deprive creditors in the locality of their rights. By statute surrogates are given jurisdiction to appoint, after a certain length of time, an administrator for the estate of a deceased intestate where there is property of the deceased within their counties. There is no statutory grant of power to the Ordinary, unless it be included in the general language of section 1 of the act respecting the Prerogative Court and the power and authority of the Ordinary, Revision of 1900, 2 C. S. p. 1722. By that section, the authority of the Ordinary is extended only to the granting of probate of wills, letters of administration, letters of guardianship, etc.

As I have pointed out, the Court of Errors and Appeals in Chadwick's Case held that, so far as probate of wills is concerned, the authority of the Ordinary extends only to the wills of residence. But the court reached the conclusion it did because of the language used in section 2 which required that, before probate should be granted by the Ordinary, proof should be made to the satisfaction of the Ordinary that no caveat against proving such will had been filed in the office of the surrogate of the county where the testator resided at the time of his death which indicated that the Legislature intended the jurisdiction to extend only to the probate of wills of residents. There is no similar language with respect to letters of administration. The Ordinary had, prior to the passage of the legislation, full and general authority to grant letters of administration upon the estate of deceased nonresident intestates, general or special, and I think there is nothing in the legislation which indicates an intent on the part of the Legislature to cut down the jurisdiction, nor can I conceive of any good reason why the jurisdiction should be cut down. The rule of comity referred to in the Chadwick Case does not, I think, apply. It has been generally held that a right of action for negligently killing a person is an asset of his estate, sufficient to warrant the appointment of an administrator, although there are no assets in the state and the deceased was a nonresident. 11 Ruling Case Law, § 69.

I am of the opinion that the Ordinary may appoint an administrator ad prosequendum to prosecute a cause of action under the so-called Death Act where the deceased was a nonresident, upon the authority of Lothrop's Case, 33 N. J. Eq. 246.

Such an appointment will be made.

STATE v. CAMPBELL.

(Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.
July 23, 1918.)

1. PERJURY § 82(5)—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY OF TESTIMONY.

To show materiality of testimony charged to have been perjured, other testimony, given on the trial, on which it was given, may be shown.

2. PERJURY § 82(5)—EVIDENCE—MATERIALITY OF TESTIMONY.

To show materiality of alleged perjured testimony given on prosecution for conspiracy, other testimony from trial on which it was given need not be confined to the subordinate issue on which the charged perjured testimony was given.

3. CRIMINAL LAW § 675—TRIAL—CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE.

That for the purpose of showing materiality of alleged perjured testimony more than enough other testimony from the trial on which it was given is admitted is not error.

4. CRIMINAL LAW § 661—TRIAL—EVIDENCE ON ADMITTED FACT.

Admission, to show materiality of testimony, of other testimony given on the same trial, is not error, though prior to its admission defendant admitted such materiality.

5. CRIMINAL LAW § 678(1)—TRIAL—EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE FOR CERTAIN PURPOSE.

It is no ground for exclusion of testimony, admissible on the question of materiality of alleged perjured testimony, and limited by the judge to that purpose, that it may be misused by the jury.

6. CRIMINAL LAW § 377—CHARACTER OF DEFENDANT—EVIDENCE—PERJURY.

Evidence of good character to be relevant, and so admissible on behalf of accused, should be restricted to the trait involved in the issue, and so in perjury to truth and veracity.

7. WITNESSES § 830(1)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—MANNER OF TESTIFYING.

The state on cross-examination of witness for defendant in perjury, who has testified substantially as he testified in the case in which the perjury is charged to have been committed, may show how he bore himself; how feebly and hesitatingly he testified, when confronted in that case with indignant outburst from the woman whose character he had assailed by his testimony.

8. CRIMINAL LAW §=1169(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The rehearsal, on cross-examination of witness for defendant in perjury, of the denial in another case of the truth of witness' testimony there given by the woman against whose character he was then testifying, could not be harmful; she being a state's witness in the perjury case, and it being certain she there testified as to the truth of the matter.

9. PERJURY §=34(1)—EVIDENCE—NUMBER OF WITNESSES—CORROBORATION.

One may be convicted of perjury on the testimony of a single witness with corroborative proof through independent and material facts and circumstances of such character that, with all the other testimony, guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt.

Wheeler, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Haven County; Donald T. Warner, Judge.

Thomas J. Campbell was convicted of perjury, and appeals. Affirmed.

The case, upon the trial of which the defendant is charged with having given perjured testimony, is State v. Triplett, reported in 92 Conn. 47, 101 Atl. 496. In that case Triplett was informed against in three counts, to wit; (1) A conspiracy to commit an assault upon the person of Dorothy A. Triplett; (2) a conspiracy to commit rape upon her; and (3) an assault upon her with intent to commit rape. The circumstances attending that case and its trial are quite fully detailed in the report of it. The present defendant's testimony given upon that trial was confined to incidents connected with the scene in the bedroom in the Garde Hotel where it was claimed by the state that the conspiracies charged culminated, and the assault charged was committed by one known in that case by the name of Wilson. The particular portion of Campbell's testimony which the state in the present information charges was willfully false was that in which he testified, in substance, that upon the occasion, and in the room referred to, he saw Dorothy A. Triplett undressed and in bed with a man who was then and there undressed and in bed with her.

Among the witnesses produced by the accused was one Donahue. Upon the former trial he had testified in confirmation of the evidence of Triplett and Campbell that he accompanied them in their visit to the bedroom, and that he there saw Mrs. Triplett undressed and in bed with a man who was likewise undressed and in bed with her. This evidence he had substantially repeated on his direct examination in the present case. Upon cross-examination the following ensued:

"Q. Mr. Donahue, you testified here on the last trial, did you not? A. Yes, sir. Q. And do you recall upon that occasion when you were testifying that Mrs. Triplett was present in court? A. Yes, sir. Q. And do you recall that the counsel for Mrs. Triplett requested Mrs. Triplett to step to the front of the witness box while you were testifying so you could identify her? A. Yes, sir. Q. And then she denounced your statement that she had been, that you were in that bedroom, did she not? Mr. Goodhart: That's objected to as improper; grossly improper. The Court: Admitted. Mr. Goodhart: Exception, please. The Court: Exception noted. Witness: She did. Q. She did? A. Yes, sir. Q. And then you replied, after the court had interrupted, to the following question, 'Is that the woman?' and you said, 'I guess that's the woman all right.' Is that right? A. Yes, sir."

In the course of its instructions the court charged the jury as follows:

"Upon all the questions arising in the case, except the one of the falsity of the testimony of the accused, a single witness, if his testimony satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt, will be sufficient; but upon the question of the truth or falsity of the testimony of the accused, if there was no other testimony but that of one witness against the testimony of the accused, a conviction would not be justified, for there would be merely one oath against another. But the testimony of one credible witness accompanied with proof of independent and material facts and circumstances tending directly to corroborate the testimony of the one credible witness, however, justifies a conviction, if the jury be thereby satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the falsity of the testimony of the accused, and if the jury be also satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt in relation to the truth of all the essential elements of the offense charged, as I have just outlined them to you."

Robert C. Stoddard, of New Haven, for appellant. Arnon A. Ailing, State's Atty., and Walter M. Pickett, Asst. State's Atty., both of New Haven, for the State.

PRENTICE, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] Several of the reasons of appeal relate to the same general subject and involve the same general question. They grow out of the admission, over the defendant's objection, of portions of the testimony given upon the former trial which the state offered for the sole purpose of showing the materiality of the testimony given upon that trial by this accused and charged to have been perjured. The objections made to the admission of this testimony were that it was irrelevant and immaterial. That these objections—in so far, at least, as any of the former testimony was concerned which tended in any degree to establish the materiality of the claimed false testimony to the issues involved in the former case—were not well taken, is fully established by State v. Vandemark, 77 Conn. 201, 206, 58 Atl. 715, 1 Ann. Cas. 161, where it was held that, in a prosecution for perjury committed in court upon a former trial, evidence of the testimony given upon that former trial, offered for the sole purpose of showing the materiality of the alleged false testimony, was properly admissible if carefully limited by the trial judge to the purpose for which it was offered. That the testimony admitted in the present case was so offered, admitted, and limited in its purpose and use cannot be questioned and is not questioned by the accused's counsel. The court's repeated and explicit injunctions and instructions forbid that.

[2] Counsel's contention that the court erred in admitting the testimony as it is presented in his brief is supported by three reasons. One is that the testimony admitted was not confined to what occurred in the bedroom or bore directly upon what there took place, but embraced all the testimony bearing upon the conspiracies for which conviction was sought. This claim overlooks the nature of the charges against Triplett. It is indeed true that this defendant's testimony dealt only with the occurrences in the bedroom. But however important that matter was in the determination of the case, the issue raised by the evidence concerning it was only a subordinate one. It was only incidental to the larger and ultimate issue as to the then accused's guilt of the crimes charged against him. He was charged with participation in conspiracies to commit an assault and a rape and with the commission of the assault with intent to commit rape through being an abettor. The state made no attempt to prove that he was a direct participant in an overt criminal act. It could not have claimed Triplett's conviction by reason of anything he or any one else did in that room standing by itself. If it hoped for such conviction, it was necessary that it give a far wider range to the testimony so that in some way the accused be criminally connected with what was there done to and concerning Mrs. Triplett by another hand than his. For the purpose of making that connection, all of the evidence now objected to was properly offered and admitted. It was therefore admissible in the present case under the principle established in State v. Vandemark, 77 Conn. 201, 58 Atl. 715, 1 Ann. Cas. 161, for the purpose of showing the vital bearing of the accused's testimony upon the ultimate issue in the former case and thus establishing its materiality in the determination of the issue therein.

[3] It may be that the materiality of his testimony would have been amply established had some portions of the testimony offered and admitted been omitted. But we know of no rule which either requires a party litigant to limit himself to less than all of the relevant evidence at his command, or permits a court to exclude such evidence when offered; or justifies the imputation of error to a court for its nonexclusion upon the ground that it is superfluous and unnecessary.

[4] Another reason assigned is that the materiality of the accused's testimony given upon the former trial was admitted. The finding so states. But it is silent as to when, in the progress of the trial, that admission was made. The record before us indicates very clearly that it was not made until after the testimony under review was presented by the state. Our search has failed to discover an objection to its admission based upon any such ground, or anything to suggest or imply that the accused at the time the evidence was admitted was conceding the materiality of his former testimony. Even if the fact were otherwise, its admission upon the present trial would not thereby have been rendered erroneous. The state would not have been compelled by such admission to rest satisfied with it and to dispense with other proof, nor the court justified in excluding such other proof presented. 1 Wharton on Criminal Evidence, § 24, C; Commonwealth v. McCarthy, 119 Mass. 354, 355; State v. Winter, 72 Iowa, 627, 631, 34 N. W. 475; People v. Fredericks, 106 Cal. 554, 560, 39 Pac. 944.

[5] The third of the reasons advanced in support of the contention that the court erred in its admission of the evidence is that the information which it conveyed to the jury was calculated to prejudice the accused, in that it would quite likely be considered and weighed against him. If the statement made in the brief in immediate connection with this complaint is correct to the effect that all the witnesses whose evidence upon the former trial was read were put upon the stand in the present trial and in substance repeated the same testimony, it is somewhat difficult to discover what material information the jury could have derived as a result of the court's ruling which was not given to them at first hand, and therefore in what way they could have been prejudiced against the defendant by such information. But however that may be, the situation presented by the admission of the testimony is the usual one arising whenever evidence admissible for one purpose and inadmissible for others is received for its proper purpose alone. The law recognizes the admissibility of evidence under such circumstances for its limited legitimate purpose, and does not, under ordinary conditions, forbid such admission for the reason alone that the evidence may be misused to the other party's disadvantage. Trenton Passenger Ry. Co. v. Cooper, 60 N. J. Law, 219, 223, 37 Atl. 730, 38 L. R. A. 637, 64 Am. St. Rep. 592; Starkey's Appeal, 61 Conn. 199, 202, 23 Atl. 1081.

[6] Upon the trial the accused produced several witnesses who were asked what his character was. The court excluded the question in that unrestricted form, but permitted testimony as to his character for truth and veracity. The ruling was correct. Evidence of good character to be relevant, and therefore admissible on behalf of an accused, should be restricted to the trait of character involved in the issue and bear some pertinent analogy and reference to it. 3 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 25; 1 Wigmore on Evidence, § 59; 1 Wharton on Criminal Evidence, § 59; State v. Kinley, 43 Iowa, 294, 296; State v. Dalton, 27 Mo. 13, 16; State v. Bloom, 68 Ind. 54, 34 Am. Rep. 247.

[7] That portion of the cross-examination of the witness Donahue which is complained of as improper, in that it brought to the jury's knowledge the scene wherein Mrs. Triplett made a statement which was calculated to harm the accused's case, had for its manifest purpose that of discrediting and weakening the force of the testimony which the witness had given. Its object was to show how he bore himself upon the former trial, while giving testimony similar in its character to that which he was now giving when during the course of his testimony he was subjected to the test to which Mrs. Triplett subjected him when brought face to face with him she denounced him as a falsifier, and how feeble and hesitating was his response to the pending question as compared to his preceding testimony. He had taken the stand to testify and testified in support of the truth of the accused's alleged false testimony that he (Donahue) was present in the bedroom and saw Mrs. Triplett there undressed and in bed with a certain man undressed and in bed with her. It was a matter of vital importance to the case whether, in so testifying, he spake truly or falsely. Upon so important an issue and in respect to such an important piece of testimony the state was certainly entitled to bring to the attention of the jury the test to which he was put upon the former trial and how he stood that test. It was entitled to show that when he was brought face to face with the woman whose character he had so assailed, and at the moment of her indignant outburst, his self-assurance so deserted him that his reply to the inquiry of identification shrank to the small proportions of, "I guess that's the woman all right." The reply, apart from its setting, would have been of little moment. It is its setting which gives it its real significance, and the state was entitled to the benefit of it.

[8] Were it not so, it would be difficult to discover what harm could have come to the defendant's case by the jury's acquisition of knowledge that Mrs. Triplett had then registered her dramatic denial of Donahue's damaging testimony. She was a witness upon the trial of the accused and, of course, a prominent one. The testimony she gave is not before us in the record. It is, however, certain that in course of it she either denied Donahue's presence in the room, or either expressly admitted it or by her silence upon the subject or otherwise impliedly did so. If she either expressly or impliedly admitted his presence and thereby conceded that her statement upon the former trial was not true, the accused's interests were rather helped than harmed by the attention of the jury being drawn to her resort to falsehood in her self-protection. If she denied it, that denial certainly would have supplied all the information which the rehearsal of the former denial not under oath could have furnished.

[9] The complaint made that the court's instructions as to the amount of evidence necessary to justify a verdict of conviction in prosecutions for perjury was too favorable to the state is not well founded. The ancient rule that conviction of perjury could not be had, except in cases where the falsity of the alleged perjured statement was established by the testimony of at least two witnesses testifying directly to that fact, has long since been repudiated. The more recent authorities are in agreement that such a rule is neither based upon reason nor in the interest of substantial justice, and that it should be radically modified. The modified rule which has had the approval of the best modern authority is one with which the instructions of the court were in substantial accord. These instructions were correct in that they brought out clearly and intelligently the two essential facts: First, that conviction could not be had upon the uncorroborated testimony of a single witness testifying to the falsity; and, second, that corroborative proof through the medium of independent and material facts and circumstances supplementing the testimony of the single witness would suffice if it was of such a character that, when taken in connection with all the other testimony, the guilt of the accused was established beyond a reasonable doubt. 1 Wharton on Criminal Evidence, § 367; 8 Wigmore on Evidence, § 2042; Commonwealth v. Butland, 119 Mass. 317, 324. It is quite true, as counsel for the accused urges, that the state could not claim conviction upon the evidence of a single witness supported only by slight corroborative evidence. The instructions given, however, furnish no justification for such conviction. They require corroborative evidence of the single witness so strong that the opposing evidence and the presumption of innocence should be overcome and the guilt of the accused established beyond a reasonable doubt.

The remaining assignment of error relates to the minor matter of an alleged incorrect statement of a bit of evidence made in the course of the court's charge. The statement referred to is one which the court expressly said was not made with positiveness but upon his personal recollection. It is not open to the charge of incorrectness except as its intended meaning is distorted, and, in any event, it could not have misled the jury.

There is no error. The other Judges concurred, except WHEELER, J., who dissented.

MILLIGAN v. PHILADELPHIA & R. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. RAILROADS § 827(8) — GRADE CROSSING — DUTY OF PEDESTRIAN.

After stopping at a grade crossing, a traveler must continue to look and listen as he goes forward and to be careful as long as danger is to be apprehended.

2. NEGLIGENCE § 186(26) — QUESTION FOR JURY — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Though plaintiff's evidence in chief and that of his witnesses makes out a case free from contributory negligence, the case is for the jury, where some of plaintiff's answers on cross-examination indicate contributory negligence.

3. RAILROADS § 850(26) — CROSSING ACCIDENT — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for personal injury when plaintiff's wagon was struck at a grade crossing, after sundown, by fast train approaching without warning, where there was evidence that, after stopping, looking, and listening, he listened as he proceeded and could see but 800 or 400 feet, his contributory negligence was for jury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Trespass for personal injury by John M. Milligan against the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Wm. Clarke Mason, of Philadelphia, for appellant. John J. McDevitt, Jr., of Philadelphia, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This is an action of trespass to recover for personal injuries sustained in a grade crossing accident. The Chester Branch of defendant's railway extends southerly through Philadelphia and crosses the Island Road at grade near Seventy-Ninth street. It is a diagonal crossing as the road leads northwesterly. The Bell Road station building is on the southwest corner of the crossing; and the Bell Road Inn is on the north side of the Island Road about 260 feet east of the railway. West of the inn is a coal yard surrounded by a high board fence that extends westerly to within about 35 feet of the railway, then turns north apparently along the right of way. Two telegraph poles stand at the corner of the fence, and a few feet nearer the track is another pole on which is a stop, look, and listen sign. A house stands on the southeast corner, just how near the track does not appear. At the time in question, the railroad consisted of a single track, a view of which to the north could not be had, by a west-bound traveler on this road, until he had passed the corner of the fence. Just before 6 o'clock on the evening of September 29, 1915, the plaintiff accompanied by a Mr. Baxter, drove a horse and runabout or road wagon west in this road until they came to the inn, where they made a brief stop, then re-entered the wagon and went on. Plaintiff testifies he had never been there before and was driving a strange horse, and when within about 25 feet of the track he stopped, looked in each direction and listened, then drove forward continuing to look and listen, and, just as the horse stepped on the track, plaintiff, for the first time, saw an engine coming from the north, about 100 feet away, when he struck the horse with the lines and it jumped forward; but the rear wheel of the wagon was caught by the tender, as the engine was running backward, by which plaintiff was very seriously injured and his companion was killed. Plaintiff's testimony that he stopped, looked, and listened is corroborated by several eyewitnesses. Two passenger coaches were attached to the engine, and the evidence for plaintiff justified a finding that the train was going about 45 miles per hour, without lights and without giving any warning of its approach to the crossing, which was a much-used public highway in the suburbs of the city. There was no safety gate or watchman at the crossing. It was after sundown, and evidence for plaintiff tended to show the presence of some haze or fog and approaching darkness. Plaintiff's own testimony, that from where he stopped he could see north along the track only from 300 to 400 feet, was corroborated by that of two other witnesses. To clear the track plaintiff had to go more than 35 feet from the point where the evidence indicates he stopped; in which space there was apparently no permanent obstruction between him and the approaching train, while there were some trees near the railway. The train was seemingly moving about 11 times as fast as plaintiff and ran some 600 feet after the accident.

Plaintiff's evidence is strongly contradicted by that for the defense, as the latter tends to show that the train was going 25 to 30 miles per hour, with lights on engine and tender; that due and timely warning was given by whistle and bell; that the weather was perfectly clear and daylight yet good; and that from where plaintiff says he stopped there was a clear view to the north so an engine could be seen for 3,400 feet. The last statement is supported by observations made and photographs taken just one month after the accident. There was some dispute as to how near the track it was necessary to be to clear the fence line. This depended on whether it was the distance along the road or direct to the railway, and was not of controlling importance, as plaintiff concedes that the stop was after he had passed that line. The trial judge refused defendant's request for binding instructions and later entered judgment for plaintiff on the verdict, from which defendant appealed. The question of defendant's negligence was clearly for the jury; the only real controversy is whether plaintiff was as matter of law guilty of contributory negligence. In our opinion he was not. The finding that he stopped, looked, and listened, and at the proper place, is supported by ample evidence; in fact, is not seriously controverted. He was struck as the rear wheel of the wagon was clearing the last rail, and not immediately as he drove upon the crossing; hence the rule of Carroll v. Penn. R. Co., 12 Wkly. Notes Cas. 348; that it is vain for a man to say that he looked and listened, if, in spite of what his eyes and ears must have told him, he walked directly in front of a moving locomotive and was immediately struck, while entirely sound, does not apply. See Rottmund v. Penn. R. Co., 225 Pa. 410, 74 Atl. 341; Howard v. B. & O. R. Co., 219 Pa. 358, 68 Atl. 848; Muckinhaupt v. Erie Railroad, 196 Pa. 213, 48 Atl. 364; Waltosh v. P. R. R., 259 Pa. 372, 103 Atl. 55.

[1-3] The traveler at the crossing as he goes forward, after the stop, is required to continue to look and listen and be vigilant so long as danger is to be apprehended. That it what plaintiff testifies he did; but it is strenuously urged that, had he actually done so, he must have seen the oncoming train before he was committed to the act of crossing. That is the most serious question in the case. Plaintiff was bound to see what was plainly visible. If, as defendant's evidence tends to show, it was light and plaintiff had a clear view of the track for over 3,000 feet and drove in front of a train that was coming in plain sight, then there could be no recovery. But there is a conflict in the evidence, not only as to the length of the view, but as to the daylight and the condition of the atmosphere, whether clear, hazy, or foggy; also, as to signals and whether there were lights on the engine or tender; as well as to the speed of the train, which had an important bearing on the question of contributory negligence. Forty-five miles an hour is 66 feet per second. An engine running backward at that rate over the crossing of a suburban street, without light, signal, or warning, especially in the twilight, creates a danger that even a careful traveler upon the highway may not always be able to avoid. Plaintiff says he was looking, but did not and could not see the engine until it was within about 100 feet. This is corroborated by defendant's engineer, who says he was looking ahead, but did not see the horse and wagon until the engine was within 10 or 15 yards of the crossing. His view was equal to plaintiff's. The real question is: What could be seen there under conditions then existing? True, witnesses seem to have seen the side of the train at a greater distance, but that was a larger view. Doubtless defendant's witnesses when called there on a bright afternoon could see the track for a long distance; that is indicated by their testimony and also by the photographs then taken. That was October 29th, when there would naturally be less foliage than in September; that possibly might somewhat affect the view. Plaintiff's evidence in chief and that of his witnesses seems to make a case free of contributory negligence, while some of the answers on cross-examination might indicate the contrary; if so, it was still for the jury. Ely v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 158 Pa. 233, 27 Atl. 970; Shaffer v. P. R. R., 258 Pa. 288, 292, 101 Atl. 982. Plaintiff had to look in both directions and to manage his horse; in our opinion, there is sufficient doubt as to the facts and inferences to be drawn from them to render the question of his negligence one for the jury. See Fritz v. N. Y. C. & St. L. R. Co., 236 Pa. 447, 84 Atl. 786.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

PENSION MUT. LIFE INS. CO. v. WHITELEY et al. (No. 1.)

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

1. FRAUD ~~40~~—PLEADING AND PROOF—PARTIES LIABLE.

Where two parties are jointly charged with deceit, there can be no recovery on a statement of claim which makes out a cause of action against one only.

2. CONSPIRACY ~~5~~—ELEMENTS—OVERT ACT.

A mere conspiracy to do an act is not actionable where nothing is done in pursuance of the design.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Trespass for deceit by the Pension Mutual Life Insurance Company against Seth H. Whiteley and the Police Beneficiary Association, Incorporated. From a judgment on demurrer to plaintiff's statement of claim, it appeals. Affirmed.

Bregy, P. J., filed the following opinion in the common pleas sur defendant's demurrer to the statement of claim:

The writ in this case is in assumpsit. The statement of claim is in trespass. The allegations of the statement are, briefly, these: That the plaintiff insurance company issued a policy of insurance to the Police Beneficiary Association, one of the defendants, in pursuance of an application made therefor, which is attached to the statement of claim, and that Seth H. Whiteley was the agent of the plaintiff company in placing the policy. The statement continues that the premiums were paid, and that certain death losses were paid by the plaintiff company to the defendant Police Beneficiary Association; but that it is now discovered certain fraudulent statements were made to it (the plaintiff company) at the time the application for insurance was made. The allegation as to this is in the following words: "At or about the same time and before the receipt of the application, said Whiteley was asked as to the loss ratio per thousand among members of said association, and replied that he would ascertain and supply it. Later and before the receipt of the application he told the president and general agent of the plaintiff company that for a year prior to the time of furnishing said information the total number of deaths occurring among the members of said beneficiary association was 64 or an average of about 15 for each 1,000 members of said association. The plaintiff has since learned that during said year the number of deaths had been more than 100, being in excess of 25 for each 1,000 members of said association. Said Whiteley also told plaintiff that this information was supplied to him by the officers of said Police Beneficiary Association, Inc., and he knew that it was correct because he was the agent who had written for said association the policy which it had in force for some time with the Aetna Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn."

[1, 2] That is the only allegation of false statement alleged in the statement of claim, and it will be noticed that this statement was made by Whiteley alone. It is true that Whiteley told the plaintiff that he had received this information from the officers of the Police Beneficiary Association, but no one states that that is true. The plaintiff does not state in his statement of claim that any officer of the Police Beneficiary Association ever said such a thing. It contents itself in saying that Whiteley said so. This, in our judgment, is the fatal error which prevents the plaintiff from recovering on this statement against the defendant, the Police Beneficiary Association, and, as they are jointly charged with this wrongdoing, there could be no recovery against either. There is an allegation that Whiteley and the secretary and treasurer of the Police Beneficiary Association conspired together to cheat and defraud the plaintiff; but, unless something was done in pursuance of that conspiracy, no right of action accrues.

For these reasons the demurrer was sustained. We discharged the rule to amend the summons because the statement would be bad even if the summons was amended. It will be noticed that there was no application made then or now to amend the statement of claim.

From the record it appeared that the statement of claim averred, inter alia: "That by the terms of the application signed by the said Police Beneficiary Association its officials agreed to pay the premiums monthly. Within the past few days the plaintiff has learned that neither the Police Beneficiary Association nor its officers have ever paid any of such premiums, but that by an arrangement said Horter and McCay (treasurer and secretary, respectively, of the said Police Beneficiary Association) had made with said Whiteley they did not intend to pay said premiums. By the terms and conditions of the policy, there was to be paid $1,000 to the Police Beneficiary Association (and subsequently this amount was raised to $2,500) upon the death of any member of the said association to the beneficiary of the deceased member of said association, after proper proofs had been furnished. It was understood and stated by the Police Beneficiary Association through its officers and by said Whiteley that members of said association were individually paying their pro rata proportion of the entire premium, and it was supposed that in the event of death the family of the deceased members were to receive the benefits under said policy. Plaintiff now learns for the first time that the individual members did not pay the premiums, nor did the association pay it or any part of it, although the said association made proofs of loss and a claim against the plaintiff company whenever a death occurred under the policy. The plaintiff within the last few days has learned that the payments made by the company for losses incurred under the policy of the Police Beneficiary Association were not paid by the Police Beneficiary Association to the families and relatives or beneficiaries of said deceased members, but nearly the whole of said sum was immediately after its payment by the plaintiff to the Police Beneficiary Association paid by the said association to said Whiteley; that the information furnished to said Whiteley and to the plaintiff as to the deaths occurring or which had occurred, the application for the policy which they made to the company through said Whiteley, the agreement which they now say they made with said Whiteley that he or some one else was to pay the premiums and by which the said beneficiary association was permitted to retain and did retain in its treasury only $100 of the death benefit to be paid by the plaintiff, was all made as part of a plan and conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff company.

"The result of said fraudulent transaction is that the said Police Beneficiary Association has illegally received $6,652.76, and the said Whiteley has made an illegal and fraudulent profit of $49,548.75. The Pension Mutual Life Insurance Company has paid death benefits by reason of the death of members of said Police Beneficiary Association in the sum of $127,667.98 and has received in premiums from said business $71,466.47, showing a loss to plaintiff under this contract of insurance of $56,201.51."

The Police Beneficiary Association, defendant, filed an affidavit of defense, denying that there was an arrangement between McCay and Horter and Whiteley under which they did not intend to pay the said premiums, but admitting that Whiteley advanced the premiums in the name of and for the account of the association. It was further admitted by the affidavit that under the terms of the policy $2,500 was to be paid to the association on the death of a member, but defendant denied that the said sum was to be paid to the beneficiary of the deceased member of the association. The affidavit further denied that the association through its officers and by Whiteley had stated that the members of the association were individually paying their pro rata proportion of the entire premium. The affidavit denied any agreement existing with Whiteley, except that he was to arrange for the advancement of premium payments for the account of the association, and that the advancements should be paid out of death claims paid by the plaintiff, and it expressly denied that there was any conspiracy or plan to cheat or defraud the plaintiff by Horter, McCay, or Whiteley, or any of them. The affidavit further denied that plaintiff has sustained a loss, but, on the contrary, that plaintiff had made a profit from the transactions totaling $15,264.97. The affidavit also set up a counterclaim for $40,000, representing $2,500 due upon the death of each of 16 members of the Police Beneficiary Association, and which plaintiff had refused to pay, although proof of death had been made.

The defendant Seth H. Whiteley filed an affidavit of defense in the nature of a demurrer.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

PENSION MUT. LIFE INS. CO. v. WHITELEY et al. (No. 2.)

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 6, 1918.)

DISCOVERY § 8—CHARACTER OF DEFENSE.

A bill for discovery in aid of an action at law solely to obtain knowledge of character of defense, and which asked to have certain information given by one not a defendant to bill, was properly dismissed on demurrer.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Bill for discovery in aid of an action at law by the Pension Mutual Life Insurance Company against Seth H. Whiteley and another. From a decree dismissing the bill, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

The facts appear in Pension Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Whiteley et al. (No. 1) 104 Atl. 658, and in the following opinion of Bregy, P. J., in sustaining demurrer to the bill:

The bill in equity in this matter is subject to the same criticism which has just been made in relation to the statement of claim filed in the suit at law for the same cause of action. Very little need be added to what is therein said. There are, however, the following additional objections or complaints to the bill which, in our opinion, justify the sustaining of the demurrer to it:

In the argument it is claimed this is a bill of discovery in aid of the suit at law. The suit at law apparently did not need any discovery, because the statement of claim had been filed and all the information necessary to do so seems to have been within the knowledge of the plaintiff. The only discovery that he could seek would be to know what the defense is.

Another objection is that he seeks to have certain questions answered and information given by two persons, naming them, who are not defendants in the bill at all. If the officers of the Police Beneficiary Association misused the funds that were received from the plaintiff company, such officers are responsible to the Police Beneficiary Association, and can be sued by them; but exactly what business that is of the plaintiff we fail to see. They claim to have issued a policy in pursuance of an application which was entirely true and faultless as far as any allegation in the bill is concerned, the premiums were paid, and the plaintiff company as deaths occurred paid certain money over. There their responsibility ended. If their own agent cheated them, they can sue him; but to join him with the Police Beneficiary Association, as to which it has not alleged any wrong to have been done, is a joinder that the law does not allow.

Briefly stated, these are the reasons for our sustaining the demurrer.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Joseph W. Shannon, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Owen J. Roberts and Joseph S. Conwell, both of Philadelphia, for appellee Whiteley. Frederick A. Sobernheimer, of Philadelphia, for appellee Police Beneficiary Ass'n.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is dismissed, at the costs of the appellant, on the opinion of the learned president judge of the court below sustaining the demurrer to plaintiff's bill.

HAMMOND v. ALUMINUM CO. OF AMERICA.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. May 9, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS § 323 — KEEPING BOOKS AND RECORDS—PENALTIES—REPEAL OF STATUTE.

Section 46 of the General Corporation Act of April 29, 1874 (P. L. 73), repealing Act April 7, 1849 (P. L. 563), as amended by Act April 17, 1869 (P. L. 71), so far as providing for corporations for any purpose provided by repealing act, confined operation of Act 1849 to companies already formed thereunder for purpose not covered by Act 1874.

2. CORPORATIONS § 323—BOOKS AND RECORDS — PENALTIES — IMPLIED REPEAL OF STATUTE.

Act April 7, 1849 (P. L. 563) § 24, relating to penalties for not keeping corporations' books and records, does not operate as to corporations chartered under General Corporation Act April 29, 1874 (P. L. 102), by section 89, cl. 8, making similar provision, and since passage of that act section 24 applies only to corporations chartered under Act 1849.

3. STATUTES § 159—CONSTRUCTION—IMPLIED REPEAL.

The mere fact that a statute is enacted shows that so far as it goes, and so far as it introduces a new rule of general application, it was intended as a substitute for and to displace an earlier act of equal general application.

4. STATUTES § 161(1)—IMPLIED REPEAL.

Where a later statute establishing a general system for government is silent as to repeal of former statutes relating to the same subject, an intention to repeal the earlier statute is implied.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Allegheny County.

Assumpsit for penalty prescribed by Act April 7, 1849 (P. L. 563) § 24, by Benjamin D. Hammond against the Aluminum Company of America. From a judgment for defendant on demurrer to plaintiff's statement of claim, contained in an affidavit of defense, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Sidney J. Watts, of Pittsburgh, for appellant. Gordon & Smith and George B. Gordon, all of Pittsburgh, for appellee.

STEWART, J. The appeal is from a judgment entered sustaining a demurrer which appears in the affidavit of defense filed to an action brought to recover from the Aluminum Company of America, a corporation chartered under General Corporation Act April 29, 1874 (P. L. 73), the penalty prescribed by the twenty-fourth section of Act April 7, 1849 (P. L. 563), which act, after prescribing that it shall be the duty of the directors of every such company, incorporated under the provisions of said act, to cause a book to be kept by the treasurer or secretary thereof at the office or principal place of business of the company, which shall contain among other things the names of all persons, alphabetically arranged, who are or who shall within one year have been stockholders of such company, showing their places of residence, the number of shares of the stock held by them respectively, and the time when they respectively became the owners thereof, and the amount paid on such shares, and the total amount of the capital stock paid in, which book shall at the end of the year be carefully preserved in the office of the company for future reference, and shall during the usual business hours of the day, on every business day, be opened for the inspection of all persons who may desire to inspect the same, and any and every person shall have the right to make extracts from such book, further provides that:

"If any such company shall neglect or refuse to keep such book, or to make or cause to be made any proper entry therein, or shall, on application made to any director or officer thereof, neglect or refuse to exhibit the same, or to allow extracts to be taken therefrom, as hereinbefore required, such company shall forfeit and pay to the party aggrieved, fifty dollars for each and every day it shall so neglect or refuse as aforesaid, recoverable by said party as in other cases of claims against such company."

By Act April 17, 1869 (P. L. 71), it was enacted that the provisions of the twenty-fourth section (above quoted) of the act of April 7, 1849, "shall be and are hereby extended to all manufacturing or mining companies now or hereafter incorporated under any special or general law of this commonwealth."

[1, 2] The plaintiff in his statement of claim avers that he is the owner of one share of capital stock in the defendant company; that on or about September, 1917, he demanded of the defendant company the right to inspect the book required by the statutes to which reference has been made, to be kept and maintained for inspection, and demanded further that he be allowed to make extracts therefrom; that the defendant company refused plaintiff's demand, and in such refusal persisted for 41 days from October 3, 1916; and that because of such refusal defendant became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $2,050, for the recovery of which sum suit was brought. The affidavit of defense averred that the facts set forth in the statement were insufficient in law to constitute a good cause of action, inasmuch as the acts of assembly upon which the cause of action was based had been repealed, and judgment was prayed for on the whole record. The learned trial judge sustained the demurrer, holding in an opinion to which little need be added, that Act April 7, 1849 (P. L. 563), and Act April 17, 1869 (P. L. 71), supra, had no application to a manufacturing company chartered under the General Corporation Act of April 29, 1874 (P. L. 73). This latter act in its thirty-eighth section provides for the incorporation of companies formed for the manufacture of iron or steel or both, or of any other metals or of any articles of commerce from wood or metal or both, and in its several sections prescribes rules, regulations, and requirements for the control and management of such corporations. By the forty-sixth section in express terms it repeals Act April 7, 1849, along with several other acts specifically mentioned, and the several supplements to each of said acts, "so far as they provide for the creation of corporations for any of the purposes provided for by this act, or are inconsistent with this act."

One necessary result of this legislation was to confine the earlier act of 1849 thereafter in its operation to companies already formed thereunder and engaged in some branch of manufacture for which no provision was made in the General Corporation Act of 1874, if any such there can be. So comprehensive and embracing in its provisions is the act of 1874, both with respect to kind and character of companies that may be formed and incorporated thereunder, having regard to their objects and purposes, and the rules and regulations appropriate and prescribed for their government, management, and control, that it seems quite manifest that the purpose of the act was to provide a complete system for the creation and regulation of corporations, substituting such system for the practice which had theretofore prevailed of obtaining a special charter in each particular case under such regulations as the Legislature might see fit to impose, and with such privileges as the Legislature might see fit to grant. Under such method uniformity of legislation with respect to requirements in the conduct and management of corporations was entirely impracticable, and the result was discrimination in rights and powers which gave to some advantages which were denied to others. The time chosen was opportune for a change. Our present Constitution went into effect in January, 1874, and it took away from the Legislature the power to pass any local or special law creating corporations or amending, renewing or extending the charters thereof, so that thereafter corporations could be chartered only under a general law to be thereafter enacted. This was the exigency the Legislature of 1874 was called upon to meet, and it could meet it only as it provided a system under which companies organized for a prescribed and legitimate purpose might be incorporated, defining rules and regulations by which they were to be governed and controlled, depending upon the nature and character of the business in which they were to engage. Admittedly this defendant corporation at the time of its organization could not have been incorporated under the act of 1849, its proposed object being within the provisions of the act of 1874 the power to incorporate under the act of 1849 was taken away by the repealing clause contained in the forty-sixth section of the act of 1874. This repealing clause extended further and embraced all provisions in the act of 1849 and its supplement which are inconsistent with the act of 1874, that is to say, inconsistent with the provisions of that act which are intended to regulate corporations chartered thereunder. The act of 1849 contains many provisions for the regulation of corporations chartered under its terms, therefore an unqualified repeal of the act of 1849, while it would not have affected the continued existence of the corporations previously chartered thereunder, would have left such corporations without guide or compass in the conduct of the business of each. Therefore it was that the express repeal in the act of 1874 was limited to such parts of the act of 1849 as were inconsistent with the provisions of the later act. Clause 8, section 39, page 102 of the act of 1874 reads as follows:

"Every such corporation shall, annually, in September, make, and the president, treasurer and a majority of the directors, shall sign, swear to and deposit with the recorder of deeds for said county, a certificate stating the amount of capital stock paid in, the names and number of shares held by each stockholder, the amount invested in real estate and in personal estate, the amount of property owned and debts due to the corporation, on the first day of August next preceding the date of such certificates, and the amount, as nearly as can be ascertained, of existing demands against the corporation at the date of the certificate."

It may be admitted that there is no such inconsistency between the provisions of the twenty-fourth section of the act of 1849 and the clause of the act of 1874 above recited as indicates repugnancy or positive opposition, but it is we think too evident to admit of discussion that both were not intended to operate in the case of corporations chartered under the latter act; that the purpose of the legislation of 1874 was to provide a different protection for the public and the creditors of corporations—and such must have been the only purpose of the legislation—than that provided by the twenty-fourth section of the act of 1849; allowing each act to operate without conflict in a sphere of its own, limited as that sphere might be in the case of companies chartered under the earlier act. To the extent we have indicated there is here a manifest inconsistency; we do not say, nor do we mean, an open conflict between the terms used in the several acts, but an inconsistency that would become apparent and confusing, had the Legislature, in addition to the thirty-ninth section, clause 8 of the act of 1874 incorporated in that act the twenty-fourth section of the act of 1849. The whole purpose of the provision in the earlier act, so far as it could serve any public end, and it could have had no other, seems to be fully met by the later provision requiring every corporation to deposit in September of each year with the recorder of deeds of the county where the corporation had its seat a sworn certificate stating the amount of capital stock paid in, the names and number of shares held by each stockholder, etc. It is not to be supposed that it was a legislative intent to introduce into the system it was about to establish a requirement under an older statute which had been so far supplied within its own terms as to leave it without end or purpose. It is to be kept in mind that the act of 1874 was not a revision or codification of existing laws governing corporations, but was an original enactment embracing in its terms all organizations thereafter to be incorporated, defining their powers and limitations and prescribing rules and regulations for their conduct and management by which they were to be governed. This was a clear substitution for the rules and governing regulations prescribed by earlier acts.

[3, 4] The rule here applicable is thus stated in Endlich on Interpretation of Statutes, § 201:

"In such cases, the later act, although it contains no words to that effect, must, in the principles of law, as well as in reason and common sense, operate to repeal the former—the negative being implied from the 'reasonable inference that the Legislature cannot be supposed to have intended that there should be two distinct enactments embracing the same subject-matter in force at the same time.' If this could be the case, it is obvious that the later statute could become the law only so far as parties might choose to follow it; whereas, the mere fact that a statute is made shows, that, so far as it goes, and so far as it introduces a new rule of general application, it was intended as a substitute for, and to displace, an earlier one of equally general application."

Among the authorities cited in support of this rule are Bartlet v. King, 12 Mass. 537, 7 Am. Dec. 99; Johnston's Estate, 33 Pa. 511. To these may be added Rhoads v. Hoerners-town Building & Savings Ass'n, 82 Pa. 180. As will be observed these authorities are to the effect that when the later statutes establishing a general system for government are silent as to the repeal of former statutes relating to the same subject, an intention to repeal the earlier statutes arises by implication. This of itself would be conclusive in the present case, and fully justifies the action of the court below therein. Aside, however, from this feature of the case, there is that expressed in the repealing clause contained in section 46 of the act of 1874, which, in the opinion of the writer, might with much reason have application here, and we would be fully warranted in holding that there is such inconsistency between the provisions we have discussed in the two acts as to bring the act of 1849 within the express repeal contained in the later. It is upon the former ground, however, that the court rests its conclusion, namely, an implied repeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

FORREST v. PHILADELPHIA RAPID TRANSIT CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

1. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL §74(1)—SUBSTITUTION OF REPRESENTATIVE—TIME.

Where plaintiff dies before trial of his action for personal injury, substitution of administratrix as plaintiff under Act April 15, 1851 (P. L. 674) § 18, may take place more than one year after death; that section fixing no time for substitution.

2. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT §67—LACHES—PRACTICE.

The usual and proper practice, where an unreasonable delay in a prosecution or laches is urged as a ground for abatement of a suit, is a motion or rule by defendant and not an objection to testimony on the trial.

3. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT §67—PROSECUTION—LACHES—WAIVER.

Defendant may waive default or laches in prosecution and go to trial on merits, and, if taking no steps to abate action until after plaintiff has incurred expenses of preparation for trial, defendant cannot on trial defeat recovery by objection to evidence of plaintiff's authority to sue.

4. CARRIERS §320(9)—PASSENGERS—BOARDING MOVING CAR—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for personal injury while attempting to board a street car, where testimony of only two eyewitnesses conflicted as to whether car was standing or moving, and plaintiff's witness was contradicted, the case was for the jury.

5. TRIAL §252(10)—INSTRUCTION—EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT.

In action for injury while boarding street car, wherein defendant offered deceased's written statement that car was moving, charge that plaintiff in his sworn statement of claim stated that it was standing was error, where that statement was not in evidence and plaintiff had not referred to it as contradicting signed admission.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Trespass by John R. Forrest, continued after his death by Indiana Forrest, his administratrix, against the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company. Judgment for plaintiff for $4,000, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with a venire facias de novo.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Charles H. Edmunds, of Philadelphia, for appellant. John Martin Doyle and Eugene Raymond, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

MESTREZAT, J. This is an action of trespass, brought March 26, 1907, by John R. Forrest to recover damages for injuries which he sustained by reason of the alleged negligence of the defendant company in July, 1906. The statement was filed, a rule to plead was granted June 3, 1907, and on June 17th the defendant pleaded "not guilty." The plaintiff died November 2, 1907, and in October, 1915, his death was suggested, and June 5, 1916, his death was again suggested of record, and Indiana Forrest, his administratrix, was substituted as plaintiff. In the statement the plaintiff averred that the defendant's car had stopped to receive passengers, and, when he was attempting to board it, it prematurely started, throwing him to the ground, and causing him severe injuries. The defendant denied that the car stopped, and claims that it was in motion when plaintiff attempted to board it. This was the issue of fact between the parties. The trial resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff. Judgment having been entered on the verdict, the defendant has appealed.

[1] The substituted plaintiff offered in evidence at the trial the letters of administration granted her, which offer was objected to by the defendant on the ground that it was too late to maintain the action; in other words, that the suit was abated by delay in its prosecution. The objection was overruled, and the evidence admitted. Defendant contends that as an action for death must be brought within one year after the death and an action for personal injuries within two years, under the statutes, the right to substitute the personal representative and prosecute the action should be limited to one year after the death of the injured party. The conclusive reply to this argument is that no act of assembly by direct provision or even by inference requires the substitution of the personal representative to be made within one year succeeding the injured person's death. It is a matter solely within the discretion of the Legislature, and hence the courts cannot establish such limitation by construction of the statutes dealing with the subject. Section 18 of the Act of April 15, 1851 (P. L. 674), authorizing the substitution, simply provides that no such action "shall abate by reason of the death of the plaintiff; but the personal representatives of the deceased may be substituted as plaintiff, and prosecute the suit to final judgment and satisfaction." It will be observed that no time within which the substitution shall be made is fixed by the statute, and it is clear that we cannot, and should not, as claimed by the appellant, invade the exclusive province of the Legislature, and do so by construction.

We do not regard the present case as ruled in appellant's favor by Waring Bros. & Co. v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 176 Pa. 172, 180, 35 Atl. 106, 109. There the summons was issued in 1879, and no further steps were taken in the prosecution of the case until 1894, when plaintiffs filed a statement and affidavit of claim which showed that the cause of action had originated in November, 1873, about 21 years prior to filing the statement. The court made absolute the defendant's rule to strike off the statement and affidavit and entered judgment of non pros. because of the laches of the plaintiffs in proceeding with the cause. We sustained this action of the common pleas, holding "the judgment was within the power and discretion of the court below and it will not be reviewed." The ground of this decision is stated in the concluding part of the opinion of Green, J., as follows:

"We decide this case upon the undoubted power of the court below to make the rule of practice relating to this subject, and upon the necessarily implied power to grant the same relief upon motion and hearing, which the defendant could have had by the mere act of its counsel in directing the prothonotary to enter a non pros. at any time after three months, and also upon the further consideration that in any event, and in the best aspect of the case for the plaintiffs, the matter was within the discretion of the learned court below, and in the exercise of that discretion the decision was against the plaintiffs."

In the subsequent case of Hillside Coal & Iron Co. v. Heermans et al., 191 Pa. 116, 118, 43 Atl. 76, 77, this court sustained the court below in refusing to grant a judgment of non pros. on the ground of laches in prosecuting the action which was brought in 1881, and the motion for the judgment was made in 1898 by defendant, who had held by adverse possession since 1872. In explaining and distinguishing the Waring Case Green J., who wrote the opinions in both cases, said, inter alia, in the later case:

"That action however was a personal action. * * * It was also the fact that after the issue and service of the writ of summons no further step had been taken until nearly 15 years later when for the first time the plaintiff filed a statement and affidavit of claim. So that, in point of fact, while the summons was issued in November, 1879, no statement of the plaintiff's claim and no narr. was filed until October, 1894. There was nothing on the record during all that time which informed the defendant as to what was the cause of action. When the statement was filed it appeared that the cause of action arose in 1873, which was nearly 21 years before the statement was filed. In these circumstances and for the reasons appearing in the opinion we sustained the nonsuit granted by the court below. In the present case none of these features is found except the period of delay. * * * Defendants were immediately apprised by the writ of summons which was served upon them, as to the exact character of the demand made upon them. * * * The granting of a nonsuit for such a cause as this is a matter within the discretion of the court to which the application is made. We attached importance to that feature in the Waring Case, supra, and think we should do so here. There was certainly no abuse of discretion in refusing the nonsuit in this case, on the contrary, we think the discretion of the court was wisely exercised in the rejection of the application."

Most of the features of the Heermans Case, distinguishing it from the Waring Case, are to be found in the present case. Here Forrest was injured in July, 1906, the action was brought in March, 1907, the statement of claim was filed June 3, and a plea was entered June 17, 1907. It is true that the plaintiff's death was not suggested until about 8½ years after the suit was brought, but during all that time the defendant was fully apprised, by the record, of the cause of action, and could prepare to meet it. Either party could have listed the cause for trial. In the Waring Case the statement was not filed until 15 years after the summons was issued, and it was nearly 21 years after the cause of action originated until it appeared on the record, and in the meantime, so far as the record disclosed, the defendant was ignorant of the cause of action and hence could not prepare his defense.

[2, 3] The usual and proper practice, as appears by the reported cases on the subject, where unreasonable delay or laches is urged as the ground for abatement of the suit, is a motion or rule taken by defendant, and not objection to testimony on the trial of the cause. The defendant can and may waive the default or laches in the prosecution of the action and go to trial on the merits, and it is not too much to assume that he does so, where he takes no steps to abate the action until the plaintiff has incurred the expense of the preparation of the trial and the cause is before the court and jury for hearing and determination. Promptness by both parties in asserting their legal rights is expected and should be required. If at any time the defendant company in the present case thought the action had been abandoned, it should have pursued the established practice and moved the court or taken a rule to abate it, and not sought to accomplish that result by waiting until the case was listed for trial and was being heard by the court on its merits. We think there is a clear and controlling distinction between the facts of the Waring Case and the case at bar, and we think the court did not commit error in admitting in evidence the letters of administration granted the substituted plaintiff, and declining to hold that the action was abated by undue delay in its prosecution.

[4] It is contended by appellant that, if the question considered above is ruled in favor of the appellee, the case should be reversed, with a venire, for errors committed by the court on the trial of the cause. We agree with the appellant that the case was for the jury. There was but a single witness produced on either side who saw the accident. The plaintiff's witness testified that the car was at rest when the deceased attempted to enter it, and the witness for the defendant testified that it was in motion. In further contradiction of the plaintiff's witness, the defendant introduced statements made by the deceased and his witness that the car did not stop, but was in motion at the time the deceased attempted to board it. The credibility of the witnesses was clearly for the jury, and the court was required to submit it.

[5] We think the learned judge below erred in that part of his charge wherein, referring to the statement of Forrest, he said that:

"He [Forrest] did, 10 months and 13 days afterward, swear to another paper, which he signed by making his mark; that paper being the statement of claim in this case, in which he swore that the car was standing still."

This, as is apparent, was most prejudicial to the defendant, and was directing the attention of the jury to evidence that had not been offered and was not before them; and, so far as the record discloses, the plaintiff had not adverted to the affidavit as evidence contradicting the statement of the deceased and in support of her claim. Whether the statement of claim would have been competent, if offered for the purpose of contradicting the statement of the deceased, is not before us, and need not be decided.

The appellee has not pointed out, and, so far as we can ascertain from the record, there is no evidence, that the affidavit and signature of the deceased to the statement were procured by fraud, coercion or undue influence, and hence the eighth assignment of error must be sustained.

Without referring to the several assignments, we have considered the controlling questions in the case, and, for the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed, with a venire facias de novo.

SHIELDS v. PHILADELPHIA RAPID TRANSIT CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

1. NEGLIGENCE — 88 — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — RELIANCE ON EXERCISE OF DUE CARE.

While one has no right to put himself in dangerous position and rely wholly on assumption that one controlling source of danger will protect him, yet every one exercising due care in the circumstances has an abstract right to rely on assumption that others will do likewise and use ordinary care to protect him.

2. NEGLIGENCE — 70 — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Mere failure to anticipate another's negligence resulting in injury cannot be said to be negligence and will not defeat an action for such injury.

3. STREET RAILROADS — 88(7) — CROSSING TRACK — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A pedestrian is not negligent in attempting to cross street at crossing merely because a street car is approaching in plain sight.

4. STREET RAILROADS — 85(6) — CROSSING TRACK — CARE REQUIRED.

Where pedestrian attempts to cross a street at a crossing when a car is approaching in plain sight, his rights and those of the street railway company are mutual, and each must exercise the care required by the circumstances.

5. STREET RAILROADS — 88(6) — CROSSING TRACK — DUE CARE.

The danger a pedestrian is bound to foresee and avoid at a street crossing is that of being injured by cars operated in a proper and legal manner.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR — 930(1) — PRESUMPTIONS — VERDICT.

After verdict for plaintiff in action for injury when struck by street car at a crossing, his account of the accident must be taken as true on appeal.

7. STREET RAILROADS — 117(22) — ACCIDENT AT CROSSING — QUESTION FOR JURY — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where pedestrian started to cross street when he saw approaching car 275 feet away, apparently slowing down, and where when on near track he saw car two lengths away and thought it was slowing down and was struck when almost across and carried 165 feet by fender, his contributory negligence was for jury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Trespass by Patrick J. Shields against the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company to recover damages for personal injuries. Verdict for plaintiff for $3,000 and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Layton M. Schoch, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Horace L. Henderson, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. Plaintiff was injured by one of defendant's cars at a street crossing in the city of Philadelphia, and sued to recover damages. The trial judge submitted to the jury the questions of negligence and contributory negligence, and, from a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed, assigning for errors the refusal of the court to give binding instructions in its favor and subsequent refusal to enter judgment non obstante veredicto.

On November 5, 1915, between 8 and 9 o'clock in the evening, plaintiff alighted from a north-bound car on Twenty-Second street at the south side of Erie avenue at the intersection of Twenty-Second street, Schuyler street, Erie avenue, and Hunting Park avenue, crossed Erie avenue to the north-western side of Hunting Park avenue, intending to proceed eastward on Erie avenue, and to do so was obliged to cross to the northeastern side of Hunting Park avenue. Defendant operates a double line of tracks on Hunting Park avenue, a thoroughfare 60 feet in width from curb to curb; the distance from each curb to the nearest car track being 23½ feet. Plaintiff testified that while standing on the curb, and as he started to cross the avenue, he noticed a car coming westwardly on Hunting Park avenue, on the near track, that seemed to be slowing down, and 250 or 275 feet distant; that he started to cross the street, and upon reaching the track the car was at least two lengths from him. He further testified:

"When I got to the first rail, I continued to cross, still thinking it was slowing down, and probably going to stop there, which they generally do. Before I got almost over the track, he came on me like a flash, and that was really the last I knew. * * * Q. From the view that you had of the car as it bore down on you, could you give any estimate of what speed it was coming at? * * * A. From what I saw it coming, when I was within two car lengths, until the time it struck me, it certainly must have been going about 25 miles an hour. * * * Q. Did you observe that it went faster after you attempted to cross the track? A. Yes, sir; I did. I couldn't get off the track."

Plaintiff has no recollection of what happened subsequently. The evidence, however, is undisputed that he was picked up on the opposite side of the crossing, a distance of 165 feet beyond the place at which he stated the accident occurred; the testimony on behalf of defendant tended to show plaintiff was, in fact, struck on the south side of the crossing near the place where he was found, and that the car stopped within its length after hitting plaintiff. By special verdict the jury found the accident did not occur at the place specified by defendant's witnesses.

[1-6] The general rule, in cases of this character, is that, while a person has no right to put himself in a position of danger and rely entirely on the assumption that another who controls the source of such danger will see that he is protected, yet every one who exercises due care, according to the circumstances, has an abstract right to rely on the assumption that others will do likewise and use ordinary care to protect him and his property from injury. Young v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 248 Pa. 174, 93 Atl. 950; Wagner v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 252 Pa. 354, 97 Atl. 471. Consequently, mere failure to anticipate negligence by another, resulting in injury, cannot be said to be negligence and will not defeat an action for injuries sustained. In applying these principles to cases of collision between pedestrians and street cars at crossings, it has been held a pedestrian is not negligent in attempting to cross a street at a place set apart for that purpose, merely because a car is approaching at a distance, although in plain sight. Dunn v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 244 Pa. 176, 90 Atl. 526. In such case the rights of the pedestrian and the street railway company are mutual, and each is bound to exercise the care required by the circumstances. The danger the pedestrian is bound to foresee and avoid is that of being injured by cars operated in a proper and legal manner. Accepting plaintiff's account of the accident as true, as we are bound to do in view of the verdict of the jury, he was almost across the track when injured; the case, consequently, is ruled by Young v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., supra.

[7] Defendant relies upon a line of cases represented by Flynn v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 234 Pa. 335, 83 Atl. 207, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1055, Cunningham v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 240 Pa. 194, 87 Atl. 291, and Wolf v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 252

Pa. 448, 97 Atl. 684. The facts in those cases, however, distinguish them from the case now before us. In the case first cited the accident occurred in daytime almost immediately as plaintiff stepped upon the track. In the Cunningham Case the accident also occurred in daytime, and, as was stated in the opinion of the court (240 Pa. 193, 197, 87 Atl. 291), the only reasonable inference deducible from the undisputed testimony was that plaintiff stepped upon the track directly in front of an approaching car and was struck instantly. So, also, in the Wolf Case, the accident occurred in daylight, and plaintiff's testimony was to the effect that the car was coming fast and he saw the motorman was not looking ahead. Under such conditions, he could not rely upon the assumption that the motorman saw him and would exercise proper care to avoid an accident.

It cannot be said in the case now before us that the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the circumstances clearly demonstrated that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; the question, accordingly, was for the jury. Young v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., supra.

Appellant further contends the circumstances of the accident showed plaintiff's account, in view of the place and position of his body when found, described impossible conditions; hence defendant's version of the place where the accident occurred was the true one, and conclusively demonstrated no negligence on the part of the motorman. The jury found this question in favor of plaintiff, however, and it cannot be said that plaintiff's account was so impossible as to warrant setting aside their finding as not being supported by evidence. Under plaintiff's theory of the case, he must have been carried on the fender of the car for a distance of 165 feet. There is nothing so clearly impossible in this as to justify us in holding as matter of law that it could not have occurred. Neither is the fact that plaintiff was found on the right-hand side of the track, rather than on the left, conclusive as to his exact location when struck by the car, since, if carried on the fender for such a distance and around a curve to the left, his position would not necessarily remain the same as that occupied by him immediately following the contact, and a reasonable inference might readily follow that the momentum and the overhang of the front of the car in rounding the curve to the left would have a tendency to throw plaintiff's body to the right-hand side of the track. The inferences were necessarily for the jury.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment affirmed.

V. & S. BOTTLE CO. v. MOUNTAIN GAS CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE §55—CONTRACTS OF GAS COMPANY—ILLEGAL PREFERENCE.

Bill by a manufacturing company against a public service gas company to compel performance of a contract for supply of gas was properly dismissed, where the contract gave unreasonable preference to plaintiff in rate and service; such agreement being invalid, under Public Service Act July 26, 1913 (P. L. 1393, art. 3) § 8, subds. A, B.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Potter County.

Bill by the V. & S. Bottle Company against the Mountain Gas Company. Bill dismissed, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

On October 30, 1913, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement under which the latter agreed to sell and deliver to the former, at the price of 8 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, based on an 8-ounce pressure, delivered at the place hereinafter mentioned, for the term of 5 years, and 10 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, based on the same pressure, such quantities of natural gas as required by the party of the second part (plaintiff) to supply its factory with natural gas for fuel, light, heat, and other necessary purposes, for the proper and successful operation of said factory, for and during the term of 10 years from the date thereof; said gas to be used at the factory of said party in the village of Roulette, Potter county, Pa. The contract further provided that the plaintiff should furnish the necessary pipes, regulators, and meters.

The Mountain Gas Company, on December 22, 1913, filed a tariff fixing the price of natural gas to manufacturers in quantities of 100,000 cubic feet daily at 10 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. The defendant, subsequent to January 1, 1914, refused to supply gas to the plaintiff for less than the rate required by such tariff. Plaintiff brought this bill in equity to compel the specific performance of its contract of October 30, 1913.

The lower court found that the agreement in question gave the plaintiff company special privileges forbidden by article 3, § 8, subds. A and B of the Public Service Act of July 26, 1913 (P. L. 1374), and that such agreement was rendered inoperative from the time the said act went into effect January 1, 1914, and dismissed the bill. Plaintiff appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

W. K. Swetland, of Coudersport, for appellant. S. S. Mehard, of Pittsburgh, and W. F. Dubois, of Coudersport, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is dismissed, and the decree affirmed, at appellant's costs.

on the correct conclusion of the learned court below that, when the Public Service Law went into effect on January 1, 1914, the agreement in question became inoperative.

RUEMELI v. WILSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR §1004(1)—EXCESSIVE VERDICT—AFFIRMANCE.

The reasonableness of a verdict is a question for the trial court under all the evidence on the motion for a new trial.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Trespass by Babette Ruemeli against Ellwood A. Wilson and Irvin W. Wood to recover damages for personal injury. Verdict for plaintiff for $5,000 and judgment thereon, and defendant Irvin W. Wood appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

Maurice W. Sloan, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Warren C. Graham, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. Two of the three assignments of error are not pressed. The third complains of the excessiveness of the verdict. That was a question for the court below, under all the evidence, on the motion for a new trial, and we cannot therefore disturb the judgment for the only error pressed.

It is therefore affirmed.

MILES v. GEORGE

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR §215(4)—CONDUCT OF TRIAL JUDGE—REVERSIBLE ERROR.

Trial judge's undue comment on probabilities in favor of plaintiff in charge cannot be reviewed, where at conclusion of charge counsel for defendant stated that he did not then object to anything in court's statement of facts or instructions.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Assumpsit by Wilbur F. Miles for boarding, washing, and lodging furnished to Sarah A. George. Verdict for plaintiff for $2,500 and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

Bertram D. Rearick, of Philadelphia, for appellant. A. S. Ashbridge, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The claim of the appellee is for boarding, lodging, and washing furnished to his mother-in-law, under an alleged express contract that she would pay him for the same. The issue was one of pure fact, and, while the charge of the learned trial judge is fairly open to the criticism that he unduly commented on the probabilities in favor of the plaintiff, it cannot be regarded as reversible on that account, especially as he stated, at the conclusion of his charge, in addressing counsel for the defendant, "Is there anything in my statement of facts or instruction concerning the law that you object to specifically?" To this reply was made, "Not at this time." Then was the time to have called the court's attention to what is now complained of on this appeal, and the assignments of error complaining of the charge are dismissed.

Judgment affirmed.

STIDFOLE et al. v. PHILADELPHIA & R. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

RAILROADS §=281(4)—INJURY TO TRESPASSER—LIABILITY.

Where a brakeman struck at and pursued a 10-year old trespasser on a train, in consequence of which he fell off and was run over, the railroad company is not relieved of liability because the brakeman was at the time temporarily engaged in flagging trains, where the keeping of trespassers from the train was another of his duties.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Zortman Stidfole, by his next friend and mother, Nettie Stidfole, and by her in her own right, against the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Wm. Clarke Mason, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Francis M. McAdams and William H. Wilson, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought for the recovery of damages for injuries sustained by Zortman Stidfole, a boy 10 years of age, in being chased or driven from a car of the defendant company on which he was a trespasser. The jury found that the brakeman who chased or drove him off had done so in a negligent manner, for which the company was responsible, and verdicts and judgments for the boy and his mother followed. On this appeal from them by the railway company, its main contention is that Maurer, the brakeman, was not acting within the scope of his employment when he drove the boy off. This is sufficiently and correctly answered by the following from the charge of the learned trial judge:

"Mr. Maurer was a brakeman, temporarily engaged in one of his duties, and that duty was flagging, nevertheless he was still a brakeman, and while flagging he was in the service and engaged in the business of the defendant company, and among his duties as a brakeman was the duty of keeping trespassers off of trains. The mere fact, therefore, that he ordered this boy off this train and pursued him, both striking and striking at him, while he was temporarily engaged in flagging trains at this switch, would not alter or affect the liability of his employer, the defendant company, for his negligent act. I instruct you that this is the law that you will apply in this case, if you believe that the facts warrant its application. In other words, if you find as a fact from the whole evidence that the accident occurred in the way as related by the boy plaintiff, by the flagman, Maurer, hitting at him, calling him the opprobrious name, and pursuing him in a menacing and threatening manner after having struck him, then you would be entirely justified in concluding as a fact that the defendant company by its flagman was negligent."

The case was for the jury, and the motion for judgment non obstante veredicto was properly dismissed. Nothing in the assignments of error calls for special discussion, and, as no reversible error appears in any of them, the judgment is affirmed.

MacEVOY et al. v. KERR.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. GUARANTY §=36(5)—SALE OF GOODS—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

Contract of suretyship under which plaintiff was to furnish principal 6 barrels of dye, deliverable 600 pounds monthly, not referring to time of month on which shipment should be made, or whether there should be one or more shipments per month, covered all goods shipped under contract amounting to 600 pounds per month.

2. GUARANTY §=36(5) — LIABILITY — CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

Under suretyship contract covering delivery of 600 pounds of dye monthly, surety was not released from liability because in first month more than 600 pounds were delivered, where all goods called for by contract had not been shipped, so that it could not be said that he was required to pay for more than he had agreed to pay.

3. GUARANTY §=36(5)—CONTRACT — LIABILITY.

Under contract of suretyship covering delivery of 6 barrels of dye at rate of 600 pounds monthly, not referring to time of month on which shipment should be made, or whether one or more shipments a month should be made, surety was liable for 2 barrels in one month, exceeding 600 pounds.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Assumpsit on a contract of suretyship by Thomas J. MacEvoy and Hugo Ristelhueber, copartners, trading as Thomas J. MacEvoy, against James D. Kerr. Verdict for plaintiffs for $1,828.13, and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHIZSKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

H. M. McCaughey, of Philadelphia, for appellant. W. Logan MacCoy, of Philadelphia, for appellees.

FRAZER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment entered on a verdict in an action on a contract of suretyship wherein he became surety for the purchase price of merchandise bought from plaintiff.

H. J. Hallam, desiring to purchase a quantity of dye on credit, applied to plaintiff, who refused to sell unless the former obtained a financially responsible person to guarantee payment of the account. Later Hallam returned to plaintiff's office with the following letter dated June 20, 1916, and signed by defendant:

"In reference to Mr. H. J. Hallam security on his contract for Bk, known as National's type dye I am agreeable to be responsible for payment of said goods in thirty days."

In reply, plaintiff wrote defendant:

"I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 20th inst. giving security for the payment of H. J. Hallam's account for direct Black known as National's type dye."

The evidence referring to the quantity of dye appears in a memorandum written by plaintiff to Hallam the same day as those above quoted as follows:

"Having received a letter from James D. Kerr of date June 20, 1916, security for the payment of six barrels of direct black, known as National's type dye, it is understood that delivery is to be made 600 pounds monthly, at $2.75 per pound until January 1, 1917."

No reference is made in the communications as to time of the month on which shipments were to be made or the proportions, whether in separate quantities or of 600 pounds each or divided into a number of shipments in quantities sufficient to make a total of 600 pounds during the course of the month. The day the contract was entered into, plaintiff shipped one barrel of dye containing 398 pounds, and 17 days later, on July 7th, shipped another barrel containing 501 pounds, making a total delivery of 899 pounds. Defendant, becoming uneasy concerning Hallam's financial condition, requested plaintiff to delay further shipments until goods already delivered were paid for. In compliance with the request, no additional shipments were made, and, on Hallam's failure to pay for the dye previously shipped, defendant declined to fulfill the terms of his contract, whereupon this action was brought.

The principal fact in dispute is the date on which the discontinuance of shipments was requested by defendant and the effect of the request. Plaintiff testified the second barrel was shipped July 7th and that defendant's request to make no further deliveries was not made until the middle of August. On the other hand, defendant fixed the date as June 29th, which was previous to the second delivery, and for that reason denied his responsibility for the latter shipment. The question raised by this contradictory testimony was necessarily for the jury and was submitted under instructions of which no complaint is made, the principal contention of defendant being that the delivery of the second assignment within the period of 17 days from the delivery of the first was a sufficient departure from the terms of the contract to release him from liability.

[1-8] Defendant's agreement is an absolute one to become "responsible for payment of said goods" within 30 days and would seem to be sufficiently broad to cover all goods included in the contract amounting to 600 pounds monthly for a period slightly exceeding 6 months. Consideration of the question of defendant's right to cancel the contract becomes unnecessary, since plaintiff voluntarily ceased making shipments at defendant's request. In absence of evidence to establish the time for delivery or definitely fix the quantity of each shipment, we assume the contract was intended to be operative from its date, and, in fact, this was the construction placed upon it by the parties, as the first shipment was made on the day the guaranty was received. Taking the average daily supply as a criterion, the quantity shipped was sufficient to cover a period of 20 days, and at the expiration of that time plaintiff's duty would be to forward an additional supply. Whether such further shipment should be in quantities sufficient to meet defendant's demand for a part or an entire month was apparently left to the discretion of plaintiff, who testified that in making shipments the quantity of each must necessarily depend upon the capacity of the barrel available at the time. The second barrel containing 501 pounds was also insufficient to make up the quantity required for the ensuing month, and whether or not there was an overshipment necessarily depends upon the time of making the third delivery. As the second shipment was but two days earlier than a delivery of an additional supply would actually be due computed on a daily basis, it might well be contended a further delay would not be consistent with good business judgment or with an honest endeavor on the part of plaintiff to carry out his contract.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

In re PLUMLY'S ESTATE.

Appeal of SHOEMAKER.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 470 — CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

Meaning of words used in will as expressing intention of testatrix are to be read in connection with will as a whole.

2. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 535—EXCLUSION OF HEIR.

While a residuary clause carries all not well given, an heir cannot be disinherited, except by express words or by necessary implication.

3. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 452—CONSTRUCTION—RESIDUARY CLAUSE.

Where the scales hang evenly, the intention of testatrix is to be gathered from language of will, and, if it is doubtful whether the particular term was intended to carry the residue, a construction is to be favored which most nearly conforms to the intestate laws.

4. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 587(3)—CONSTRUCTION—RESIDUE —"BALANCE."

Under a will devising $15,000 in 15 separate legacies, and interest on $4,000 for life, and providing that, if estate did not equal amount devised, each should receive pro rata of amount willed, and, if exceeding that amount, devising "balance" to a nephew and niece, the latter took merely the balance over the legacies, they not being general residuary legatees; and hence the corpus of the $4,000 did not pass to them.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Balance.]

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Philadelphia County.

Exceptions by Thomas S. Shoemaker to adjudication in the estate of Mary P. Plumly, deceased. From a decree dismissing the exceptions, the exceptant appeals. Reversed, and record remitted, with direction.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

J. H. Shoemaker, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Henry Budd, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

MOSCHISKER, J. Mary P. Plumly died May 7, 1912, leaving a will whereby she disposed of the corpus, or principal, of $15,000, in 15 separate legacies ranging in amounts from $100 to $3,000. In addition to these legacies, and interlarded between them, she provides:

"To my brother-in-law, John M. Plumly, I will the interest of four thousand dollars during his lifetime."

After the last bequest in the testament, the following provision appears:

"If my estate should not reach the amount as willed, then I wish each one to receive pro rata of the amount as willed, and if on the other hand it should exceed the amount, I wish the balance to be divided between my nephew, Eugene K. Plumly, and my niece, R. May Swaim, or their heirs. I wish * * * all taxes to be paid out of the estate on the four thousand I have left him [John M. Plumly], so he can have the full interest on what I have left him."

John M. Plumly died May 29, 1916. At the audit in the court below, one-half of the $4,000 from which Mr. Plumly had received the income during his life was claimed by Thomas S. Shoemaker, as one of the heirs of testatrix, under the intestate laws, and also by Eugene K. Plumly, as a residuary legatee, under the above quoted testamentary provision. The Orphans' Court decided in favor of the latter (Lamorelle and Gest, JJ., dissenting), and the former has appealed.

It was admitted at the audit that:

"The excess of testatrix's estate, after payment of legacies, including the trust legacy of $4,000, and all expenses, was something less than $100."

The question for determination is: Do the words of the will constitute Eugene K. Plumly and R. May Swaim general residuary legatees, so that, upon the death of John M. Plumly, the corpus of the $4,000 is to be divided between them, or does testatrix simply give to them the balance, if any, of her property over and above the total of the sums previously named in her will; i. e., the above-mentioned sum of "less than $100"?

[1] The controlling inquiry is: What meaning is conveyed, as to the intent of the testatrix, by the words employed in the part of the will under immediate consideration, read in connection with the document as a whole; for, when so looked at, if the meaning is clear, there is no necessity for the application of technical rules of construction. If such meaning leads to a partial intestacy, even though the testatrix might have thought she had avoided this result, the heirs under the intestate laws will take to the exclusion of those claiming as residuary legatees—that is to say, should the latter's claim be inconsistent with the apparent meaning of the language employed in the will.

[2-4] A close study of the present document convinces us that the testatrix did not intend thereby to constitute Eugene K. Plumly and R. May Swaim general residuary legatees. We must assume Mrs. Plumly knew in a general way of what her estate consisted; but it is apparent she did not know the exact amount for which her securities would sell. Evidently, however, she anticipated that the sum likely to be realized and the total of the amounts contemplated by her as bequests would about equal each other, leaving either a slight deficiency or a small excess. With this in mind, it is only reasonable to assume that she used the word "balance" in a mathematical sense, meaning remainder over and about a sum total, and not in the general sense of all her estate which might remain undisposed of. In other words, the language employed indicates that what testatrix had in mind, when she disposed of "the balance" to Eugene K. Plumly and

R. May Swalm, was any amount in excess of what she for the moment considered "as willed" by the prior bequests, and not her general residuary estate, if any.

While Mrs. Plumly gave only the interest on $4,000 to John M. Plumly, and not the principal, yet it is apparent, from the final language employed in the particular testamentary provision under consideration that she had this $4,000 in mind "as willed," when she provided for the disposition of "the balance." As we read the words used by testatrix, in the part of the will now before us, the thoughts thereby expressed concern a division, either in case of a shortage in the total necessary to meet the aggregate of the amounts already mentioned by her or in the event of a balance above such total, and, apparently, she had no thought of an eventual disposition of any part of her estate after the death of John M. Plumly. We agree with the following view expressed in the dissenting opinion written by Judge Lamorelle, of the court below:

"If the clause was intended to dispose of all of the residue, the auditing judge was undoubtedly right; but was it the purpose and intent of testatrix to write into the will a clause disposing of any residue save and except such surplus as might exist after totaling all of her legacies? What was the amount 'as willed'? Manifestly all that she had given, including, of course, the $4,000 left in trust. Testatrix, having thus disposed of all her effects, seemed to realize that, if her possessions were unequal to her gifts, it was incumbent upon her to provide for a pro rata abatement; and, having incorporated this clause in her will, what more natural than that she should at the same time cover a possible increase and make disposition of such surplus, if any? That, and that only, to my mind, was the intention as determined by the language used. If this clause had not been inserted, an intestacy as to the $4,000 on the death of John M. Plumly [certainly] would have resulted; and, if the testatrix did not intend by this clause to dispose of the $4,000, why should we resort to an artificial rule of construction [to bring about that result]? 'Balance' is the word used by testatrix, and 'balance,' considering the context, can mean but one thing, the excess over and above the legacies given. While it is, of course, true that a residuary clause carries all not well given, it is equally true that an heir cannot be disinherited except by express words or necessary implication. Citation of authority on these well known propositions is unnecessary. Where, however, the scales hang perfectly even, the intent of the testator is to be gathered from the language of the will [alone]; and, if it be doubtful whether a particular item was intended to carry the residue, a construction is to be favored which most nearly conforms to the intestate laws."

If the testatrix meant Eugene K. Plumly and R. May Swalm to take only the balance over and above the aggregate of the amounts previously mentioned in her testament "as willed," and we have already decided such to be the meaning conveyed by the words she employed, then it is clear that she did not intend to designate them as general residuary legatees, and they cannot claim as such against those entitled under the intestate laws.

The assignments of error are sustained, the decree of the court below is reversed, and the record is remitted, with directions to make distribution in accordance with the views here expressed; costs to be paid out of the estate.

FERRY et al. v. WEDGE et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES §177(1) — DAMS—OBSTRUCTION OF WATER — INJUNCTION.

On bill in equity to enjoin riparian owner on one side of stream from erecting a wall higher than that on opposite side increasing overflow upon land on opposite side in flood time, injunction compelling removal of wall so far as it barricaded natural flow over defendant's land was proper.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Tioga County.

Bill in equity for injunction by Clive C. Ferry and others against Henry Wedge and others. From a decree for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Appeal dismissed.

From the record it appeared that Norris brook is a rapid mountain stream in Middlebury township, Tioga county, Pa., about nine miles in length, flowing easterly, and the point where it emerges from the hills is practically the watershed between the headwaters of Marsh creek and the headwaters of Crooked creek, different branches of the headwaters of the Susquehanna river, and for a distance of about three-fourths of a mile at the east end of said stream it flows over flat bottom lands, the lands of the plaintiffs lying mostly to the north and the lands of the defendants lying mostly to the south of said stream. In December, 1916, shortly before the present suit was commenced, Henry Wedge and Imogene Wedge, the owners of the land through which said Norris brook flows immediately east of the point where the stream emerges from the hills, started and undertook to change the whole course of said Norris brook and have it run along the south line of lands of C. C. Ferry, one of the plaintiffs; and immediately a suit in equity was commenced, and an injunction was issued by the court of common pleas of Tioga county enjoining said Henry and Imogene Wedge from changing the course of said stream, to which suit the defendants made no reply and a decree pro confesso was entered, and the course of the stream was not changed. Immediately thereafter the defendants in the present suit commenced to barricade and raise the wall or embankment along the south side of said stream and built and constructed an embankment, wall, or water obstruction along the south side of said stream beginning at the foot of the hill where said stream emerges from the hills, which embankment was built of large stones, logs, and dirt piled together in a compact mass and varying in height from three to four feet, and extending easterly completely across a depression, sag, or low place, and thence running on east a distance of 884 feet to a point close to the bank of said stream, and such wall was built by the defendants with the express purpose of filling up said natural depression and stopping the waters of Norris brook from flowing south through the same, which was the natural channel for them to take and had been for many years.

The lower court's eighth and tenth findings of fact were as follows:

"(8) In times of high water considerable quantities of sand and gravel are washed down from the hills which are west of the point in question, and are deposited along the line of this stream, and more especially so after getting some 25 rods from the hill where the stream becomes less rapid; but this washing has a tendency to fill the stream in its entire length, especially over the flat lands."

"(10) We further find from the evidence that the effect of this wall or barricade of the water, if allowed to remain at the west end, will increase the damage to the lands of the plaintiffs by increasing the quantity of water in Norris brook in times of flood and increasing the overflow from the same upon the lands of the plaintiffs along the lower levels of the stream, and will constitute more or less of a peril to the lands of the plaintiffs and will impair the value of said lands."

The lower court entered a decree compelling defendants to remove the wall at and along that part of the stream acting as a barricade to the natural flow of the water over defendants' land in time of high waters.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

David Cameron, A. B. Dunamore, and P. J. Edwards, all of Wellsboro, for appellants. Frank H. Rockwell, of Wellsboro, and Chester H. Ashton, of Knoxville, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. The findings of fact by the learned chancellor below are not assigned as error, and the decree is affirmed on the eighth and tenth.

Appeal dismissed, at appellants' costs.

COMMONWEALTH v. DANTINE

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. ROBBERY — FELONIOUS TAKING.

"Robbery" is the felonious and forcible taking from person of another of goods or money to any value by violence or by putting in fear, and offense is complete if there is a taking in presence of although not from owner's person by putting in fear.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Robbery.]

2. HOMICIDE — §253(1) — MURDER IN FIRST DEGREE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree.

Appeal from Court of Oyer and Terminer, Westmoreland County.

John Baptist Dantine was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed, with direction that record be remitted for purpose of execution.

From the record it appeared that on the night of February 17, 1917, the dead body of Louise Delare, a woman 65 years of age, was found on the floor of an inclosed porch, just outside the kitchen door of her home at Jeannette, Pa. The deceased was badly beaten and had come to her death as the result of violence inflicted upon her body. At 8 o'clock on the afternoon of the same day, the decedent's son gave her $70, which she put in a bureau drawer in the bedroom. The son then went to Pittsburgh and did not return home until late that night, when he found his mother dead, and the bedroom showing evidence of a violent struggle. The drawer in which the $70 had been put had been forced open and the money taken. The defendant was arrested later the same night. The condition of his raincoat and trousers then indicated that they had been recently washed. There was blood on his raincoat, spectacles, and on his underwear. There were scratches on defendant and finger marks on the back of his raincoat.

There was evidence that on the evening of the murder defendant was in the washroom of a hotel in Jeannette washing his raincoat and trousers, that immediately thereafter he boarded a street car on which he several times displayed a roll of bills, stated that he had $50, and paid a stranger's car fare. It appeared that the day of the commission of the crime was pay day at the plant at which defendant worked, and that he had received only $2.50, and on the pay day of the previous week had been paid only $9.25. A short time before February 16, 1917, he borrowed money from a friend stating that he was out of funds. He had not paid his board bill for months. The defendant admitted that he had committed the crime to officers in the lockup after his arrest and later in jail to his brother in the presence of a friend.

The jury found a verdict of guilty of murder of the first degree, upon which sentence of death was subsequently passed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

James L. Kennedy, of Greensburg, for appellant. O. Ward Elcher and Nevin A. Cort, Dist. Atty., both of Greensburg, for the Commonwealth.

PER CURIAM. [1,2] The contention of the commonwealth on the trial of the prisoner was that he killed the deceased in the perpetration of, or the attempt to perpetrate, robbery, and that his offense was therefore murder of the first degree under the statute. The jury found him guilty of that crime, and, on this appeal from the judgment pronounced against him, his main complaint is that the learned trial judge erred in defining "robbery" to the jury. While it is the felonious and forcible taking from the person of another of goods or money to any value by violence or putting in fear, the offense is complete if they are taken in the presence of the owner by violence or putting in fear. In other words, it is not necessary for the completion of the offense that they be taken from the person of the owner. 2 East, P. O. C. 16, § 124; 2 Roscoe's Criminal Evidence, 935; 2 Wharton's Criminal Law, § 1061; Trickett's Pennsylvania Criminal Law, 664; United States v. Jones, No. 15,494, 26 Fed. Cas. 658.

The first four assignments are dismissed. The ingredients necessary to constitute murder of the first degree having been proved to exist, the fifth assignment is overruled, and the judgment is affirmed, with direction that the record be remitted for the purpose of execution.

IN RE WOOD'S ESTATE.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. WILLS ¶686(2) — TESTAMENTARY TRUST — TERMINATION.

Where testator left property in trust to divide proceeds equally between two daughters, and one daughter died, the other who was sui juris was presently entitled to receive one-half the trust fund as the only person interested, notwithstanding the trust in terms was active.

2. WILLS ¶687(2) — TESTAMENTARY TRUST — TERMINATION — DIVISION OF FUND.

Where will devised property in trust to divide proceeds equally between two daughters, the representatives of a deceased daughter were entitled to one-half of the trust estate, upon its termination by the surviving daughter.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Philadelphia County.

In the matter of the estate of Richard D. Wood, deceased. From a decree dismissing exceptions to an adjudication, George Wood, trustee, and R. Francis Wood, substituted trustee for Mary and Julia Wood under the will of testator, appeal. Affirmed.

The facts appear in the following opinion of Gest, J., sur exceptions to adjudication:

The testator by his will gave to his sons certain personal property and the proceeds of certain real estate to be held in trust by them for the use of his daughters, Mary and Julia, "the proceeds to be equally divided between them . . . and desire said trustees to pay them equally the net proceeds of the above-named property derived from dividends, rents and interest after payment of taxes and current repairs. And in case a majority of the said trustees deem it for the interest and safety of the property so bequeathed to Mary and Julia Wood and with their consent to sell any of the above mentioned trust property and invest it in the bonds of the United States, I understand that in this devise that the said Mary and Julia Wood shall have power to dispose of equal portions of this estate so held for them in trust by will." Under this trust, the accountants took possession of the property and administered it for many years. Testator's daughter Mary is now deceased. His daughter Julia survives. Upon the audit of the trustees' account, filed because of the death of Mary, the auditing judge awarded one half of the trust fund to the legal representatives of Mary's estate, and the other half to Julia under her petition to have the trust terminated.

There are two sets of exceptions filed to the adjudication; the first relates to the trust for Julia Wood, and the second to that for Mary Wood. The first exceptions are dismissed by a divided court, the four judges who heard the argument being equally divided in their opinions; but we all agree that the second exceptions should be dismissed.

[1] As to the trust for Julia Wood: The auditing judge has concisely and accurately stated his reasons for finding that the cestui que trust is presently entitled to demand and receive the assets held for her. In addition to what has been said, we add that the principles that should govern this case are well set forth in Rodrigue's App., 22 Wkly. Notes Cas. 358, where there was a devise of real and personal estate to trustees, who were required to apply all the proceeds and profits thereof to the personal use of the testator's daughter and to her support and benefit from time to time as she may need and require when by her demanded in writing for herself and her children, but not to be applied or used otherwise. The Supreme Court said: "But the trustees have no functions except merely to apply all the proceeds and profits of the estate to the personal use of the appellant as she might require it. There is no limitation over of either the income or principal of the estate to any person. There are no other estates or interests to be preserved. It is not a spendthrift trust. It was not a trust for protection during coverture, as the appellant was a widow and not in contemplation of marriage. No ultimate purpose of any kind, requiring the continuance of the trust, is expressed in the will, or can be implied from its terms, except the mere payment of the income to the cestui que trust." Rodrigue's Estate has been followed in Marshall's Est., 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 228; Audenried's Est., 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 507; Keyser's Est., 6 Pa. D. R. 181.

It is not sufficient to show that the trust according to its terms is active. There must be something else to support the trust, and this is sufficient to distinguish the cases cited to support the contrary opinion. In Hemphill's Est., 180 Pa. 87, 88 Atl. 408, in Eshbach's Est., 197 Pa. 153, 46 Atl. 905, and in Mooney's Est., 206 Pa. 418, 54 Atl. 1094, there were remainder interests to be protected. In Shower's Est., 211 Pa. 297, 60 Atl. 789, the Supreme Court pointed out the purpose of the testator that the income should not be liable for the debts of the beneficiaries or subject to anticipation by them. Spring's Est., 216 Pa. 529, 66 Atl. 110, appears to have been decided on the discretionary powers vested in the trustees.

The principle that underlies this case is clearly that of Culbertson's App., 76 Pa. 145, holding that, where all parties in interest are sui juris, the trust may be ended by their agreement, and that Julia Wood is the only party in interest under this will is perfectly clear. The principle of Culbertson's Estate has been recently affirmed in Stafford's Est., 258 Pa. 595, 102 Atl. 222, where Mr. Justice Moschizaker reviewed the authorities. As therefore Julia Wood is the only person having any interest in the trust, we are of opinion that she is entitled to terminate the trust and receive it in her own right.

[2] As to the trust for Mary Wood, who is now deceased: As we have stated, we are all of opinion that the award to her personal representatives was correct. Millard's App., 87 Pa. 457. She was the only person interested, and the mere fact that she was given the power to dispose of the estate by will is an affirmation of the testator's intent that she should have control of the estate rather than a restriction upon her interest in it. Shallcross's Est., 13 Phila. 874.

The court dismissed the exceptions. George Wood, trustee, and R. Francis Wood, substituted trustee, appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

James Wilson Bayard, of Philadelphia, for appellants. Owen J. Roberts and Conlen, Brinton & Acker, all of Philadelphia, for administrators of estate of Mary Wood, deceased. W. W. Montgomery, Jr., of Philadelphia, for appellee Julia Wood.

PER CURIAM. The decree in this case is affirmed, at the costs of the appellants, on the opinion of the learned court below dismissing the exceptions to the adjudication.

HOFFMAN v. CITY OF PHILADELPHIA.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐295—PROCEEDING TO FIX DAMAGES—DELAY IN PAYING AWARD—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In proceeding to fix damages caused by a city's taking of land, the burden is upon the city to show facts excusing its delay in making payment.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐302—DELAY IN PAYING AWARD—DAMAGES.

Where there was no showing that plaintiff, whose land had been condemned by city, had stubbornly refused to agree with city as to what it should pay him or was responsible for delay in payment, and where it did not appear on trial which party had appealed from award of view-ers, the owner was entitled to compensation for delay.

3. TRIAL ⇐296(2)—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTION—CURE.

Error, in charge permitting finding, without evidence, that one whose property had been taken by city was responsible for delay in payment so as to defeat his right to compensation for such delay, was not cured by other correct instructions.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Proceedings by Benjamin Hoffman against the City of Philadelphia for damages sustained in the taking of lands for a park. Verdict for plaintiff for $18,000 and judgment thereon, and he appeals. Reversed, with a venire facias de novo.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

Edwin O. Lewis and J. Lee Patton, both of Philadelphia, for appellant. John P. Connelly, City Sol., Hubert J. Horan, Jr., and Glenn O. Mead, Asst. City Sols., all of Philadelphia, for appellee.

BROWN, C. J. The proceeding in the court below was an issue for the ascertainment of damages sustained by the plaintiff in the taking of his land by the city of Philadelphia for park purposes. On his appeal from the judgment on the verdict in his favor, his sole complaint is that the trial judge erred in instructing the jury as to his right to compensation for delay in paying him his damages.

[1, 2] The six assignments of error raise no other question. In his opinion refusing a new trial the learned trial judge comments on certain facts as having been sufficient to warrant a finding that the claim of the plaintiff was so excessive and unconscionable as to justify the defendant in refusing payment of it. This comment was inadvertently made, for the facts to which reference was thus made were not before the jury. Whether the instructions complained of were erroneous depended entirely upon what the facts were upon which the jury were to pass on plaintiff's claim to compensation for the delay in paying him for the damages he sustained, and we proceed to state them. The land was taken in 1910, and there was, of course, a finding by a jury of view in the first instance of the amount of damage the plaintiff had sustained. The issue in the common pleas followed an appeal from that finding, but it did not appear on the trial below whether the claimant or the city had appealed. In 1917—nearly seven years after the land had been taken—plaintiff's claim for damages was submitted to a jury in this issue. There was absolutely nothing before them to have justified a finding that, during this long delay, he had ever refused to name an amount he was willing to accept as compensation, or had ever made an unreasonable or exorbitant demand for the same, and the law did not presume such action on his part. He was not called as a witness in the case, and there was therefore nothing from him to indicate what sum he had claimed. True, his witnesses differed from those called by the city in their estimate of the damages sustained; but this was no ground for finding that the plaintiff's claim had been so excessive and unconscionable as to have justified the defendant in withholding payment from him. The case as presented to the jury on the question of his right to compensation for the delay in paying him cast the burden upon the city of showing the facts excusing its delay in paying him. But it did not assume that burden, and as there was absolutely nothing in the evidence to show that the plaintiff had stubbornly refused to come to an agreement with the city as to what it should pay him, or that he was responsible in any way for the delay in paying him, he was entitled to compensation for the delay, and the jury should have been unqualifiedly so instructed. Wayne v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 231 Pa. 512, 80 Atl. 1097; Hoffman v. City of Philadelphia, 250 Pa. 1, 95 Atl. 388.

[3] While the learned trial judge followed, in some portions of his charge, what has been distinctly ruled by the two foregoing cases, in others portions of it he departed from them and gave a license to the jury to find, in utter absence of anything to justify the finding, that the delay on the part of the city in paying was right and proper. In the extract from the charge which is the subject of the second assignment of error, the instruction was:

"Whether there has been a right and proper delay depends upon what you believe to be the facts of the case."

And, in the answer to the second and third points presented by the plaintiff, the further instruction as to compensation for delay was:

"But in fact he may not be so entitled. If he has disappointed the law and stubbornly refused to name an amount which he would be willing to accept as compensation, or in the same spirit has been extortionate in his demands and has named a sum exorbitant and unreasonable, a jury might well find that he has himself unjustifiably provoked the delay and deny him all damages therefor."

These erroneous instructions were not cured by others that were correct, for the jury may have found, under the license given them, that the plaintiff had himself to blame for not getting his damages promptly from the city. Such license ought not to have been given them; on the other hand, the instructions asked for by plaintiff's second and third points should have been unqualifiedly given.

The second and fourth assignments of error are sustained, and the judgment is reversed with a venire facias de novo.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨77(2)—DECISION REVIEWABLE—INTERLOCUTORY ORDER—CONFIRMATION OF SALE.

An order directing an administrator to apply for an order of court to sell decedent's realty to pay debts is interlocutory, and an appeal to Supreme Court will be quashed.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇨375—ORDER TO SELL PROPERTY—CONFIRMATION—APPEAL.

If administrator sells realty of deceased for payment of debts pursuant to order of court, an appeal will lie from the confirmation thereof.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Luzerne County.

Petition for order directing administrator to apply for leave to sell the realty of estate of Rosalie Maslowski, deceased, for the payment of debts. From a decree granting the petition, Alexander Maslowski appeals. Appeal quashed without prejudice.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Edmund G. Butler and Joseph P. Lord, both of Wilkes-Barre, for appellant. John McGahren and R. B. Alexander, both of Wilkes-Barre, for appellee.

BROWN, C. J. [1, 2] This appeal is from an order directing the appellant, as administrator of the estate of Rosalie Maslowski, to apply for an order of court to sell her real estate for the payment of debts. The order was merely interlocutory, and the appeal must therefore be quashed. Snodgrass' Appeal, 96 Pa. 420. If a sale should be made in pursuance of the said order or decree, an appeal will lie from the final confirmation of it, and the errors now justly, but prematurely, complained of will then be properly here for correction.

Appeal quashed, without prejudice to the appellant.

IN RE DAVIES' ESTATE

Appeal of BECKENBAUGH.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

WILLS ⇨717 — RELINQUISHMENT OF DEVISE.

Where testatrix devised her property equally to a son and two daughters, a paper thereafter executed by son during her lifetime, relinquishing all right in estate, in view of fact that testatrix made no change in will and verbally reaffirmed its provisions, was of no effect, and he was entitled to share equally in estate.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Lackawanna County.

Exceptions by Margaret Beckenbaugh to adjudication in the estate of Mary I. Davies. From a decree dismissing the exceptions, the exceptant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Charles H. Soper, of Scranton, for appellant. John R. Edwards, of Scranton, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The complaint of the appellant is of the refusal of the court below to give effect to a certain paper signed by her brother, the appellee, agreeing to relinquish all his right, title, and interest in their mother's estate. At the time he signed this paper she was living, and he had no interest in anything belonging to her to be released. But, aside from this, she chose to let her will stand thereafter as it had been executed, more than three years before, dividing her estate equally between her three children, the appellant, the appellee, and a second daughter. She not only made no change in her will after her son had signed the said agreement, but, according to the testimony of the second daughter, testifying against her own interest, she said, with emphasis, about three weeks before her death, when spoken to about the agreement:

"Do you think I am going to deprive Ella-worth of the things that are coming to him? He has just as much right to the things here as you or Margaret."

The only possible conclusion of the court below was that the contention of the appellant was groundless in law and in fact, and her appeal is therefore dismissed at her costs.

LIFTER v. EARLE CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR \S 80(1)—INTERLOCUTORY ORDER—DISMISSAL—TERMS.

Refusal to order receivers to pay rent in arrears and rent to accrue under lease of premises occupied by receivers was interlocutory, and appeal therefrom will be quashed without prejudice to lessor's claim to fund in hand of receivers.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Bill in equity for appointment of a receiver by Joseph J. Lifter, trading as the Lifter Ice Cream Company, against the Earle Company. Petition of Samuel Sternberger for order upon receivers for payment of rent denied, and from the decree petitioner appeals. Appeal quashed.

From the record it appeared that the receivers were appointed for the Earle Company on January 18, 1918; that they continued to occupy the premises 1019-21 Market street, in the city of Philadelphia, under a lease from Samuel Sternberger to the Earle Company; and that the rent due January 1, 1918, and thereafter was unpaid. Petitioner prayed for an order on the receivers for the payment of rent in arrear and for the further payment of rent as it should accrue under the terms of the lease.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

George P. Rich, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Morris Wolf, Gordon A. Block, and Horace Stern, all of Philadelphia, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The decree in this case was interlocutory, and the appeal from it is therefore quashed, at appellant's costs, without prejudice to his right to present his claim for rent as a preferred one upon distribution of the funds in the hands of the receiver.

KNECHT v. KNECHT.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 171(1)—REVIEW—THEORY OF CASE BELOW.

In assumpsit for money had and received, where verdict indicated that contract or understanding of parties was as testified to by plaintiff, and case was tried on that assumption, Supreme Court could not be asked to review action upon different theory.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE \S 4—SUPPORT.

If finding that common-law marriage existed between parties was warranted by facts, husband was liable for wife's maintenance and support.

3. MARRIAGE \S 50(5)—COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence as to cohabitation and reputation held sufficient to raise a presumption of marriage, and to show that an agreement to marry, if made, was fully carried out.

4. MARRIAGE \S 40(4)—COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE—PROOF.

That the relations between a man and woman were meretricious in the beginning will not prevent establishment of a subsequent common-law marriage.

5. MARRIAGE \S 40(4) — PRESUMPTION — CONTINUANCE OF ILLICIT RELATIONS.

The presumption that an illicit relation between a man and woman continues until a change in the relation is actually proved fails, in the face of positive evidence of marriage overcoming the presumption.

6. MARRIAGE \S 50(5)—COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE—PROOF.

A common-law marriage may be shown by evidence that parties entered into a contract to live as man and wife, and continued thereunder for a period of seven years, and by a showing that they were commonly known as husband and wife.

7. MARRIAGE \S 51 — COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action by alleged common-law wife against husband, held, on the evidence, that whether a valid contract of marriage existed was for the jury.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Berks County.

Assumpsit by S. Kathryn Knecht against Elmer Knecht. Verdict for plaintiff for $1,747.80 and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

W. B. Bechtel and Earle I. Koch, both of Reading, for appellant. Paul N. Schaeffer, of Reading, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. Plaintiff avers she is the common-law wife of defendant, and sues in assumpsit to recover money she claims to have given defendant from time to time out of her earnings, under agreement to deposit in bank in their joint names, that the fund so deposited might be drawn by plaintiff at her pleasure. Defendant denied such agreement, as well as averment of marriage, and testified to an understanding that plaintiff should pay her expenses and that the money should be used for that purpose, she to receive only the balance of the fund. This version of the agreement was denied by plaintiff, who, to corroborate her testimony, and show liability on the part of defendant to support her without deduction from her earnings, offered evidence to establish a common-law marriage. The terms of the contract, if any, between the parties, and whether a marriage actually took place, were submitted to the jury, who returned a verdict for plaintiff, and from judgment entered thereon defendant appealed.

[1] No denial is made that a considerable sum of money was paid over to defendant by plaintiff. In fact, he admits receiving the sum of $1,283.55, but avers he paid out on plaintiff's account more than the amount received, and that there remained after deducting such payments a balance due him. The evidence as to the terms of the contract between the parties depended entirely upon their individual testimony, which, being conflicting, was necessarily a question for the jury. The verdict indicates the jurors found the contract to be as testified to by plaintiff. Defendant denies a marriage between himself and plaintiff, and sets off against plaintiff's claim the amount of money expended by him on her behalf. The case was tried by defendant, however, on the theory of an express contract, whereby plaintiff agreed to pay her personal living expenses, and upon a settlement of their account any balance remaining in his hands should be returned to her. The verdict of the jury indicates the contract or understanding of the parties was as testified to by plaintiff, and, the case having been tried on this assumption, this court cannot now be asked to review the action on a theory different from that upon which it was presented to the court below. Richardson v. Flower, 248 Pa. 35, 93 Atl. 777, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1088; Armstrong & Latta v. Philadelphia, 249 Pa. 39, 94 Atl. 455, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 1082; Weiskircher v. Connelly, 256 Pa. 387, 100 Atl. 965.

[2, 3] The contention of defendant is also refuted by the finding of the jury that a common-law marriage existed between the parties; if such finding is warranted by the facts, defendant's set-off is invalid, for the reason he was liable for the maintenance and support of his wife, and could not seek reimbursement for such expenditures as a set-off against her claim to recover her separate earnings intrusted to his care. There is little dispute in the testimony concerning the relations between the parties, with the single exception as to what took place at the time the alleged marriage was contracted. Defendant and plaintiff first met in 1905, and it is not denied that from that time until August, 1908, there were frequent instances of improper intercourse between them. Plaintiff testified that at the request of defendant they came to Philadelphia in August, 1908, to be married. No actual ceremony, however, was performed by either a clergyman or magistrate. They remained at a hotel the night of their arrival in the city, and on the following day visited the home of defendant's sister, where plaintiff was introduced by defendant as his wife. As to the agreement to marry plaintiff testified:

"After he told her [his sister] we were married, we just had the ordinary conversation, after he had told her we were married and I was his wife. After that we left, and coming up on the train to Reading we agreed to be married, and would live together as man and wife. * * * Q. What else did he say, if anything? A. He said we were mated by God, and not by the people, and that we were married just as well as if we were married by all the ministers in the world. Q. What did you say to that? A. I agreed to the same thing, we would live together as man and wife. Q. Was that on the train coming back? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you agreed to live together then? A. Yes, sir; and so did he."

Upon their return to Reading plaintiff went to her home and defendant to Ashland, Pa., where he was employed at the time, and continued to work there until the following February, frequently visiting plaintiff at her boarding house in Reading, where they were known as husband and wife. Defendant returned to Reading in February, 1909, and took up his residence with plaintiff, and from that time until April, 1916, a period of seven years with the exception of about a year, when employed in other parts of the county, they lived and cohabited together as man and wife, were known as such to their relatives and friends, and to the pastor of the church they attended, and by whom their child was baptized, and when absent from home defendant frequently wrote to plaintiff, addressing her as Mrs. Elmer R. Knecht.

[4-6] There is no doubt of the sufficiency of the evidence as to cohabitation and reputation to raise a presumption of marriage, and to show the agreement, if made, was fully carried out. Defendant contends, however, that the presumption arising from cohabitation and reputation is rebutted in this case by evidence showing the relation between the parties was illicit in its commencement, and consequently such relation will be presumed to have continued until a change of the situation is actually proved—citing Hunt's Appeal, 86 Pa. 294; Tholey's Appeal, 93 Pa. 36; Reading Fire Ins. & Trust Co.'s Appeal, 113 Pa. 204, 6 Atl. 60, 57 Am. Rep. 448; Grimm's Estate, 131 Pa. 199, 18 Atl. 1061, 6 L. R. A. 717, 17 Am. St. Rep. 796. It does not appear, however, that this is a case where the beginning of the cohabitation was meretricious. While it is admitted there was frequent illicit relation between the parties previous to the marriage agreement testified to by plaintiff, such relation took place not under the guise of marriage but before cohabitation as man and wife began and while they were living apart from each other. In this respect the case is distinguishable from the cases cited above. In Hunt's Appeal cohabitation began while the man had a wife living from whom he had not been divorced and for this reason a valid contract of marriage between the parties was impossible and the court found that, during the period intervening between the date of the decree for divorce and his death, decedent continued to reside with the claimant without a marriage being solemnized, nor does the report of the case show evidence of an agreement to marry. In Tholey's Appeal, in place of an actual marriage, there was merely evidence of a statement by deceased that he would claim plaintiff as his wife and take care of her and the child. In Reading Fire Ins. & Trust Co.'s Appeal, the relation between the parties was illicit in its inception, and, as this court points out in the opinion, the plaintiff did not testify she was married, or that there was an agreement between herself and deceased under which they lived together as husband and wife. In Grimm's Estate, the evidence was to the effect that the parties cohabited as man and wife, and the marriage ceremony which they intended to have performed in the future was prevented by the man's death.

Admitting the cohabitation was meretricious in the beginning, that situation will not help appellant. It can hardly be contended a man and woman living together in illicit relations cannot subsequently marry. In McCausland's Estate, 213 Pa. 189, 62 Atl. 780, 110 Am. St. Rep. 540, this court held, where the father and mother of a child, who had been living together, agreed, six weeks after the birth of the child to become husband and wife, and thereafter continued to live together as man and wife, holding themselves out to the world as such, the contract of marriage was valid. The rule of presumption has no force in the face of positive evidence of marriage, except that the evidence shall be sufficient to overcome the presumption. In Thewlis' Estate, 217 Pa. 307, 66 Atl. 519, it was held a presumption of continuance of an illicit relation gives way to a superior presumption in favor of compliance with the law under the following circumstances: A husband, who deserted his wife in England, came to this country and remarried here, which marriage was void by reason of the fact that his first wife was living at the time, and, after the decease of the latter, the person whom he had married in this country was recognized as his wife until the time of his death. There was, however, no repetition of the marriage ceremony, or evidence of a formal contract or understanding between them. It was said in an opinion of the lower court, affirmed by this court (217 Pa. 309, 66 Atl. 519):

"That marriage may be established by long-continued cohabitation and reputation is too well settled to require citation of authority. See Richard v. Brehm, 73 Pa. 140 [13 Am. Rep.

733]. And while there is a presumption of continuance as to a relation illicit in its inception, under such circumstances as existed in Hunt's Appeal, 86 Pa. 294, where the interval during which it might have become lawful was but two months (December 13, 1873, to February 16, 1874, or in Grimm's Estate, 131 Pa. 199 [18 Atl. 1061, 6 L. R. A. 717, 17 Am. St. Rep. 796], where it was but one week), the doctrine of those cases is not to be extended to one like the present, where in good faith the parties continue to live together as husband and wife, after the complete removal of the only obstacle in the way of a valid marriage, and so for many years continuously proclaim themselves to the public, until the relation ceases by the husband's death. The presumption of continuance of an illicit relation, under such circumstances, gives way to the superior presumption in favor of compliance with the requirements of the law, of morality, and of common decency. See Greenleaf on Evidence, § 41; Bergdoll's Estate, 7 Pa. Dist. Rep. 137."

[7] The agreement as testified to by the plaintiff in this case and believed by the jury, was sufficient (under the above cases) to constitute a valid agreement to live together as man and wife, and, when carried out by the parties for a period of over seven years, the court cannot say, as matter of law, that no valid contract of marriage in fact existed.

The judgment is affirmed.

KELLER v. LAWSON.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

1. WILLS §318(3) — TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY — VERDICT.

On a trial of an issue devisavit vel non, the trial judge sits as a chancellor, and is not bound by the verdict, and should not sustain it when against the manifest weight of evidence.

2. WILLS §423 — FINAL JUDGMENT — CONCLUSIVENESS.

When final judgment is entered on a verdict on an issue devisavit vel non, the orphans' court is concluded thereby.

3. WILLS §318(3) — TESTAMENTARY INCAPACITY — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

On an issue devisavit vel non, the jury's finding of testamentary incapacity, held against the weight of the evidence, and should have been set aside by the chancellor.

4. WILLS §318(3) — DEVISAVIT VEL NON — EVIDENCE.

On an issue devisavit vel non, the court sits as a chancellor, and must consider the entire evidence, and the question is not whether some of the testimony standing alone would justify the verdict, but whether it would when considered as a whole.

5. WILLS §52(1) — TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY — PRESUMPTION.

There is a presumption of testamentary capacity.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Luzerne County.

Issue of devisavit vel non by Child Keller against Blanche Lawson. From a judgment on a verdict for defendant, on the ground of testamentary incapacity, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and issue directed to be set aside

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-
ZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

J. Q. Creveling and D. L. Creveling, both of Wilkes-Barre, for appellant. W. Alfred Valentine and T. B. Miller, both of Wilkes-Barre, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This appeal is from judgment entered upon a verdict for contestant in an issue devisavit vel non. Susan Mack died January 17, 1914, leaving two married daughters, who are the parties to this suit.
The paper writing admitted to probate as her last will is as follows:

"I, Susan Mack, of Larksville, make and publish this my last will and testament. It is my will that my entire estate real and personal be given to my daughter, Chid Keller, absolutely.
I appoint my said daughter, Chid Keller, to be executrix of this my last will and testament.
In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal this thirteenth day of August,

A. D. 1913. Susan X Mack. [Seal.]
her mark

"In presence of:
"J. W. Price.
"Horace J. Smith."

[1-3] From the probate thereof, the other daughter, Blanche Lawson, took an appeal to the orphans' court, where an issue was awarded to determine the questions of testamentary capacity and undue influence. The jury resolved the latter question in favor of Chid Keller, the proponent, but found the will invalid for lack of mental capacity to make it. This appeal by proponent is from judgment entered on the verdict. In such case the trial judge sits as a chancellor and is not bound by the verdict, nor should he sustain it when against the manifest weight of evidence. However, when final judgment is entered on the verdict, the orphans' court is concluded thereby. Union Trust Co. v.
People's Trust Co., 254 Pa. 385, 890, 98 Atl.
1062. The trial judge fell into error in treating it as advisory only to the orphans' court; this may have influenced his decision. In our opinion the verdict cannot be sustained.
While there is some conflict in the evidence, that for contestant is not sufficient to overcome the presumption of testamentary capacity, supported as it is by clear and abundant affirmative evidence.

Mrs. Mack, who was possessed of an estate of about $30,000 and had been a woman of strong physical and mental vigor, suffered such a stroke of paralysis about 5 years prior to her death as to render her thereafter crippled and practically bedfast. The paralysis was of the left side, and later the right side also became partially disabled.
Mrs. Mack lived to the age of 73 years, the last 26 of which Mr. and Mrs. Keller lived with her as one family in a home which she owned. She was a widow, and they nursed and cared for her during the long illness above mentioned. The other daughter, Mrs. Lawson, was married and lived away, and, when the will in question was made,
was temporarily estranged from her husband and children and living in a manner highly displeasing to her mother. Then, according to the evidence for proponent, Mrs.

Mack decided to change her will and sent directions to her attorney, who in accordance therewith drew the will here in question and sent it to the testatrix, to whom it was read and reread in presence of witnesses.
She expressed satisfaction therewith and sent for her pastor and a neighbor as witnesses to its execution. They came, the matter was talked over, she said in substance that she knew the nature of the paper and the effect of its execution, and that it was her will. They signed their names as witnesses, and, owing to her physical inability and at her request, the minister wrote her name, and she then affixed her mark. The neighbor remained and she explained to him fully why she had given the property to Mrs.
Keller and why she had given nothing to Mrs. Lawson. He had known her for 30 years, frequently visited and conversed with her, and as a subscribing witness expresses the opinion that she was then of sound mind, memory, and understanding. The minister (the other subscribing witness) who visited her two or three times a week during the years 1911, 1912, and 1913, and was in the habit of conversing with her, expresses his judgment that her mind was clear and sound and that she knew the nature and value of her property and fully about the will. His testimony is unequivocal and emphatic. To like effect is the testimony of Mrs. Avery, a neighbor, who was there just before the will was executed and heard it read to Mrs. Mack, and also that of the three ladies from the lodge who came and spent the next evening with her in honor of her birthday and conversed with her for over two hours on various subjects; also, that of the dressmaker who did work in the home earlier in the season, and of others who conversed with her near the end of that year.
They all knew her well, and their evidence is that the testatrix could and did converse intelligently and was of good mind. To different witnesses Mrs. Mack expressed satisfaction at the disposition she had made of her property and clearly indicated that she understood the will. True, the paralysis had affected her speech and rendered conversation with her somewhat difficult; but the evidence is that she did talk intelligently with the witnesses mentioned, and with others. Then there is the family doctor, who knew her intimately and had been her physician for 37 years and was in the habit of talking with her and who visited her professionally in July, August, and December, 1913, and he says her mind was normal and that she was thoroughly capable of knowing what she wanted to do, but that she could not articulate well. All the testimony to which we have referred is affirmative in character, comes from disinterested witnesses, familiar with the matters about which they speak, and is seemingly credible and convincing. To like import is the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Keller and their daughter. They, however, took an active part in procuring the making and execution of the will, and at the trial assumed the burden of disproving any undue influence on their part and did so to the satisfaction of the jury, who found for Mrs. Keller on that issue.

Testimony submitted for contestant included, inter alia, that of Mrs. Mack's sister, Mrs. Morrish, and her two sons, tending to show that the testatrix had suffered from paralysis for 15 years, and that when the will was made she was entirely paralyzed, except a slight use of her right hand; that they saw her often and tried to converse with her and were unable to do so; that she was in a state of partial coma and had at times a vacant look and was difficult to arouse; that her memory was exceedingly defective and she could not keep a secret; that it was with difficulty she recognized her relatives; and that she was very childish, grew worse, and in their opinion was unable to make a will or do any business. This found some corroboration in evidence of other witnesses, but the majority of the testimony of contestant's other lay witnesses was of dubious import and of slight value. In addition, three doctors, who never saw Mrs. Mack, were called as experts and answered hypothetical questions. The expert evidence indicates that paralysis usually results from a brain lesion and tends to break down the tissue and to weaken and sometimes destroy the mind, and that it is apt to progress. Doubtless this is true, yet it is common knowledge that people so afflicted do transact business. There is no evidence that Mrs. Mack was insane or had any delusions, and the facts testified to by contestant's witnesses are by no means conclusive of her inability to make a will. We do not know why she did not or could not converse with her sister and the sister's sons, but undoubtedly she did converse with so many other people as to establish her ability to do so. Certainly a verdict that she could not converse would be against the manifest weight of the evidence. Near the end, her eyesight became very poor, which may account for her seeming inability to recognize people. However, the weight of the evidence is that she did even then recognize acquaintances. The other infirmities to which reference is made, such as forgetfulness, etc., are not uncommon to old age. There was great physical weakness, which might easily be confounded with mental incapacity. Like most invalids, she was doubtless better some days than others. While such a person might often seem to comprehend less than she actually did, she would not be likely to seem to comprehend more. There is nothing in the disposition made of the property or on the face of the will that tends to impeach it, and it is supported by abundant affirmative evidence.

[4] Here the court sits as a chancellor and must consider the entire evidence, and the question is not whether some of the testimony, standing alone, would justify the verdict, but whether it would be considered as a whole. See Kane's Est., 206 Pa. 204, 207, 55 Atl. 917; Roberts v. Clemens, 202 Pa. 198, 51 Atl. 758; Mulholland's Est., 217 Pa. 65, 66 Atl. 150; Draper's Est., 215 Pa. 314, 64 Atl. 520; Eddey's App., 109 Pa. 406, 1 Atl. 425; Phillips' Est., 244 Pa. 85, 90 Atl. 457; Hersperger's Est., 245 Pa. 569, 91 Atl. 942.

[5] Starting with the presumption of testamentary capacity and considering the entire case, the verdict is so decidedly against the manifest weight of the evidence that it cannot stand. See Shreiner v. Shreiner, 178 Pa. 57, 35 Atl. 974; Englert v. Englert, 198 Pa. 326, 47 Atl. 940, 82 Am. St. Rep. 808. The jury having found there was no undue influence, the court should have entered judgment for the proponent (plaintiff in the issue) non obstante verdicto.

It is not necessary to consider the other questions presented in the record.

Judgment reversed, and issue directed to be set aside; costs to be paid by appellee.

CAZZULO v. HOLSCHER et al. (361 Pa. 447)

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

NEGLIGENCE—§66(2)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—DISREGARDING WARNINGS.

In action for death of plaintiff's husband, in employ of one contractor, by fall of a large stone, placed by another contractor, under which deceased was working, deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, where he had been warned not to work under the stone until the mortar should dry.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Caterina Cazzulo against Peter Holscher and Joseph Holscher, copartners trading as Peter Holscher & Son. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, and judgment rendered for defendants.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

Maurice W. Sloan, of Philadelphia, for appellants. William A. Gray, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

BROWN, C. J. Stephano Cazzulo, the husband of the appellee, was a stone carver in the employ of Tongnarelli & Voigt Company. The appellants, Peter Holscher & Son, were stone setters, and had a contract for the setting of stone in the erection of an armory building at Thirty-Second street and Lancaster avenue, in the city of Philadelphia. On May 29, 1916, they were setting the last two courses, and immediately under them Cazzulo was standing on a scaffold to carve an eagle on one of the stones. While he was thus working, the stones above him, which had just been set in place by the appellants, fell and struck him, and his instant death resulted. In this action, brought by his widow, the questions of the negligence of the defendants and the contributory negligence of the deceased were submitted to the jury, whose verdict was for the plaintiff. From the judgment on it the defendants have appealed.

The work of the defendants was to set stones; that of the deceased, as an employé of another firm or company, was to do carving work on them after they had been set. The relation of employé and employer between the deceased and the defendants did not exist. On the trial of the case the defendants offered no testimony. From that offered by the plaintiff it did not appear in what respect the defendants had been negligent in setting the stones which fell. There was nothing before the jury except the mere happening of the accident; but, even if this brought the case within the rule that, when the thing which causes the injury is shown to be under the management of the defendants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendants, that the accident arose from want of care, the court ought to have declared as a matter of law that the deceased had been guilty of contributory negligence, barring a recovery by his widow.

George Wilson, called as a witness by the plaintiff, testified that he saw the stones being set immediately before they fell; that he saw and heard the deceased and another carver on the scaffold, carving stones immediately beneath those which fell upon them; and he further stated that one of the defendants, who had charge of the setting of the stones, warned the deceased not to work under them while they were freshly set and before the top stones had been put in place. His testimony was:

"Q. Cazzulo, the man that was killed, he was working underneath this freshly cut stone, chiseling at the eagle, wasn't he? A. He was working under there. Q. With hammer and chisel, hammering on it? A. I guess so. I was on the roof. Q. You know he was there and that is what he was doing? A. Yes. Q. You heard the hammer hitting? A. Yes, I heard it. Q. You know he was working on the eagle? A. Yes, sir. Q. His duty was carving out the eagle? A. Yes. Q. That is what he was doing underneath there? A. Yes. Q. Did you hear Mr. Holscher tell him not to work under there while the stone was freshly set and before they got the top stone on? A. I heard him tell him that, that morning. Q. You heard him tell him that morning not to work there; that it was dangerous? him that morning. Q. Anxious to work there? A. I he would not work there; underneath that place. Q. him not to work there; that place? A. Yes."

This testimony, coming tiff's own witnesses, with any other witness called it in the slightest degree, ed to the jury disclose negligence of her husband in at a place of danger aft not to do so by the ma stones immediately abov was lawfully at his work and who knew the dange them before they becar their places, duly warn this danger; but the war and the risk was assume of just what did happel as presented to the jury, tory negligence on the p nate husband, and for hi ants are therefore not a they were guilty of neglig Butler v. Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Rule to open judgment entered by Oscar D. Loeb against Louis Davidson and another upon a bond. Judgment opened, and on issue framed there was judgment for defendants. Motion for new trial denied, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Daniel W. Simkins, of Philadelphia, for appellant. Edward Hopkinson, Jr., of Philadelphia, for appellees.

FRAZER, J. Plaintiff entered into an agreement in writing August 11, 1915, to purchase from defendants certain property "with the buildings thereon now in course of erection," the latter agreeing to complete the houses within three months from date "according to plans and specifications" with a promise to pay $5 a day as liquidated damages for delay beyond the time specified. The contract also provided that—

"Minor and unintentional deviations from the plans and specifications shall not abrogate this agreement but shall be the subject of allowance to the vendee if the value of the building is thereby depreciated."

Plaintiff paid $2,000 on account of the purchase price, which sum, the contract provided, might be forfeited as liquidated damages if he failed to effect a settlement. At the time the contract was signed, the building was practically finished on the outside, the roof was on, and the floors laid. The building not being completed within the time stipulated, nor strictly in accord with the plans and specifications, plaintiff subsequently refused to pay the balance of the purchase money, and, to recover the sum already paid, entered judgment on the bond given by defendants to secure its completion in accordance with the agreement. The judgment was subsequently opened and issue framed to determine "whether Oscar D. Loeb is entitled to recover the sum of $2,000 with interest." The trial resulted in a verdict for defendants; a motion for a new trial was refused, and judgment entered for defendants. Plaintiff appealed.

[1] The question before the jury was, not the extent of an allowance, if any, plaintiff was entitled to receive by reason of deviations from the plans and specifications or by reason of delay in completion, but solely whether the departure from the specifications was intentional or so material as to justify plaintiff in refusing to complete the purchase. The testimony is conflicting, and the question was necessarily one for the jury to whom it was submitted with instruction that, if the variations were material, plaintiff would be entitled to recover the money paid, but, if the defects were merely minor matters, the contract provided a way in which they could be adjusted.

The departure from the specifications upon which plaintiff appears to lay most stress is the fact that in erecting the brick walls the "headers" were made every tenth course instead of every seventh as required by Act of May 5, 1899, P. L. 193, regulating the erection of buildings within the city of Philadelphia. The specifications required the building laws of the city of Philadelphia to be carefully observed. The city building inspector called by defendants testified he observed the building regularly during the course of construction and gave as a reason for making a header every ten courses, instead of every seven, that, the bricks used on the inside of the wall being of greater thickness than the outer brick, the two layers consequently did not reach the same level in the seventh course, and to avoid a split the headers were laid on every tenth course in accordance with the general practice in the city of Philadelphia, which not only made a better wall but was approved by him as building inspector for the city. Under this testimony the court could not say, as matter of law, there was in this respect a substantial departure from the specifications. Numerous other instances of departure from the specifications are referred to in the testimony and discussed by counsel, most of them, however, of a minor character and none of such importance as to justify the legal conclusion that the contract was not substantially performed.

[2, 3] Plaintiff also complains of the action of the trial judge in permitting expert witnesses for defendants to state whether in their opinion there had been a substantial performance of the contract in compliance with the plans and specifications, the objection not being to the competency of the witnesses testifying as experts on the subject-matter of the inquiry, but on the ground the answers of the witnesses were not based upon a hypothetical statement of the facts. While the usual practice is to receive the testimony of an expert in the form of answers to hypothetical questions which he, for the purpose of his testimony, assumes to be true, an expert frequently has occasion to personally examine the subject-matter of the inquiry; a familiar example being in the cases of physical ailments or injury, in which case he is permitted to testify to the result of his examination. Each expert offered by defendant made a personal examination of the building, together with plans and specifications, and an objection that they should not be permitted to testify as the result of such examination without the use of a hypothetical question cannot be sustained. Wigmore on Ev. vol. 1, § 875; Greenleaf on Ev. (16th Ed.) § 441.

[4] The remaining assignments of error are to portions of the charge. The charge as a whole is substantially free from error, and the questions attempted to be raised are not included in the statement of questions involved, and for that reason need not be considered.

The judgment is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH ex rel. MAXEY, Dist. Atty., v. ZALEWSKI.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §144—OATH OF COUNCILMAN—DIRECTORY STATUTE—"MAY." Borough Act May 14, 1915, c. 7, art. 1, § 2, designating a judge, justice of the peace of county, or burgess of borough, when qualified, as the officer before whom borough councilman's oath of office "may" be taken, is directory, and the oath may be taken before a notary public, under Act Aug. 14, 1864.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, May.]

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Lackawanna County.

Suggestion for writ of quo warranto by the Commonwealth, on relation of George W. Maxey, District Attorney, against Joseph Zalewski. From a judgment sustaining defendant's demurrer, and refusing a judgment of ouster, relator appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, and WALLING, JJ.

A. A. Vosburg, of Scranton, for appellant. M. J. Martin and Ralph W. Rymer, both of Scranton, for appellee.

BROWN, C. J. This proceeding was instituted to oust the appellee from his office as councilman of Dickson City borough, on the ground that he had taken his oath of office before a notary public. Section 2, article 1, chapter 7 of the Act of May 14, 1915 (P. L. 812), provides that:

"Before entering upon the duties of their office, the councilmen shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution of the United States, and of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and to perform the duties of their office with fidelity. The oath or affirmation may be taken before any judge or justice of the peace of the county, or before the burgess of the borough, when he is qualified, and shall be entered upon or filed among the records of the borough."

Before entering upon his duties the appellee took the oath so prescribed, and the notary public who administered it to him had power to administer an oath, "as fully, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as any judge of the Supreme Court, or president, or associate judge, of any of the courts of common pleas, or any alderman, or justice of the peace, within this commonwealth." Act Aug. 10, 1864 (P. L. 962). The provision in the act of 1915 that the councilmanic oath of office "may be taken" before a judge, justice of the peace, or burgess is merely directory or permissive, and not mandatory, as it would be if the word "shall" had been used, instead of "may," and the learned president judge of the court below correctly so held.

Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH v. BALANZO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

1. HOMICIDE §255(2) — MANSLAUGHTER — EVIDENCE—KILLING POLICEMAN.

On trial for murder, a conviction of voluntary manslaughter will be sustained, where it appeared that defendant killed a police officer in uniform while the latter was subjecting him to a search for weapons without a warrant on a public street late at night.

2. WITNESSES §269(4) — CROSS-EXAMINATION—DYING DECLARATIONS.

Where no dying declaration was offered in evidence, and only incoherent utterances by deceased were shown, it was not error to exclude cross-examination as to what attending physicians said to deceased.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §751—WITHDRAWAL OF JUROR—REMARKS OF ATTORNEY.

Where district attorney, in making an offer as to rebuttal evidence, stated that the story of one of defendant's witnesses was "cooked up," and "that defendant was telling his story the way his attorneys wanted him to tell it," it was not error to refuse to withdraw a juror, especially where certain of the remarks were not excepted to and the others the court directed the jury to disregard.

4. HOMICIDE §109—KILLING POLICE OFFICER—UNWARRANTED SEARCH.

A mere attempted search for weapons on defendant by a police officer without a warrant, without more, would not excuse killing the officer.

5. HOMICIDE §116(4)—SELF-DEFENSE—REASONABLE APPREHENSION OF DANGER.

Reasonable apprehension of danger to life, which would justify the killing of a police officer, where the danger turns out to be apparent only, and not actual must have a reasonable basis on which to rest before the taking of human life would be warranted thereby.

Appeal from Court of Oyer and Terminer, Beaver County.

Emil Balanzo was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and appeals. Affirmed.

From the record it appeared that defendant, Emil Balanzo, in company with four other men, was walking along a public street in the borough of Midland, Beaver county, about midnight on May 12, 1917. They met Michael T. Ford and Edward McKay, two police officers of the said borough, on duty. Ford wore the full uniform of a police officer, but McKay was in plain clothes. The prisoner and the men in company with him, on the approach of the officers, started to scatter. The officers then commanded defendant and the others to stop and to submit to a search. The men in company with the defendant stopped and were searched, but the prisoner attempted to get away. Ford followed defendant and was in the act of turning him around, preparatory to making a search for concealed weapons, when defendant drew a revolver and fired five shots at him, one of which passed through his chest, one through his abdomen, and one through the ball of his foot. Ford died about nine hours later in a hospital.

On the trial no dying declaration of the deceased was offered in evidence; the only evidence as to what he said being that while in the hospital he made certain incoherent utterances. The trial judge sustained an objection to the question put to one of the commonwealth's witnesses, on cross-examination, as to what statement the doctors made to the deceased in the hospital. On the trial the district attorney exhibited deceased's coat to the jury, stating "this is the place where the bullet came out" (indicating). Later during the trial he stated that the story of one of defendant's witnesses was "cooked up," and at another time that "defendant was telling his story the way his attorneys wanted him to tell it." The court directed the jury to disregard the first and last mentioned utterances, and ruled that the reference to the testimony of defendant's witness as "cooked up" was not improper, as it was made by the district attorney in addressing the court in reference to what he intended to prove in rebuttal, and no exception to such ruling was taken at the time.

Defendant's fifth point for charge and the court's answer thereto were as follows:

"There is no evidence in this case that the deceased and his fellow officer had a weapon on his person and it being admitted that there was no warrant against the prisoner or any of his companions the attempted search of the prisoner for weapons was an unlawful act upon the part of the deceased and his fellow officer.

"Answer: Affirmed. Nevertheless a mere attempted search, without more, would not justify or excuse the killing of the officer. One is not warranted in taking human life to repel or redress a wrong of small magnitude."

Defendant's sixth point for charge and the court's answer thereto were as follows:

"If the prisoner and his companions were walking quietly and peaceably along the public street, the deceased and his fellow officer had no legal right to stop them and search them without a warrant, and in so doing the deceased and his fellow officer were guilty of an unlawful act.

"Answer: Affirmed. Nevertheless, so doing, without more, would not justify or excuse the killing of Michael T. Ford."

Defendant's seventh point for charge and the court's answer thereto were as follows:

"If the jury believed from the evidence that the deceased assaulted the prisoner with his club, and the prisoner's life was in danger, or he was actually in danger of great bodily harm, or if it so reasonably appeared to him, and the danger, either real or apparent, was so great that it could not be averted, without inflicting serious injury upon the deceased or even taking his life, the prisoner would be excusable under the law in so doing, in order to save his own life or avert great bodily harm.

"Answer: Affirmed. But reasonable apprehension of such danger as is referred to in this point, where the apparent danger turns out to be apparent only, and not actual, must have a reasonable basis on which to rest, before the taking of human life would be warranted thereby."

The jury found a verdict of guilty of voluntary manslaughter, upon which the maximum sentence was thereafter imposed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Lawrence M. Sebring and John B. McClure, both of Beaver, for appellant.

The questions involved are: (1) May a defendant, on trial for murdering a policeman, show that the officer was drunk, that he attempted an illegal search of defendant, and show that, after the infliction of the mortal wound, the officer could have an ante mortem statement? (2) What are improper remarks by commonwealth counsel in such a case, and was the jury adequately and correctly instructed as to the law of self-defense and manslaughter?

James L. Hogan, Louis E. Graham, Dist. Atty., and Frank H. Laird, all of Beaver, for the Commonwealth.

PER CURIAM. The questions raised on this appeal are within a narrow compass, and are briefly stated by counsel for the appellant. After duly considering them, we find nothing in the 44 assignments of error calling for a retrial of the case, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. v. GROSS.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

WILLS ~~608~~(5) — CONSTRUCTION — REAL PROPERTY — RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE.

Where testator bequeathed to his wife and son all of his property, share and share alike, and a house as a home, but not to be sold by either, and if the wife died before the son he was to have her share, and if he died before her she to have his share, unless "he had heirs," the rule in Shelley's Case applied, and on the death of his mother the son took a fee.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by the Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Company, trustee for Thomas A. B. McCloskey, against Samuel Gross. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The facts appear in the following opinion of Shoemaker, J., in the common pleas:

This is a case stated, submitted to the court upon an agreement that, if the plaintiffs have an estate in fee in the premises described in the deed tendered by them to the defendant, judgment should be entered for the plaintiffs; otherwise, the judgment should be for the defendant. The question presented by the case stated is the interpretation to be given to the will of James B. McCloskey, which reads as follows:

"In making this my last will and testimony, I bequeath to my wife, Florence E. McCloskey, and my son, Thomas A. B. McCloskey, share and share alike of my estate after all my just debts are paid. The house, No. 4841 North Broad street to be a home for my wife and son as long as they agree. If rented, each to have a share alike. I want it understood that my property is not to be sold or mortgaged by either my wife and son. In case my wife dies before my son he is to have her share of the estate and if he dies before her she will have his share, without he has heirs who will receive his share then. I want my wife, Florence B. McCloskey, to have all household goods and effects.

"I appoint my wife executor without bond of this my last will and testimony revoking all others previously made.

"In case of death of both my wife and son (he leaving no heirs) I want my estate to go to my mother's half-sister Annie McCloskey, wife of Owen and her heirs, share and share alike."

McCloskey died March 11, 1907, leaving to survive him his wife, Florence, and his son, Thomas A. B. Florence, the widow of James B., died January 8, 1915. By deed dated August 15, 1917, and duly recorded, Thomas A. B. McCloskey and wife granted and conveyed the premises No. 4841 North Broad street to the Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Company as trustees for the grantors. By agreement dated August 15, 1917, the said Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Company, trustee, agreed to sell to Samuel Gross, who agreed to purchase the said property free and clear of assessments, liens, and incumbrances; the title to be good and marketable. On October 8, 1917, the plaintiffs tendered a deed duly executed by themselves, conveying to defendant the said premises free and clear of all incumbrances, and demanded the balance of the purchase money agreed upon. The defendant refused to accept the deed, or pay the purchase price, alleging that the grantors did not have a good and marketable title in fee in the premises, whereupon plaintiffs brought this suit to recover the balance of the purchase money.

The will provides that "in case my wife dies before my son he is to have her share of the estate and if he dies before her she will have his share, without he has heirs who will receive his share then." The survivorship in favor of the wife is conditioned upon the son dying without heirs. In the last clause of the will it is provided: "In case of death of both my wife and son (he leaving no heirs) I want my estate to go to my mother's half-sister Annie McCloskey, wife of Owen and her heirs, share and share alike." The son is living and has children. Did the son take a fee? The present Chief Justice said, in Kemp v. Reinhard, 228 Pa. 147, 77 Atl. 487, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 956:

"The rule in Shelley's Case is not a means of ascertaining the intention of a testator, nor is it one of the construction of a will. It is one of law, unbending in its application, when the intention of the testator is ascertained, that the heirs of his devisee of a freehold estate are to take from the devisee qua heirs. When such intention is ascertained, the heirs take by descent from the devisee, and there is therefore vested in him an estate of inheritance. Doebler's Appeal, 64 Pa. 9; Shapley v. Diehl, 208 Pa. 568 [53 Atl. 874]. 'It is therefore always a precedent question, in any case to which it is supposed the rule is applicable, whether the limitation of the remainder is made to the heirs in fee or in tail, as such, and in solving this question, the rule itself renders no assistance. It is silent until the intention of the grantor or deviser is ascertained. But if that intention is found to be that the remaindermen are to take as heirs of the grantee or devisee of the particular freehold, instead of becoming themselves the root of a new succession, the rule is applied though it may defeat a manifest intention that the first taker should have but an estate for life. It is very carefully to be noted, that in searching for the intention of the donor or testator, the inquiry is not whether the remaindermen are the persons who would have been heirs, had the fee been limited directly to the ancestor. The thing to be sought for is not the persons who are directed to take the remainder, but the character in which the donor intended they should take. In the very many cases in which the question has arisen whether the rule was applicable, the difficulty has been in determining whether the intention was that the remaindermen should take as heirs of the first taker, or originally as the stock of a new inheritance.' Guthrie's Appeal, 87 Pa. 9."

Applying the above rules of interpretation to the will in this case, it seems manifest that in the first paragraph of the will it is clearly provided that the "heirs" to take were as heirs of the son; the language used being that if the son "dies before her [the widow] she will have his share, without he has heirs, who will receive his share then." Reading the third clause in connection with the first clause, it is, in our opinion, clear that such was the meaning of the testator's words, as the devise to Annie McCloskey was only to take effect in case the son died "leaving no heirs," thus limiting the character of the persons who were to take upon the death of the son to such as were his heirs, and "to constitute such devisee a source of inheritable succession." (Harrison v. Harris, 245 Pa. 397, 91 Atl. 617), and the rule in Shelley's Case applies (Stathers v. Renz, 251 Pa. 315, 96 Atl. 717).

The court entered judgment for the plaintiffs on the case stated. Defendant appealed. Error assigned was the judgment of the court.

RUGG v. MIDLAND REALTY CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER \S 111—RESCISSI- ON BY VENDOR—RECOVERY OF PAYMENT MADE.

Where a vendee tenders performance at the appointed time, and the vendor cannot perform, the vendee can rescind, particularly where time is of the essence of the contract.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER \S 340—RESCISSI- ON BY VENDOR—RESCISSI-ON OF PURCHASE MONEY—TENDER OF PERFORMANCE.

Where contract for sale of realty provided that, when price was paid, a conveyance should be made free of incumbrances, and plaintiff tendered the balance of the price due and demanded a deed, which was refused, because defendant was then unable to make a good title, plaintiff could recover the money paid and reasonable expenses, though defendant tendered a deed with a policy of insurance issued by a title company, and after suit offered to convey a clear title.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Howard V. Rugg against the Midland Realty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Audenried, P. J., filed the following opinion in the common pleas:

The statement of claim and the affidavit of defense are quite voluminous, but the question raised by this rule is a simple one. The essential facts alleged by the plaintiff are as follows, and they are not disputed by the defendant:

The plaintiff agreed to buy certain land from the defendant. Its price was payable by installments, but the buyer might when he paid any of them anticipate the dates fixed for subsequent payments and pay the remainder of the purchase money although not yet due. It was agreed that the land should be conveyed to the plaintiff, subject to certain building restrictions, but otherwise clear of incumbrances, as soon as the latter had paid for it in full, and that, in the meanwhile, the seller should pay all state and county taxes legally assessed upon it. The plaintiff paid the defendant the sum of $2,060 on account of the purchase money. On November 22, 1916, he tendered to the further sum of $650.57, which was all that remained unpaid on that account, and demanded that the land be conveyed to him in accordance with their agreement. The defendant did not accept the money tendered or deliver the deed requested. The reason given for its failure to do so was that the land was incumbered by a tax claim filed by the commonwealth. Prior to that date the plaintiff had spent $85 for improvements on the land and $36 for the preparation of a bond and a mortgage and the examination of its title.

The plaintiff's claim is for the sum of $2,080 paid by him under his contract with the defendant, with interest thereon, and for the further sum of $121 by way of reimbursement of his outlay on the faith of the defendant's undertaking to convey. The defense set up may be summarized as follows: When the plaintiff tendered payment of the remainder of the purchase money owing for the land, all of the defendant's property was subject to the lien of certain taxes claimed by the commonwealth. The defendant was then negotiating for a settlement of the claim. The plaintiff was informed of this situation, and promised that during the following week his money would be received, and a deed would be executed and delivered to him. A few days afterwards a contract was made by the defendant with the Land Title & Trust Company, under which the latter undertook to insure title to the land bought by the plaintiff against the tax claimed above mentioned. A deed for the land was executed, and the plaintiff was notified that the defendant was ready to make settlement with him. Instead of paying for the land and accepting the defendant's deed therefor with the Land Title & Trust Company's policy, the plaintiff instituted this action. Since his suit was brought the defendant has settled with the commonwealth and thus discharged the claim filed for taxes. It is now ready and willing to deliver to the plaintiff a deed for his land, and, to the extent above described, has been ready and willing to do so since November 28, 1917.

[1, 2] This defense is insufficient. It is admitted that at the time when under their agreement the plaintiff was entitled to a conveyance of the land that he had purchased, the defendant was neither ready nor willing to convey it. That it was not willing to convey appears from the fact that it did not comply with his demand for a deed. That it was not able to perform its covenant to convey clear of incumbrances other than the restrictions under which the plaintiff had agreed to take the land appears from the conceded fact that the commonwealth had filed against it a tax claim, which still stood unsatisfied. This was an incumbrance, although the amount claimed was larger than the sum subsequently paid to liquidate it. Nowhere does the defendant squarely allege that the claim was not a lawful one, or that the taxes claimed had not been legally assessed. The plaintiff was not bound to accept the defendant's deed, even when supported by a policy of the Land Title & Trust Company insuring him against the commonwealth's claim in lieu of the conveyance of a title appearing by the record to be clear of incumbrances. Time was of the essence of the contract between these parties. Such was their plain agreement. The plaintiff was, therefore, under no obligation to await the outcome of the defendant's negotiations with the auditor general. When it became apparent that the defendant wished to fob off upon him a title incumbered in a "very considerable sum," and that against the uncertain extent of the liability of the land for this charge he was expected to be content with the policy of insurance issued by a private corporation, he was undoubtedly justified in declaring his contract with the defendant rescinded and in demanding the return of what he had paid the defendant, with the amount of his reasonable outlay on the faith of the contract. The defendant does not deny that the plaintiff made the expenditures for which he asks reimbursement or that they were necessary or proper.

If a vendee performs or tenders performance of his part of the contract, at the time appointed, and the vendor is unable to perform his part, the vendee may rescind, and recover back any purchase money paid on the footing of the contract. Borough of Erie v. Vincent, 8 Watts, 510; Stitzel v. Kopp, 9 Watts & S. 29; Moorehead v. Fry, 24 Pa. 37; Stickter v. Guldin, 30 Pa. 114. This is particularly true where time is of the essence of the contract. Hollenbach v. Moore, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. 192. "It has long been settled that on default by the vendor, without fraud, the vendee may recover for expenses necessarily or properly incurred on the faith of the contract, with the consideration paid." Eberz v. Heisler, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 388.

The rule for judgment is made absolute.

The court entered judgment for plaintiff for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense for $2,500.02. Defendant appealed.

Where the evidence establishes refusal of the architect to issue a certificate on completion of a building contract to be fraudulent, or by collusion with the owner, his withholding the certificate would not prevent recovery of amount due.

4. EVIDENCE §471(25) — CONCLUSION OF WITNESS.

Testimony of a witness for plaintiff, in action on building contract, in reply to question, "What did you do?" that he completed the work in accordance with the plans and modifications by the architect, was not inadmissible as a legal conclusion, being a summary of what the witness did under the contract.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR §688(2)—REVIEW—REMARKS OF JUROR.

Refusal to withdraw a juror because of statements made by counsel cannot be reviewed, where the record fails to state the subject-matter of the objectionable remarks.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Action by Ella M. Fay, administratrix of the estate of Edward Fay, against James S. Moore. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before MESTREZAT, POTTER, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

George J. Edwards, Jr., of Philadelphia, for appellant. Ignatius A. Quinn, of Chestnut Hill, and John J. Green, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. Plaintiff, a contractor, sues to recover from the owner a balance alleged to be due under a contract for the erection of a building. The defense is that plaintiff failed to complete the work in accordance with the specifications, whereby defendant was obliged to take possession of the building and finish it at an expense beyond the contract price. Plaintiff having died while the action was pending, his wife was substituted on the record as administratrix of his estate. The case has been tried three times, the result of the last trial being a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, from which defendant appealed.

The first two assignments of error are to the refusal of the court below to give binding instructions and subsequently to enter judgment for defendant non obstante veredicto. The contract required payments to be made only upon the certificate of the architect. When the building was practically completed, and a certificate for final payment requested, the architect notified plaintiff in writing that with the contract in certain specified particulars. Plaintiff contends the defects enumerated by the architect were rectified by him, while defendant avers such was not the case, but, on the contrary, he was obliged to employ another contractor to complete the work.

[1] The first objection is that corner beading was omitted. The specifications call for "wood corner beads on all exposed angles," but failed to set forth the particular kind of beading to be used. Plaintiff's son, who had charge of the construction work, testified beads were put on at exposed corners, and this does not seem to be denied; the contention being a different style of beading should have been supplied, as appears in a subsequent letter from the architect, in which he states the owner—

"has instructed me to put on beads in accordance with his desire, although I have never seen that kind of bead which he desires, at the same time he states that nothing else [will] be accepted by him; so there is no other alternative, and therefore I am compelled to instruct you to make them different from what I would personally select."

In another letter, written a few days later, the architect says:

"I am perfectly aware that the bead Mr. Moore desires is impractical, as well as impossible; but as Mr. Moore gave me no other alternative in the matter, and the best I could do was to give his instructions verbatim to you."

And in a third letter says he had again taken the matter up with the owner—

"and asked him to give me instructions for the regular old-fashioned wood corner bead put on, which is the only thing that can be accomplished outside of the covered bead, which you have at present, and which Mr. Moore does not want."

Under these circumstances the jury were warranted in finding the architect, in condemning the bead used by plaintiff, was not acting upon his own impartial judgment as to the sufficiency of the work, but at the dictation and to satisfy the whim of the owner.

[2] Another objection is the window sashes were of chestnut instead of white pine lumber, as called for in the contract. With respect to this item, the testimony on behalf of plaintiff is to the effect the architect instructed him to use chestnut instead of pine, so as to conform to the interior finish of the house. The owner visited the work almost daily, and with the architect made up lists of matters to be attended to or corrected, among which appears a memorandum to the effect that the owner would consider the matter of using chestnut instead of white pine sash. While it is true the contract provides that no alterations should be made, except on the written order of the architect, the parties had the right to waive the provision. Raff v. Isman, 235 Pa. 347, 84 Atl. 352. And this the verdict indicates they did. Furthermore, there is no attempt in this case to charge for extra work.

As to the various items of which complaint is made, the testimony on behalf of plaintiff is to the effect that portions of the work, the details of which were not mentioned in the specifications, were done under the direction of the architect, and that other variations and defects were remedied after complaint was received. The architect having persisted in refusing a certificate of completion, giving as an excuse for his action the owner's dissatisfaction with the work, and the contractor continuing to claim a completion of the contract, the owner procured a bid and entered into a contract for the additional work on the house he deemed necessary to complete the contract according to specifications, paying therefor the sum of $819, and for other items the sum of $220, which amounts were deducted from the contract price, and the architect signed a certificate to the effect that, after deducting such items, a balance of $1,100 remained due the contractor.

[3] While the testimony on behalf of plaintiff was contradicted by the architect and other witnesses for defendant, the case was necessarily for the jury, to whom it was submitted by the trial judge with instructions to consider the decision of the architect conclusive, unless they found from the circumstances in the case his decision was the result of collusion with the owner, and not a fair and impartial one. The court also left to the jury to say whether the contractor faithfully, honestly, and substantially complied with the provisions of his contract, and further charged, if they so found, and minor defects or deficiencies existed, such defects would not prevent a recovery for the amount due under the contract, less a reasonable allowance for the cost of remedying the imperfections.

The provision in the contract requiring the production of the certificate of the architect, showing completion of the work, is intended as a protection to the owner against unjust claims by the contractor and to see that the latter properly carries out his agreement, and in cases where the evidence establishes refusal of the architect to be capricious, fraudulent, or based on collusion with the owner, his withholding the certificate will not prevent the contractor from recovering the amount due him. Pittsburg, etc., Lumber Co. v. Sharp, 190 Pa. 256, 42 Atl. 685. There also being evidence in the case to support the conclusion of the jury of there being no willful or intentional departure from the terms of the contract, the doctrine of substantial performance was applicable, and was properly stated by the trial judge in accordance with the principles laid down in Morgan v. Gamble, 230 Pa. 165, 79 Atl. 410.

[4] The remaining assignments of error present no cause for reversal. The third is to the refusal of the court to strike out testimony. A witness for plaintiff, who had charge of the work, in reply to the question,

"What did you do?" answered, "I completed the work in accordance with the plans, specifications, and contract, and the modifications by the architect." This answer was a rather brief summary of what the witness did under the contract, and by reason of its brevity the answer sounds like a legal conclusion, rather than a statement of fact; yet the statement was directly responsive to the question, and, as the details of the work performed by the witness were given more fully in other parts of his testimony, the discretion of the trial judge, in refusing to strike out the answer, is not an adequate cause for reversal. United States Telephone Co. v. Wenger, 55 Pa. 262, 98 Am. Dec. 751.

The fourth assignment is to the refusal of the trial judge to strike out testimony to the effect that the change in the material used in window sashes was made upon the verbal order of the architect. The question of waiver of the provisions of the contract requiring alterations to be in writing has already been referred to and need not be repeated.

[5] The refusal of the court to withdraw a juror because of the statement made by counsel for plaintiff set forth in the fifth assignment does not seem to show abuse of discretion. The record fails to indicate the subject-matter of the objectionable remarks, and this court has no means of determining whether or not they were improper.

The sixth assignment objects to the action of the court in permitting a witness for plaintiff to testify that the fireplace was "pointed" in accordance with the direction of the architect. In regard to this objection, it is sufficient to say that specifications required the pointing of the masonry to be done "as directed" with no special provision for the fireplace.

We find nothing objectionable in the language of the court of which complaint is made in the seventh assignment, and furthermore the court subsequently gave each party an opportunity to have the case continued if they wished. Counsel, however, expressed a desire that it be concluded.

The eighth assignment complains of the failure of the trial judge to properly instruct the jury on the question of deduction to be made from plaintiff's claim of damages for failure to fully perform his contract. While the charge in this respect was brief, and the court did not refer in detail to the evidence or state amounts, either of plaintiff's claim or of the expense to which defendant was subjected, the items refused and the principles applicable were clearly stated, and the jury had before them the written statement of the architect, showing the exact amount defendant claimed to be entitled to set off. If counsel deemed further and more definite instructions necessary, he should have so stated at the time.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment affirmed.

CARRIERS — 820(26) — INJURY TO PASSENGERS — CONFLICTING EVIDENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Sharply conflicting evidence as to whether plaintiff's personal injuries resulted from his own intoxicated condition, or defendant's negligence in starting a car before plaintiff alighted, held to present a jury question.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Providence and Bristol Counties; Edward W. Blodgett, Judge.

Action by Martin Broderick against the Rhode Island Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant's motion for new trial granted, unless plaintiff remit all of the verdict above $1,200. Remittitur filed, and defendant excepts. Exceptions overruled.

Thomas L. Carty, of Pawtucket, for plaintiff. Clifford Whipple and Frederick W. O'Connell, both of Providence, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This is an action of trespass on the case for negligence brought by Martin Broderick against the Rhode Island Company to recover damages for personal injuries, which he claims resulted from the negligence of the defendant's servants and agents in the operation of one of its cars. The plaintiff alleges that on January 13, 1917, he was a passenger upon one of the cars of the Rhode Island Company which was proceeding along Dexter street in the city of Pawtucket; that as he approached the place where he desired to alight he notified the conductor who stopped the car; and that while he was in the act of stepping from the car the car was suddenly started, throwing him to the ground and injuring him. In his account of the accident he is corroborated by two witnesses; one being his daughter, a little girl of 11 years of age, who testified that the car suddenly started while the plaintiff was getting off.

The account of the accident given by the witnesses for the defendant is materially different from that given by the plaintiff and his witnesses. There is testimony on the part of the defendant that the plaintiff proceeded to the rear platform of the car and attempted to get off while the car was still in motion. There was also some further testimony on behalf of the defendant to the effect that the plaintiff had evidently been drinking, and was not in a condition to judge correctly of his own movements and actions. It is evident from this brief statement of the case that the testimony bearing on the defendant's liability was conflicting and presented a question of fact for the jury.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,800. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was granted by the trial court, unless the plaintiff should if they saw fit, find a verdict for the plaintiff upon the questions of fact submitted to them for their determination, and that the verdict, as reduced, must stand.

The defendant's exceptions are overruled, and the case is remitted to the superior court, with direction to enter judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,200.

WOLFE v. WOLFE. (No. 5171.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Oct. 25, 1918.)

1. CONTINUANCE — 7 — DISCRETION OF COURT.

Granting or refusing continuance is within the discretion of the trial court.

2. DIVORCE — 161 — VACATING JUDGMENT — DISCRETION.

Vacating default decree for divorce on respondent's motion is within discretion of trial court.

3. DIVORCE — 161 — VACATING JUDGMENT — DISCRETION.

Refusal to vacate divorce decree rendered by default, where respondent had one continuance, and motion for second, supported by physician's affidavit of sickness, was traversed by petitioner's affidavit that she was malingering, was not abuse of discretion.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Providence and Bristol Counties; Elmer J. Rathbun, Judge.

Action by Samuel Wolfe against Mary Wolfe. Decree for petitioner, and respondent excepts. Overruled.

Cooney & Cahill, of Providence, for petitioner. William M. P. Bowen, of Providence, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a suit for divorce, and comes before this court upon the respondent's exceptions. On April 19, 1917, Samuel Wolfe filed a petition for divorce against his wife, May Wolfe, alleging adultery and gross misbehavior and wickedness, repugnant to and in violation of the marriage covenant; the petition further setting forth with some particularity the acts of the respondent constituting such gross misbehavior, etc. Later the respondent filed two motions, one for a bill of particulars and the other for an allowance for support during pendency of petition and for counsel and witness fees. These motions were granted, and a bill of particulars was duly filed. The case was assigned for hearing on July 3, 1917. Upon the last-named date the respondent moved for a continuance, which was granted upon her waiving her right to the $14 per week which had been ordered paid to her for her temporary support.
